F—F. A. Figgis, Kate, Eva and Mabel Fletcher, Bessie Freeman, Louise Filhol, James Freegard, Helen Forbes, J. Fawkes, Aileen Figgis, Mary and Blanche Freeman, Hyacinth FitzSimons*, Jeanne Faucon, Marian Freegard*.

G—Gracie Grout, Dorothy Grove, Thos. Groombridge, Esther Goodman*, Frank and A. Gibbs, Colin and George Graham Brown, George* and Charles Graham, Ethel*, Alfred*, Mary* and Daisy Greenacre, Stuart, Jack, Dorothy, Edith* and Margaret* Gray, Irene and Kathleen Gough, Dorothy Goldsmith, Mary Glass, Edith Grieve.

H—Edith Holms, Bessie Hope, Theodora Hill*, Violet Holford*, Lottie E.* and Rosetta* Hamilton, Elsie Hanson, Georgette Hoffman, Ella Hake*, Stanley, Francis and Florence Hoyte, Willie Hooper, Edith* and Winifred* Harvey, Harcourt Hunter, Dorothy Harris, Jennie Holmes, Claude Hutchence*, M. J. Hill*, Ruth Hinder, Els a Hatcher, Beatrice Hastings, Nellie Hatchett.

I—Ami* and Isabel* Inglis, Alice Ingberg, Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving.*

J—Kate Johns*, Sinclair Jackson, Emily Jones, Lizzie Johnstone.*

K—Joanie Kyle*, Isa*, Agnes*, Alex*, Wm.* and T.* Kay, Dorothy,* Grace* and Philippa* Kerr.

L—Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Dudley Lewis, Beatrice Le Mesurier, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup*, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Hannah Lovell.

M—Charlie Medcalf, Hylda Medill, Abraham Mack, Lewis McGregor*, John MacMurray, Barbara* and J. Macconchy, A. Mallory, Gwendoline Moir*, Annie Moule*, Lewis, O. L. and Grace Morice, Margie Marston, Mabelle Mounstephen*, Nellie*, Annie*, and Daisy* Mackenzie, Margaret Macphee, Harry and Bruce Malaher, W. C. Mallinson*, Linda McFarland, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Emily Maddox.

N—Edith and George Nash*, Peter and Cissy Nicholson*, Amy and Maude Nottage.

P—Ruth Patient, Jessie*, Eddie and Willie Palmer, Alice Powdrill, W. M.* and Louie Penny, Walter Perryman, M. Perry, Laura Percy, Ernest Pearce*, W. Picknell, Winnie Page*, R. Partridge, Alice Palmer, Evelyn Pechey, Edith Purkiss, Isabel Phipps*.

R—Marion Richards, Elmina Roe, Jessie Roe, Gwennie Ravenhill.

S—John Smith, Frank* and Emma* Sutton, Helen* and Dorothy Stalker*, Mabel Stembridge, Kathleen Slark, D.D. Stanier, Violet Salvesen, Dollie Salt*, Binford Sellwood, Gwendoline and Wilfred Shaw, Ivy and Rosetta Sherwin, Mary Symon, Mary Seed*, Flora Simmons*, Bessie Symes, Kathleen Shepherd*, Mary de Spiganovica, Elsie Slark, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Muriel Sherwin.

T—Marjorie Tracey, Winnie Taylor*, M. Thomson*, Louie Tibbits*, Olive Taylor*, Alice and Frank Thompson, Olive French.

U—Queenie Upton*.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Charles Williams, John Wheeler, Connie Wood,* Charles Wingrave, Ronald Watson, Helen and F. Webb, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Leonard Wild, Leonard Wall, George Willis, Greta Watson, Phillis Wright, Violet Walker, Georgina, Rachel, and James Wilson, Kathleen and Eva Wright, Pringle Wilson, Dorothy White.

Y—Maurice and Gladys Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 173.—Graham* and Christine* Pearson (Tasmania). No. 178.—Minnie* and Cuckoo* Lister (S. Africa), Janet* Garrett (Kimberley), Alice and W. E.* Henderson (Jamaica). Nos. 179 and 180.—Frank* and Vera* Sjöström (U.S.A.), Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada). No. 179.—Alice and W. B. Henderson. No. 181.—Vera Sjöström, Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 183.—Helen Eardley-Wilmot.*

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received last week.

I am glad to welcome a number of new "Searchers."

RUTH PLEDGER.—The correct reference to the last question was in Acts.

ELLA BERRYMAN.—Thank you for your nice little letter and the enclosure.

EVA YOUNG.—I am sorry you were after all unable to get your answer sent in. I hope you have been successful in your examination.

ETHEL LARWILL.—I am sorry you will not have time to "search" any more. Perhaps when you have settled down you may find time, and get some of your friends to "search" as well.

WINNIE PAGE, VIOLET ASHWORTH, &c.—As the first question of Word Picture No. II. was rather difficult, those who have given seventy as the number of travellers have been allowed to pass as correct.

Uncle Tom's Cot—A. and B.M., 1s.; E.B., 6d.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending August 5.

Sun., July 30	Ec. xi.	9-10	Wed., August 2	Mark i.	14-28
	,, xii.	1-7	Thurs., August 3	,, i.	29-45
Mon. ,, 31	,, xii.	8-14	Fri., ,, 4	,, ii.	1-12
Tues., August 1	Mark i.	1-13	Sat., ,, 5	,, ii.	13-28

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Westleigh near Wellington, Som.: Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Blackham and Ashurst, Kent; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Storrington, Sussex, to July 31; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Laxfield, Suffolk; Mr. F. P. Rowe, with caravan, Stisted, near Braintree, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with caravan, Woburn, Bedfordshire.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, Aug. 2-31. Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Mr. J. R. Naylor, Colwyn Bay. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer, Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal, July 31 Aug. 31. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Mr. Phillips Welch, Folkestone, July 31-Aug. 31. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe, from Aug. 8. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush, Ireland, to July 30. Mr. C. H. Collier, Ramsey, Isle of Man. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., Mr. G. Foster-Carter and Mr. P. J. Fear, Sandown. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho, Aug. 2-23, Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

The Late Mrs. Ellen C. Johnson.—The committee of the Howard Association desire to place on record their high estimate of the services and character of the late Mrs. Ellen C. Johnson (superintendent, for many years, of the Massachusetts Women's Reformatory), who died recently during a visit to England. She had achieved remarkable success in her treatment of that most difficult class, criminal and inebriate women, through her practical faith in kindly, religious and educational influences, and the exercise of that which she used to describe as of special need, "an infinite patience," aided by wise arrangements for classification and hopeful emulation, accompanied by useful industry and vigilant efforts to obviate demoralizing association. Mrs. Johnson was a prominent example of the happily increasing number of patriotic persons in the United States who are most earnestly labouring to promote the best methods for the treatment and prevention of crime.

The Protestant Movement.

THE objects and work of the newly-established Ladies' League for the Defence of the Reformed Faith of the Church of England were explained on Thursday last at a meeting held at the residence of the Earl and Countess of Ancaster, 12, Belgrave Square, S.W.

Lady Ancaster, who presided, said that there was probably not a person present who had not been interested in the controversy that had taken place during the past year. This advance of Ritualism burst upon many of them as something new, but Ritualism had been gradually increasing in power and in the number of its supporters for a long time. The time now seemed to have arrived when a stand ought to be made by those who had been accustomed to the simple services of the Church of England and the forms which they had been taught in childhood and which they all valued.

Lady Wimborne said it was important that their objects should be fully explained, and that they should prove to the public that there was justification for the existence of an organization such as the Ladies' League. The recent agitation had brought to light a great deal that they had little dreamed of. There existed all over England a vast organization which had almost succeeded in bringing the country under its grasp. The movement was the result of a subtle plan. People were quite ignorant of what was going on, for it was the policy of the Ritualists to lull suspicion and to accustom people's minds to an ever-increasing Ritualism. Reunion with Rome was the goal which was ever before the eyes of the men who introduced Romanism. English people had been so long accustomed to liberty that they could not for one moment believe that ecclesiastical tyranny would ever again lay its hand upon them, but perhaps in their sense of security lay their danger. It was well to look facts in the face, and the facts were sufficiently startling.

Lady Wimborne went on to contend that they should make a stand against a system which admitted of masses for the dead and offered indulgences to those who said them, and also admitted of services which were practically identical with those of the Roman Catholic Church. She urged all who valued the primitive truths of Christianity to join the League, the objects of which were to maintain the principles of the Reformation and to protect the Church against the revival of the mass, the system of the confessional, and other errors which were repudiated by the Reformers. They had already enrolled 600 members, and had started branches in several places. They had also received requests for help, chiefly from the clergy, in stemming the tide of Ritualism, and they were thankful for that, because it showed that there were still many who were attached to the Reformed faith, and because they wished to strengthen the hands of the rulers of the Church by showing that a vast power of Protestantism still existed in the country.

Canon Fleming pointed out that the Church was literally honeycombed with the system which had been described by Lady Wimborne. There was little doubt that a great crisis was before the country, and that in some sense the great question of the Reformation would have to be fought. The time had come when everyone must take a side on this question. He hoped that one of the results of the trouble might be that High Churchmen, Broad Churchmen, Evangelical Churchmen and clergy would be drawn closely together in their determination to withstand Romanism. The only remedy for the evil was for the laity to combine, and he was glad that an example was being set by the ladies of England.

Spain.—A correspondent sends a copy of an interesting letter from Don José de Aranda, describing a meeting recently held by the latter in Madrid. The gathering took place in the house of a friend, and was attended by a number of influential ladies and gentlemen. The speaker pictured a Spain which should be great, Christian, Evangelical. Deep attention was paid, and when Don José de Aranda offered prayer for Spain, the audience instinctively rose, and some were in tears. In response to requests, meetings are to be long held weekly for Bible study.

Rome's Tactics Abroad.

MR. G. GRAHAM, of La Mission Evangélica, Las Flores (F.C.S.), Argentine Republic, sends home interesting details of his efforts to spread Gospel light amid much spiritual darkness. He says: "A fortnight's special mission has been conducted in this town by priests sent from Buenos Ayres. Before it closed the Bishop confirmed everyone that could be persuaded or morally compelled to undergo the operation. Persons living together as man and wife, having many children, have been christened, married, and have taken sacrament all in one day!

"It has been a rough time for the poor Protestantes. Parents have been forbidden to send children to our schools on pain of committing mortal sin. The like ban is upon attendance at our meetings and all our literature. I quite expected to lose half my scholars, but was surprised to see all return next day except two boys of one family. The father half promised to send them when the heat of the Romish revival has cooled. The prohibitions and threats of holy (?) fathers are but lightly regarded. The priestly mission has impressed most young girls from fifteen to twenty years of age, who suddenly found out how much sin they needed to confess to the youngest and most handsome of the missionaries. This diabolical work has been carried on from five o'clock in the morning. Rome's efforts are being redoubled in Argentina, and there is much need for the Church of Christ to make more strenuous effort to counteract this awful current of anti-Christian evil while there is such liberty of worship in the land."

The Water Lily.

(From the German of Julius Sturm.)

The lily, on the wind-vexed lake
Tossing, the storm must brave,
But grieves not, for her root is safe
Far 'neath the troubled wave.

Would'st thou, my heart, in storm and flood
Be like the lily pure?
Drive deep thy roots into the Word
That doth for aye endure.

H. G. Langmore.

Alone With My Bible.

Alone with my Bible! How sweet to prepare
For the conflicts of life by a season of prayer!
My spirit shall rise every hindrance above,
As I bathe with delight in God's ocean of love!

Alone with my Bible! Alone with my God!
As I trace out the steps that my Saviour hath trod!
The light of his Spirit here beams on my soul,
As I seek to press on to the heavenly goal.

Alone with my Bible! What glory divine
On the page of the Gospels doth ceaselessly shine!
How oft in mine ear do the promises ring,
Confirming my trust in my Saviour and King;

Alone with my Bible! Here too may I learn
With wisdom the teachings of Truth to discern;
A conscience illumined with light from on high
Will guard from the snares that around us may lie.

Alone with my Bible! Thus may I draw near to the footstool of grace with no rising of fear;
The Saviour who died to redeem me from sin,
My heart by his Spirit will quicken within.

Alone with my Bible! Here Heaven I view,
The hope of whose glory my strength shall renew!
The waters of life that here ceaselessly flow,
My Spirit refresh as no fountain below.

Alone with my Bible! No friend do I need
To open the meaning of truths that I read;
For Jesus is near with instruction unbought,
And truly He teacheth as never man taught!

Alone with my Bible! What mercies untold,
These pages of God's inspiration unfold!
With blessings unnumbered, a limitless store,
With God and my Bible my cup runneth o'er.

Clevedon, Somerset. Wm. Kitching.

International S.S. Lessons.

August 6, 1899.

The New Heart.

Ezekiel xxxvi. 25-36.

Golden Text—Ezekiel xxxvi. 26.

Introductory.

EZEKIEL, whose prophecies are contained in this book, was the son of Buzi, a priest at Jerusalem; he was most likely a priest himself, and used all his powers to persuade the people of Judah to repent and return to their God. He experienced all the horrors of the siege of that city, and was carried away into Babylon with King Jehoiachin (2 Kings xxiv. 11-17). There were many exiles from Israel settled in Babylon, and Ezekiel made his home on the banks of the river Chebar, and there he lived and prophesied for about twenty-two years. He began to prophesy about thirty-four years after Jeremiah did, when Daniel had been ten years in public service in Babylon. Certain people trying hard to stir up the Jews to rebellion, Jeremiah sent letters to the captive Jews from Palestine to show them that the only way to be saved was to turn from their sins to Jehovah (Jer. xxix.); and Ezekiel taught them the same truths in Babylon. They must return to their God before they could return to their country.

The Book of Ezekiel.

Ezekiel had many wonderful visions which he records in this book, and we find in it prophecies of judgment against Judah and Jerusalem, seven prophecies against heathen nations, and from chap. 33 to 48 prophecies respecting the restoration of Israel. He teaches that purification must come before restoration, and God's desire and willingness to save. The Good Shepherd, the sprinkling with clean water the type of the Holy Spirit's cleansing, the change of heart, showers of blessings, of all of which we know so well now the meaning, are to be found in this wonderful book.

Ezekiel xxxvi. 25-36.

Verse 25. The prophet has, in the previous verses, been picturing the great sin which defiled God's people, and the punishment which befel them in consequence; then comes the promise of return. Then, when the right time comes, God promises cleansing. Sin is to the soul what dirt is to our body; we can wash our body clean, God only can wash the soul clean. Water is only the symbol or sign, so its application even in a small quantity was sufficient (Num. xix. 17-19, Ps. li. 7, Isa. lii. 15, Heb. x. 22, 1 Pet. i. 2).

Verse 26. The heart in our body is the centre of its life, so here is used to mean our living selves and character, our whole self needs to be new entirely, not patched up. A heart full of sin is like a stone, cold and hard and dead (John iii. 3-8, 2 Cor. v. 17, Titus iii. 5.

Verse 27. God's Holy Spirit put into the cleansed heart.

Verses 28, 31. Promises to those who have a pure heart filled with the Holy Spirit, all true for the Christian; the Heavenly land (Rev. xxi. 1-3); Deliverance from sin (2 Cor. i. 10); prosperity and plenty (Matt. vi. 33); a changed nature (Zech. xii. 10; Rom. xii. 2).

Verses 32, 33. The reason why God saves, not because of any goodness in us, but for Jesus Christ's sake (Eph. ii. 5).

Verses 34, 35. The truth of this is proved in every heathen nation where the Gospel is proclaimed and accepted. Examples in the South Sea Islands, Alaska, Mongolia, &c.

Verse 36. Additional reason, "The heathen shall know," &c. (John xvii. 23). Note the certainty of God's promises and threatenings (Num. xxiii. 19; 2 Cor. i. 20).

Practical Points.

1. Sin is a captivity. John viii. 34, Rom. vi. 16.
2. The first great need of each one is cleansing. Ps. li. 5-7.
3. Cleansing from sin, implies forgiveness, freedom from its punishment and power to keep from sinning in the future. Rom. v. 9.
4. We can never obey God's laws without the help of his Holy Spirit. John xiv. 26, xvi. 13.
5. Change of heart, the new heart, not patching it up ourselves by trying to be good. The good must come from inside. Painting a pump outside will not make its bad water good. If your watch will not go, polishing the case will do no good

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 30. 2 Sam. xiii.

THE sin of the father reappeared in his children, and as David had dealt with Uriah, so Amnon dealt with Tamar, and Absalom with Amnon. The sword began to work its vengeance in David's home as God had foretold—a work from which it would not desist. One sometimes is disposed to think that the ancient affirmation that sin should be visited upon children's children has its fulfilment, in part, in the dread law of heredity, through the bias towards evil, which is strong in the parent and becomes repeated in the child. Like father, like son.

A little boy in the circle of my knowledge, five years of age, swore at his mother last week, using words which first revealed his father, and then showed that he had inherited his father's disposition. Parents make for their children little coats other than those which a mother's hands prepare. Be careful to exercise godly self-restraint, modesty, virtuous and noble bearing, that the natural tendencies of your heart may be restrained.

It seems difficult to believe that this is the home-life of the man who wrote the Psalms. Ah! it was better for him amid the rocks of the wild goats than amid the luxury of Jerusalem. We all prosper most amid the bleaker climate of adversity than in the enervating plains of prosperity. The early races of men, who were the weaker, were driven up into the hills; but in the course of centuries the mountaineers descend as an avalanche to wrest supreme power from the enervated dwellers in the plains. Capua destroyed Hannibal.

MONDAY, July 31. 2 Sam. xiv.

The king yearned over Absalom, and desired the society of his favourite son; but he dreaded public opinion, and hesitated. If he were to recall Absalom without punishment, would it not shake the foundations of law and order throughout his kingdom? Joab, therefore, aware of the conflict between parental affection and kingly duty, sent to Tekoa, a village twelve miles south of Jerusalem, for a woman of unusual intelligence, who by an apt parable proved that there were occasions in which murder might be condoned. In the midst of her discourse she dropped the golden sentence that God doth not take away life, but deviseth means that his banished should not be exiled from Him (See R.V.).

God has devised means. In David's case there was no attempt to meet justice; he simply slurred over his favourite's fault and bade him return. There was no effort to meet the demands of a broken law and the inexorable, imperious exactions of justice. And to this fatal act must be attributed all the disaster that followed. When men speak of God forgiving iniquity apart from the Atonement, they are in effect demanding for the universe that which wrought so fatally for Israel. By force of contrast this story sets out the wonderful scheme of salvation in which the holy Lawgiver has satisfied the claims of his law in the Person of Jesus. He is just as well as the Justifier.

How apt an illustration that barley-field on fire furnishes! Often God sends for us that we may enter into terms of peace with Him. But we steadfastly refuse until He casts fire into our choice possessions; and as the lurid light threatens to destroy all we have loved and hoped for, we come to terms.

TUESDAY, August 1. 2 Sam. xv.

David's government had become lax. Many causes were waiting for settlement, which, either on account of growing infirmity, or because of the weakening effect of luxury, were allowed to accumulate; discontent was rife amongst the people. This was Absalom's opportunity, and he set himself to attract the national good-will, sparing neither prodigal expense nor fawning civility. The result was that the conspiracy was strong, and the people increased continually after Absalom.

How soon the heart becomes alienated from Christ! Unlike David, there is never any waning in the strength of his right hand, or the tenderness of his heart. And yet Absaloms ingratiate themselves, and draw off love which should be devoted to Jesus alone. Let me ask whether there is some favourite indulgence which fawns upon you, and secretly gathers to itself those affections which once clustered at the feet of Jesus. If so, beware, lest the King presently leave his city, and you are left to reap the fruit of the transference of your heart's allegiance.

Every step the king took from his palace aroused the warm devotion of those who knew him best. The foreign guards, natives of Gath, whom he had enlisted in his service years before, specially evinced their loyalty by the mouth of their leader Ittai. One of the noblest speeches ever addressed by man to man was uttered by the brave Gittite. And whilst Jesus is rejected by a hostile world, it would be well for us to take it on our lips. "O Son of God, wherever Thou shalt be, whether for life or death, there would we be also. If we live, we would live to Thee; if we die, we would die to Thee; that whether in life or death Thou mayest be all in all."

WEDNESDAY, August 2. 2 Sam. xvi.

The calamity of this period of David's life revealed many characters, his own, Ziba's, Shimei's, and Ahithophel's. In this he closely resembles our Lord, whose Cross has been the touchstone of trial to myriads.

David's behaviour was in every way admirable. The humiliation and resignation which he expressed, first in his speech to Zadok (xv. 25, 26), and secondly in his words to Abishai (xvi. 10, 11), are evidences of a truly sanctified spirit, which, though it had fallen, was now evincing its native temper and beauty. Whenever misfortune comes to you, whether it be through Absalom or Shimei, be sure to accept it as part of your Father's discipline. Refuse to see in it the hand of man merely, but the Father behind it. It is not Judas, but the Father, who has put the cup to your lips. "Behold, here am I; let Him do as seemeth good unto me." "Let him curse, for the Lord hath bidden him."

Ziba takes the opportunity of improving his position at the expense of the lame Mephibosheth; Shimei vents the spleen of Saul's race, fretting proudly against the rule of David, and only waiting for an opportunity to express itself; while Ahithophel throws in his lot with Absalom, and panders to his worst passions.

O Saviour of mankind, cast out by thine own people, the exile of the world, how often have thy sorrows revealed thine apparent friends, showing them to be faithless and hollow! How often hast Thou gone out, without the camp, solitary and forlorn, whilst those who had spoken loudest in thy presence are ashamed to confess Thee, even with bated breath! How often have the keen intellects of those who once acknowledged Thee been turned against Thee!

THURSDAY, August 3. 2 Sam. xvii.

What a contrast to the plottings and stratagems of David's foes was his own state of mind, as disclosed in Ps. iii. and iv., written at this time! At Jerusalem, they were taking counsel against him. Ahithophel speaks of him as weary and weak-handed, and describes the ease with which he may be smitten. Hushai pictures him as chafed in his mind, like a bear robbed of her whelps. The messengers are hastened by the fear lest the king should be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him. But David betakes himself to God. He knows that God is a shield about him, so that there is no need to be afraid of ten thousands of people. He lies down in peace and sleeps, because God makes him to dwell in safety. He knows that God hath set him apart for Himself, and that He will answer to his call. And yet he knew that these disasters were the result of his own terrible fall. It would appear as though he had so deeply repented, and had been so blessedly and entirely forgiven, that he felt able to claim and rejoice in all the old nearness to God which had been his portion in earlier days, unstained as yet by gross sin.

But this is the prerogative of all whose iniquity is forgiven, and their sin covered. Though we cannot forgive ourselves, and go softly as we remember the reproach we have brought on the cause of our beloved Lord, yet we absolutely accept his assurances for forgiveness. We know that we are not only forgiven, but justified; that God has put away our sins as far as the east is from the west; and that we are accepted in the Beloved. Thus we are able to go to Him, with respect to all the complications which our shameful sin may have caused, and to believe that his guardian angels keep watch and ward around us.

FRIDAY, August 4. 2 Sam. xviii.

Our Absaloms cause us sore sorrow. Others rejoice that they have been removed out of our lives. They see the havoc and devastation which have ensued from their misdeeds, and long to save us from the results of our fond and foolish indulgence. But we can never forget them. We feel as though life had nothing left in it worth our having. A heavy shadow rests on all other circumstances and incidents, which otherwise are fortunate and happy enough to lift us into the seventh heaven. The victory, the success of his brave soldiers, the certainty that the crown would again encircle his head, and the kingdom come into his hand, seemed all too little to counterbalance David's anguish, because Absalom was no more.

There is something here which baffles explanation. This infinite tenacity of fond affection passes comprehension. And yet how much the world owes to it! To all the baseness and badness of its reprobates there is this marvellous makeweight, that some one loves, cares, and is sorrowful. Where sin abounds, grace still more abounds. Where sons plunge into their evil courses, mothers fill heaven with their tearful pleadings. The prodigal's journey into the far country brings forth into clear evidence the father's noble generosity. We should have missed this glimpse into David's heart had we not known Absalom's guilt. The two stories go down the river of time in company, the fragrance of the one counteracting the ill-savour of the other.

But David's love could not avail to save Absalom from the effect of his evil ways. There is that in man which can thwart the designs and reject the pleadings of the tenderest love, even that of the Cross of Calvary! Ah me, that such a heart should beat in my breast!

SATURDAY, August 5. 2 Sam. xix.

When Absalom was dead, and the rebel bands were scattered, the people thought of their old love; they remembered the days when David was their national champion, and their hearts smote them for their ingratitude; and they said one to another, "Now, therefore, why speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?"

Some have lost the sweet sense of his presence; perhaps through an act of sin, or unholy habit of soul. Satan comes to you and tells you that you were never a child of God, that you have committed the sin for which there is no forgiveness, and that you may as well stay where you are. How can you expect to be taken back into his favour, against whom you have so shamefully rebelled! Ah, you must not think such hard things of Him. He says, "Return, return, ye backsliding children, for I am married unto you." Surely you cannot be content to remain in cold isolation! Do you not remember the former days till your heart longs for their renewal? Oh, that one might provoke you to a sacred jealousy! Oh, that you should be filled with an insatiable hungering and thirsting after your King, who was also Brother and Friend! He longs for you, and waits to bow your heart in allegiance to Himself. Why speak ye not a word of bringing Him again to the throne of your life? It needs but the bending of the will, and the speaking of a word.

Then let us all endeavour to bring Christ back to be King of the world. There is need enough. The usurper only works his evil way of licence and passion. Men sigh beneath his awful tyranny. But what will it be when the King comes!

Mitsie's Necklace.

A SOCIAL evening in our pastor's home, which is always bright and enjoyable, was the other evening exceptionally so, for the principal guest was a missionary who had returned from Ceylon, and who possessed, when suitably drawn out, the rare gift of vivid narrative.

On this occasion a cross-examination was most spiritedly conducted by the youngest son of the Manse—a boy of five—who, having thus early become an enthusiast in the Mission cause, and having already determined to become a missionary himself, thought this a grand opportunity for increasing his store of information concerning the perils and adventures of life amongst the heathen. He accordingly planted his sturdy little person on the hearthrug in front of the veteran, and soon opened the flood-gates of thrilling description by his naïve questioning. It is one of the striking stories thus elicited that I write to pass on to the readers of The Christian.

Mr. Parsons was sitting in his study in Kandy one morning in early summer, battling as best he might with the enervating influence of his environment — Nature in her most gorgeous dress, her every touch tender and soothing; the air laden with fragrance of tropical plants, but its languorous breath relaxing every fibre of the physical energy and making the English-born missionary long for the refreshment of a breeze from the homeland. Under the circumstances reverie was more congenial to his mood than sustained thought, and, leaning back in his chair, he mused on the "sweet uses of adversity." "Yes, bracing influences are best after all," he said softly to himself. "Cloudless skies and sunny hours sound attractive; but oh! how relaxing they are!" The first rough draft of a new sermon lay on his study table, its subject "The Reasonableness of God's Discipline;" and he roused himself to his work as illustration of this truth came trooping in upon him, suggested by his physical surroundings.

He wrote on eagerly, forgetting, under the inspiration of new thoughts, and time passed unheeded, until his eye suddenly brightened at the sound of little pattering feet, and of impatient fingers fumbling with the handle of the door. He rose quickly enough to admit the intruder, a bonnie wee girl of three, panting with excitement to tell her news. She spoke in the musical Cingalese tongue; but the English interpretation of her words was that there was a beautiful necklace lying on the verandah steps which Mitsie would like to have—oh, so much! But she had not touched it till father gave her leave, and would he please come very, very quick, and give her permission to possess the treasure? Mr. Parsons, with a glance of regret at the MS. which was progressing so well, yielded to the yet stronger attraction of his child's wish, and, taking her hand, passed through the central court and out on to the steps of his bungalow, Mitsie prattling excitedly all the time. "There, there, father!" she cried, darting away from him and standing entranced before the beautiful treasure. It lay there, a gorgeous thing studded with jewels, so like a brilliant chain flung down from a lady's trinket-case that even Mr. Parsons was deceived for a moment; but, as he looked, he saw the almost imperceptible pulsation of life within the coils, and then he knew! Mitsie's necklace was a beautiful snake, one of the class whose bite is not necessarily fatal, but always poisonous and often dangerous.

This is one of the stories that seems to point its own moral; but perhaps I may be permitted to speak of one or two lessons which it has taught me. And, first, that beauty is not always a guarantee for desirableness. There are many things since the day of Eve's sad experience that are pleasant to the eye, but which contain, nevertheless, a poisonous fang. Satan knows well how to ensnare through "the lust of the eyes," and the glamour that is cast over the soul by the spell of beauty in art and literature, and even in religion, ranks foremost amongst his deadly devised traps. Perhaps the most noticeable example of this is furnished in the region of dramatic art, which relies so much for its attraction, on the perfection of all that appeals to the senses, and often has, too, in its external aspect, such an air of innocence and harmlessness that it has found apologists among some who wield a powerfuul influence even in the world of Christian thought.

Sometimes the poison works slowly in the gradual deadening of spiritual taste and appetite in those who frequent the theatre; sometimes the evil flashes out in unconcealed malignity when pieces, undeniably immoral, are acted before crowded audiences composed largely of young and specially impressionable spectators.

And is not wee Mitsie's action exemplary for us all? In presence of such rapidly increasing conformity to the world, when the judgment is so apt to be warped by the lax views of fellow Christians, is it not necessary to be on our guard against anything doubtful, however fascinating its allurements may be?

I heard the other day of a celebrated oculist who gave up playing at cricket because he found that it injured the extreme delicacy of touch which was indispensable to excellence in his profession. The restrictions of our Divine Guide are not arbitrary. He prohibits nothing that is not in some way hurtful, either by lessening our power to bless others, or by a directly malign influence on ourselves. So we may well trust Him to say us nay concerning some imaginary enjoyment in the present, when it is to fit us for keener participation in the fulness of joy and the pleasures for evermore that He is preparing for us at his right hand.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M. C. F.

A Solemn Warning.

OF the Revival forty years ago, an esteemed correspondent writes:—Thinking again of those early days of revival (I was a mere child at the time), there comes the solemn remembrance of some who seemed on the very verge of decision for Christ, and yet did not decide. Two faces I recall—amongst many of those who passed into the room for inquirers—the faces of two young men who were evidently greatly moved. One of these, after being many years bedridden, and constantly visited by earnest Christian friends, passed away quite recently; but, alas! undecided still, as it was feared. And of the other it can only be said that there is no visible token of his being nearer decision now than he was forty years ago. There may be some of your present readers who stand where those two waverers stood on those solemn days. Oh, that a word of warning might reach them, for it is a terrible thing to be so near the goal of blessing, and yet to miss it; and it remains true—

They who will not take, reject.

National Truss Society.—Were it not for the timely aid rendered in many urgent cases by this Society, now in its 113th year of usefulness, many poor people must become permanently incapacitated for daily labour; and it is owing to the help so promptly afforded that they are enabled to continue their occupations without recourse to parochial relief. During last year 3,251 instruments were supplied, and it is doubtful whether, without the assistance of such a Society, many of the recipients would have been relieved at all. Times of grave anxiety arise in carrying on the work, incoming funds not always being equal to demands. Hon. secretary, Mr. James Swift, 1, Arthur Street West, London Bridge, E.C.

The National Refuges.—The Earl and Countess of Jersey, and their daughters, entertained, on the 19th inst., 600 boys and girls of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. The fête took place in the grounds of Osterley Park, the event being the red letter day of the year to the children. Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, secretary, and a staff of officers, accompanied the party, which included the sailor boys of the Arethusa and Chichester training ships; the boys of Fortescue House, Twickenham; the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools, Bisley; and 200 girls of the Society's Homes at Sudbury and Ealing. The excellent brass bands of the Arethusa and Twickenham Home enlivened the proceedings. On leaving Osterley Park the young people expressed their gratitude by enthusiastic cheers.

Servants of All.*

THIS instructive book, in which Mr. Bramwell Booth outlines the career, and indicates some of the varied responsibilities of a Salvation Army officer, affords many interesting "inside" glimpses of the organization.

Mr. Booth describes the genesis of officership in the young man or woman who enthusiastically "applies for the work." The experience of a lad in a village ironmonger's shop is adduced as typical:—

I stayed up three whole nights last week to pray to God to take away the feeling that I was the one, but it is still here. I am very ignorant. My wages is only 10s. a week. . . . I do not mind what I go through if only I am any good to get people saved. I will pray all night to-morrow, when you will get this letter, for God to direct you aright.

"That all-night vigil," adds Mr. Booth, "brought the right answer. The lad has long since come into a position of honour amongst us."

In a reference to the Training Homes, we learn that

Its best work is accomplished in character-building. It is a school for the ignorant. It is a house of prayer. It is a desert place for seekers after God. It is a home of industry—for there are no idlers there . . . . But it is more than all this, it is a place in which we weave the stuff of which good soldiers are made, it is a manufactory for the making of men.

Coming to the toils of the "field" or evangelistic work, with all its attendant labours in visitation, open-air and indoor meetings; rent and gas bill raising; the management of men and women; efforts to attract the negligent; the disposal of army literature; the children's work, and what not, Mr. Booth observes:

Leaders in war can only be made by serious and desperate fighting, and it is not therefore to points where the battle goes with less of personal danger, but rather to the "high places of the Field" that many of the youngest officers are despatched. How gloriously the end attained crowns the work, hundreds of the most useful soul winners amongst us, both at home and abroad, bear witness.

With descriptions of some of the dangers and temptations of the fight, to "fall back into a wretched mediocrity of religious experience," the life of the officer is traced, with copious illustrative extracts from books and letters, to betrothal, marriage, and death. Mr. Booth's work has, in this connection, some pathetic passages, and, with regard to the question of discipline, does not disguise the fact that implicit obedience is required.

The organization of the army is military. Having tried government by committees and conferences composed of persons selected by the people they have to govern, and having found that those who work best care least to talk, while those who talk most seldom care to work, the government has long ago been reduced to two simple principles—authority and obedience.

The book concludes with a well-stated home and foreign missionary appeal for £50,000.

Church Sanitary Association.—The seventh annual meeting of this Association was held on the 19th inst. Mr. G. W. E. Russell, who presided, pointed out that our Saviour had always acted for the benefit of the soul by attention to the welfare of the body. The needs of the work were made evident by the deplorable social conditions existing in overcrowded London; and the chairman read some graphic remarks of Canon Scott Holland, showing what "home, sweet home," meant to the poor of London, who lived in overcrowded, filthy dens. Dr. Schofield advocated that "the Bishops be respectfully invited to consider the desirability of requiring from candidates for the ministry some knowledge of the laws of health." Clergymen, he said, were brought into close contact with the poor, and it was necessary for them to systematize the sanitary teaching that they were already imparting. Knowledge not only meant power, but it meant ease. The nation trusted the clergy, and felt that they could do good by promoting sanitation. Dr. Bond, medical officer of health for Holborn, said that legislation would not only benefit the public, but traders as well. Since a meat inspector had been appointed for his district, diseased meat had disappeared from Holborn.

* Servants of All. By Bramwell Booth (6d. 101, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.).

Home Missions.

To Interest Our Villagers.

By MARGARET A. ROLLESTON.

IN The Christian of last year there were some very interesting articles on village work, and in the present number of the Nineteenth Century there is an article from the able pen of Dr. Jessopp on the needs of our country districts. Dr. Jessopp's article is, indeed, written from a different standpoint from that taken by the writer in The Christian; the former has for his immediate object the bodily and intellectual needs of the villager, while the latter was considering solely his spiritual wants. The aims of the two writers are, however, not different; for, while acknowledging that salvation can only be found in Christ Jesus, and that "the old, old story" is for ever new, we must not forget that God now, as of old, speaks to men "in divers manners," that Christ Himself when on earth did not neglect the bodily needs of those who came to Him, and that, therefore, in providing for the bodily and intellectual needs of the people we are taking steps to advance God's kingdom.

But possibly the readers of Dr. Jessopp's article may rise from it with somewhat a feeling of despair. "The fields are," indeed, "white already to harvest," but where are the labourers, the men of wealth, who will be ready to give their money for the good of the villages as they have shown themselves ready to give it for the towns? Desirable, however, as the consecration of a millionaire's wealth would be to the improvement of our villages, the work need not stay for them, and I would venture to suggest a very modest plan which has been tried with some measure of success, and which, as involving little expense and not an undue amount of time, can be tried by persons living in the country who have neither much money or time to spare. The plan might be called an Industrial and Natural History Movement; and I shall best explain it by relating its ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.

Last autumn two friends and myself settled in the semi-suburban country district of A. Lying twenty miles from London, it is in the heart of most beautiful scenery, but labours under the disadvantage of being neither quite country nor quite suburban. A group of jerry-built houses forms a probable centre to a fast-growing neighbourhood, and the surrounding country is dotted here and again by villages, scattered cottages, and by the houses of the country gentry and of business men. The cottages are over-crowded, and their inhabitants have the evil reputation of being foul-mouthed and hard drinkers.

Through working in the Sunday School we soon got to learn the condition of the place, and we were anxious to do something to give the boys and girls rational employment in their spare hours. The superintendent and the other teachers gladly gave their help, and an evening was given up once a week to teaching the boys and girls, whose ages ranged from seven to seventeen, fretwork, basket making, drawing, netting, knitting, and sewing, with the immediate view of holding an industrial exhibition this summer. The evenings proved a great success, and until the long days came the room was crowded with boys and girls glad to get away from their cramped and wretched homes. So much for the industrial side of the movement.

The Natural History scheme was started by a wild flower competition. We gave out that a prize would be given for the largest number of different wild flowers collected between March and the exhibition in June. Each competitor was given a little penny note book, and every week the competitors came to our house with the new flowers they had found during the week and their books into which we entered the names of the specimens. Some Saturday afternoons were given up to flower hunts under the guidance of a young lady well acquainted with the names and habitats of our English flora. To most of the children it was quite a revelation that trees like the oak, yew, hazel, &c., whose fruit they knew well, must have flowers, and that all yellow flowers were not buttercups or dandelions! But they soon became quick to notice minute differences, and gave us many an anxious search in Johns and Hooker!

In the middle of June the exhibition was held, and there was really quite a decent little show of baskets, fretwork, dressed dolls, needlework, cakes, live rabbits, kittens, fresh water aquariums, bunches of flowers, &c. Some of the geometrical drawings were tacked on to the walls, and also the schedules, made by the children themselves from their books, of the flowers they had found.

In this competition a girl, who had gathered 150 specimens, won the first prize, and a little boy of seven years, who had found 137, had the prize for the juniors. Some of the exhibits were sold; the exhibitors who had paid for their materials taking the money that their exhibits sold for; while that given for the articles the exhibitors had not paid for went to us, and thus we were able very largely to recoup ourselves for the expenses we had incurred. The children and many of the parents took the keenest interest in the show, and we think that we have already seen some good results. One girl, for example, who comes from one of the worst homes, and has had the look of a half wild creature, has already got a more self-respecting manner, and it is satifactory that the interest roused in flowers has not been dropped. A lady has kindly offered to give a magnifying glass to each child who perseveres in the wild flower collection for some weeks longer, and we are hoping to get the boys to make butterfly and beetle collections with a view to an exhibition next year, which we hope may be on a larger scale, including the parents.

The possession of a hobby is a great weapon with which to guard against the attractions of the public-house, and we trust that by God's grace we may be able to implant in the minds of these children a love of the wonderful works of God, and thus, in supplementing more directly religious work, may be allowed to help in the formation of the character of men and women, whose conscious aim will be "to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever."

S.A. Exhibition.

PHILIP'S reply to Nathanael, "Come and see," embodies a principle of wide application in Christian work. An opportunity to see something of the proportions of Salvation Army work is afforded at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, in the exhibition which is to be continued daily until August 8.

Nearly all the countries where the Army is at work are represented. One hundred and fifty delegates from these countries, dressed in the costumes peculiar to the nation from which they come, are at work in the various sections. In addition, many officers and employés are to be found at their posts in the home departments, which include architects, life assurance, bank, musical instruments, medical, and trade in all its operations; industries for the women aided by the rescue department, men's social, and other branches of the Army's social scheme.

India is represented also by

A GROUP OF CHILDREN

rescued from the recent famine, who are dressed in the costumes worn by the different castes in India. Africa is typified by a Zulu kraal, with five huts of differing shape. Mr. and Mrs. M'bambo are an interesting Zulu couple.

A large section is devoted to Europe, and here are to be found Dutch and Belgian peasants and fishermen, a coal mine, windmills, Dutch ware and flowers, Dutch canal boats, Dutch dairy, a Danish farmhouse with country women, a fac-simile of Luther's room, and goods manufactured in Germany. Alabaster busts, mosaics, Majolica ware, a gondola and gondolier, with a captain who formed one of the celebrated Garibaldian Legion, represent Italy.

A brass band in national costume comes from Sweden, and a model of the Swedish headquarters is combined with curios of Scandinavian life and products. Finland has a variety of exhibits, including peculiar stringed instruments. There is a Swiss chalet, with exhibits of wood-carving, musical boxes, and household utensils. America, Canada, Japan, Bermuda, South America, and the West Indies are also well represented.

Last Saturday a private view of the exhibition was given to leading members and friends of the Army and to representatives of the press. An auditorium has been erected near the Liverpool Road entrance, and here, in the afternoon, an attraction was found in the action songs and in costume, with dumb-bell, scarf, sleigh-bell, and other auxiliaries. The youngsters are also trained to alertness and promptitude by taking part in representations of reviving the drowned, helping injured cyclists, and rescuing from a burning house.

MUSICAL DRILL BY JUNIORS

The auditorium presented to the eye a compact mass of humanity gathered to welcome "the General" at an evening meeting. Mr. Bramwell Booth reminded his hearers that the General had recently returned from a tour in Australia. General Booth, on rising to respond to his son's words of welcome, was received with enthusiasm. A review of his past life, to which kind allusions are continually being made, compelled him to regard himself as neither more nor less than a plain man who had striven to do what in him lay for the glory of his Lord, and the temporal and eternal interests of men. God had given him a wondrous harvest, of which they saw a few imperfect specimens in that building. As to Australia, in proportion to its population, the "Army" has had, perhaps, as great a success, and possesses to-day as strong a hold upon all classes of the community there, as it has in any other part of the world. The Government could not very well be more sympathetic, and grants of money freely given to are a substantial evidence of that friendliness. Turning to the exhibition, and dealing with various objections which might be raised to this "Salvation Show," he declared it would embrace nothing contrary to the Spirit of Christ. Its promoters desired to encourage their own comrades, and to show friends who have supported them with sympathy, prayer, and funds, something of what they had by their generous co-operation enabled the Army to accomplish. He trusted that the great outcome of the exhibition would be a fuller, deeper, more Christ-like consecration in all "soldiers," so that their words of welcome may be turned into acts which shall lift still higher, in this great city and throughout the world, the Cross of our Blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

SOCIAL OPERATIONS BY THE ARMY

After the General, some foreign representatives spoke. It was affecting to hear one of the little Indian famine children say, "No father, no mother; but, thank God, we found a happy home in the Salvation Army, and the dear General is now our father!" Meetings of a varied character will be held almost daily during the continuance of the exhibition, and it seems scarcely necessary to say that the liquor bars are closed.

The Burial, Funeral, and Mourning Reform Association.—At the annual meeting, held in the Church House, Westminster, Sir Dyce Duckworth, M.D., said that there was a change for the better from the old-time customs which had terrified him as a child, but there was now a tendency to exaggerate. Funerals should be simple, dignified, and inexpensive. Leaden coffins were objectionable, and so were old-fashioned family vaults. The period of wearing mourning apparel should be limited; and everyone should decide for himself how his body should be buried. It was the duty of the Church to foster a healthy public opinion on these questions. Rev. Septimus Buss suggested that the Bishops be respectfully invited to consider the desirability of the sixteenth Sunday after Trinity being named as suitable for a few words on burial, funeral, and mourning reform, because of the appropriateness of the Gospel appointed to be read on that day.

French Work in London.

THE anniversary of the mission to French-speaking foreigners, carried on in connection with the French Protestant Church, Bayswater, was recently held by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greer, at Grove House, Regent's Park.

A large gathering of friends came together, in spite of unpropitious weather, and Sir George Williams presided. The pastor, Rev. J. M. H. du Pontet-de la Harpe, gave a lucid description of the work. Many leading pastors and missionaries have held meetings, and numerous instances of definite blessing could be thankfully recorded. Great importance is attached to the diffusion of the Bible and of sound literature. The pastor endeavours to remain in touch with old members throughout the world. House-to-house and hospital visiting is maintained by a colporteur and others. The work among anarchists has been attended by hopeful results. An interest in the Word of God has been awakened in some well-known and avowed anarchists, who have read the sacred volume with diligence, and some have attended evangelistic meetings. The children's work continues to flourish, and the agencies for providing employment for governesses and domestics have been useful in hundreds of cases.

Through extending a timely helping hand to some poor and friendless foreigners, who, owing to illness or other circumstances, were in dire difficulty, the Mission has been the means of saving many from utter despair, and of restoring to the community humble, it may be, but useful members. Roman Catholics have embraced the Reformed Faith and joined the church, and this Protestant community is permeated by a truly healthy and cheering missionary spirit. Consequent upon the visit of M. Coillard, a Zambezia society was formed, with the object of praying and working for foreign missions. Out of their scanty means the people are always ready to show their sympathy with every Christian effort. Out of their poverty, with warm hearts, they contributed £33 last year to foreign missions.

It is regrettable that the medical mission has to remain closed for lack of funds, and that the general work is hampered by debt. Communications may be addressed to Pasteur du Pontet-de la Harpe, 16, Kildare Gardens, Bayswater, W.

Imperial Mission, Hanley.

THIS good work was commenced by Gipsy Smith in 1882 in a circus building, which, serving as it did for a beginning, is ill-adapted for a permanent work such as has been since established. If the work is to be placed on a firm and sound basis, more suitable premises must be provided.

The work already done, and being carried on by the present superintendent, Mr. William Bell, and by a host of willing workers, is worthy of a much more convenient place. The trustees and friends have resolved on erecting a building capable of seating upwards of 1,000 people, with Sunday schools for 400 children, numerous class rooms, and all the modern equipment required for conducting a vigorous Mission to the masses.

The Mission is conducted upon strictly undenominational lines. It seeks to help all Evangelical Churches, and in numerous cases has passed on to them men and women who have lapsed and have been reclaimed. Its trustees and subscribers, too, represent the Established and the Free Churches of the neighbourhood.

While the work is immediately local, its converts may be found in many of the towns and villages of the country, and in several cases are themselves energetic and successful workers in their new spheres.

The new building, which will be of plain brick work, will cost £2,400; towards this local friends have already promised upwards of £1,000, and a further sum of £500 is expected to be raised locally. It is earnestly desired that the building should be open free of debt. Appeal for help is therefore made to a generous Christian public The treasurer is Mr. S. Rathbone Edge, J.P., Brampton, Newcastle-under-Lyme.

Soldiers on Salisbury Plain.

IN connection with her work at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, Miss Perks is conducting a mission among the soldiers on Salisbury Plain. An interesting glimpse of the work is afforded by the following letter from a private at Bulford Camp:—

"Just a few words about the work of the Lord here. The meetings have been very bright and good. The Soldiers' Home, Winchester, has two marquees, beautifully situated in the trees, as last year. One is used for refreshments and as a reading room, while writing materials are supplied free of charge, as in the permanent Home. The second tent is fitted up for meetings, which are held nightly, and are always well attended. The ladies and gentlemen have been doing all they can to win souls for the Lord Jesus. I know of a number who have passed from darkness to light. The soldiers and marines have been attracted by the sweet singing, the beautiful words touching even the hardest hearts. Our soldiers have received many useful little gifts, which were most acceptable, situated, as we are here, far from any town or village."

Miss Perks has done her utmost in organizing meetings. After the singing had drawn the congregations, she spoke most earnestly as the messenger of the Lord, and with cheering results. We are looking for more blessing as the meetings continue. There are many more comrades who are in the bondage of sin, and we pray that they may be reached.

The Soldiers' Home, Hounslow.

IN connection with the Soldiers' Home, Hounslow, we have been able to labour among the three militia battalions which have been encamped on Hounslow Heath. The Garrison Adjutant very kindly procured two hospital marquees for us; these we furnished, and provided with texts, magazines, games, ink, pens and paper, draperies and flowers, thus making the tents into a Soldiers' Home, which was open all and every day for nine weeks. Our canvas home was in great request for letter-writing; we provided stationery free of charge, and a meeting was held each evening. The attendances were large, and the attention splendid. Many were convicted of sin, and some, we believe, trusted Christ to save them. Mr. Sidney Smith (late hon. supt. of the Portsmouth Institute) and other friends have rendered valuable aid.

I would wish to call the attention of brothers and sisters in Christ to the needs of the Hounslow Soldiers' Home and ask their prayers and help.

Constance V. Meyers, Hon. Supt.

Mile End Artisan Y.M.C.A.

THE new premises of the above Association, in Cambridge Road, E., were opened on Tuesday last by Lord Kinnaird. The large hall was filled, and the proceedings were of an enthusiastic character.

Mr. F. L. Porter, of Hackney Y.M.C.A., pithily described the rise and progress of the Association, and referred to the labours of Mr. J. Spurling, who had been mainly instrumental in securing the new premises. Lord Kinnaird said it was their duty to go on and progress, for progress meant life, recognizing one leader and one master—God. There was room enough for progress, and it was their duty to make use of all the room they had to try to evangelize all they could come in contact with, ever to follow after better things, but not to try to change the purpose of the Gospel. Their purpose was to win young men for Christ, and their power must be the power of the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Harry Guinness extended hearty congratulations on behalf of himself and his church. He did, indeed, thank God for the Y.M.C.A. Everyone should have an interest in it. He remembered when in Egypt paying a visit to the famous fortress and battle ground of Tel-el-Kebir, and finding put up there in large block letters, "This fortress is in English occupation;" and they might put up over their building, "This hall is in Christ's occupation."

Mr. J. H. Putterill urged his hearers to do all in their power to counteract the public-houses, and make their buildings as comfortable as possible, and thus they would be able to retain their members, and finally lead them on to accept Christ as their Saviour. A few words of appreciative thanks to the speakers were added by Mr. Spurling.

Christian Union for Social Service.

THE colony at Lingfield presented a bright and busy scene on the 17th inst., the occasion being the formal opening of the new buildings by the Duchess of Sutherland. The growth of the colony has been in every way remarkable, considering the small amount of money expended. Every feature of the colony was in perfect order and in holiday attire. "Very beautiful!" was the repeated exclamation of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who was making his first visit to Lingfield to preside on this occasion. The human element, so often at variance with such surroundings, seemed to be in delightful harmony with them. Sixty colonists, mostly from the workhouse, now fully occupy the buildings prepared for them, and the report of these, as well as of the service of house brothers, marks a distinct improvement on the past. But the most obvious progress is that made by the epileptic children (also from the workhouse), all of whom have gained in weight and health, without the use of bromide, and whose mental and moral conditions show a fully corresponding improvement.

The company gathered outside the farm house for the dedication of the large new dormitory attached to it. Immediately on the arrival of the Duchess, accompanied by Mrs. Beresford Melville and Archdeacon Sinclair, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was sung. Dr. Paton offered an invocation, in place of the Vicar of Lingfield, who was ill, and having presented the Duchess with a silver key and explained the object of the work, led her Grace and the party through the new building, in which Mr. Tinling, the honorary secretary, offered the dedication prayer. After a corresponding ceremony and service at the other end of the colony, where the Archdeacon of London offered the dedication prayer, with special reference to the epileptic and crippled children, the meeting continued on the lawn. The Duchess made a sympathetic speech, expressing her confidence in the economic basis and distinctive method of the colony. She also read a letter of hearty approval from Mr. Chaplin, President of the Local Government Board, and in concluding handed Dr. Paton £100 which she had just received in answer to her own appeal. The cause was lucidly explained and strongly recommended in the speeches of the director, Dr. Douglas Morrison and Mr. T. A. Denny.

The Christian Union for Social Service cannot, however, be content with the success of a local institution. It exists as an undenominational agent of all the churches and a bond between them and national and local authorities for the work of social restoration. This distinctive purpose yet waits for practical recognition by the Churches, but such testimonies as those which were heard last week cannot fail to promote the recognition of its competence to render this service on a national scale. J. F. B. T.

Eastbourne Girls' Home.

THE Home for Motherless, Orphan, and Destitute Little Girls, carried on in Hurst Road, Eastbourne, by Miss Jane S. Lee, has not been so fully utilized during the past year as it might have been. It is to be regretted that the institution should have its usefulness curtailed for want of adequate support, so that fewer children have been sheltered and many most needy cases have had to be refused. This good work was established in 1871, and was formerly connected with St. Giles' and with Plaistow, Essex. The thoughtfulness of constant friends who have contributed in money and in kind has alone furnished means to keep the Home open; but the great need is for an increase in regular contributors, so that the benefits of Christian care and training may be extended to many more of the young lives bereft of a mother's love and needing shelter from want and danger.

The Congregational School.

THIS institution at Caterham, Surrey, was founded in 1811. From its commencement up to the present time it has exerted a powerful influence for good, and has been an inestimable blessing to many hundreds of ministers' sons. Not a few to-day are occupying prominent and useful positions in the Christian ministry and in educational work, whilst many others are prosperous men of business, who owe their success in a very large degree to the early advantages enjoyed in the Congregational School. One ministerial contributor to the funds wrote: "I ought to appreciate the work of the school, for I have had four beloved sons trained in it. The moral influence and tone of the school are good, and I am deeply grateful to God for the wholesome helps my sons there obtained to a learned and useful life." The secretary is Rev. Hy. Grainger, 42, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Evangelistic.

Another Great Tent.

THE scene that presents itself on the sidewalk in the Mile End Road on Saturday night in the vicinity of the Great Assembly Hall must be left to the imagination of the reader. To describe it in detail is impossible. The waste ground abutting is occupied with vendors of every description of article and food. The courts and alleys seem to empty all their occupants into the great thoroughfare, and it is one continual buzz of voices from thousands bent on marketing or sight-seeing. In the very midst of this Mr. F. N. Charrington has pitched a capacious tent for week-night services during the summer season. At the opening service on Saturday evening last it was crowded.

Mr. Bewley F. Weaver dedicated the erection to the service of God in prayer. Mr. Frank Weaver then sang sweetly, and Mr. F. N. Charrington briefly told the story of the tent, and read a financial statement, which showed that the sum of £271 was needed for fitting-up, &c., while £1,000 was due for the ground.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, said he had great faith in tent work. It was an old form of worship. They worshipped God in a tent in the wilderness. Mr. Charrington's great work years ago began in a tent, the result of which was the erection of that magnificent building, the Great Assembly Hall. Work can be done in a tent that cannot be accomplished in a permanent building, and the new erection would afford great opportunities of working among those made anxious by the preaching of the Gospel. He prayed God abundantly to bless this new departure of work for Him.

Mr. Bewley Weaver subsequently made an earnest appeal to the unsaved, and at the conclusion many rose for prayer; not a few of them remained behind, went into the inquiry room and yielded to Christ, while many signed the temperance pledge.

The "Men's Own" Meeting on Sunday afternoon was held in the tent, which was filled. An extraordinary time was experienced. Mr. Ben Alberto, a converted tipster, and well-known in Mile End, was the speaker; and Miss Kate Smith, the blind vocalist, sang. Scores of betting men and tipsters gathered to hear one of their old comrades, who gave a very powerful testimony of his conversion at Doncaster races.

Mr. Hy. Stafford Smith, of the Evangelization Society, London, has been holding a three weeks' mission in a tent here at Mere. The attendance every night has been good, and we have reason to believe that deep impressions have been made.

The Evangelist has now gone on to Broad Chalk, in the neighbourhood of Salisbury, where his previous labours have been very acceptable. John Pither.

Mr. John Harris has just concluded a fortnight's mission in Nayland. The meetings have been largely attended, on Sundays especially, those being present who seldom, if ever, attend a place of worship. A great interest was awakened among the people, which continued throughout the meetings. Mr. Harris and all concerned in the work were much cheered and encouraged at the results of this, his first effort in the place.

We have just completed seven weeks of consecutive services in a tent at Upper Knowle (a ritualistic suburb of Bristol), with signs following of blessing both to saved and unsaved. A smaller tent is at present in use in the village of Filton, under the care of Mr. Ball. Mr. George Dymock has removed his tent to Frampton Cotterell, where encouraging meetings are being conducted night after night. A month of Gospel services will be commenced in another of our tents on July 29, between Highbridge and Burnham. Jas. A. Vicary.

The tent work in connection with the London Tent Evangelization Committee continues to make remarkable progress. The central tent, at Tooting, is increasing in usefulness, and on Sunday evening last, after Mr. Leonard Weaver had spoken, a large number of seekers came forward. Evangelistic operations have also been commenced in two other tents, at Peckham Rye and Lavender Hill, both, therefore, within a few miles of Tooting, so that co-operation is possible in many ways.

At the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last, Mr. A. Holness testified to the excellent commencement at Peckham, remarkable congregations having assembled, and the Word being with power. Mr. John Vine conducted the opening at Lavender Hill, where the large tent proved quite insufficient to accommodate anything like the number of people who strove for admission. There, also, many were impressed, and subsequently testified to definite blessing. The movement is certainly growing, and one reason for this lies in the fact that, co-existent with reverent feeling, there is freedom from formality and restraint.

In January last, Mr. George Clarke held a mission in the Public Hall, Ipswich, for sixteen days. There were crowded attendances, and the capacity of the hall was not nearly equal to the demand. In continuation of this effort, another mission has just been held from July 1 to 17 inclusive. For this occasion a large tent was pitched for meetings, with other tents for prayer meetings and inquirers, bookstall, cloak rooms, bicycle storage, and refreshments for country visitors. Electric lighting was employed. The arrangements were made by a local committee consisting of clergy and Nonconformist ministers, influential laymen, and ladies. The unity between different denominations of Christians exhibited during the mission has been perhaps its most distinguishing feature. This unity is in considerable measure the result of the monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life which have been held in the town for about three years. Another feature of the Mission has been the effort made to reach the village people. To this end a large number of open-air meetings in the villages have been organized by some friends at Ipswich in conjunction with those locally interested. These have been exceedingly well attended, the numbers present often exceeding the whole population of the village in which the meeting was held. A hearty welcome to the tent was also given to the villagers, who were invited to apply for reserved seats; many availed themselves of the offer, about 100 each night being thus accommodated. At all the meetings there were very large attendances, the numbers reaching out into the open space around, the sides of the tent being taken down. Rapt attention was paid by the whole of the great audiences, and there is every reason to believe that a deep stirring has taken place.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—During August, Great Assembly Hall, London.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till July 31, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 30, at 7 p.m., Mr. P. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 30, at 7 p.m., Mr. C. Russell Hurditch; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. George Clarke.—Till Aug. 2, Teignmouth.

Mr. Newton Jones.—During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

Mr. Leonard Weaver, Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus), until further notice.

Rev. Thos. Cook.—July 30, Skegness; Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

Mr. George Hunter.—Till Aug. 13, Uxbridge.

Mr. James Sprunt.—Kilburn Hall, N.W., every Sun. and Thurs. during August; Mayes Hall, Wood Green, N., each Wed.; Enfield, N., Sept.; Chester, Oct.

Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Sept. 1-8, Downton.

Mr. John Elliott.—From July 30 onward, Tent Meetings, East Finchley.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Every week night till Aug. 2 in the American Tent, Lavender Hill, Clapham Junction, S.W.

Notices.

Communications Received with Thanks. — H.G.L. J.M.H.D.P.H. Mrs. B. S.T.J. H.M. C.E.F. M.R.J. W.J.L. G.W. J.S.M. T.D.L. J.F.B.T. E.J.M.D. W.C.T. A.T. J.S. Mrs. R. T.S. E.H.G. M.M.K. M.W. K.W.J.H. R.T.H. E.A.S. C.F. C.J.E. W.O. J.E. S.G. F.F.F. W.S. J.A. T.C.M. Mrs. T.M. J.A.V. R. A.R. E.H.K. M.G. F.W.B. G.H.M. A.F.H. M.A.C. H.D. A.L.L. R.R. J.H. N.R.H. W.F. S. A.G.H. T.D.H. C.W. H.F.G. W.K. M.S.B. E.B. W.M.R. E.B. R.M.R. D.M. J.H.S. S.E.H. J.E.R.

Applications for Tracts.—H. J. Booth, 3, Broughton Road, Owlerton, near Sheffield; A. M. Scantlebury, 110, Nursery Terrace, Green Street, Hereford; C. Hunter (for street distribution), 94A, Spread Eagle Yard, Whitechapel, London, E.; Mr. B. Spencer, Orwell Lodge, Lesney Park Road, Erith, Kent; Herbert Elkin (for soldiers), 98, Shakespeare Street, Southport, Lancs.; Mr. C. W. Campion, 7, Napier Street, Dalton-in-Furness; Mr. R. Ramsey, Gutcher, Northyell, Shetland; H. Christie, 83, Heavitree Road, Plumstead; Mr. S. Cowley, Keynsham, near Bristol.

Mount Hermon Orphanage.

UNEXPECTED and practical testimony to the value of this long standing work among destitute orphan girls was received in the course of the past year by a small legacy from a lady in whose service one of the girls had long given much satisfaction. The main principle of the work has continued in force ever since its foundation in 1864 by the late Miss Mary Ann Cole, of blessed memory, namely, that the inmates, who range from five to twelve years of age, are received without voting, the management "looking unto Jesus" in simple faith for the supply of every need, by the Lord inclining his stewards to give of their substance to support the children for his sake. It is sought to bring the little ones to Jesus and to train them in the fear and admonition of the Lord. After industrial training, the girls are, at fifteen or sixteen years of age, placed in suitable situations, and the Home influence is continued as far as possible. Seventeen new and needy cases, some especially interesting ones, were received during the year. The work, centred at 55, Cambridge Avenue, Kilburn, N.W., has long been under the able direction of Mrs. Parry.

Work in Spitalfields.

THE report issued by Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent of the King Edward Institute and Mission, Spitalfields, shows that a far-reaching and comprehensive work continues to be carried on. Mr. Montague has known the schools during the whole of his working life. He has seen their small beginnings—first in a single room, next in an old stable—develop into an extensive service, which has two large buildings at separate stations in King Edward Street and Albert Street.

At the outset of the Ragged School Movement, early in the present reign, Spitalfields had a reputation for extreme squalor and poverty, and as late as 1866 the parish was severely afflicted by cholera. As regards sanitation great improvements have taken place, but the overcrowding has become intensified through the large number of Polish and Russian Jews, as well as other foreign aliens, who are continually settling in the parish, and who, in many instances, may crowd out more interesting subjects in the persons of actual descendants of the Huguenot settlers, who, as silk-weavers, settled in the parish over two centuries ago. In addition to the regular Sunday services, there are very large Sunday schools, necessitating separate services for childeren. Bible classes for young men and young women are also largely attended.

The evening classes, founded for imparting a technical knowledge of certain arts and crafts, have had the effect of drawing many away from the streets and from vicious amusements, and the annual exhibition has recently been held. The "old scholars" of the schools take an unusual number of prizes on account of long service in situations. Every week a great deal is done in the way of distributing evangelical literature from house to house. After the death of Lord Shaftesbury, who was president of the work until the last, the late Duchess of Teck and her daughter, the present Duchess of York, showed great interest in what was being done, and even visited Spitalfields on several occasions. The Christian influence of the work extends to some thousands of people in the parish.

Salvation Army Rescue Work.

THE interesting annual report of the Salvation Army's Rescue Work, written by Commissioner Railton, comprises a number of forcibly written descriptive interviews with officers. The work in the streets and in the police courts, in the industrial and maternity homes, in the shelters and lodging homes receives brief notice, and there is a glimpse of the methods of dealing with a difficult case:—

"But now," I asked somebody, "would you describe to me what does happen when you have a really bad troublesome girl?"

"We had once a girl here of fifteen. She had been brought up by a grandmother until she was eight years of age, and seemed quite unmanageable in every way."

"Was it that her temper was so violent?"

"Not only that! She had acquired the habit of stealing, and doing all she could likely to cause annoyance. She was expelled from one institution on this account.

"And what did you do with her?"

"At first she would not work or do anything right, and really I began to wonder whether we ought to keep her, for you see we must make room for those who are willing to be helped. We went on praying for her and patiently dealing with her, till at last, slowly, very slowly, the light seemed to dawn. She is now thoroughly changed; is, in fact, a miracle of grace, and a good little worker."

Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Bramwell Booth, 259, Mare Street, Hackney, N.E.

Mr. and Mrs. Soltau's Bible School.—The following suggestions are made for the formation of Correspondence Classes:—A local secretary must undertake the correspondence with headquarters, and with the students in the district. Sets of questions will be issued on the selected book for study, at the beginning of each month, as aids to study. The anwers must be returned to the local secretary, who will look over them, mark them, and return them to the student, with a set of model answers, by which each student will correct his own answers in detail. A fresh set of questions will also accompany these answers for the incoming month's study. The supply of questions and model answers will be sent to each local secretary from headquarters. A fee of 2s. 6d. per annum must be paid by each member to the local secretary to cover expenses. Headquarters will be 85, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, N., and all communications can be addressed to Rev. G. or Mrs. Soltau.

Books for Antigua.—Rev. O. Oscar Haynes, of Antigua, a Moravian minister, who is staying in England for a short time, asks for gifts of new or old books, magazines, and periodicals for a young men's reading room, and for Sunday school gift books. Address, 29, Woodland Hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.

(365)

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, July 24th, 1899.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

	£	s.	d.
China Inland Mission—E. and L.N., £3; S.N., £10; S.M.P., 10s.; J.H.L., 2s. 6d.; Edith, £1; J.C.D., £10	24	12	6
British and Foreign Bible Society—E. and L.N., £3; E.A., 10s.	3	10	0
Pundita Ramabai's Work—E. and L.N.	1	0	0
Famine South Russia—Three Subscribers, £1; V.P., 3s.; Z., £1	2	3	0
Dutch Baptist Union—M.S.	1	1	0
Work at Alicant, &c.—M.S.	2	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India—S., £10; R.P., 10s.; L.B., 2s. 6d.;	10	12	6
Regions Beyond Missionary Union (Africa)—H.H., £50; (Congo Balolo) Haggai ii. 4, 5, £1 10s.	51	10	0
Poor Jews Jerusalem—S. per L. and C. Bank, Aldershot...	5	0	0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission (Plague)—A.E.L.	0	4	0
Mr. Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee—M.	2	2	0
Spanish Evangelization Society—A.A.N.	1	0	0
Paris City Mission—W.H.C.	1	0	0
Tiberias Mission (Dr. Torrance)—Mrs. V.	0	5	0
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission, New Hebrides—Miss S....	1	10	0
Medl Mission, France—M.K.D.G.	2	0	0
Bost Asylums, La Force—M.K.D.G.	0	17	6
Figueras Mission, Spain—M.K.D.G.	0	10	0
Mexican Protestant Mission (Rev. W. D. Powell)—M.K.D.G.	0	10	0
Zanzibar Strangers' Rest—M.S., £2; M., £2 ...	4	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—E. and L. N., £3; Mede, £2; S.M.P., £1; St. Nicholas, 7s. 6d.; N.A.S. 2s.; A.H.. £1; Edith, £1; W.H.C., £1; Gratitude, £1	10	9	6
Bristol Orphan Houses—E. and L.N., £3; F.C., 5s.	3	5	0
Stockwell Orphanage—E. and L.N.	3	0	0
Religious Tract Society—E. and L.N.	3	0	0
Ragged School Union—E. and L.N., 10s.; (Cripples' Holiday) G.B., 10s.; J.F., 2s. 6d.; S.L.R., £1 1s.; E., M., A., and L.W., 10s.; M.N., 10s..... ...	3	3	6
George Yard Mission—E. and L.N., 10s.; Mede, £2; N., 5s.	2	15	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—R.B.C. (Bristol) 5s.; J.H.L., 2s. 6d.	0	7	6
Scripture Gift Mission, &c.—Amico	2	0	0
National Refuges for Homeless Children—Amico ...	2	0	0
Open Air Mission—Ronville, 2s. 6d.; (Racecourse) D.E.O'C., 10s.	0	12	6
Rev. D. Baron's Work (Distribution of Scriptures)—S.R.H.	1	0	0
Joshua Poole—S.R.H., 10s.; M.S., £5	5	10	0
Kensit Crusade—C.F.C., 4s.; J.H.L., 5s.; P.P., 10s.	0	19	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—Mede, £2; (Children's Holiday Home) A.B.C., 10s.; R.S.H., 10s.; (Convalescent Home) A.H., £1...	4	0	0
Field Lane Mission—Mede	2	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Mede	2	0	0
Day in Country Fund—Mede, £2; A.B.C., 10s.; M.F.S.S., 10s.; J.F., 2s. 6d.; Rev. R.B., 2s. 6d.; S.L.R., 10s. 6d.; H.D.R., 4s. 6d.; A.H., 10s.; X.Y.Z., 2s. 6d.; S.B.T., £1	5	12	6
Friendless and Fallen—Mede, £2; P.P., £1 10s. ...	3	10	0
Salvation Army (Rescue Work)—Mede	2	0	0
Medland Hall—Mede	2	0	0
Children's Country Holiday Fund—M.F.S.S., 10s.; St. Nicholas, 10s.	1		0
Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Cripple Children's Holiday—G.B., 10s.; Matt. xxv. 40, £1; Z., 15s.; S.L.R., £1 1s.; A.H., £1; R.S.H., 10s.; Mrs. V., 10s.; M.N., 10s.	5	16	0
P. Meth. Church and School, Harringay—M. ...	2	2	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—S.M.P., £1; E.A.N., 5s.; (Camping Out) A.H., £1	2	5	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—S.M.P.	0	10	0
W. T. Paton Memorial Fund—M.S.	5	0	0
Working Men's Mission, New Cut—J.H.L.	0	5	0
Jewish Work London City Mission—J.H.L.... ...	0	5	0
Imperial Protestant Federation—Anon	1	0	0
Protestant Reformation Society—Anon	1	0	0
Mr. Colin Young's Work and Home for Jews—M.S.	5	0	0
Uncle Tom's Cot (See page 19)	0	1	6
Welcome Mission, Harrow Green—W.G.	2	2	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—Mrs. V., 5s.; Mede, £2...	2	5	0
London City Mission—Mrs. V., 5s.; P.P., 10s.; (Disabled Missionaries, &c.) B.H.B., £2	2	15	0
Mrs. Meredith's Mission (Prison)—Mrs. V., 5s.; M.K.D.G., £1 10s.	1	15	0
Homes Aged Blind Crouch Hill—Mrs. V.	0	5	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—Mrs. V.... ...	0	5	0
Christian Community (Children's Holiday Fund)—R.B., £2 2s.; M.N., 10s.; Amico, £5	7	12	0
Rev. J. W. Atkinson's Children's Holiday—M.N. ...	0	10	0
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—B.H.B. ...	1	0	0
Lord's Day Observance Society—P.P....	0	10	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief Fund—M.K.D.G. ...	0	5	0
Reformation Defence (Anti-Ritualistic League)—H.I.M.	2	0	0
Total	£220	0	0

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

Bethnal Green Free Library, E.—J.G.B., 5s.; Miss B., 5s.

British Syrian Mission.—Whatsoever, Eccles. ix, 10, £10.

Mr. Fegan's Homes.—Mrs. O., Ramsgate, 10s. (Camping out.)

Dr Barnardo's Homes.—Sympathy, 7s. 6d.; Deccan, India, £3 6s. 8d.

Ragged School Union Holiday Fund—E., M., A., and L.W., 10s. (See Donation List).

West London Mission (Country Holiday Fund)—A.F., 3s.; Anon, 3s., 2s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 2s.; A Widow's Mite, 1s.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—A., 10s.; J.C.B., 2s. 6d; G., 6s.; D.M.M., 7s. 6d.; E.F., £1 1s.

The Kensit Crusade and Wickliffe Preachers' Fund.—Rev. W. Peacock, 3s. 6d.; Rev. E. H. Cosens, 5s.; A Presbyterian, 5s.; A.B., £1 1s.; Mrs. Leigh, £2 2s.; Miss Powell, £1; Dr. Renton, £1 1s.; Anon, £5; Miss Crickitt, £3; Miss Cahill, 10s.; H. E. Edwards, £1 1s.; H. Bretherton, 10s.; S. Southworth, £1; Miss Cooper, £2; Mrs. Battersby, £1; J. Tonge, £1; Mrs. Nicholson, £3 3s.; Rev. T. G. Carew, 5s.; F. Thirkettle, 10s.; Mrs. Gill, £1; M.K., £1; James Carr, £5; Capt. Branwell, 10s.; Capt. Toynbee, £1 1s.—JOHN KENSIT, Secretary, 18, Paternoster Row.

(964)

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The Night Shelter.
The Refuge.
Eight Children's Cottage Homes.

All the Homes are full, but we are just now absolutely without Funds.

SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for to meet the present urgent need.

MARY H. STEER.

28, Betts Street, St. George's, London, E.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to enable

CURRENT LIABILITIES,

which amount to about

£250,

to be met.

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN

And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.
Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS ADDIS, D.D.

DR. ADDIS, senior minister of the Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh, was one of the few remaining Pre-Disruption ministers. He was for forty-seven years in the active ministry, from which he retired in 1888. Dr. Chalmers was at one time a member of his congregation, and it was in Morningside Free Church that the great leader of the Church practically laid the foundation-stone of the Sustentation Fund. Dr. Addis was beloved by his congregation, which grew rapidly under his ministry, and in 1874 Rev. A. Martin (now professor) was appointed his colleague. Dr. Addis, who was in the eighty-fifth year of his age, was able to be in church three or four Sundays ago.

MR. HOLT SKINNER.

On the night of July 20 Mr. Holt Skinner passed to the other side, in his ninety-seventh year. Those who loved him rejoice at the glad exchange for the weary, way-worn pilgrim. Convicted by the Holy Spirit in his youth, he found peace through the text, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness," &c. He was long enabled to glorify God by helping on his cause in some measure by active work in Edinburgh during his long residence there, and by his efforts for the good of others in his Perthshire home.

Whilst living at Blackheath Mr. Holt Skinner was assiduous in his attendance as a member of the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society and many other Christian societies. At the age of eighty he settled at Ryde, and was still remarkably hale and vigorous, active and cheery. His voice was often heard in prayer at the Y.M.C.A. meetings. Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes at home and abroad had a warm place in his heart. The cause of missions to the heathen was especially dear to him; and after consulting with Mr. Chang, the Chinese giant, as to the desirability of having a lady or a gentleman missionary to represent him in China, he had the privilege of having a devoted young Christian lady as his substitute, a member of the China Inland Mission.

His was a peculiarly bright, happy, sunny, contented old age, passed in his much-loved Ryde home, or on the Riviera at Bordighera, until weakness and increasing infirmities came on during the last months. During his illness he endeared himself to his kind doctor and devoted nurses by his extraordinary patience, sweetness, and gratitude.

Evangelical Tract Society.—Mutual help among tract distributors in their work for the Master has for seventeen years marked the operations of the British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society and Prayer Union, which has its headquarters at 10, Paternoster Row, E.C., and is superintended by Mr. Samuel E. Roberts. Its members combine by monthly contributions to sustain the funds; and the principle of freewill offering promotes giving "in the Lord," while providing for the abundance of one ministering to the lack of another. A letter is sent to all members once a month containing items of interest concerning the work, and a monthly prayer meeting is held. Last year's distribution covered 572,817 tracts, Gospel portions, booklets, and leaflets.

House of Industry, Salisbury.—As a district visitor in Salisbury, forty-two years since, Miss E. Beckingsale met with several girls, who from various causes were drifting to ruin, and felt that a helping hand should be given them and that they should be removed from their evil surroundings. She was led to open the "House of Industry" at 46, St. Ann's Street, in 1857, where girls might be received, and by a thoroughly Christian influence be taught God's love to them, while being trained in all kinds of domestic service. God has greatly blessed the work. Many have been led to Christ, seventeen of whom have died in the home from constitutional diseases, leaving behind a blessed testimony of the preciousness of the Lord Jesus. Since the opening of the home about 350 girls have been received; most of these have done well, and are now either in respectable service or settled in homes of their own. At the present time, however, the burden of debt weighs heavily upon the work, although Miss Beckingsale has spent all her private means therein.

Temperance Notes.

THE Watch Committee of Peterborough have made a rule that no constable in uniform shall take drink in a licensed house, and they have sent a circular to the licence-holders asking their assistance in seeing that this rule is obeyed.

General Hutton, of the Canadian Army, has ordered that no liquor be sold in canteens where the brigade camps are being held this year. There has never been such splendid discipline ever experienced, carousals and rowdyism being unknown.

The Kent County Union of the B.W.T.A. held its annual council meeting on Thurs., July 13, at Canterbury, in the Chapter House. By kind permission of the Dean a special service for the Union was held in the Cathedral at 3 p.m., when the Rev. Ivor Farrar preached from "Even Christ pleased not Himself. There was a large congregation.

Some significant evidence was given by the witnesses in an action for compensation in Southwark County Court. One said it was a common occurrence for working men on piecework to get half-drunk during their labour. A crane driver, who said that he had never seen the plaintiff sober when at work for the past nine years, was asked by the judge, "Is he sober now?" The reply was, "This is the first time I have seen him sober. If he had been working he wouldn't have been."

The following incident is reported by the Good Templar's Watchword:—"Tongowa, a little town in Oklahoma Territory, was in a state of riot over an attempt of the Churches, led by the Baptist denomination, to drive out the saloons. Eli Blake, a Baptist deacon and postmaster at Tongowa, who began the agitation against the saloons and led the fight, was waylaid the other night on his road home from the office, and beaten to death by a gang acting at the suggestion of the saloon men. Blake had been receiving letters for a week warning him that his life was in danger."

According to the Figaro ether is drunk in Paris, in the north of France turpentine is growing in popularity, and here and there a case is found where kerosene oil is taken, although this is generally done secretly. Normandy is the most drunken of all the departments in the Republic. While the fishermen and male peasants of the north coast are bad enough, the women are worse. So besotted have many of these people become that they work but five hours a week, earning only enough for the barest necessaries of life, and to keep themselves in drink.

The evils of absinthe drinking are growing on the Continent. It is only a few years since two old women living in a secluded mountain valley in Switzerland gave out their secret for brewing this drink from wormwood. Nowhere has its sale grown to so threatening proportions as in France, where its excessive use annually drives many to insanity. In the better cafés absinthe costs 50 centimes, but in the dives it is only three sous a glass. As such it is little less than a poison, especially when a dash of vitriol is added to give it an extra "bite."

Aged Merchant Seamen.—Since the opening of the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution in 1867, no less than 1,410 old sailors, hailing from all ports and places of the United Kingdom, have enjoyed, either as inmates or out-pensioners, the permanent benefits of this charity; but the committee, from want of funds, are compelled to keep in painful suspense hundreds of necessitous and worthy men who, for forty or fifty years, have been at sea as seaman, mate, or master, now too old, though willing, to obtain work, and destitute of money and friends. The institution has a "Home" at Belvedere, Kent, but its pensioners are scattered all over the country. Mr. J. Bailey Walker is secretary, and the office is at 58, Fenchurch Street, E.C.

Sailors' Orphan Girls.—In Fitzjohn's Avenue, Hampstead, is located the Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, which has attained its three score years and ten of existence. The history of the work, which had a very humble beginning in Whitechapel, is an interesting one, and has been marked by steady growth in usefulness. During last year eighteen girls quitted the Home, eight of these being placed in good situations, eight being withdrawn by friends now able to support them, and two leaving through ill-health. The vacancies thus created were filled by very deserving cases, the fatherless daughters of British sailors and fishermen, without waiting until election could take place. Efficient carrying on of this good work demands an increase of subscriptions. Mr. H. G. Holland is secretary; office at the Home.

The Y.M.C.A.

A SERIES of interesting meetings in connection with the foreign work of the National Council have taken place in the Northern districts of England, at which addresses have been given by Mr. Frank Anderson, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. Student Work in the Bombay Presidency. At Sunderland, the Mayor, Mr. Alderman W. Bruce, presided at a Sunday-morning breakfast meeting at the local Y.M.C.A., when over twenty young men volunteered to form a missionary union to promote the foreign work in which Mr. Anderson is engaged.

The premises in Darlington Street, Wolverhampton, have just been altered and redecorated, the electric light installed, and an organ, of the value of £300, the gift of a local friend, placed in the lecture hall.

Another member of the Hackney Association (the 14th) will shortly enter college to prepare for foreign missionary work. Several others have also volunteered.

Referring to the account of the work which appeared in our last issue, the secretary of the Brussels Y.M.C.A. writes that the full address of the institution is 10-12, Rue des Finances, near the Eglise de Ste Gudule, and the University. The restaurant of the Association is open to all Christian friends.

Personalia.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT returns from his evangelistic tour in Germany on Saturday. Communications should be sent to his private address, 29, Poet's Road, Highbury New Park, N.

REV. PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE has left town, and will not return to London till the end of September. No letters will be forwarded unless the envelope is marked "urgent."

REV. EGERTON R. YOUNG, whose reputation as a lecturer is abundantly recognised on both sides of the Atlantic, and whose books and lectures on life among the Red Indians have been so widely appreciated, anticipates reaching England by the beginning of October next, and all who desire to avail themselves of his services should communicate without delay with Mr. T. E. Tydeman, 21, Gutter Lane, London, E.C.

MISS RADCLIFFE, amongst other letters in reply to her address on the World-wide Evangelization Prayer Union, "In Memoriam Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe," has received one from a lady, who says:—"It was through hearing your father at the Perth Conference that my husband was led to take up Gospel tent work in the villages. He gave the Gordon Mission in Aberdeen their first tent, and last summer he met one of their evangelists, who told him of the blessing that there had been under its canvas. At a village called Kintore he knew of eight people who were converted in it, and were now all in the mission field—three in China, three in India, and two in Africa.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

THERE has been steady work with accompanying blessing during another year's labour all along the line of the numerous forms of Christian effort connected with the Carrubbers Close Mission, which has its centre at 65, High Street, Edinburgh.

Never was the grand old Gospel more needed than in these days when error is so rampant. This Gospel the Mission delights to proclaim in all its simplicity and fulness; and as they see it again and again prove itself the power of God unto salvation to needy souls of every description, the workers feel no temptation to abandon it for anything else, however specious.

Open-air work has been specially fruitful. Though results have not always been immediately apparent, impressions have been made which have caused hearers to find their way afterwards to the indoor meetings, where they have been led to decision for Christ. Such cases are very much helped by the fact that the doors of the Mission are open every night, so that no seeker is discouraged by a closed door. The very crowded Sabbath evening meetings in the large hall are a marked feature of the work. Mr. Wm. Robertson is secretary.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—The committee remark that it is after the deaf and dumb leave school that the great benefits are conferred on them by the Association. Pre-eminently it provides for their religious instruction. The temporal benefit afforded is connected chiefly with obtaining employment for them, and thus enabling them to earn a livelihood. It is of the greatest importance to themselves and the community at large that they should be self-supporting members of society—bees, not drones—in the great social hive. Communications should be addressed to Rev. Maurice F. G. Hewson, Deaf and Dumb Association, Lower Abbey Street, Dublin.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. A. W. Jephson, vicar of St. John's, Walworth, has received £5,000 for the erection of a Young Men's Institute in Walworth.

A site for a new church at Strabane has been obtained, free of rent, from the Duke of Abercorn. The church will cost about £1,200.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas reports satisfactorily on the work at Portman Chapel during the past year. He has a devoted band of workers to carry on the many-sided work connected with the district.

Rev. the Earl of Devon, who has just entered upon his eightieth year, is rector of Powderham, South Devon, and Prebendary of Exeter Cathedral, where he recently preached on a Sunday afternoon in his turn.

Lady Mary Glynn, wife of the Bishop of Peterborough, is taking an active part in promoting a temperance mission among the brickyard employés at Peterborough. Midnight services are being arranged for night workers.

Canon Armitage Robinson says that it is not for the Church as such to solve the "no room to live" problem; but it is for the Church to summon the moral forces of the nation to fight two foes of reformation—indifference and greed.

The work of Rev. J. B. Barraclough, and his many willing helpers, at St. Thomas's, Lambeth, is home mission work of the best kind; but the parish also does not forget the claims of the heathen abroad, and has its "own missionary," in the person of a native agent in the Sierra Leone Mission.

The trustees of All Saints', Preston, have appointed Rev. Alexander Urquhart, curate of St. Mary's and St. Lawrence's, Kirkdale, Liverpool, vicar of All Saints', Preston. The living is worth £400 to £500 per annum. The rev. gentleman is an evangelical.

The new church of St. John the Evangelist, Herne Bay, was consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury on Tuesday. The rapid growth of Herne Bay has necessitated the building of another church. The winter population is now 7,500, and from 15,000 to 20,000 visitors come down in the summer.

An interesting special feature in the year's work of St. Peter's, Highgate Hill, has been the weekly dinner-hour service carried on among the men—some 400 in number—employed on the new Islington Infirmary. This has been much appreciated by the men. The open-air services on Sunday evenings are attended by large numbers of attentive listeners.

Archdeacon Sinclair unveiled a memorial brass, which has been erected at St. John's, Bethnal Green, to the memory of the late Rev. Hugh Hulcatt, who was some time Vicar of that Church, and had previously served with distinction as Chaplain to Her Majesty's forces in the China war, and in the Crimea.

The Bishop of Wakefield, writing on the housing of the poor, says that what is specially wanted is the association of our public bodies and our religious and benevolent societies. Even Christian congregations may live in a fool's paradise of comfortable ignorance so long as buildings which cannot be called homes are hidden away in obscure corners.

A meeting was held at the Church House last week in support of the Homes of St. Barnabas, of which Canon Cooper is hon. secretary, an incorporated society for providing homes for aged and disabled clergymen, of whom fifty-seven have been relieved during the past three years in temporary premises. Some £7,000 is needed, in addition to the £5,000 already raised, to provide permanent buildings for the work.

The Church Missionary Society now occupies 520 mission stations, has 1,136 European missionaries (including 76 medical missionaries), and a total of something over 6,000 native workers. The number of native adherents is 247,556, as against 240,876 last year. There are 64,904 communicants, there were more than 16,000 baptisms during last year, and there are some 80,000 scholars under instruction.

Thirty years ago Rev. Canon R. Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's, Windsor, Liverpool, commenced work in the parish by holding a service attended by four persons in a cellar. Last week when the thirtieth anniversary of the event was celebrated by a demonstration of the parishioners at Sefton Park, the record of the parish was, put shortly, a church, vicarage, and three mission halls built, 800 communicants on the books, 1,600 Sabbath scholars, and 500 ragged school scholars.

Congregational.

The services at the Villiers Street Institute, Sunderland (the mission centre connected with Union Church), are attended by 2,500 men, women, and children every week.

In response to the appeal made by Rev. J. Morlais Jones to his congregation at Lewisham on behalf of the new church at Hither Green, collections made have amounted to £73.

A portion of a dwelling house in West Street, Ilminster, has been taken by the Congregational Church and converted into a mission room.

Between eighty and ninety members have been added to the church at Leighton Buzzard during the two years of Rev. A. J. Grant's ministry.

The International Council of Congregationalists meets in Boston, U.S., in September; consequently, the Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union in Bristol will not begin until the third Monday in October.

There are 184 Congregational churches in Scotland. The membership is estimated at 30,000, and returns show that 80,600 sittings are provided. The total number of ministers is 210, of whom 180 are pastors.

Broughton Church, Manchester (Rev. Samuel Pearson), has a beautiful garden attached to it, and this was put to good use for a gathering, one day this month, at which pastor, deacons, and lady visitors had pleasant social intercourse with members of the congregation.

The Dale Memorial Fund at Birmingham has been closed, the total received being £1,520, and after defraying the cost of the statue by Mr. Onslow Ford, which has been placed in the Art Gallery, the surplus is to be devoted to providing a gold medal, to be awarded annually at King Edward's School for general proficiency.

North Wales English Congregational Union meets at Wrexham on October 31 and November 1, and it has been arranged that there shall be a special Twentieth Century Fund meeting on the evening of November 1, when Dr. Rogers and Mr. Arthur G. Hooper will attend as the deputation from the Council.

(966)

The Special Committee appointed by the Liverpool and District Association have arranged for a children's demonstration on November 3, on similar lines to the missionary anniversary. On the following Monday, November 6, a united gathering of the members of various churches will be held in Great George Street Chapel. All the churches are to be recommended to contribute at least one guinea per member to the Central Fund, and to allow any surplus to be dealt with by the Liverpool Association for local church extension and removal of debts.

Baptist.

The Baptist College, Cardiff, is £500 in debt chiefly owing to reduced collections following the late coal strike.

Epsom Baptists have purchased a site on which they hope speedily to erect a school-chapel, costing about £800.

The new Metropolitan Tabernacle building will probably be roofed in by October and ready for occupation by the spring of next year.

Dr. Lorimer will preach at Regent's Park up to and including Sunday, August 20. He sails for home on the 24th proximo, having to prepare the series of twelve Lowell Institute lectures he is engaged to deliver at Boston in January.

At Regent's Park Chapel a suitable memorial of the former and now deceased pastor, Dr. Landels, has been decided on. It will doubtless take the form of a tablet, and in the early autumn it will be unveiled, when a memorial service will be held.

At the recent Kent and Sussex Baptist Association meetings held in Brighton, it was decided to form a Church at Bognor. Services have been held for some time past in the Assembly Rooms. Rev. Charles Pittman, late of South Africa, will be preaching during the present month. A hearty invitation is extended to all Baptist friends and visitors at Bognor. A site and school chapel are urgently needed. The secretary is Mr. C. J. Johnson, 2, Fram Villas.

Arrangements for the autumnal session of the Baptist Union and Missionary Society, to be held at Leeds, are nearly completed. The meetings begin on Monday, September 25, with a reception by the Lord Mayor. On Tuesday morning leave will be taken of a number of outgoing missionaries, and in the afternoon Rev. R. J. Campbell (Brighton) will preach the "missionary sermon." On Wednesday morning Dr. Clifford will deliver the presidential address, and in the afternoon Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, will preach the "Union sermon."

On 20th inst. an important meeting was held at Cavendish Baptist Church, Ramsgate (Pastor T. Hancocks), Mr. G. H. Dean, J.P., of Sittingbourne, presiding. Plans of the new schools were shown by limelight, and enthusiastically adopted. The pastor reported that the total cost would not be less than £3,400, towards which nearly £2,000 had been raised. The Church is pledged to open the new building free of debt. The Lord's stewards who approve of such a purpose are asked to help. Pastor's address, 3, Ellington Terrace, Ramsgate.

On Wednesday last there were large attendances at the dedication of the lecture hall of Rev. J. Mountain's church at Tunbridge Wells. Services will be held therein pending the completion of the church. Rev. F. B. Meyer said he believed the church would be appreciated because they would not have too much pomp and formality, or, in fact, starch in their pews. Therefore he believed the working people would fill Mr. Mountain's church because the world was dying for more love. Let there be a warm welcome in their pews, and the young people would not stop away from church.

Methodist.

Macclesfield Circuit has raised £5,000 in eighteen months for the reduction of debts on the trust property.

The average attendance at the Dublin Tent Mission has been 260. The tent is now pitched in Adelaide Road for a new campaign.

The P.M. Church Extension Fund is to be launched in the Sunderland and Newcastle District. It is hoped to have at least £1,000 in hand by next March.

In connection with Bideford Church a cyclists' mission band has been formed. The outlying villages are visited on week evenings for open-air services.

Wesleyans in New South Wales have begun the operation of their Century Fund, by which it is hoped 150,000 guineas will be railed. About £14,000 is already given or promised on behalf of the Sydney and Paramatta districts.

The new P.M. church at Cullercoats, estimated to cost £2,000, will cost at least £600 more. The outlook is so encouraging that the increased outlay is considered to be justified.

The Fernley Lecture this year is to be delivered to-morrow (Friday) evening in Richmond Road Chapel, Hackney, by Rev. T. F. Lockyer, B.A. His subject is, "The Evangelical Succession; or, The Spiritual Lineage of the Christian Church and Ministry."

The Wesleyan Methodist Connexional Sunday-school Union reports 969,484 scholars and 130,942 teachers. The circulation of Sunday-school literature has increased during the year. The Wesley Guild membership has risen from 58,451 to 70,295 and the Guilds from 830 to 1,016.

The Primitive Methodist Church at Harringay, which has worshipped in a small iron building for the past eight years, has entered upon a bold enterprise. Last week memorial stones of larger and more commodious premises were laid. The entire contemplated outlay is upward of £4,500.

The eleventh anniversary of the ministry of Rev. Joseph Johnson, and the second of his colleague, Rev. F. S. Clulow, at Stoke Newington, was celebrated last week. During the ministry of the former at Stoke Newington nearly 900 persons have been received into Church membership, and over £14,000 has been raised.

The closing days of the Free Methodist Conference at Sheffield last week were crowded with business. Next year's gathering is to be held in Manchester. During the past year eleven chapels and six schools were erected, and seven ministers' houses purchased or built. The expenditure on foreign missions, including what was raised by themselves, was £12,445.

At the ordination of Rev. J. Hedley at Tientsin, China, the charge exhorted the young missionary not to begrudge any pains in order to understand the people, their language, their literature and their religion, not to consider it the burden of his errand in China to enter into a crusade against the religious beliefs of the country, but to preach Christ, confident that all lesser lights will pale before his splendour.

The sum of 6,500 guineas was subscribed to the United Methodist Churches Twentieth Century Fund by members of the annual assembly at Sheffield on Thursday last. One hundred thousand guineas is the amount required, two-fifths of which will be devoted to the Mission Fund, two-fifths to extension work at home, and one-fifth to the London Chapel Extension Fund.

Rev. Theophilus Parr, elder brother of Rev. J. T. Parr, of Surrey Chapel, will return from Australia next spring, having completed ten years' work in that country. He has also been a missionary to Africa, has done some good work in that country, and has been in the ministry thirty years. Previous to going to Australia he spent several years of his ministry in Manchester.

Presbyterian.

Arrangements have been made for the work of the five Synod Evangelists in Northumberland in the course of the winter.

Memorial stones of a new Calvinistic Methodist Chapel have been laid at Cruys Road, Cardiff.

Rev. Granville Ramage has been inducted to the newly-formed congregation at Walthamstow.

Dr. Forrest, Glasgow, has accepted the call to Wemyss Bay United Presbyterian Church.

The foundation-stone of a permanent church at Felixstowe (pastor, Rev. Thomas Colligan) is to be laid on Monday, August 14.

The Instruction of Youth Committee have empowered Rev. E. J. Gilchrist to take steps for the formation of Presbyterial hristian Endeavour Unions.

Rev. W. Dale, of New Barnett is appointed delegate to the Œcumenical Council on Foreign Missions to be held next year in America.

Some twenty temperance meetings are to be held throughout the Presbyterian Church of England after the rising of Parliament, to be addressed by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., this year's president of the Total Abstinence Committee.

The New South Wales General Assembly has decided to celebrate the centenary of Presbyterian worship in Australia in 1901, and to make an effort to raise 100,000 guineas as a thankoffering.

Rev. James Carson, who was recently home in Ireland, on furlough, has returned to Manchuria, and has been the recipient of a most affectionate address from his fellow-missionaries, both male and female, on the completion of twenty-five years of service.

The Parish Church of Clachan, Kintyre, Argyllshire, after extensive alterations, has been reopened for public worship by Rev. Dr. Blair, of Edinburgh, who preached in Gaelic and English to large congregations. The internal arrangement of the edifice has been much improved.

Dr. Stalker suggests that the interest of members and elders in missions would be greatly increased if some tourist agency could be got to organize trips on a large scale to the mission fields in Africa and India. He had never known a Christian man go out and see the work on the spot who did not ever afterwards have a real enthusiasm for missions.

Rev. A. Connell's report on his tour of the mission field shows that seven or eight new missionaries are required at once, and the Foreign Mission Committee have decided to issue a circular bearing upon the subject, to be read from the pulpits. An additional £3,000 or £4,000 a year will be required. It was also decided to accept the offer of 10,000dols. from a Chinese gentleman for an Anglo-Chinese school in Swatow.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. WILLIAM LAYCOCK, aged eighty-three, of the Park, Bolton Abbey, agent to the Duke of Devonshire for the Skipton estates. Though not an office-bearer, Mr. Laycock was a constant and liberal supporter of the Methodist Church, and annually entertained the school children.—Mr. J. INGHAM, oldest member of the P.M. Church at Queensbury. He was for forty years a zealous worker, and for a long period class-leader, trustee, and superintendent of the Sunday School.—Mrs. BOSWORTH, widely known throughout the P.M. Connexion as a successful evangelist, especially among the young.—At Norwich, Mr. C. C. RIX SPELMAN, ex-mayor of the City. He was fifty-five years of age, a staunch Free Churchman, and was for many years actively associated with the Chapel-in-the-Field Church, holding the offices of deacon and church treasurer, and taking a deep interest in the Sunday-school work.—Mr. H. W. BROOKE, for forty years connected with the Liverpool Savings Bank, and for the last five years treasurer of the Hartington Road Congregational Church.—Mr. THOMAS BROWNING, of Stanwick Park, aged seventy-one, a generous supporter of the Baptist cause at Brook End, Keysoe, Beds.—Mrs. CHARLES NORRIS passed away on the 12th, aged seventy-two, and after a few days' illness her husband's death followed, on the 18th. Four years ago they celebrated their golden wedding. Mr. Norris was a deacon and treasurer of High Street Baptist Church, Berkhamsted, with which he had been connected twenty-five years.—At his residence, Everton Road, Liverpool, Mr. THOMAS LLOYD, aged seventy-seven, for forty-two years a deacon at Rose Place and Fitzclarence Chapels. He was one of the leading deacons to the Presbytery of the Welsh Presbyterian Church in the Liverpool district.—Rev. D. ROUND, aged seventy-four, one of the oldest members of the Methodist New Connexion, who had served in circuits in all parts of the country, and was well known in Manchester, Stockport, and Macclesfield.—At Rosehall, Rev. WILLIAM FOGO. During his incumbency at Rosehall a new church was built there. The deceased clergyman was a man of sterling uprightness of character, an instructive preacher, and a diligent pastor.—At Poake, near Bovey Tracey, Rev. JOHN HALE PARLBY. He was one of the oldest clergymen in England, his life having covered practically the whole of the century. He was in his ninety-fifth year, and was ordained in 1829.

Appeal.

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME has been for the past twenty years a centre of Christian work amongst the soldiers and their wives. The work having been hindered and curtailed by the inappropriate premises occupied, a freehold house, in every way most suitable for the work, has been purchased. "Since we entered the new premises, more than double the number of soldiers have used the Home, and the numbers attending the meetings, which are held now almost nightly, has increased considerably. The move has cost, including extra furniture and alterations, £80, and it is for this sum we appeal to all who are interested in the spiritual and moral welfare of our young soldiers." Donations to Lady Superintendent, Miss Caught, 157, Snargate Street, Dover.

Methodists in Hyde Park.—On Saturday, July 29, in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Conference now sitting in London, a great open-air demonstration will be held in Hyde Park, near the Reformers' Tree, at 4 p.m. Several ex-presidents and leading ministers and laymen will take part, amongst others Revs. E. E. Jenkins, Thomas Champness, and D. D. Walters, Major-Gen. A. H. E. Campbell, and Messrs. Calvert Coates, J. H. Nile, Bamford Slack, and W. T. Piper. Several platforms are being arranged and large gatherings are anticipated.

The Soldiers' Home, Gosport.

THE annual report of the work at Gosport, associated for so long with the names of the Misses Ridout, is a record of good work. At Gosport there is a wide field for work, opportunities of sowing the seed of God's Word and spreading the Gospel, perhaps among a greater variety than at any other station. They get the "raw material," the young recruit—some even come to the Home before enlisting, and they see the last of the soldier at the Discharge Depot at Fort Brockhurst before he goes back into civilian life. The soldier, the marine, the sailor, the sick as well as the whole—almost every branch of the service in turn — and men from every rank in life are reached. Thousands have passed through the Home and availed themselves of its privileges, both spiritual and temporal, and have willingly listened to the Gospel message beneath its roof.

"The two hospitals," says the report, "naval and military, give a large field for work, as do also the ships in harbour, which are visited in the dinner hour. During a great part of the year we have large numbers of men at Browndown Camp for musketry, from the Isle of Wight, and from the regimental depôts at Winchester, Dorchester and Devizes. There is also a large militia camp in summer. All these are visited in turn, and books and papers distributed to the men. These visits will often bring a man to the Home, and this is sometimes the first step to better things. Our little meetings night after night are very informal; attendance at these is, of course, entirely voluntary; but many who are at first attracted by the hymn-singing will stay to listen to a short address—something to help them in their daily life—followed by prayer. God has blessed this quiet work, and we believe many have been led to Christ at these meetings.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Ridout, Soldiers' Home, Avenue Road, Gosport.

Medical Mission Work.

THE Liverpool Medical Mission, the first home offshoot of the Edinburgh Society, established as an auxiliary in 1864, and two years later made independent, now has three dispensaries, and employs the whole time of three medical officers, a dispenser, and two nurses, while it has the assistance of many earnest voluntary workers, especially in the auxiliary meetings.

Last year there was an average attendance for each day the three dispensaries were open of about 260 patients, apart from visits made to the sick in their homes. The committee feel confident that the increased support they need will be forthcoming.

The other day the committee invited friends to meet Dr. Dowkontt. He was on their staff for three years until 1879, when he went to Philadelphia in order to qualify for his full medical degree. Having secured this, he was led to New York, where, by the aid of friends, he succeeded in founding the International Medical Missionary Society. This Society has not only maintained medical mission dispensaries in New York City, but has furnished pecuniary and practical aid to intending medical missionaries of various evangelical denominations. Since 1884 no less than 150 have joined the Society, fully one third of whom have come from Great Britain and Canada. They have lived, and studied, and worked in the slums together, and the greater number of them have gone forth into distant lands.

Dr. Dowkontt explained how his society had secured the promise of a charter for a medical mission college as soon as they possess the sum of 50,000dols. (£10,000), and he is now seeking further help towards this end. It is intended, for each gift of £250, to found a residential scholarship, affording residence and use of building free of cost to one student for the four years' course; and for each similar sum of £250 to establish educational scholarships which shall provide free tuition to a missionary student.

Thus, by the gift of £500 free residence and medical education will be provided in perpetuity for one student, male or female, of any particular denomination or nationality, according to the donor's wishes.

It is hoped that a scholarship may be secured in connection with the Liverpool Medical Mission.

Dr. Dowkontt expects to return to New York at the end of August. Meanwhile any communications may be addressed to him, care of Mr. B. F. Babcock, 4, Water Street, Liverpool.

THE BEST DRINK OF ALL!

Yes. Do you think I would bring anything but the BEST?

EIFFEL TOWER LEMONADE

2 GALLONS FOR 4½d.

"The Medical Magazine" says:—

"The simplicity of this preparation is its great recommendation. In a very short period of time, and with a minimum of trouble, we have before us a delicious drink for summer use, a Lemonade as refreshing as pleasant to the most critical taste, and as harmless as it is possible to obtain. We can cordially commend it to the notice of the medical profession, as well as to the general public."

Eiffel Tower Lemonade is made from the finest lemons, and the great advantage is that it is partly manufactured in Italy, in the midst of the lemon orchards. The lemons are taken direct from the trees to the factory to commence their transformation into the Eiffel Tower Lemonade. You can get thirty-two tumblers (or two gallons) for 4½d. The production of the Finest Home-Made Lemonade at this remarkable price has been brought about by a simple process of concentration. Instead of bringing the lemons over in bulk to England, they are concentrated on the spot, and by so doing the cost of carriage, &c., is so greatly reduced that Messrs. Foster Clark & Co. are enabled to sell the concentrated product in a small bottle for 4½d. sufficient to make two gallons.

If you cannot get it from your grocer, send 4½d. to G. Foster Clark & Co., 112, Eiffel Tower Factory, Maidstone.

Messrs. Foster Clark & Co. are most anxious that everybody who has not tried their Lemonade should do so, and for that purpose they have decided to GIVE AWAY 300 BOTTLES every week. The first fifty letters opened every day will not only have the Lemonade sent on by return of post, but the stamps forwarded will be returned to the sender. It must be distinctly understood that a second bottle cannot be supplied direct by post, but must be obtained of your Grocer, Chemist or Stores. Send your order off at once, so that you may be one of the first fifty applicants.

Insist upon having "Eiffel Tower Lemonade," as imitations are sometimes recommended for the sake of extra profit.

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

[Communications respecting forthcoming meetings cannot be inserted unless received by Tuesday morning at the latest.]

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, or Wales, on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey Street, Strand, London, W.C.; or The Sec., Evangelisation Society, Scottish Branch, The Grove Street Institute, Glasgow.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send lay preachers to any Evangelical denomination within the London postal area. Apply, Hon. Sec., 8, Grange Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

The Country Towns Mission, in co-operation with local friends, provides missionaries for temporary or permanent work in towns and villages. Apply to Mr. G. H. Mawer, secretary, 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.—Sun., July 30, 3.30 and 7, Mr. P. S. Badenoch.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E.—Week nights at 8, Sun., July 30, at 11 and 6.30, The Brothers Weaver; Men's Own, 3 p.m.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E.—Sun., July 30, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., Mr. Walter Notman; 3 p.m., P.S.A.

Polytechnic, 309, Regent Street.—Mr. Charles Inglis each Sunday during July and August, at 3 and 7.

Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, W.—Sun., July 30, 11 a.m., Pastor Frank White; 7 p.m., Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas.

St. Mary's Hall, Upper Street, Islington.—General Booth will conduct meetings on Sun., July 30, at 11.30 a.m. and 6.30 p.m., and on Mon., Tues., and Wed., July 31, Aug. 1 and 2, at 7.45 p.m., in connection with the Salvation Army Exhibition in the Agricultural Hall, which is open until Aug. 8.

Eastbourne House of Rest, 14, Burlington Place.—Daily Prayer Meeting at 12. Open to the public.

St. George's Hall, Langham Place.—Sun., July 30, 11 and 7, Mr. John Brunton; and on Wednesday, Aug. 2, at Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, at 8 p.m.

Tent Mission, Putney (in Wymond Street), conducted by Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Wood. Meeting of workers and Christian friends, Saturday, July 29, at 5 p.m.; tea at 5.30. Public meetings, Sun., July 30 and onwards, every evening at 8 p.m.

Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission Rooms, for July 30.—Myddleton Hall, Upper Street, Islington (in continuation of Agricultural Hall Services), at 3.30 and 7, Rev. Jas. Ellis. Ealing, Shaftesbury Hall, at 7, Mr. J. W. Berry. Grand Hall of Varieties, Clapham Junction, at 3.30, Mr. Gann; at 7, Mr. Brett. Old Gravel Pit Mission, Chatham Place, Hackney, at 3, Mr. D. F. Mathieson; at 7, Mr. W. George. Woodberry Down Hall, South Tottenham, at 7, Mr. Walker.

Tent Bible Readings, for the deepening of spiritual life, at Villa Flora, Upperton Road, Eastbourne, every Friday at 3.30 p.m., during the months of August and September. The Speakers will include Revs. F. Paynter, J. B. Figgis, J. J. Luce, W. Houghton and C. G. Moore, Captain Baring and Captain Tottenham. All are cordially invited to attend.

Blankenburg Conference, Thuringia (Allianzhaus), Aug. 28—Sept. 1. Revs. F. B. Meyer and C. G. Moore will be amongst the speakers.

Perth Conference.—September 12—14. Subject, "Thy Kingdom Come." Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Hon. Sec., Free St. Leonard's, Perth, N.B.

Salisbury Conference.—September 18—23.

Rothesay Convention.—September 20—25.

Central Y.M.C.A. Autumn Convention, Exeter Hall, Strand, Oct. 3-6, 1899, at 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. Subjects—"The Christian's Life," "The Christian's Calling," "The Christian's Hope." Speakers—Revs. Archibald G. Brown, J. T. Butlin, W. Fuller Gooch, Dr. G. Hanson, H. J. R. Marston, F. B. Meyer, W. Darlow Sarjeant, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Griffith Thomas, E. N. Thwaites, F. S. Webster, Frank H. White, and Dinsdale T. Young. There will be an Opening Service for Prayer and Praise in Exeter Hall, Mon., Oct. 2, at 7.30 p.m.

Blackheath Convention.—October 10—13.

The First Bayswater (London) Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life; Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's Road, W., Oct. 30 to November 4, 1899, at 11 a.m., 3, 6, and 8 p.m. daily. Speakers: Revs. C. A. Fox, Dr. George Hanson, Evan H. Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, G. H. C. MacGregor, E. W. Moore, J. G. Pilkington, W. Darlow Sarjeant, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Griffith Thomas, F. S. Webster, Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and Dinsdale T. Young. Captain Tottenham, Chairman. Convention Secretary, Mr. Walter Wild, 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.

Evangelical Alliance Annual Conference at Clifton, Bristol, October 31st, November 1st and 2nd.

Conventions on the Spiritual Life.—Park Hall, Sept. 6—8; Kingstown (Co. Dublin), Sept. 11—16; Cork, Sept. 18—22; Aberdeen, Sept. 25—29; Wakefield, Oct. 2—5; Newton Abbot, Oct. 10—12; Ealing, Oct. 10—13; Newport, Oct. 10—13; Star Hall, Manchester, Oct. 10—15; Stamford, Oct. 16—20; Bayswater, London, Oct. 30—Nov. 4; Croydon, Nov. 13—17.

The Bible League.—The Conference held at Tunbridge Wells, under the auspices of the Bible League, proved a means of blessing. The addresses of Revs. E. J. Edwards, H. Graham Thwaites, W. Fuller Gooch, and others, were of a deeply spiritual and helpful nature, forcibly expressing the object for which the Bible League exists, viz., "to promote the reverential study of Holy Scripture, and to resist the determined attack made upon their inspiration and infallibility as the Word of God." Evening limelight lectures, by Rev. John Tuckwell, on "Genesis and the Babylonian Monuments," and "From Chaos to Beauty: or is Genesis i. Contrary to Science?" drew large audiences at the Great Hall. The local clergy and ministers heartily supported the movement, Revs. J. S. Hunt and G. W. Cowper Smith kindly lending their halls

BRITISH CHAUTAUQUA.

Summer School at Saltburn (Yorks), August 12th to 26th.
One Week, £2 15s. Two Weeks, £5 10s.

Including Boarding Accommodation, Excursions by Coach and Rail, and Free Admission to all Meetings, Lectures, and Classes, but EXCLUDING Railway Fare.

Summer School at Folkestone, September 17th to 30th.
One Week, £3 7s. 6d. Two Weeks, £5 17s. 6d.

Including Accommodation, Excursions, and Admissions, and INCLUDING the Railway Fare from London.

For full particulars apply to the Secretary, Mr. Laurence M. Gibson, M.A., 111, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

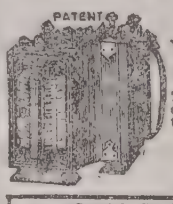
Over 70 Years' Established Reputation.

Neave's Food

"Admirably adapted to the wants of Infants, and, being rich in phosphates and potash, is of the greatest utility in supplying the bone-forming and other indispensable elements of Food."—Sir Chas. A. Cameron, M.D.

If the directions on each tin are followed, the infantile system may be regulated without the aid of medicine.

FUN FOR THE YOUNGSTERS.



A "RIDGE'S FOOD BALLOON,"

24 inches in circumference, will be sent upon receipt of a stamped directed envelope, or half-a-dozen for Shilling Postal Order. Address:—

RIDGE'S FOOD MILLS, LONDON, N.

MUSIC FOR SUMMER EVENINGS.

CAMPBELL'S Gold Medal MELODEONS.

With Organ and Celestial Tone, and Charming Bell Accompaniments.

No Home should be without one.

The solemn Psalm, the soul-stirring Hymn and the cheerful Song can all be played on these charming Instruments.

No knowledge of Music required.

ENORMOUS DEMAND.
200,000 TESTIMONIALS.

Special offer to the readers of The Christian.

Campbell's "Gem" Melodeon	Price only	6/9
Campbell's "Miniature" Melodeon ...	"	10/9
Campbell's "Paragon" Melodeon ...	"	14/-
Campbell's "Favourite" Melodeon ...	"	16/6

Cut out this and send P.O.O. for the amount. Either sent carriage paid in Great Britain and Ireland. Money returned if not approved

All lovers of music should at once send for Campbell's Illustrated Privilege Price List of all kinds of musical instruments for season 1898-9. 50,000 of these valuable lists sent out yearly. Send 1d. stamp to CAMPBELL & CO., Musical Instrument Makers, 116, Trongate, Glasgow. Established 50 years.

N.B.—CAMPBELL'S are the ONLY GENUINE Melodeons. Beware of WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

A Wonderful Testimonial.

"I HOPE you have stopped all the weekly issues it is possible to do, as we cannot possibly cope with the applications we are getting. I had not the remotest idea we should have had half the results from the amount of advertising." The foregoing is from a well-known advertiser

To SMITHS' . . . . .
ADVERTISING AGENCY,

who do a larger volume of business, and have more successful clients than other advertising agencies, owing to the exceptional service and facilities and detail placed at the disposal of every client. Prices are frequently lower (never higher) than others, whilst the preferred positions placed by publishers at our disposal are necessarily great owing to our large dealings with them. Send postal order 2/- for our book, post free—782 pages large 8vo. It will teach you how to make money by advertising. Address—

Successful Advertising,
132, Fleet St., London, E.C.

POPULAR SUMMER TOURS.

£5 5s.—SWITZERLAND, GENEVA, or LUCERNE, leaving London every TUESDAY and FRIDAY. Fare includes Second-class travel on the Continent and accommodation for one week.

EXTENSIONS to Chamonix, Interlaken, Grindelwald, Zermatt, Davos, Italian Lakes, &c.

CIRCULAR TOURS in Switzerland, including Bernese Oberland, Wengeen Alp, Grimsel, Furka, Fuela, and other favourite routes.

FOURTEEN DAYS	£10 10s. 0d.
TWENTY-ONE DAYS	£14 14s. 0d.
A WEEK on THE RHINE	£5 5s. 0d.
A WEEK in IRELAND	£5 5s. 0d.
A WEEK in WALES	£3 5s. 0d.
A WEEK in JERSEY or GUERNSEY	£3 6s. 0d.
A WEEK in the ISLE OF MAN	£3 7s. 6d.
A WEEK in SCOTLAND	£6 6s. 0d.

Illustrated programme on application.

THOS. COOK and SON, Chief Office, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C.

£6 6s. and £6 16s. 6d. SWISS TOURS

Fare includes Return Ticket to Geneva or Grindelwald Second-Class on the Continent and Seven Days' Accommodation.

Lectures by DEAN PIGOU, PROFESSOR SHUTTLEWORTH, DR. LUNN, Etc.

For full particulars, apply—

Secretary, 5, Endsleigh Gardens, Euston, N.W.

CONSUMPTION

AND OTHER DISEASES

OF THE LUNGS.

See Mr. G. T. CONGREVE'S BOOK

ONE SHILLING, POST FREE, SMALLER EDITION 6d., FROM

COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, LONDON, S.E.

RECENT INTERVIEW

(No. 202) by Mr. Congreve's commissioner with Rev. George Chandler, Baptist Minister, Thurleigh, near Bedford.

In the quiet little village of Thurleigh, the Rev. G. Chandler has for some years past been doing a good work. Naturally, in the course of his ministerial duties, he has come across cases of chest disease, and he favoured me with a few particulars of one of these, when I saw him a few days before Christmas last.

"A Mrs. Crossley, living here," Mr. Chandler said, "came under Mr. Congreve's treatment about fifteen years ago. There is no doubt in my mind she was suffering from Consumption. You may judge of her condition when I tell you we were informed that she was at the point of death. Her husband wished her to try Mr. Congreve's remedies, and requested me to write. I did so, though, as I told them, I was afraid it was too late. After the third dose of the medicine, there was a slight but perceptible improvement, and as time went on, and she persevered with the medicine, she recovered. To-day she is able to get about as usual, and has never suffered in the same way since."

Mr. Chandler also told me that some years ago he was affected with shortness of breath, and a great deal of pain in the region of the lungs, and that he took the medicine with good effect. He also expressed his willingness that this testimony should be published.

The practice of the late Mr. Congreve is still carried on at Coombe Lodge by Mr. J. ALEXANDER BROWN, who for many years was Mr. Congreve's qualified Medical Assistant and Manager. PERSONAL CONSULTATIONS on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings from 10.30 to 12.45. No consultations will be given during the month of August and first week of September.

Letters should be addressed (as formerly) to G. T. Congreve, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

AN INTERESTING BIOGRAPHICAL WORK

DEALING WITH THE Remarkable Spiritual Movement in 1859 and Subsequent Years.

RECOLLECTIONS OF

REGINALD RADCLIFFE,

BY HIS WIFE.

The Volume contains a STRIKING LIKENESS OF MR. RADCLIFFE; also TWENTY-NINE OTHER PORTRAITS of Eminent Christian Workers who were associated with him in his manifold labours throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and on the Continent.

Cloth Boards, 4s. 6d.;
Bevelled Boards, Gilt Top, 6s.

"It is a means of grace to peruse such a piece of pen portraiture; it deserves the heartiest welcome from universal Christendom."—Sword and Trowel.

London: Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.
Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THROUGH the post and otherwise, we have received numerous congratulations on our Fortieth Birthday, with wishes for "many happy returns." We thank our readers for their kind words, and trust that, in increasing measure, God's blessing may attend our word and testimony in the days that lie before us. It is a joy for us to know that our readers remember us in their prayers; and we trust they will "watch thereunto with all perseverance and supplication."

Owing to the space required for reports of Keswick, the Students' Conference, and the Protestant demonstration, we are compelled to hold over Mr. Meyer's "Study in Zechariah" and many important items of home and foreign news. We trust that our readers, the bulk of whom would not have been able to attend these splendid gatherings, will derive profit and spiritual stimulus from the accounts that we have given.

In our present issue we give three of the many remarkable addresses delivered at the Keswick Convention, also an account of the meeting in connection with the Keswick Mission. Next week we hope to give other addresses and a report of the general missionary gathering.

Those who attend conventions and other large religious gatherings will do well to remember that in many cases railway companies issue to organizers and others certificates, by presenting which passengers may procure tickets at the rate of a fare and a quarter double journey. As it is possible that the permanence of this arrangement depends upon the public availing themselves of the concession, it is important that attenders at conferences and suchlike large gatherings should, as far as may be, travel on the certificate system. It is equally important that secretaries organizing conferences should procure certificates, and bring them under the notice of the Christian public.

The Editor of our Young People's page receives from time to time some very cheering and appreciative letters from his young readers and their parents. It was somewhat of a startling change, therefore, to find that two small maidens (who shall be nameless) added as a corollary to their Bible Searchers, the trite remark, "I hate Uncle Tom and his questions!"

Naturally one asks, What should give rise to such an outburst? and there appear visions of tired little heads and nervous fingers that have been wearied out with an excess of strain on a day that should be one of rest. This leads us to urge that parents should themselves enter into these Scripture exercises and make them as interesting as possible to the little ones. The "Bible Searcher" was never intended to be a task, to which children are to be set down merely to keep them quiet. The Bible should ever be presented to their minds as a wonderful and interesting, as well as an instructive book. Never should it be used as a task-book. We are glad to know that to most of our young readers it is a source of real pleasure.

"Let sleeping dogs lie" is a wise adage, which may well be pondered by Christians of the present day. The controversy concerning Election and Free-will, which raged so bitterly a century ago, is dead; but other questions are being resuscitated, and new ones are being raised, which gender strifes, and which we are therefore commanded to avoid. Our minds are not all constructed alike. No amount of discussion seems able to bring us to the same view, and a contentious spirit grieves the Holy Spirit, who alone can reveal to us the truth of God.

"First things first," is another word of wisdom. It is of more importance to teach vital truths which are unmistakably revealed, and which are like manna from heaven, and the old corn of the land: than to encourage speculations as to the future, which are like spiritual confectionery. "It is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein."

A correspondent, referring to our recent note on "Somnolence in Church" and its remedy, suggests that one of the chief causes of the evil lies in the bad ventilation of many churches, which induces a feeling of irresistible physical lethargy in many worshippers, and makes it extremely difficult for them to take a lively and hearty part in the services. It would be well if those who have the care of this matter were to pay more attention to the proper distribution of fresh air during the hours of worship, and to see that the buildings are thoroughly ventilated between each meeting for worship. It is very difficult to please all, for tastes and physical conditions vary greatly with different constitutions; but, with care and tact, much more might be done to promote the comfort of the majority of worshippers by proper attention to this problem of ventilation. Mr. Moody frequently asks for all doors and windows to be thrown open while the hymn preceding the address is being sung.

It is humbling and disappointing to think of the work of the Peace Conference being nullified or seriously injured just as we seemed to be in sight of its consummation, and that by the action of the British Premier, when to the initiative of the British delegate to the Conference the best and greatest piece of the work is owing. Disasters have once and again threatened the Conference, only to be averted in some unexpected way. Lord Salisbury has shown himself so friendly to peace and peace measures that he must not now, by one act, undo his own best labours. The friends of peace, who have his ear, can surely point out to him some way of satisfying every scruple.

The benefits of an International Court of Arbitration may be gathered from the fact that already nearly a hundred disputes between nations have been settled by arbitration, and that there is no instance of two nations who have referred their disputes to arbitration failing to obtain satisfaction or finally appealing to arms. If so much could be done with the aid of public opinion while the war sentiment was so strong, we may reasonably conclude that more might be done when a Court existed which was created by the Powers of the world, and which enjoyed therefore a unique status and influence.

It is a great blessing if a nation can be at peace in itself, if men and masters can agree, if the great trades can pursue their several ways quietly, and if the various classes can live on good terms. Thanks are due to the Editor of the Daily News for settling a dispute in the building trade in Yorkshire, and aiding to give us this domestic peace. And we are especially glad to see that his good offices were sought by the masters, for on some occasions masters, on the outbreak of trouble, have taken much too high ground. Humility and peaceableness are excellent qualities in the presence of strife.

The Protestant Echo brings a serious charge against the proprietors of Harmsworth's Magazine. That paper having been advertised in the magazine in the ordinary way, Mr. Britten, secretary of the Catholic Truth Society, wrote against its insertion in the advertisement columns of the magazine. In response Messrs. Harmsworth Bros. stated that the advertisement had been inserted without their knowledge and permission, and that they would not allow any more insertions. This looks like an act of intimidation which has been successfully brought to bear on a firm that made a desperate fight against the Puritan sentiment of this country when it rose against Sunday journalism a few months ago, but which has beaten an inglorious retreat before the first onslaught of Romish bigotry.

Nothing is more characteristic of newspaper and journalistic circles just now in England than their curious sensitiveness to such tactics as the above. There is a vigorous band of letter-writers organized by the Catholic Truth Society, who make it their business to "watch the Press," and write letters to editors in the interests of their cause. They represent but a very small section of the community, but by working together, and never letting a good opportunity of scoring pass by, they easily create the spurious impression of a widespread and powerful public opinion. By this simple ruse the editors of some of our daily newspapers are influenced, more or less unconsciously, to give undue prominence to Romish news, and to suppress or minimize what would be likely to call forth a protest from that side. Protestants ask for no favour from journalists; but they have a right to expect that their interests should not be at the mercy of a clique of bigoted propagandists.

The dispute between America and Canada about the Alaskan boundary is once more in a somewhat acute condition. It is, from beginning to end, a curious illustration of the tremendous power of gold over the human heart. A few years ago, before the gold-fields of Klondyke were discovered, the incidence of the frontier-line a few miles east or west would not have raised a ripple on either side; now, we are within measurable distance of a breach of relations between our largest colony and the United States over the possession of a few square miles of ice-bound desert. It is a question of the right of levying tariffs and dues upon travellers to the gold mines. There are the elements of a second Transvaal trouble in this dispute; and nothing but great mutual forbearance, and a spirit of concession on either side, will suffice for its ultimate settlement. It would be a crime if this question were to cloud over the growing friendship of America and England.

The results of the first efforts of American administration in Cuba are such as to create hopes that the "wonderful unfortunate island" has started on a new and happy chapter in its history. Already great improvements have been inaugurated in sanitation, in industrial development, road and railway building, taxation, and purity of administration. The United States Government has so far fully justified its professions to carry on affairs in Cuba in the sole interests of the Cubans themselves. One of the great tasks ot the future will be that of education, which was woefully neglected during the Spanish régime. Of course, absolute religious equality will be maintained, but the experience the Cubans had of Roman Catholic dominance will probably result in a steady accession to the ranks of Protestantism as time goes on. The evangelization of Cuba will be America's noblest mission in the afflicted and beautiful island of the west.

The course of the Philippine campaign forms a remarkable contrast to the steady and speedy pacification of Cuba. A strong protest has been sent home by the American newspaper correspondents against the conduct of the war, and the manipulation of news by the authorities in their own interests. This is another instance of the adage that "Truth will out," and of the importance of maintaining a "free Press." The suppression of unfavourable facts, and the creation of false impressions, which seems to have been the policy of the Government, has broken down. The task of pacifying these islands will clearly be a big one, and the United States is still on its trial in more senses than one in this first attempt at "Imperialism." Nations, like individuals, often learn more from their partial failures than from their successes. The Philippines, even more than Cuba, will prove the stuff of which America is made as a colonizing power.

The fact that quite recently certain treaties have come into operation by which Japan is thrown open to all Western peoples, should give a new impetus to the preaching of the Gospel in the Land of the Rising Sun. Of all Eastern nations, Japan is the most progressive, and already she has made very substantial advance in Western civilization. Some of her most influential men have received the Christian faith, and are seeking to extend its regenerating sway. Only the means are lacking which would enable missionary societies at home to increase largely the number of missionaries, that this promising field of labour may really be occupied for Christ. A mere fraction of the increased profits of the present prosperous condition of the country, laid upon the missionary altar, would more than suffice for a twentieth century advance all along the line.

Lieutenant Hopkinson reminds us in the Cornhill that in the Egyptian Army the men were all allowed to marry, and a certain percentage were placed on the married strength, and received an allowance for their wives and families; hence came contentment. Lord Kitchener had to act in a similar way in the Soudan; and though there were immoralities and irregularities that cannot be defended, they were not half so bad as they would have been had marriage been wholly ignored.

The principle that to do right is, in the long run, the most remunerative thing for individuals, for classes of men, and for nations, receives daily illustration. The Engineering magazine points out that while Europeans and Americans are straining every nerve to increase the productivity of their machinery, the human being, which forms the most important part of a manufacturing establishment, receives too little consideration from the employer. Without well-fed, well-clothed, well-sheltered, and well-educated operatives, there cannot be that class of strong intelligent men who alone can conceive and suggest possible improvements. The welfare of the worker will some day be seen to be as important as the development of inventions and improvements in machinery; indeed, the necessary prelude of the latter.

One of the results of the ubiquity of the Press ought to be the exposure and death of every form of abuse; but even in the searchlight of truth abuses have a way of living. Limited liability companies are said to have no compassions; but even so, they can be arraigned at the bar of public opinion; and if they care nothing for its judgments in themselves, they may be made to care for a declining dividend. The public have the remedy in their own hands. They can patronize the tradesman who treats his employés fairly, and pass by him who does not. They can withhold support from him who denies a seat to his shop girls, or compels some of them to pinch their waists as "living models." If the Press can enlighten the consciences of the purchasing public, it will do an immense service.

The action of the Liverpool School Board in deciding to introduce the Free Church Catechism into their school curriculum is calling forth loud protests, in which Nonconformists, Roman Catholics, and Anglicans are joining. This reawakens the religious question, and gives a powerful weapon to the sacerdotalists in other parts to renew their agitation for "definite religious teaching" in our primary schools. The matter has been referred to the Education Department, which is now considering whether the question involves a breach of the provisions of the Education Act of 1870. The probability is that they will decide against the movement, on the ground that it introduces the element of doctrinal teaching, as against the plain reading and explanation of the Bible in a non-sectarian sense. It is a pity that the question has been reopened. There is none more explosive or so likely to lead to painful controversy and fruitless recrimination.

Some of the London journals have recently published correspondence on the unseemly behaviour of visitors to St. Paul's Cathedral. The devotions of worshippers and the solemnity of the place are being interfered with by an increasing number of loungers, who frequent the noble edifice for other than devotional purposes. The great benefit for busy people of having a beautiful and historical sanctuary open for brief visits for rest and prayer, during the rushing hours of business, in the heart of the City is very great, and means must be taken to prevent the desecration of the building by thoughtless sightseers and idle loafers. The severe lesson administered by our Lord to the people who dishonoured the temple at Jerusalem marked his sense of the evil of such conduct.

The Fortieth Anniversary of "The Christian."

MY beloved Friend,—I cannotlet this anniversary pass without a retrospect and a thanksgiving for all these forty years have seen. Over it all is written, "Jesus Christ is the same."

I could only praise as I read the letter of "A Constant Reader," and looked back over the forty years full of grace and mercy which have kept you with your banner for the King of kings floating over the weary world!—Yours heartily, Anna Shipton.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will have been grateful for the interesting letter of "A Constant Reader," published in your last issue, concerning the Fortieth Birthday of The Christian, which, as he well says, "has rooted itself in the hearts and homes of so many of us."

I well remember its commencement as The Revival, and how often it was my joy to come for counsel and prayer into the office at Ludgate Hill, where it was then published. You will recall how in those early days, in company with our beloved brother, Mr. Chase, we never met without seasons of fervent prayer concerning the work of the Lord, in which he and you took such deep interest; and when he left us for the glory of the eternal sphere, I felt that one of the dearest friends of my young manhood was gone.

The memories of those early days are fresh and sweet, and I believe that our talks over the Word of God at that time, and submission to its supreme authority, helped to confirm the loyalty to truth which has consistently characterized your writings in the columns of your paper. A friendship of over forty years must needs have in it many memories of interest and brotherly love which will continue when we shall have been exalted to the Father's house in the city of the Great King.

I rejoice in your forty years of testimony, and praise God for the faithful service you have rendered to the Church of God throughout the world.

I am sending this from Keswick, where the bright and joyous inspiration of these wonderful days of fellowship makes heart and pen to flow easily; and I believe thousands of your readers will admit that my pen is engaged in a grateful service when I thus write another letter of congratulation.

Further, I believe I voice the thought of large numbers of your friends when I say that we cannot consent that this Fortieth Birthday should pass without some united expression of our deep interest in the future of The Christian and its beloved Editor. You have proved that you love to witness to the truth. This, I know, is alike your great honour and your chief joy. You do not need our praise, but the suggestion is that at Aldersgate Street Noon Prayer-meeting should be held. Subject to correction, both as to place and date, I would name Monday, August 14, from noon until 2 p.m. as the time. I believe many will gladly come together to bid God-speed to The Christian and its highly esteemed Editor.

A BIRTHDAY PRAISE MEETING *

May I add how entirely the writer of the letter signed "A Constant Reader" expresses my mind in relation to your valuable journal?—Yours, very sincerely, Henry Varley.

* This meeting has been duly arranged.—[Ed.]

Emphatic Christians.

Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE Lord Jesus Christ put great emphasis on the spiritual character of his followers. They were to be sympathetic and yet separate—a peculiar people, zealous of good works. They were in the world and yet not "of the world." Our Master was pre-eminently sympathetic; He touched human life at every point, lofty and lowly. He did not draw back his foot when a sinful woman's tears of penitence trickled upon it, nor did He refuse an unpopular publican's invitation to be his guest. "This man receiveth sinners" was the sneer of the bigoted Pharisee. It is a bastard Christianity which snubs honest worth in coarse raiment, or refuses to shelter the harlot who is struggling towards a better life, or which builds a "coloured pew" in a remote corner of a church gallery.

With all his infinite sympathy—which drew not back from the bitter agonies of the cross—there was a sense in which Jesus Christ was "separate from sinners." He possessed a Divine holiness, an unworldly spirit, and a spotless life; tempted in all points, He was yet without sin. "Ye are not of the world," He says to his followers, "because I am not of the world." Just here runs

THE LINE OF SEPARATION.

It is to be a separation, not of condition or daily contact, but of character. Christ's people are to be a "peculiar people"—peculiar in loving the truth, peculiar in honest dealings, peculiar in works of unselfish benevolence, peculiar in hating sin, and peculiar in trying to copy Him who was holy and undefiled, and separate from sinners. "Be ye holy," means to be sound and healthy-hearted; it also means to be set apart to Christ's service. The separation of a genuine Christian must be a separateness of Christly character. All his power for good depends upon it. The leaven is separate even when it mingles itself through the whole batch of meal. The different particles of salt are distinct from the mass of food which they season—i.e., the salt never loses its saltness.

The more pronounced and emphatic every Christian is in his aloofness from the codes and the fashions and the sinful ways of the world, the more peace and spiritual power will he have. He has his standard of faith and practice given to him—to be lived up to. There is an increasing tendency to sneer at creeds. But the all-comprehensive creed which a man must hold to if he be a Christian is—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and "faith without works is dead." Strait is the gate that leads to eternal life, and He whose love has opened up that pathway has a right to demand heart-belief in Him, and obedience to his commandments. Much of the self-styled is a thin veneer to cover shallow convictions; it is liberal in giving away priceless truths, and liberal in pulling down enclosures which the Bible puts up. It is an indistinct blur rather than a belief, and has no spiritual emphasis.

"LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY"

A healthy Christian conscience emphasises the divine claims of the Sabbath, and does not rob God of his day. It recognises the clear, distinct line between sacred time and secular time. That line, with some church-members even, is becoming a mere chalk-mark, easily rubbed out. A huge blanket-sheet of a Godless newspaper covers the early part of God's day, and its later hours are devoted to social visiting or other secularities. This stealthy and steady undermining of the Sabbath is undermining the Church of Jesus Christ. Christianity cannot live without divine worship, and worship will not live without the Sabbath. When reverence for God's law is broken down, reverence for human law is shattered also. If the observance of the Fourth Commandment be "Puritanical," then let us have more of it. The salt that has done most to save our country from moral corruption, and from the dry-rot of imported errors and vices, embodies the virtues of those staunch Puritans who were strict themselves because they served a strict and holy God.

Nothing did our Blessed Master emphasise more than non-conformity to the world. Its mammon-worship, its covetousness, its self-indulgences, its frivolities, its soul-destroying influences, He protested against. "Be ye not conformed to this world!" Not to be taken out of the world, but to be in the world, was our Saviour's prayer for his people. The power of true Christly religion is not in assimilation but separation. Christians never will impress or reform or purify a sinful world by agreeing with it. When we go down to the world it drags us lower still; if we yield one mile, it compels us to "go with it twain." We never can save sinners on their own ground; it is only by living on a higher ground—living a separated and Christ-obeying life—that we can hope to lift them to a higher, purer, holier, and thus a happier living. Laxity is the Church's peril. The sorest need of the hour is an emphatic Christianity, an uncompromising Christianity, a Christianity that keeps its conscience clean, that finds its daily law in the Bible, and whose inner life is hid with Christ in God.

KEPT FROM THE EVIL

"So Tired!"

As we stand in the crowded mart,
Or sit in the close, still room,
As we bend o'er the flying pen,
Or labour with brush and broom;
As we pass down the busy street,
How oft we are heard to say—
"How great is this sudden heat,"
And, "I feel so tired to-day."

"So tired," yet we labour on,
For we know when the hours are spent,
Another day will have gone,
To us in mercy lent.
So we "work while 'tis called to-day,"
For the Master we love so well;
How soon He may call away
His workers, none can tell.

"So tired," yet with heart and hand
We labour more and more
When we think of the saintly band
Who have all been tired before.
And the Master was weary too,
As He sat by the well-side stone;
The labours of earth He knew
And felt ere Time had flown.

We think of another rest—
The rest which is yet to come
For the dear redeem'd of God,
When their earthly work is done.
How light will that evening be (Though the shadows fall dark and deep)
When He Himself shall bend
And fondly kiss them to sleep.

God's sleep for his own belov'd,
God's rest which shall still remain,
God's cure for the fainting soul
And the wasted heart and brain.
Oh, calmer than twilight calm!
Oh, sweeter than scent of flowers!
We need not mind the toil
If such at last be ours.

CAROLINE TICKNER.

International S.S. Lessons.

August 13, 1899.

EZEKIEL'S GREAT VISION.

EZEK. XXXVII. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—EZEK. XXXVI. 27.

LESSON CONNECTION.

LAST Sunday, our lesson taught us the only condition of salvation for the Jews from their captivity, and for the sinner from the power and consequences of sin. What was it? To-day we are to learn about the power by which it can be done. Explain what is a vision, how it differs from a dream; give examples of dreams and visions, Joseph's dream, Joshua's vision, &c. Before God spoke to us by his Son Jesus, and we had the whole Bible, He revealed his will to his servants by means of dreams and visions (Heb. i. 1-3).

EXPLANATORY.

Verse 1. Refer to ch. i. 3. God laid hold of the prophet and made him see mentally. God's Spirit revealed to man's spirit. There is such a thing as spiritual eyesight (Luke xxiv. 31). He saw a plain, long after a battle, with the bones of the slain lying everywhere.

Verses 3-10. Picture this vision vividly; point out how even the restored bodies were no good until God's Spirit entered into them. Wind, breath, spirit, are the same words, as used in the New Testament.

Verses 11-14. The interpretation. Israel as a nation was scattered all over the wide regions of Babylon; they were a dead nation, spiritually dead—hopeless of restoration and life as the dry bones. But that which is impossible to man is possible with God. The exiles should come together and return, rebuild Jerusalem and re-establish the outward worship of Jehovah; yet all this would only be outward reform until God's Spirit breathed his life within. "The Spirit comes with the north wind of power, the south wind of love, the east wind of truth, and the west wind of justice."

Later on in the chapter, another vision showed how the tribes of Israel (which were scattered 722 B.C.) and the tribes of Judah (in 586 B.C.) would join together in their return to their country.

APPLICATION.

Though the primary meaning refers to nations, the truth applies to individuals. Even as children we are dead in sin. By nature we are dead to holiness, love, usefulness, heaven, and things spiritual; "living in the cellar of our being instead of in the sunny rooms." Like a blind man surrounded by beauty, he sees not, or a deaf person hearing not the strains of lovely music (Rom. viii. 6, Eph. ii. 1, 1 John iii. 14, John iii. 3, 5). God calls us to awake from this spiritual death, by his Word, by preachers and teachers (Eph. v. 14). If we are willing and believe, the power comes (Mark iii. 5, Acts iii. 6, 7, 19). Life can only come by the Spirit of God (Zech. iv. 6; xxii. 10, John v. 25, vii. 38, 39, Eph. ii. 1). God's Holy Spirit is here, all around us, waiting to give life, to come into each soul who will let Him in. Who is willing to-day? Our outward lives will tell whether we have received the Spirit within: the Resurrection life (Isa. xxvi. 19, xliv. 3, Col. iii. 1-4).

There is encouragement for the teacher; however careless and hopeless the scholars, God's promise (v. 14) is sure. Nothing could seem more impossible than the return of the Jewish exiles to their own land; the fulfilment of these prophecies, delivered, some seventy, others thirty-six years beforehand, is abiding proof that what God promises He is able to perform (Rom. iv. 21).

God put his Spirit within Israel for temporal deliverance; He puts his Spirit in men and women and children for eternal salvation. The "Golden Text" points the way to present good and future bliss.

SPECIAL POINTS.

1. God makes use of human instrumentality (ex. Ezekiel).

2. A dead soul, or a dead church, needs a special messenger from God to preach (v. 4).

3. Mark the words, "Thou knowest" (v. 3), and "Ye shall know" (vv. 6, 13, 14). What is our experience?

4. What God says, He does (v. 14).

5. God rules and overrules all nations.

6. We must take care lest we "resist" God's Spirit, when we feel Him working in our hearts (Acts vii. 21); or "grieve" Him by slighting his promptings, not acknowledging Him, not studying his will and wishes; or "quench" Him by worldliness, weakening his power by our own self-will.

Ritualism at Cardiff.

A DISTINCT mark was made in the history of Protestantism in Cardiff on Wednesday last, when the largest and most enthusiastic demonstration ever held in the town assembled in the National Eisteddfod Pavilion. The meeting was organized by a local committee, with the co-operation of various Protestant societies; and was not held specifically under the auspices of the Church Association, as announced in a recent issue. Mr. N. R. Hughman acted as organizing secretary.

Twelve thousand people were crowded into the Pavilion an hour before the advertised time to commence the meeting, and upwards of 30,000 applications had been received by the secretaries for tickets. The Treorky Royal Male Voice Choir sang at intervals.

Canon Fleming having read Ps. xix., and Rev. C. H. Wainwright having offered prayer, Lord Wimborne, who presided, said the meeting was calculated to strengthen the hands of the Bishop in putting down Ritualism. If he was anxious and desirous to put down ultra-Ritualism, it would be a great thing for him to know that those assembled appreciated his motives, and would assist him to the utmost of their power. Mr. Kensit and Mr. Walsh (whose names were loudly cheered) had stirred up the country to the knowledge of a great conspiracy sustained by a concrete set of men anxious to undermine the constitution of the land, and bring the country back into the arms of Rome. These men belonged to secret societies, with Lord Halifax at their head. These societies went by the sobriquet of the E.C.U. The Ritualistic party interpret these letters as the English Church Union, but he considered it quite a misnomer, and preferred to translate them into a society for Enforcing Confessional Ultra.

After referring to the rebellious proposals passed by 220 clerics met in Holborn Town Hall, and the celebrated manifesto of Lord Halifax, in which they disregard parishioners, disobey the bishops, flout the archbishops, and refuse to obey the law, his Lordship said it was a serious thing to charge any man or body of men with being dishonest, but he could not absolve these men from the imputation of dishonest conduct. They took the stipends and emoluments of the Church, and at the same time were working and plotting for the opposite camp. Many of them were zealous, devoted workers, but devotion to duty did not excuse dishonesty. Lord Halifax, he said, had told them plainly that his object, and the object of those working with him, was union with Rome. He wished Lord Halifax to know that the people of this land would never follow him. Once happily free from the tyranny, they would never again submit their necks to the yoke, and his Lordship declared, amidst a torrent of applause, that Englishmen would not tolerate young curates—so-called Father Confessors—worming out home secrets, or poisoning the minds of wives and children with indelicate questions.

Then came the following resolution, proposed by Lord Portsmouth:—

That this meeting views with alarm and sorrow the extensive re-introduction throughout our land of—

(1) Doctrines, rites, and ceremonies, which were distinctly rejected by the English nation at the time of the Reformation, as being Romish inventions, contrary to God's Word;

(2) "The Sacrifices of Masses," which were then declared to be blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits;

(3) The evils connected with the confessional.

And as the bishops in too many cases appear unable or unwilling to arrest these mischievous abuses, this meeting hereby demands that the conduct of public worship by the clergy of the Established Church shall be brought within the limits imposed by law, and that public patronage be no longer employed for the furtherance of Romish principles.

His Lordship said that they were engaged upon the most vital question of the day. It extended beyond any mere party consideration, and ran down into the hearts, consciences, and convictions of the English people. They were contending for the principles of the Reformation; and it was one of the brightest and noblest features of the present situation that the Protestant religion was recognized by the masses of loyal Churchmen and loyal Nonconformists as a common concern.

He was amazed at the attitude of the Primate of this country to-day. Archbishop Tait in 1874 said that

No admiration or appreciation of the goodness of the men with whom they had to deal ought to make them hesitate as to whatever may appear to be their duty in the endeavour to counteract what he felt obliged to call a conspiracy within their own body, against the doctrine, the discipline, and practice of their Reformed Church.

Since then they all knew the growth and extent of that conspiracy. He did not wish to say a word against the Roman Catholics, for in this country every man had a right to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience. The question under consideration was not the mass, but what Lord Beaconsfield called "the mass in masquerade."

His Lordship at some length condemned the advanced teaching in Ritualistic manuals. There was a book printed and circulated in St. Alban's, Holborn, called "A Mass Book for Children." This book had these words in it: "The Church is holy; the altar is holy; the priest is holy; the Holy Mass is holy." Another book was dedicated to the two Archbishops, entitled "A Catechism for Catholics in England," but the most flagrant of all were the manuals, "Before the Altar" and "Helps to Repentance or Pardon through the Precious Blood," in which confession is made a moral obligation. The time has come, Lord Portsmouth boldly declared, when those who are in earnest for the Protestant cause must make up their mind that they cannot trust the bishops, because they had set up an unconstitutional and sham tribunal which was without law and precedent, thereby taking upon themselves voluntarily the full responsibility of the present state of affairs. It was under the protection of their veto that this conspiracy had grown. In conclusion, he said the English people must rouse themselves and abolish absolutely and unconditionally first and foremost the veto. Unless they did this they would never restore law and order in the Church. They must also substitute "deprivation" for "imprisonment," and simplify procedure.

Canon Fleming, in seconding the resolution, said there was a time when silence was golden, but to stand with muzzled lips when confronted with a grave crisis was cowardly. He had not come to speak against the Ritualists, but he had come to speak with no bated breath against Ritualism—against the system, not against men. He protested against the importation of the mass and the abominable confessional from a foreign Church. They should, he said, be determined to oppose the progress of Ritualism, the varnished and veneered thing,

or Romanism, the real thing, and not assume the yoke from which their fathers had set them free. The danger that appeared to him was the supineness and apathy of the laity. He stood amazed at the manner in which Ritualism had been built up with subtlety, petted, condoned, and supported by the laity. He had said all along that the laity must combine. They held the key to the whole position.

They held the purse-strings, and if they withdrew their money, how long, he asked, could the game of Ritualism go on? Ordained clergy are not the Church; they are a mere handful, compared with the laity. Archbishop Leighton said that "all believers were God's clergy," and that was his creed. Sacerdotalism was the very essence of Romanism. It was the Bible, not the Prayer Book, that was the rule of faith. The Bible was the tribunal before which all disputed questions must be settled. He loved the Prayer Book, and honoured it; but he repudiated the teaching which said they should not give the Bible to the people without the Prayer Book, which was the foundation-stone upon which was set up that which his soul loathed—a human priesthood, instead of the one Divine High Priest.

He would restrict himself to the third part of the resolution, namely, auricular, or whispered confession. Many of the innovations of the present day were childish: the confessional was deadly—it struck at the very root of family life. There was one word in the English language that was stronger than all others. It was stronger that our army and navy, of which we are all so proud; it is even stronger than the throne which is carpeted with the love of an affectionate people. That word is the word home, and no priest shall ever tamper with our home. He went on to speak of auricular confession as defined by the fifth canon of the fourteenth session of the Council of Trent, where it said—

If any one shall deny that sacramental confession is necessary to salvation, let him be anathematized.

And again, in the ninth canon it said—

If any one shall affirm that absolution pronounced upon such confession is not judicial, but only ministerial, let him be anathematized.

What was the result of the confessional? The confessor knew the penitent as well as she knew herself; and what followed on that? If a man that night knew him (the speaker) as well as he knew himself, he was from that moment that man's slave. That man was his master. He asked them, Were they going to hand over their families to such ghastly rules? (Cries of "No.") Were they, the people of Great Britain, going to submit to it? (No, no.) If they did, they were unworthy of their fathers, and they were renegades as to the principles of the Reformation. He called upon his hearers, the friends of the reformed faith, to stand up against this—determined, if necessary, to be the friends of a further reformation.

If the Church abandoned the principles of the Reformation, then let her go, and let her endowments go. Perish the silver and the gold, so long as the truth of God was maintained. If the Ark of God was worth striving for, it was only for the tables that were enshrined in it. They were determined that the great principles of the Reformation, which were the very bulwarks of England's liberty, should not be filched from them by any man, nor frittered away by any set of men upon the face of the earth; but they would hand them down to their children undiminished, unmutilated, and unsullied.

Lady Wimborne said she had come because she felt it would be absolutely wrong in such times as these for anyone to hold back. The Ladies' League, which had been formed, was an organization which she wanted all the ladies in Cardiff, Wales, and England to join. All that was brightest and best in their homes was involved in this question of Ritualism in the Church of England, the happiness of husband and wife, and the children. She urged all women who had any love for the home to interest themselves in this question, for it was the children at whom the deadly attacks were directed. She could not understand how any woman could reconcile it to her conscience to let the daughter she had guarded and tended from all evil be exposed to the outrageous risks and temptations

which they knew always had and always would beset the confessional. Yet it was this system that the Ritualists were endeavouring to introduce into England again. They well knew that this was the crux of the whole situation; that, if they could capture the stronghold of home, their victory was assured. That was why they instructed the children so carefully, even those of tender age. They knew how distasteful it was to Englishmen, and their only chance of success was to teach the children to be accustomed to it. She firmly believed that the Ladies' League was filling a void, and that women were realizing more and more what enormous power for good they might exercise at this moment in the country, if they would only gently and quietly, but firmly and resolutely, take their part in this life-and-death struggle. That the Church of England might yet emerge from this conflict with a closer hold on the eternal truths was, she was sure, the prayer of every woman in that assembly.

Mr. J. C. Mellor, Q.C., M.P., said the Archbishop of Canterbury had been holding for a long time a perfectly illegal and sham court. In the House of Commons they had asked again and again whether the authority of the Crown had been obtained to the appointment of a Judge as Dean of Arches, but had been unable to obtain any but evasive replies. The authority of the Queen was paramount, in matters ecclesiastical as well as civil, and they must resist to the utmost any attempt to give ecclesiastical authority to the Archbishop, and ultimately to the Pope. The rights of the people were founded on, and protected by, the Queen's supremacy. The speaker went on to denounce the holding of the Convocation of the two provinces of Canterbury and York without applying for the royal authority, and said the aim was to take away the authority of the Queen.

Lord Kinnaird said that what was known as the "six points" should not, as matters of ritual, be condoned by the bishops in defiance of the ruling of the Queen's Court. They must stand united in their Protestantism. They wanted power, not to imprison Ritualistic clergy, but to deprive them of their incumbencies.

Revs. J. Morgan Gibbon, Principal Edwards, C. H. Wainwright, M.A., and W. H. Parr also addressed the meeting. The first-named insisted that even comprehension must have its limits. Ritualism had passed reasonable limits long ago; they were not in Geneva or Jerusalem or Canterbury, but in the suburbs of Rome and within sight of the Vatican. There was only one course for honourable men among the Ritualists: it was to resign their positions. If this course was not taken, then the Protestants should resist them with all possible power. He could imagine nothing more disgraceful, more immoral, or more wicked than for a man to lie for a living.

Protestant Outlook.

THE decision of the Archbishops, in the "hearing" on the legality of the liturgical use of incense and processional lights, was delivered on Monday last at Lambeth Palace. The Archbishop of Canterbury (who was alone) read the document, which was received with great attention. In brief, the conclusion arrived at was that the practices in question were neither enjoined nor permitted by law. The Archbishops held that in compiling the Liturgy the Reformers set before themselves three great ends—(1) the need for greater simplicity; they did not wish the services to be overloaded with symbolism; (2) the desire for conformity with the New Testament account of the Sacrament, and to make the Communion a repetition of the original feast; and (3) a desire to revive the ways of the Primitive Church. In conclusion, the Archbishops entreated the clergy, for the sake of peace, to accept the decision thus conscientiously given, and to discontinue the use of incense and the carrying of lights as ceremonial acts.

Mrs. A. Nicolas writes: "It is indeed hard to spread the Gospel in Italy. You cannot sufficiently warn the English against Romanist priests. An evangelist who was recently speaking to a drinking and card-playing party in a village was assured by the people that they would be better men if they had such teaching in place of that of their immoral priests. On the following Sunday, the preacher spoke from the church steps to two hundred peasants, who also received Gospels and tracts with readiness. One of the people interested in Evangelical truth told me the following: A woman had died and her friends wished to free her from purgatory. The priest informed them that this would cost 300fr. They objected to the amount as unreasonably large, considering the years of bad crops; but the priest insisted, as the deceased had been very wicked, seldom going to confession, that if they had not the money, they must borrow it. Eventually they found a man who was able to advance the money, but he wished to be present at the transaction. Two of them therefore met at the house of the priest, who served a good supper with wine, which, he said, a relative of his was sending him from purgatory. They left the house, telling the priest that if so rich a person as he could not get his own relative out of purgatory, neither could he get their friend out for 300fr."

Prof. Newell's Bible Course.

Lesson VIII.—Exodus xix.-xxiv.

Tested under Pure Law.

I. Read the chapters repeatedly, as usual.

II. The chapter-names: xix., Sinai; xx., Ten Commandments; xxi.-xxii., Judgments; xxiii., Ten Promises; xxiv., Pure Law Covenant.

III. In chapters xix.-xxiv., God is giving Israel a great test or proving (xx. 20), in the revelation of his law to them, wholly apart from grace, promising them everything if they will keep it perfectly. This they say at once that they will do. They will not—cannot. But God takes them at their word, and makes the covenant of ch. xxiv. with them, letting them approach Him on the ground of their promised obedience (xxiv. 8, R.V., marg.). They all break and despise this covenant within less than eight chapters. God knew they would, but He is giving them the trial He always gives to those who believe in themselves. For it is only by the law that men get to know themselves as guilty and under a curse on the one hand, and utterly without strength to help themselves on the other (see Rom. iii. 19-20, Gal. iii. 10, and Rom. v. 6, Tit. iii. 5).

IV. The following topics should be thoroughly studied:—

1. Mount Sinai: Its geography; peculiar biblical history, as connected with God's revelation of Himself; future prophetic history; spiritual meaning (Gal. iv.). Why did Israel need to come there? What attributes of God were especially revealed there? What was the great effect on the people? (Ex. xx. 18-21.) Was this God's design? (Deut. v. 23-31.) Was the effect on them permanent? (Ex. xxxii.) Why? (Rom. vii.)

2. The Ten Commandments: Their character or nature; meaning; scope; order; relation to each other; how given, at first, by God? (Deut. v. 22). Why? Why only ten? Why uttered before all else? What ones of them restate principles revealed in Genesis? What ones plainly indicate their being given at this time only to Israel? Trace the judgments of chapters xxi.-xxii.; illustrate their application. What is the Christian's relation to them? (Col. ii. 14; Gal. iv. 4-7; iii. 23-26; Rom. vii. 4-6; Gal. v. 1, 18; 1 Tim. i. 8-11; Rom. vii. 7; Gal. iii. 24).

3. The purely legal covenant. Chapter xxiv. On what basis made? (vv. 3, 7, 8). Why ratified with blood? (Compare Heb. ix. 18-20). Did it bring the people near? (See vv. 1 and 2; contrast Heb. x. 19-23; vii. 18, 19). Did it secure the vision of the face on the footstool of God? (v. 10; contrast 2 Cor. iii. 18; Rev. xxii. 4). Though they eat and drink before God (v. 11), is there any truthful fellowship with Him? What do the words "He laid not his hands on them" signify, an experience of liberty or constraint? But contrast Matt. xxvi. 29; Luke xxii. 29, 30; xii. 37; Rev. iii. 20; Song v. 1; ii. 3, 4. Blessed be the name of Jesus for evermore! May the language of Phil. iii. 9 become that of every heart that reads these lines!

Lesson IX.—Exodus xxv.-xl.

The Plan of Grace; The Failure of Law; The Mixture.

By the plan of grace, of course we mean God's counsels as set forth in the tabernacle concerning salvation in Christ, which He revealed to Moses in the mount before ever He sent the two tables down to the wretched people (chapters xxv.-xxxi. 17). By the failure of law we mean, not its failure to perform its proper office—to reveal sin; it did that effectively, in this instance! (chapter xxvii.); but its utter failure to prove a means of salvation to Israel, "what the law could not do," Rom. viii. 3. By the mixture of law and grace we mean that order of things under which Israel was placed in chapter xxxiv., after their breaking of the Covenant of chapter xxiv. It was neither all grace nor all law; the law, doubtless, predominated in it. Tabernacle, priesthood, and sacrifice belonged to grace; commandment, ceremonial, and judgment belonged to law. Here we find the "guardians and stewards" of Gal. iv. 3.

I. The first step ought to be familiar by this time; read the chapters at least seven times.

II. The chapter names: xxv.-xxx., Tabernacle Pattern; xxxi., First Tables; xxxii., Golden Calf; xxxiii., Presence Promise; xxxiv., Second Tables; xxxv., Tabernacle Offering; xxxvi.-xxxix., Tabernacle Fashioned; xl., Tabernacle Glory.

In Exodus xxxii. we see God laying upon Moses as their mediator his sinning people. Though he failed in his attempted atonement for them (xxxii. 30-33), for a Greater than he must atone for sin (Ps. xlix. 8, Rev. v. 9), yet He obtained God's sparing mercy for Israel (xxxii. 11, 14), and then his accompanying presence (xxxiii. 1-4, 12-17). So Christ obtained the pardon and fellowship of God for us. Moses is now declared the accepted mediator of the legal covenant (xxxiii.) by his admission to face-to-face fellowship with God, by granted petitions and by the revealing to him of the Divine glory. Thus does Christ prevail for us. The first legal covenant had been sent to the people on God-fashioned, God-written tables, without a mediator. It was utterly broken. In the renewed covenant the mediator fashions the tables below by his human hands and himself writes the holy law upon them.

In the first part of Exodus (chaps. i.-xviii.) we have seen God delivering his people from the judgment and bondage of Egypt, and bringing them out into the wilderness, there to learn of and to lean upon Himself, and thus be brought quickly into the land of promise and delight. But the spirit of sinful self-sufficiency and murmuring they had up to this time displayed made necessary to them the revelation of their God in his holiness and themselves in their wretchedness. In the second section of the book (chaps. xix.-xxiv.) we see them given the opportunity of entering on a covenant with God on the ground of their own perfect obedience—a covenant, as one has said, of "pure law, unmixed with any trace of grace." Their hasty, self-confident rushing into this covenant, and their testing on the ground of it, follow. God lets them alone a little, even calling Moses away from them for forty days, till they discover what manner of people they are. They soon reveal themselves. We straightway find them dancing in horrible heathen orgies around a bestial idol (ch. xxxii.).

But meanwhile what was Jehovah talking of to Moses in the mount? Not of that covenant which the people have made with Him in ch. xxiv., and which depends on the sand-rope of human resolution and promise. No, indeed. This law-covenant just made with the people did not for a moment annul or even touch the great covenant of grace and promise made 400 years before with

THE FATHER OF THE FAITHFUL.

(Compare Gen. xv. with Gal. iii. 17, 18.) God's heart is always set on that first covenant in his dealings with Israel—never on the legal one. So, while the people were resting on their promise of perfect obedience to God, confident of their own goodness (ch. xxiv.), He who knew what was in man, and what an utter failure Israel were about to make, was revealing to Moses in the mount the great patterns of the tabernacle, which speak throughout of the blessed Saviour, whose great atonement takes away our sins for ever, and brings us into the Father's presence as favoured children, wholly apart from all or any of those works of the law, which all of us would do, but which none of us can ever do, acceptably to God. (See Rom. iii. 20; Gal. iii. 10-12, 21; Titus iii. 15; Eph. ii. 9.)

The tabernacle was God's dwelling place with men. As such it was, as a whole, a type of Christ. (See Col. i. 19, Jno. i. 14, R. V., margin). If we let the Israelite in the tabernacle represent the Christian in Christ, we shall get many a marvellous lesson in the study of the tabernacle, with its furniture and service. Some such work as the Notes of C. H. M., or the first volume of the Numerical Bible, by F. W. Grant, or the brief but suggestive booklet by George Rodgers, "The Gospel According to Moses," should be consulted, after becoming thoroughly acquainted with the chapters in the Word regarding it; for it should ever be a fixed principle with us to master the contents of a passage of Scripture, and submit ourselves to God for his enlightenment, ere using that which others, however taught of God, have written.

III. Topics for study.

1. The Tabernacle. Most thorough and patient study will be abundantly rewarded here, as we have said, and should be entered upon by every Bible student. In the limits left for this lesson, even the directions for work worthy the subject cannot be given. We beg every minister, especially, to note for early and faithful Scripture investigation this wondrous store-house of treasures.

2. The sin at Sinai. Its source; its cause; its nature; its gravity; its aggravations, which makes it appear worse, the holiness of God, aflame before their eyes, or the sweet purpose of grace for them of which He had just been talking with Moses?

3. The vision of the glory (chap. xxxiii.). Why asked, or better, why desired? Why was not the angel's presence (v. 2) enough for Moses? Why not then the fellowship of verse 11? Why not then the knowledge of God's ways of verse 13? for, see Ps. ciii. 7, as well as verse 17. Why would the revelation of the glory of his God alone satisfy the soul of this saint at this time? Have you, yet, seen the glory of God? Have you begged to be shown it? (See Isa. vi.; Ezek. i.; Dan. x.; Rev. i.). We know where to look now for it (3 Cor. iv. 6). May the prayer of Eph. i. 16, 17, be answered in each of our lives!

4. The free-will offering. Chap. xxxv. Its motives, measure, and lessons for us. Compare with 1 Chron. xxix.; and Acts ii. 44, 45; iv. 32-35.

5. The literal obedience in the construction of the tabernacle, and its reward, as shown in chapter xl. 34-38. (Compare 1 Chron. v. and Acts v. 32.)

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 6. 2 Sam. xx.

IN every life there is a Joab; a someone whose presence is a perpetual misery and menace. We often endeavour to rid ourselves of such, as David did, when he appointed Amasa to the supreme command. But all our efforts are futile. Again and yet again we are confronted by our antagonist, whose presence deprives life of its sweetness, and dooms us to perpetual chafe and fret. The remarkable point is, first, that there is no one else who can aid us so well; and second, that the popular clamour seems to compel us to bear with these bitter ingredients of our earthly lot.

What has Christ, our supreme Teacher and Lord, to say to us under such circumstances? He, too, had a Joab—a Judas—in his life, with whom he had to eat, and drink, and spend days and nights, always under surveillance, always conscious that his goodness was exciting deeper antagonism, and arousing yet more strenuous hate.

We must bear with such in all patience and humility, not scrupling to rebuke them where they err, not hesitating to bring them to a better mind if we can, not permitting our own course to be deflected by a hair's-breadth in consequence of their spleen. "Who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good?" Let those that "suffer, according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator." "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Some day, when the lesson is fully learned, the devil will leave you, and angels will come and minister.

MONDAY, August 7. 2 Sam. xxi.

There is helpful truth amid much in this chapter which is at variance with the teaching of Christ. In reading the narrative we must never forget that we are in the time of the old covenant, when an eye was demanded for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. All this has been altered by Him who bids us not resist evil, or avenge ourselves, but conquer our enemies by love. At the same time, if a covenant like that which Joshua entered into with the Gibeonites was observed with such strict sanctity, and its violation was avenged by so dire a calamity as repeated famine, surely we may dare to venture our all upon that covenant which is ordered in all things and sure, and in virtue of which God binds Himself to forgive our sins and be a God to us for ever.

Poor Rizpah! A bitter sorrow befell her. Most nobly she bore herself; with the tenacity of a woman's love she watched the rotting remains of those she loved. And it would appear as though her act awoke David's slumbering loyalty to Saul and Jonathan. In spite of all his promises to his friend, he had allowed his bones to remain in the frontier town of Jabesh Gilead. It was high time that they should be decently interred, and to this Rizpah's act prompted him. Let us not weary in well-doing. Full often our act may stir the conscience of another and lead to the performance of an act of righteousness too long delayed.

The words of the men of Israel to David were very tender when they forbade him to go again to the battle lest he quench the lamp of Israel. Much more truly is Jesus the lamp of each true heart, gleaming in the forefront of the fight, encased in his white armour. We are reminded of the lines:—

> Press when you see my white plume shine
> Amid the ranks of war,
> And be your oriflamme to-day
> The helmet of Navarre.

TUESDAY, August 8. 2 Sam. xxii.

It has been truly said that this inspired ode is the effusion of a mind flowing with the highest fervour of piety and gratitude; it is certainly filled with the noblest imagery that is to be found within the range even of sacred poetry. In these magnificent stanzas David gathers up and expresses his thanks for all that God had done in delivering him from his enemies, and establishing him in the power and glory of his kingdom. Do we ever set time and thought apart for deliberately singing our Te Deum? In the service of the Church of England it follows the Confession, and precedes supplication and intercession. This is the true order. The forgiven soul praises.

This psalm is repeated in the Psalter (xviii.), with a number of minor alterations; but here we probably have the first draft. Let us spend time over the expression of our thanksgiving that they may be as perfect as possible.

The divisions of the psalm, which is one of the most regular of the inspired poems, are as follows:—

(1) A short introduction (2-4).
(2) A sublime description of God's power in delivering his servant (5-20).
(3) The mercifulness of God's government (21-28).
(4) The strength which the thought of God inspires into his warriors (29-46).
(5) An anticipation of the promised Messiah (46-51).

Notice the use of the words perfect, upright, entirely yielded (24, 26, 31). But the most beautiful touch in the psalm is the ascription of power to God's gentleness (36). We owe more to this than to his greatness. The meekness of Jesus is more potent than his majesty in its sway over our hearts. The love of God leads to repentance. Oh, gentle Saviour, Thou hast greatened us by gentleness!

WEDNESDAY, August 9. 2 Sam. xxiii.

Sweet Psalmist of Israel, sing to us! We know God's Spirit speaks by thee, and his word is on thy tongue. Tell us about Him who is strong as a rock, clear as sunrise, refreshing as the rain on tender grass. We love to hear thee speak when his grace is poured on thy lips, and thou utterest the things that thou hast made concerning Him.

Thou sayest that thy house is not so with God. No doubt thou hadst trouble there. Few men have had more. Yet is it not true that out of all this domestic fret thou wast led to appreciate the tender beauty and mighty strength of Jesus? Hadst thou been too happy in thy home, mightest thou not have missed Him? And would the covenant have been quite as much thy salvation and thy desire? Remember that there are compensations in life, and though thy house may not have grown in that prosperous strength which the early dawn prognosticated, yet thy lot has been better than that of the ungodly, who ultimately are thrust away as thorns. Stricken, thy face furrowed, and thy head blanched, thou art yet the man who wast raised on high, God's anointed and Israel's sweetest Psalmist.

Remember, too, how many and chivalrous have been thy friends. Whatever thy domestic anxieties, thou couldest not have been better served either before or after thy coronation. Thy mighty men were strong as lions and tender as women. What but such an admixture of lion-hearted courage and womanly sweetness would ever have made them go in jeopardy of life to give thee drink? Would that Jesus had such chivalrous devotion when He thirsts for love and faith from the souls of men!

THURSDAY, August 10. 2 Sam. xxiv.

How greatly the motive alters an action! Moses numbered the people, but he did it by the express authority of God. But David's census was instigated by motives of pride and vain-glory, and probably by ambitious designs of conquest. He was eager to ascertain whether he could muster an army sufficient for the enterprises he had in view.

It is said in verse 1 that God moved David, whereas 1 Chron. xxi. 1 tells us that Satan stood up against Israel. There is no collision between the two, for God is frequently described in Scripture as doing what He permits to be done. It is not possible for God to tempt any man; but He allows us to be tempted to teach us our weakness, to lead us to the source of strength, and to show us that our hearts had already wandered from Him.

It was only when the numbering was complete that David appears to have realized the heinousness of his sin. Then the deep penitence, and the bitter result; then the great strait and the final choice to fall into the hand of God; then the cry of the shepherd's heart for his flock; and ultimately the choice of the threshing, floor where the angel stayed, as the site of the altar, and of the future temple (2 Chron. iii. 1).

Your sins and your penitence, your contrition and your anguish over the souls of others, your prayers and tears—these are dear to God. But they would not stay the sword of the avenging angel; only the blood of Jesus Christ, shed once on Calvary, can do this. But when once you realize that you are accepted because of what He did, then let the memory of your grievous sin be the site of the altar of consecration, and the temple of worship.

FRIDAY, August 11. 1 Kings i.

Adonijah, the eldest son, was passed over, and the inheritance given, according to God's promise, to Solomon. The aged monarch roused himself to the decisive action which the crisis demanded, conscious that the eyes of Israel were upon him that he should indicate his successor. He knew precisely in what direction the choice must fall. Bathsheba knew it too, and Nathan, for these had gone with him through those never-to-be-forgotten scenes, in which David and Bathsheba had played such conspicuous parts.

But in this scene we catch sight of another, when Satan shall try to get for himself the empire of the world in one last desperate effort, when the people rage and the kings devise, God will laugh at them. Then will Jesus be manifested with the decree for his coronation. Crowned once in the mystery of the eternal council chamber, crowned again when He had finished the work of redemption, He shall be crowned yet once more as King of the whole earth. The ancient predictions shall be fulfilled, God shall take to Himself his great power and reign, the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ, and the earth shall rend with sounds of great joy.

What tumultuous joy burst over Jerusalem when Solomon was enthroned! The people came up from Gihon rejoicing, so that the city rang again. But this shall not be mentioned nor brought to mind in that day for which the groaning and travailing creation waits, when He shall be manifested, and we shall be manifested with Him in glory.

SATURDAY, August 12. 1 King's ii.

These dying words of the old king are different from the farewell address delivered some time before (1 Chron. xxviii. 29). When a man is going the way which all the earth has gone before him, we listen with hushed voices, and we are not surprised to learn that, as a dying man reviews life, he feels that the most important quality needed for the fit discharge of its responsibilities is strength of character. Ponder, young men, the third and fourth verses, for in proportion to obedience will be the stability of your influence.

In the following words David gave directions about Solomon's treatment of various individuals. It was necessary that a drastic policy should be adopted towards some of them, especially Joab and Shimei; and these parting words were dictated not by personal resentment, but by a sense of justice and policy. We must always remember that weakness is sin, and we have no right to make the path of others more difficult by excessive leniency and indulgence. It is to be noticed that in each case a further trial was to be given to the chief offenders that they might have an opportunity of retaining their lives.

David held the claims of gratitude to be no less sacred than those of justice; hence the treatment of Barzillai and Abiathar. We should be very careful to have our wills ready made, so as to be prepared for a sudden call, and in these last messages which we are able to deliver, let there be loving recognition of those who have been faithful to us in times of our agony and straitness. May they find mercy of God in that day!

Students' Summer Conference.

Statistics collected in Japan and India, as well as in the West, clearly prove that a much larger proportion of students are Christians than any other class of young men.—Mr. John R. Mott.

THE work of the Student Volunteer Movement, fraught as it is with beneficent influence upon the religious life of our universities and colleges, and, ultimately, upon the foreign mission field, must receive a fresh and enduring stimulus from this year's summer Conference, which opened on Saturday last at Aberystwith, under the auspices of the British College Christian Union, under which general title, it will be remembered, the several student societies are now included.

The large muster of students, both men and women, the deep spirituality which characterized the various gatherings, and the forcible and appealing addresses of the speakers, afforded profound cause for thankfulness and hopeful anticipation. The purpose of the Conference was, briefly, to help in the development of the spiritual life, to unite the students of different colleges in Christian fellowship, and consider methods of maintaining evangelistic work, and to emphasize the responsible position of students with reference to the evangelization of the world.

In view of the extraordinary rapidity with which the movement has spread, even to the ends of the earth, "establishing associations," as Mr. H. W. Oldham remarks, "for the extension of Christ's kingdom in the a few retrospective words may serve as a helpful reminder of the importance of this healthy effort to enlist all that is best in educative institutions on the side of spiritual religion.

STUDENT CENTRES OF THE WORLD,"

The genesis of the movement may be traced back to the great awakening of 1859, one of the fruits of which was the daily prayer meeting amongst Cambridge undergraduates. Coming to more recent years, the memorable first campaign of Messrs. Moody and Sankey did much to foster the movement, and at the same time a Prayer Union united the Christian associations of the hospitals and medical schools of London. A Christian Union in 1877 was established at Cambridge, and at Oxford in 1879. Signs were manifest of a stirring among student groups at home and abroad, and many will recall the electric influence of the announcement in the autumn of 1884 that Stanley Smith, who had stroked a Cambridge eight in the inter-University boatrace, and the deft and popular C. T. Studd, captain of the cricketing eleven, were going out as missionaries.

The influence of a widespread movement in America encouraged the workers in Britain; conferences were held, travelling secretaries appointed, and the co-operation of women students gladly welcomed. The great missionary societies hastened to give their blessing, and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union adopted the glorious watchword, "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." The inspiring idea has been eagerly seized by the students of many lands, and the OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT WITH HOPE.

There was an especial appropriateness in the choice of Aberystwith as this year's place of conference, not only because there, on the graceful curve of Cardigan Bay, is situated the magnificent University College which is one of the national glories of Wales, but on account of the important position filled by the college in the earlier days of the student movement. There are fragrant memories of blessing in connection with an evangelistic gathering conducted by Henry Drummond, in which four-fifths of his audience of 100, professed conversion. The whole tone of the college was changed, and the work then organized remains to this day.

As usual, Mr. Tissington Tatlow, the urbane general secretary, has made excellent provision for the well-being of the students. The men, in accordance with custom, are accommodated in camp, a straw palliasse, pillow, and blankets being provided for each, the gleaming tents forming a potent addition to the picturesqueness of charming Aberystwith. The lady students find a comfortable home at the College Hall of Residence.

The first meeting, held at the College, was largely attended. The lecture hall was not decorated, save for a simple scroll bearing the words, "By my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." After a solemn season of prayer, Dr. J. R. Williamson, who has done much good work for the movement, and who proceeds ere long to Poona for student and medical mission work in connection with the American Y.M.C.A., gave a few preliminary words of counsel. Permanent blessing, he pointed out, is not to be obtained by "keying oneself up" to a self-manufactured joy. It is easy enough to do so by means even of industriously pursued conversations and chorus singing, forgetting the real source of spiritual help in the very means of grace.

Passing on, Dr. Williamson, in mellow and convincing terms, described his message as "the one word, Love," the distinguishing characteristic of Christianity, and recognized as such not only by students of comparative religion but by the world at large, which, while unconcerned as to our faith here, and our hope of the hereafter, is careful to remind us of every breach of the "Love Life." Let us, therefore, urged the speaker, think more of our Exemplar, and take pattern from Him. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another."

Dr. Williamson next referred to the patience of Christ. He was not too weary to preach to the woman at the well, nor too dead beat to answer the midnight inquiries of Nicodemus. He has told us, too, of the patient shepherd who seeks the lost sheep, and the patient woman who looks for the lost piece of money until she finds it. As for us, we have seen the King's human coinage defaced, but have we not been too impatient to endeavour to re-create his image upon it? Again, how thoughtful Christ was in his dealings with people. What a womanly delicacy of approach characterized Him. When those men brought to Him the woman taken in her wickedness, how he averts his face as he listens to the horrid tale. Mark, too, how he steps forward to guide the faltering steps of the leper. Three of the Gospels record that gracious instance of thoughtfulness and tact which so strongly appeals to those who have witnessed leprosy. With what love also Christ winged his arrows of condemnation. When He rebukes the narrow vision of an apostle, he puts in the personal address "Philip!" He delivered against Nicodemus no diatribe of condemnation condemning him for cowardice in fearing to come by day. No, he chose no sharp instrument, but used gentler means. We see in all these "little" things. It was perennial, and never became merely mechanical and professional. Dr. Williamson pointed out the ease with which his hearers might depart from the spirit of love, and invite a fellow-student to become a missionary in a hard unsympathetic way, treating him as "a case." "Don't, for God's sake, treat me as a case," a seeking student had written to the speaker. "I want consideration adapted to my special needs and weaknesses. I want special means of healing." Yes, there was an utter absence of professionalism in all that Christ did. His love flows out constantly in a strong tide, even where there is no reciprocation. Amid deep solemnity, and while many heads were humbly bowed, Dr. Williamson asked, in conclusion, should they not bow down in adoration before Him who is Love, no longer, as had been said, "Driven by the thunder of 'I ought,' but drawn by the sweet music of 'I love.'" As the audience dispersed, doubtless there rang in many ears the words of Dr. Williamson's prayer: "We are but in the kindergarten, taking up and pondering on the pictures Thou hast set before us of thy love. Look on us, in the 'first standard' of the Love Life. Our hearts go out that, for the sake of Him who loved us, we may begin to love as we ought, and make our service not only easy but joyous.

HIS CEASELESS LOVE

SUNDAY.

Sunday opened brilliantly, the deep ultramarine of the bay, the long panorama of the slate-hued North Welsh mountains, capped by the far height of Snowdon, and the magnificent sunshine beating the waves here and there into rippling gold, made a lovely spectacle. In the morning the places of worship received considerable accessions to their usual congregations by the attendance of students. In the afternoon the Conference was continued, Mr. Frank Anderson giving some thoughtful hints as to the best method of gaining new adherents to the cause. He added some timely words on the individual responsibilities of student volunteers, saying that the movement was not to be a mere aggregation of names, but a union of consecrated lives. Let them adopt in their colleges and schools. They might be instrumental in winning another Livingstone, a Carey, or a Paton. The missionary motive appeals to the will; it says, "Go ye." It appeals to the reason, "Freely ye have received, freely give." It appeals to the heart, "Lift up your eyes, and look upon the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

MORE AGGRESSIVE MEANS

Mr. Anderson urged the study of missionary biography, in order to learn the various aspects of the missionary question that had had stimulating effects upon men. Paul was called as in a vision, and said to King Agrippa, "I was not disobedient unto the Heavenly Vision." Carey was moved by the urgency of the command; Livingstone by pity for the Dark Continent. Another valuable means of influence was sanctified enthusiasm. Oh, for people of glowing faith, energy, and love! "Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity." Care should be exercised, too, not to speak to fellow-students whom it was desired to win for the cause in a spirit of "my horizon is wider than thine; I am holier than thou." Let there be tactful words, remembering that they were dealing with people on the subject of a lifetime purpose. Still less should they seem to dictate to God in saying that a certain individual was wanted abroad. God might want him at home, but the great point was to get people to seek out and accept the will of God. Those spoken to should heed the voice, not of man but of the Spirit. Mr. Anderson advocated, too, the more general use of missionary literature, and advised preparation to meet the objections usually formulated—"Is not one religion as good as another?" "Are not missions a failure?" and "There is so much to do at home." He concluded with a searching appeal for renewed consecration to the great cause. If any felt that they had been backward, there was still time to dig up the buried talent and place it out to usury.

After some useful discussion of the difficulties of the work, the session closed with one of those seasons of quiet but intensely earnest prayer, which are perhaps the most striking feature of the Conference.

On reassembling, after a brief interval, the subject of Sunday Observance was considered. Dr. J. R. Williamson, in a prefatory word, said their hearts had recently been greatly stirred on the question. He trusted there was no power left in the movement that had caused such righteous and widespread agitation, and expressed the dismay with which he regarded the Continental or pagan Sunday. The conservation of the Christian Sabbath was a matter of the highest importance, alike in its civic, national, and imperial aspects, and for the individual.

A suggestive address on Sunday observance was given by Rev. D. H. D. Wilkinson. He said that any in doubt should seek light from the Bible, which never failed to illuminate any problem. It had been alleged or suggested that the New Testament left it doubtful whether there should be observance or not; but when Christ came into collision with the Pharisees on the Sabbath question he was never against the actual observance. What he challenged was both the attempt to impose unwarranted burdens and the puerile nonsense by which that attempt was supported. After dealing with several instances in which the Sabbath is referred to by St. Paul (Col. ii. 16, Gal. iv. 10, Rom. xiv. 5),

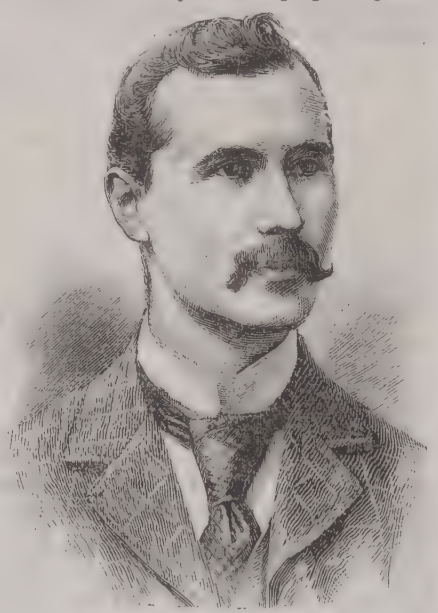
Mr. Wilkinson said that Paul was simply contending for salvation by the power of God as against salvation by forms; but emphatically the apostle was far from saying we were not to observe the Day of Rest. But these were negative points.

COMING TO THE POSITIVE,

the speaker remarked that Christ endorsed the Sabbath by word and example. He regularly attended the Synagogue worship, and those who to-day absented themselves from a place of worship, on the plea of the poverty of the preaching, might well remember that, when the Saviour listened to the Jewish Rabbis, it was at a time when the preaching was of an utterly dry-as-dust order, anything like originality being avowedly scorned. How meaning were Christ's words as recorded in Luke xiii., where He suggests that it was in accordance with the fitness of things that the poor woman, after being "bound these eighteen years," should be set free from Satan's dominion on the day which was fairly God's day! With many references to Scriptural authority, and with pointed allusions to Sunday tennis-playing and other dishonouring amusements, Mr. Wilkinson concluded with a heartfelt appeal on behalf of railway-men, domestic servants, and others, who are too frequently debarred from enjoying the privileges of the Day of Rest.

In the evening there were separate meetings for men and women. At the former Dr. J. R. Williamson dealt, with rare tact and delicacy, with the purity question. His address was listened to with keen attention as he showed, analytically and in incisive language, the relations of the spiritual to the physical, meeting many difficulties and cheering many onward. Dr. Williamson remarked that Tennyson was surely physiological as well as poetical in the words:

> My strength is as the strength of ten,
> Because my heart is pure.



At the close there was an open prayer meeting, in which many students took part. This was a spiritual and most helpful evening.

MONDAY.

On Monday morning, the first subject of consideration was "The Morning Watch." Dr. J. R. Williamson briefly introduced the topic, dwelling on the need for increased prayer and Bible study, that they might all have spiritual sustenance direct from God, instead of getting it at second hand as a kind of "canned" food.

Mr. Frank Anderson said that while there never was so much activity as at present, that fact should emphasize the desirability of spending more time in retirement with God. What air and food are to the body, prayer and diligent study of the Bible are to the soul. The declaration of Indian students in this matter read: "It is my purpose, with God's help, to spend daily at least half-an-hour (the first if possible) in devotional Bible study and secret prayer." After alluding to the sustained prayerfulness manifested by the Master, Mr. Anderson reminded his hearers that prayer without work is smoke; work without prayer is ashes; prayer without study is presumption; study without prayer is infidelity. We needed to live in the spirit of Hab. ii. 1: "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what He will say to me." Chrysostom traced the cause of many evils to ignorance of the Scriptures, and the same reason might be advanced to-day to account for weakness in the mission field. Adducing many and apt Scriptural quotations demonstrating the "quick and powerful" (Heb. iv. 12) character of the Word, Mr. Anderson referred pathetically to Jesus as a student acquiring knowledge from the Scriptures. As to the best time for praying, it was clear the saints of old rose early, and for no other reason than that they might have communion with God. Early morning was the time least open to interruption; then the mind was at its freshest, and we should give our best to God rather than a wearied mind at the fag-end of the day. Early prayer meant, too, putting one's armour on ready for the fray. It was forestalling the enemy, moreover, by starting the day with God. The coming duties and toils could be laid before Him. So should we find strength in fellowship with God, having communion with Him in the morning watch.

The second gathering of the morning, following on a short interval, was devoted to a general council on the best means of developing the movement. Those experienced travelling secretaries, Mr. S. F. Hawkes (Wadham College, Oxford), Miss A. B. Glass (Newnham), and Miss C. R. Rouse (Girton) gave sage counsel, founded on long and careful observation, as to the most desirable ways of arranging evangelistic and missionary meetings and anecdotal reminiscences, and accounts of work were related by various spokesmen (ladies being somewhat reticent) of the universities, colleges, and schools. It was a useful and inspiriting gathering, and the spirit that should characterize future work was well expressed by Miss Glass in the words "enthusiasm, energy, enterprise, and effort."

MR. FRANK ANDERSON.
From photograph by Mr. W. Gardiner, Worthing.

On Monday evening Miss Richardson, Vice-Principal of Westfield College, said the subject for consideration was Our Whole Being. She contended that the true end of being was not knowledge, pleasure, or beauty, but goodness, and Christianity was the force which created the most reproductive goodness. Referring to the threefold division of being—body, soul (mind), and spirit, the speaker said, as for our poor brother, the body, our danger was in regarding it or allowing it to be a tyrant. As to the intellect, its training is not to be an end in itself. We must study to benefit humanity, and learn to live, not live to learn. A life devoted to intellectual pursuits as an end becomes impractical and hypercritical. Knowledge and wisdom are far from being one; knowledge alone results in conceit.

Miss Richardson protested against the cramming of minds with an aggregation of facts, which are so much lumber unless their proper relationship is understood; and lucidly pointed out that students needed to fit themselves for the right use of what knowledge they attained. Such training, she contended, does many and great things for students. It develops a much-needed accuracy and thoroughness, and would end the loose statements which so often force those connected with important movements to cry, "Save us from our friends." It gives, too, mental alertness and elasticity, resulting in a right sifting of words and correct expression of thought. Many of the contests of religious life have their foundations in a mistaken use of words. Mental training leads also to justice in forming judgment instead of prejudice having the sway.

Such accuracy is of the highest value in Christian work. Again, such training has a direct bearing on our religious life, and gives wider sympathies and nobler ideals. Mankind has been moved, thank God, by other things than the Stock Exchange and armies. Many students might never satisfy some of their allowable ambitions, because, seeing the urgent ills of the world, they could not, knowing the remedy for those ills, pass them by. Knowledge must fail without surrender and trust and obedience; but the more we know and understand our faith the better. Above all is the personal knowledge of Christ as the Way, the Truth, and the Life. It is written that the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err in the right path, but that is not because of his folly, but because of his obedience. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness," and if reason cannot take us the whole way to Christ, faith and love will not fail to do so.

Miss Richardson concluded a brilliant address, replete with interest and calculated to effect much good, with a luminous appeal for sound judgment in the religious life, not setting down as tolerance that which fails to distinguish between good and evil, nor standing by a bigoted intolerance which could not see God working.

Rev. A. Johnston Ross, who followed, took up the spiritual aspect of the subject, and urged the students to be spiritual in their natural life and natural in their spiritual life. With a passing allusion to the danger of seeking to act a part, even with God, presenting to Him a kind of expurgated edition of oneself, Mr. Ross maintained, in strong terms, and with instances of personal experience, that there must be no divorce between the spiritual life and Christian activity. Referring to the weaknesses of the simply contemplative life, Mr. Ross went on to advocate the study of missionary facts, and the consideration, not so much of "what Jesus would do," as of what Jesus is doing. Let all students be urged to keep in touch with the great onward movement of God's cause. To some wise counsel as to seeking God and striving to do his will, and with some glowing sentences on the inexhaustibility of Christianity, Mr. Ross added some helpful words on the character and subtleties of sin, and concluded with a call to renewed consecration. This very satisfactory meeting then concluded with prayer from the Bishop of Sierra Leone.

Red, White and Blue Christian Institute for Lads.—The work of this organization, in Cumming Street, Pentonville, N., of which Lord Kinnaird is chairman, has been productive of much good among the many poor and suffering of the neighbourhood during the past year. The report states that the Sunday services and the various weekly classes and meetings have been well attended. Through the kind help of the Ragged School Union, many of the children were sent to the country or seaside during the summer. As the lease of the present premises expires in September, the committee have decided to move to other premises, where the work, which has proved of so much blessing, will be continued.

Mr. Henry Thorne's Evangelistic Missions.—The annual report of this work gives an interesting account of effort among all classes of society. As the missions are inter-denominational, Mr. Thorne works among, and is welcomed by, Christians of many different branches of the Church. Of the multitude converted to God by these missions, several are now labouring in the ministry. The missions embrace the ordinary work of evangelistic services—open-air meetings, Bible readings, prayer and inquirers' meetings, &c. Over 600 services have been held during the year, many of them being signally blessed by God to the saving of souls. Communications to Mr. Thorne should be addressed 31, Beverley Road, Anerley, S.E.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

THESE verses, just written for the occasion by Rev. C. A. Fox, will indicate the tone and character of this gathering of God's people:

"Stand still and see!" yea, see to-day,
New wonder of redeeming grace—
The mighty Potter moulds the clay
Again within this hallowed place,
Till through the human, the Divine
Is seen once more to move and shine.

Here, "commune with thy heart, be still!"
Search all the secret stores of years,
Till, silence now unbearable,
Self betrays self with blinding tears—
Then fall at Jesu's feet, and say,
Thou canst, Thou shalt, cleanse all to-day!

"Be still, and know that I am God!"
Peace, wounded conscience, heaving breast!
Christ's pierc'd hand bears alone the rod,
His cloud transfigures and brings rest.
Take, Lord, Thy power, reign, great I AM,
O'ershadowing Guest, all-conquering Lamb!

Then in the hush of this fair Tent,
And solemn stillness of this hour,
Three thousand souls before Thee bent,
Break forth, O Holy Ghost, in power—
Sweep through, thou Wind of God, sweep through;
Once more, cleanse, consecrate, renew!

The addresses were without exception excellent, each in its way suited to the capacities and affinities of the hearers.

Many familiar voices were missed through unavoidable absence, such as Professor Moule and Dr. Pierson, Revs. Hubert Brooke, Charles Inwood, and E. W. Moore. Several new speakers were heard, as the Bishop of Mombasa, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Williamson, Revs. H. E. Fox, Griffith Thomas, W. D. Moffat, F. W. Ainley, C. Lea Wilson, and E. L. Hamilton.

It was touching to see the venerable Chairman in his place after a severe illness, from which he has not yet wholly recovered, and to hear the murmurs of affectionate recognition with which he was greeted. "You will not think I am making myself unduly prominent," he said, "when I ask you to join with me in giving thanks to God for his mercy in raising me up from severe illness and enabling me to be present at this Convention." The great meeting responded with a general "Amen." Mr. Wilson then asked Mr. Albert Head to conduct the meeting in his stead. But Mr. Webb-Peploe, in harmony with the sympathy of all, asked to be allowed to express our united thanksgiving in prayer, which he did briefly and tenderly.

One striking feature of this yearly gathering is that it attracts so large a number of young people. It is good to see the fathers in Christ throng together to help and to be helped on their way to Zion; but the young men are the working power of the present, and the little children in the faith are the hope of the future; and to see these, like doves flying to their windows, flocking to the sound of the fulness of the Gospel, and feeding their souls on the old corn of the land over Jordan, is a sign of the times for which we cannot be too grateful to God, in view of the sacerdotal and sacramentarian teaching which is blighting the Church of England. For the Convention largely represents that body.

But while this is matter for rejoicing for the reason above given, it is much to be regretted that so many of the Church of England and of Nonconformists should forego the advantage of seeing for themselves one of the most significant and cheering features of the time.

We should rejoice indeed to see Churchism and denominationalism lost in one common Christianity, and not to hear on any platform of advanced Gospel teaching the needlessly distinctive formula of "clergy and ministers." But we have not yet reached a platform (shall we ever?) on which the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, shall be the absolute referee.

Here, as so often, the closest access to God seems to have been found at some of the smaller meetings. Speaking for ourselves, nothing rejoiced us more than a private conversation with Mrs. Todd Osborne, who related the Lord's dealings with her during the year. We met her at the door of the Pavilion at the last Convention, when she told us of her desire to purchase the Alhambra in Cairo as a Soldiers' Home. The way in which the Lord has given her, through his stewards, £4,000 during the year, and secured to her the building, was a summing-up in brief of the teaching of Keswick in doctrine and practice, a chapter of

TRUE CHRISTIAN ROMANCE.

The correspondent of the Record notes the utter absence of excitement; the restfulness of spirit; the large number of groups of earnest Christians meeting quietly day by day for prayer in their own homes; the subduing, controlling power of the Spirit felt in all the meetings. Also some beautiful instances of kindly thought and consideration in connection with the Convention. One lady brought up her two maids, and paid all their expenses as a "reward for seven years' faithful service;" three other ladies in the South of England were unable to come as they had intended, but sent three substitutes. A young lady and some of her friends from a large manufacturing town took three houses, and arranged to board and lodge some thirty factory girls who had saved sufficient money during the year to enable them to spend a week at Keswick. Two ladies have rented twenty-one houses, provided board and residence for, and assisted in other ways, 170 to 200 returned missionaries to the heathen.

NOTES BY DR. NEWMAN HALL.

On this, our first day at Keswick Convention, July 25, a house party from divers places and of varying views on minor questions, are rejoicing in the fellowship of Christian love. Family worship is the sequel to breakfast, and then an interesting conversation on answered prayer. If all believers now living were to contribute records of remarkable answers to prayer in their own personal experience, we might almost employ the language of the evangelist—"The world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

A clergyman, in the service of the C.M.S., narrated how, in early life, he had relinquished a profitable situation to devote himself to evangelistic work. Responding to what he felt an inward call, he applied to the Church Missionary Society, and received an invitation to attend its committee, which was to meet three days after. This he wished to do, but was devoid of funds for a long journey. He earnestly prayed for guidance and assistance. When he rose from his knees a stranger called to see him, and put a sovereign into his hand, saying it was from the Lord. He met the committee, and was accepted as a missionary.

A lady knew a working-man, zealous as a local preacher, who was urged by friends to attend the Keswick Convention, but was unable to yield to his strong inclination by the necessities of wife and children during his absence. This lady heard of the case, and prayed God to send the needed supply. While praying she seemed to see two postal orders for £1 each. While the man in question was earnestly praying for Divine help, two Post Office orders for £1 arrived from an unknown donor. The lady knew nothing of this till after a considerable time, when she heard the recipient mention it as an instance of Divine care. No one could have heard about her prayer, for it was unspoken in words.

Another clergyman told how he had felt it his duty to protest publicly against an iniquity. Thus he encountered such enmity that he was obliged to resign his church. After paying off his debts he was almost a pauper. Without making any application for man's help, he received unexpectedly money to build both church and parsonage. Several other cases were narrated by the individuals themselves, who were convinced that help given was in direct answer to believing prayer.

Awful Unconsciousness.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

TWO passages of Scripture in contrast with one another—"Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone," Exod. xxxiv. 29; "He wist not that the Lord was departed from him," Judges xvi. 20. The same words, "he wist not," of two servants of God, and yet with what a different result. Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone; Samson wist not that the Lord was departed. One is an upward possibility: the other is a possibility that leads downward. One is a blessed unconsciousness, the other is an awful unconsciousness. Shall we look, very briefly, at both in marked contrast?

Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone. The cause of that shining of his face was fellowship with God. Moses had prayed, "Show me now thy way; show me thy glory;" and God had answered that prayer, had taken him up into the mount. In fellowship with God, speaking with God face to face, Moses came down, with this result—the skin of his face shone. St. Paul uses this very story, in 2 Cor. iii., about the open face beholding the glory of the Lord; and so we feel and realize that this, which was a blessed experience to Moses, is a possibility for every one of us, as we behold the face of God in Jesus Christ. If only our lives are lived in his fellowship, the result will be evident, first in our thoughts, then in our desires, and then in the very physical features of our life.

As thought and feeling affect our physical features so in the spiritual life, if our thoughts and our feelings are with God and in fellowship with Him, it will be literally true that the skin of our face will shine. We remember the story in the life of Mr. Pennefather, about the boy who ran home and said, "Mother, I have seen Mr. Pennefather." "What did he say?" "Nothing;

HE BEAMED ON ME."

He wist not that the skin of his face shone. This blessing which comes from fellowship with God, will be unmistakable to those around us. Aaron and those with him, they saw this and were afraid. If only our lives are lived in close communion with God, the result will be evident to others; but, at the same time, we ourselves shall not be conscious of it. Humility has been defined as unconscious self-forgetfulness; and perhaps we may define holiness as unconscious self-effacement. He wist not that his face shone. If you and I ever desire to see this for ourselves, and if ever we use the mirror or looking-glass to try to discover it, we shall find not by any means a shining face. Holiness is not the consciousness of self, but it is the consciousness of God.

To turn now—and that is my special subject—to the other text, with its record of a terrible unconsciousness, "Samson wist not that the Lord was departed from him." Will you just follow me with these three steps in the story of Samson? First, will you notice that, in his case, there was a gift bestowed? If you will look into the story of his life, in the two preceding chapters, you will find, at least three or four times, a reference to the Spirit of the Lord. First, the Spirit of the Lord began to move him, then the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, then the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him. There was bestowed upon Samson a gift, the Spirit of the Lord; and the gift was what you and I would call power, or equipment for service. It was a special gift of the Spirit of God, for the purpose of the work that God had appointed Samson, as one of the judges, to do.

We may say the same of every Christian man or woman. God is willing, God is waiting, to bestow the Spirit of the Lord as equipment for service. This is not the Spirit of the Lord in regeneration, this is not the Spirit of the Lord in instruction or guidance; this is the anointing of the Holy Ghost for the purpose of serving God. This is the Spirit on us, rather than the Spirit in us. This gift was from God, and was bestowed definitely upon Samson. The second step is that

THE GIFT WAS LOST.

It is evident that this endowment for service is not a permanent gift. There are certain conditions for its reception; there are certain conditions for its retention. God does not bestow upon us the gift now and allow it to remain with us for our use without the fulfilment of certain conditions. Samson failed to fulfil those conditions, and he lost the gift. He sinned, he lived in unfaithfulness to God, and the result was the loss of power for service. He became utterly useless. Instead of being on the Lord's side, for awhile at any rate, he seems to have been almost on the side of God's enemies. The gift was lost. I believe that is only too possible in the lives of Christian workers. This is no question of regeneration, no question of our not being Christians; but it is a question that means this: that one day, in the past, I had power and blessing in my life, and to-day I am powerless, because of my unfaithfulness, my disloyalty to God.

But now look at the third step. The gift bestowed, the gift lost, and, thirdly, the unconsciousness that this gift was lost. Samson was living on the past, and not in the present. He knew that, in the day past, the Spirit of God had been upon him and was working through him. He was thinking of that, and living upon that, at this particular time. He wist not that the Lord had departed. You and I have no right to live on past experiences; we have no right to live upon the manna even of yesterday; we have to remember the present.

Samson was indulging in sin, that was why he had lost the gift and was unconscious of his loss. Ah! beloved friends, though we are not to speak in detail this morning of Samson's story, we must not forget that the sensual and the spiritual are very closely connected, from certain standpoints. There are very many who drop from the spiritual into the sensual; and we are all horror-stricken when we hear of such a fall. But there is very much to explain it, if we only think along the lines of human nature, and the forms of human nature in relation to our attitude to others.

I want you to notice that Samson was not only living in the past and living in sin, but he was doing his work, and yet having no power in it. There are Christians to-day who are holding the same doctrines they held, it may be, ten years ago; but there is for them no vitality in those doctrines. They are using the same religious phraseology, but there is no force in it. There is a poor woman whose child is dead; and out of her sorrow, that heart-broken mother sends to the servant of God; and that servant sends one who was closely associated with himself, saying, "Go and lay my staff upon the child," and the man goes. He had been the prophet's servant for years, but had been living an unreal, unfaithful life. He goes and puts the staff upon the child, but there is no result. When the prophet comes, blessing comes, because Elisha was living in the power of God for his service. Let us examine ourselves this morning. "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Is my work powerless? Is my life powerless? Search me, my God.

LIVING WITHOUT POWER;

The conclusion of the whole matter is this: Be very much alone with God. In his light you will see light about yourselves. Some tell us, "For one look at self, take ten looks at Christ." I think we might do without even the one look at self, and have eleven looks at Christ. In his light we shall see what we are and where we are. In his grace is our strength; and in his presence we shrink, like the sensitive plant, from the faintest approach of evil. Secondly, be very faithful to God. Faithful loyalty to heavenly teaching is a sure precursor of heavenly grace. Contemplation, consecration, then faithfulness: and our lives will be lives of power and blessing.

Spiritual Emancipation.

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

"Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Rom. vi. 14). I remember one who had been staying, alas! with one of my people, saying that he had shortened his visit. "It is true," he said, "that there were all the observances; but what are family prayers where there are family jars?" I remember another, a poor clergyman's son, and afterwards a poor clergyman himself, who was so bitten with the love of extravagance, that I have known him shed tears in the morning when he had to pay for that which he had bought overnight. I remember a third, for whom the bells of prayer rang in vain, so devoted was he to getting the things of this world and delighting in them. I remember another who was always wishing for something that he had not got. It would be easy to add to the list, and to think of innumerable Christians, of comfortable Christians, of worldly Christians, of covetous Christians, of Christians who dabble with that which is false, of Christians who, at least in their reading, delight in that which is foul.

Now, beloved, we are here to say that these things ought not so to be. You may call them what you like; God calls them sin. You may make light of them if you will; God calls them sin. You may think of them and speak of them as though they were inevitable; God says that they are sin. You may say that your neighbour, your brother, your fellow-communicant, has his faults, and, of course, you have yours; God says these things are sin. You may go on and palliate them, you may persist and make excuses for them; but, all the while, you know in your heart that you are guilty of sin.

I was told only yesterday that Keswick was not the place to come to if you wanted to be happy; that Keswick was a place to make you very miserable indeed, if you had such a thing as a pet sin and wanted to keep it. Yes, but only fancy a Christian talking about wanting to keep any sin, wanting to keep anything which God has condemned! Only see what that is which you are wanting to keep, and which, perchance, makes you uneasy if you have come to Keswick, or, as in that case, keeps you from coming if it were possible; that which keeps some, at any rate, from coming, that they may not be searched, but that they may go on and on in the habit and in the commission of that which they know to be sin!

IN SIGHT OF THE CROSS

Now, this thing is either a matter for pity, or it is a matter for blame. Which is it? It is either something over which a few soft tears may be shed, and you may be comforted and sent on to the repetition of it; or it is something which costs not only tears, but blood—the blood of the Son of God. If so, it is at your peril that you keep it, and I charge you before God and the Lord Jesus Christ and the elect angels, though it were a right hand, cut it off and cast it from you. It is better for you that one of your members should perish than that your whole body, your whole life, should be cast into hell. It is an awful thing to have any known sin, and to make up our minds to keep it, or even to keep it without making up our minds to do so.

It may be, concerning many of these matters, that you will say what Lot said about Zoar, "Is it not a little one?" It is a very bad thing for any Christian to take up the words of Lot, as though they could be an example to him. You remember, even if you did so, that it was not a little one that was spared, but it was a little city—a very different thing. God will spare, can spare, no sin, whether it be little or whether it be great. You that fancy that these sins are little, and that they may be tolerated and persisted in, ask yourself how much good the people are doing who habitually go on in the commission even of what may be called little sins. Well, some good, possibly, may be done by their instrumentality—for God is gracious, and does consent sometimes to work with wonderfully blunt tools; but how much more would the greatest of these gainers gain if they gained their whole souls first—if they were saved to the uttermost, saved wholly, saved especially from the sin that doth so easily beset them!

Why, how often do you suppose that a wife who is wins to Christ a worldly husband? How often do you think that a husband who is fond of prayer-meetings, but also fond of money, wins to Christ a worldly wife? How often do you think a friend who loves meetings and conventions, but who loves the world too, who has a great deal of personal vanity, perhaps—how often do you suppose that such a one wins a soul to Christ? Even the world cries shame upon Christians when they are inconsistent. Even the world finds fault with Christians, and says in effect, "I would have a better Christianity than that, or I would have none of it." "Well," you say, "it is rather hard to be attacked by the world, when it is keeping away from Christ and is keeping close to a whole bundle of sins." It may be hard, but facts are hard things; and this is the fact, and you will have to reckon with it and to deal with it.

PIOUS, BUT PEEVISH,

But methinks I hear most of you say, "It is not the world that we care for, nor for its frown; it is not even the Church that I care for, nor its tears; it is my Lord that I care for, and what troubles me every day, and humbles me every day is that these things are in my heart and in my life, and I do not know how to get rid of them. They are just here; and here, it seems, they have come to stay."

Now, I have another word. I said that these things ought not so to be; my other word is this—these things need not so to be, for "ye are not under the law but under grace." Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; don't you think that that grace is sufficient for you? Ye know the grace of the Father; and don't you think that the Father will care for his child enough to keep off that child's enemies? Ye know the grace of the other Comforter; and would He be a Comforter indeed if He were to allow you to dally with sin? But there is grace enough; and, remember, it is free, it would not be grace if it were not free. It is as free as the stream from Calvary, it is as free as the pardon through the precious blood—this grace that saves, this grace that keeps, this grace that helps in every time of need. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is exceedingly abundant, and it as free as it is abundant. It may be had for the asking—grace for every hour, for every need, for every trial, for every duty, for every temptation. Ye live under it, under the banner of grace; and therefore sin shall not have dominion over you. Now, what does that mean?

A certain commentator troubled me for years. He said that it meant sin shall not accuse you, shall not condemn you, shall not arraign you before the bar of justice. Is that what it means? There came to me, like a flash, a week ago, an answer to that commentator, from the ninth verse of this chapter. I had often read it, but had never seen this in it. Compare it with the assertion of the commentator,

PUT THE TWO THINGS TOGETHER.

"Death hath no more dominion over Him;" "Sin shall not have dominion over you." It was this that flashed upon me; that it must be in the same sense that sin shall not have dominion over me, as that death should not have dominion over Christ. In Christ's case the power of death was broken; in my case, it is promised that the power of sin shall be broken, too.

Does it mean that, if I have a bad temper, it shall not get the better of me? Brother, it does. Does it mean that, if I have a vile passion, it shall not get the victory over me?

Brother, it does. Thy sin, whatever it is, is vanquished before the power of Christ; its power is broken. As Romaine said more than a hundred years ago, "Lord, Thou has declared that sin shall not have the dominion over me. I believe that this word cannot be broken; and, therefore, helpless in myself, I rely upon thy faithfulness to deliver me from the dominion of such and such a sin. Name it," he says. "Name your besetment, and say, when you have trusted it to be dealt with by your Lord, 'Put forth thy power, O Lord Christ, and get to Thyself glory in subduing my flesh.' Say this, pray this; trust Him to make his word good, and do you await the event. Sooner shall heaven and earth pass away than that any sin, thus left with Christ to be subdued, shall reign over thee."

Remember, there is no promise that sin shall be removed from you. The chapter goes on to speak, not of eradication, but of emancipation; but, while you remember that, take care that you get emancipation. Never shall I forget how, at the first of these conventions, a man stood up and confessed that he had a tiger-like temper which had humbled him before his household. "I trust God about it," he said; and never shall I forget the testimony subsequently heard at Keswick, from one upon this platform, that the man was changed into the meekest and gentlest of men. Trust God, take Him at his word, commit the keeping of your soul to Him; and sin, even though it be sin, shall not have dominion over you.

Working the Works of God.

By Dr. ELDER CUMMING.

"Then said they unto Him, what shall we do that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent" (John vi. 28, 29).

If there are works that the Lord would have us do, we may well take up the question of these Galileans and say, What shall we do that we might work the works of God? The strange answer, which at first so few can understand, the simple answer which a child may take into his heart, the satisfying answer which the experience of the Christian will verify, is, that in order to work the works of God, one thing is needful, one thing is sufficient—believe on Him. It is trusting that is the secret both of being and of doing in the Christian life.

The Christian who has come to know anything of God, and of God's will, has two great objects in view, which he seeks continually to have from God. He is dissatisfied with what he is, and dissatisfied with what he does; and if he is wise, the two things which he seeks from God are these—a new character which has already begun in him from the moment that he came to God; and a new work, which must be the outcome of the new character when it is obtained. I take up these two points to-night.

A NEW CHARACTER, A NEW WORK:

I. The Christian who has come to know something of the will of God seeks for himself a new character. In other words, he seeks for holiness; because he is satisfied that the state in which he is, is not that which God can call a holy character, a holy life. The answer that Christ gives to the man who asks how he may obtain holiness and a new character is this—that ye believe on Him. Trusting in Christ is the way to holiness.

But you must have begun before you can continue; and here I take the opportunity of putting a personal question to everyone here. Do you know, in your inmost heart, what it is to be born again? I put the question more especially for this reason, that there are hundreds, that there are thousands, of pulpits in our land, in England, in Scotland, in Ireland, where the doctrine of regeneration, the need of being born again, is not distinctly taught to the people. Hence there come up so many hundreds to convention after convention with the haziest idea as to what they are in the sight of God.

I think I cannot soon forget a sight I saw within this tent, when Mr. Moody took one of his meetings here, when he asked those to stand who knew they were born again. We were taken aback, we were all startled to find not a few keeping their seats; and afterwards, in the after-meeting, as one went from seat to seat, there were many who confessed that they knew they were not born again. And, therefore, I lift my testimony to-night that we, each man and woman, must know what the new birth is, before holiness can be sought.

It is in vain to seek to make the natural man a holy man. "Except a man be born again, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God." But those whose hearts now say to them, "I am not," or even, "I fear I am not, born again," let such bow their heads one single but sacred moment, and put themselves into the hand of Jesus Christ crucified, that He may receive and forgive and accept their sinful and perishing souls.

THE FIRST STEP

in the Christian life is trust. What must I do to be saved? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

After regeneration, the new birth, there begins the process of sanctification. The new birth is wholly from God, and sanctification is wholly from God. Justification is an act of God's free grace; sanctification is a work of God's Spirit. But as justification is from God, sanctification is from God, too. Faith is the instrument of justification; faith is the instrument of sanctification. We can no more sanctify the soul that has been born again than we can make the natural soul to be born again; it is not in man's power, nor is it in the power of man and God together. It is God that justifies, it is God that sanctifies, and the process is through faith.

You can get nothing in your sanctification except from God; you can get nothing from God, except as a free gift; you cannot get any free gift from God till you receive it; and you cannot receive any gift from God save by trust. We speak of faith and trust; they are no doubt different aspects of the same thing. But they are translations of the same Greek word; and, whereas faith may sometimes be understood to be just an intellectual act, trust always implies the moral element. Therefore I prefer, to-night, that I may not be misunderstood by anyone, to use the word trust. I repeat it, you can get no step in sanctification save as a gift from God; you can get no gift from God save by receiving it, and you receive every gift of God by faith. Therefore the process of sanctification is from faith to faith. Let us understand that of its own, except a negative one. It has this negative merit, that it takes away all self-trust. It invites and it welcomes the power of God in our sanctification. What is it that you desire? To have some sin eliminated, the power of which you know, to your cost, in the past, with which you have honestly struggled, against which you have really prayed. But you find you are helpless, or all but helpless, in its power. How is that sin to be cast out and that evil habit destroyed? The answer is, Only by the power of God in your life. And how shall that power of God be permitted, so to speak, to work in your heart to cast out the habit of sin? By your accepting the power.

FAITH HAS NO MERIT

You and I have the awful power in our hands of frustrating the grace of God by standing in the way, and saying, "I will not accept this wonderful gift, either because I do not understand it, or I am afraid of it, or it would take away from me something which is too precious." We have the power of in the work of sanctification at every step. Every gift and blessing in sanctification, the blessing of every moment, for every thought, for every deliverance, is through trust in God for that individual thing. The casting out of the power of sin comes from trusting God to cast it out. Or perhaps it is something positive that you desire. You desire to have love of Christ. Oh, most of us, I think, must be able to look back to some time when our hearts yearned within us to be able to say that we were filled consciously with the sweetness of the love of Christ; that we knew it, the taste of it, the delight of it. Such a desire often comes, surely, to a Christian man. It will be fulfilled in your experience and in mine, only in one way. Can we trust God definitely to give us that love, and then the sense of that love thereafter?

SAYING "NO" TO GOD

No gift without the trust that brings it, so we go on from step to step. Our holiness, our sanctification, becomes progressive, because we have to trust God for every new thing. We cannot take one step in advance except by trusting God. And that is not all. We cannot retain any past blessing, we cannot avoid the going back—we could not even stand still, if that were what was wanted—without trusting God. Cease your trust in Him for a moment, and it is like the drowning man letting go his grip of that which would hold him up. It is like the man in contact with the electrical machine letting go his touch, and all the power is gone. Let go for a moment, and in that moment you lose; touch, touch for something, touch and trust, and the blessing comes. It may not be always the exact form of blessing that you have expected, but it is the substance of the blessing; and, if you will believe it, it is something better than you asked, better than the form in which you put it.

TRUST, TRUST, TRUST—

it is the secret of obtaining a new character. God is never tired of your trusting Him. God will always come in answer to trust. What must I do that I may work the works of God, by my heart becoming like the heart and the spirit of Jesus my Master? What must I do? I must believe on Him, who hath come to save and deliver. And if there is anything in your character that you would have cast out as shameful, take it in confession to the feet of Christ, as you sit here to-night; for what need is there of delay? Take your weakness, take your sin, take your shame, lay it with confession at the Master's feet; and then, with uplifted eye and heart, let Him hear the cry that man heareth not, "Master, Master, touch and save!" A new character comes through trust.

II. But what shall we say of a new work? Why a new work? Because all Christian work is to be judged by its spirit, by its motive. Nothing could be more different than the same apparent outward action by two men, one doing it in the power of self, the other doing it in the power of Christ. You look at the actions, and think they are altogether the same. You hear two sermons: they give the same doctrine, they direct to the same ends, they are equally practical; and the one may even be more attractive and much more beautiful than the other. You think them the same. Oh, to from the feet of Christ in glory! What do I find? That, in the one, Christ has been ignored, is not there, never was asked about it, never gave it or anything like it. And the other was Christ's gift and Christ's voice; I might almost say Christ Himself was there in that new work dependent on the Spirit of work.

LOOK AT THEM FROM ON HIGH,

As soon as a Christian gives himself up for the first time in surrender and faith to Christ, what is it he sees? That all the work he has been doing before is, just in itself, as bad as he himself has been, now that he understands what he is. Is it not true, Christian friends—I bring the charge, and I ask whether you are guilty or not—is it not true that you will visit a sick bed and pray by a dying man, and that the only prayer you offer is the prayer that is at the moment audible? You have not gone to Christ before to teach you to pray in such circumstances, and you may go away and never seek Him to hear and fulfil the prayer.

You bring yourself to do a hard and difficult duty. Did you consult the Master about it? You were asked a question—we must come to closer quarters—"What do you think of So-and-so?" Do you dare to answer that question without first asking of Christ what you are to say? If the Lord were to come in judgment upon the works of the Christian people—on the works of you, this great multitude here to-night—were the Lord to come in judgment, and were we permitted to be auditors and spectators of the awful scene!

Think of your actions, your Christian works, one by one brought up and judged. What would be the test? Is Christ in that? If not, the work would wither, as by the blast of fire, and be destroyed.

Now, when a man gives himself up to God fully, what is the result as to work? First of all, it is whether in the old sphere or in the new. As soon as he is in the hand of God utterly, God gives him special work. And it is a work that will have these two objects always: first, God; second, self. These are tests by which you may say whether it is God-found work.

GOD-FOUND WORK,

Secondly, when a man gives himself up fully to God for the first time, his work becomes God-guided work. No more choice as to what you like to do, and what you do not like to do. And I think you will bear me out, many of you, in saying that the work to which you are guided is often most singular work, for which you did not think yourself the least fitted, which you would never think of offering yourself to; and that when it comes to you, you tremble and say, "I am not fit for work of that kind." But the Lord is guiding, and you have promised to obey and to follow whithersoever He shall lead you. It is God-guided work.

Then shall we not say, again, that one peculiarity of the work of the consecrated man is that God speaks to him? Do you know what that means? When persons have come to you from time to time and have spoken about that, you have said, "Well, now, there is something which I cannot understand. How am I to know that God is speaking to me?" I cannot make you know; nobody can make you know. Can you tell me how it is that the little baby that you are holding in your arms knows its mother's voice, that it is different from any other in the world that speaks to it? Can you tell me how it is that, in the darkest night, a friend comes near, hears a voice, and knows at once whose it is? So is there the power of recognising a Divine voice, "My sheep know my voice." I believe every consecrated man or woman, everyone who has God-found and has come to know the voice of God. It comes quite suddenly; it comes almost like a flash; it comes, almost always, quite unexpectedly; and it comes, perhaps, in a way that seems to threaten the overturning of something that you have just been beginning. You say at once, "I know that voice." Oh, how blessed to know the voice of God, the secret of that close communion that dwells somewhere in the innermost parts of our being which no one else can ever reach or touch! The voice of God is always in the work of the God-guided man.

GOD-GUIDED WORK,

Do you want to know what kind of work you are doing? You must not only ask God about it, but you must trust from time to time, trust in the whole sphere of duty, trust in every little detail. The smaller the work, surely the easier to trust. Say you are to sweep the room; Christ will enable you to do it better than you ever did before. You are to minister to a sick-bed; your own voice is harsh; your manners are abrupt, and your nervousness is painful. Can you not trust Christ to give the soft voice and the calm hand, and the gentle spirit, that will make even the bitter medicine sweet because it comes from the wise nurse? Whatever the detail of your life, trust. Therefore, it becomes a life of trust, and it becomes a momentary life; it is from moment to moment.

In our walking

WE TAKE VERY SHORT STEPS,

and the weak ones take shorter steps than the strong ones; but the short steps of the Christian are all steps of trust. "The life which I now live in the flesh," said the great Apostle, "I live by faith in the Son of God," and so I do not frustrate the grace of God. If righteousness came by the law, then Christ had died in vain; but if righteousness comes by faith, then Christ has not died in vain for me. I have put my whole life into his hand. I put my heart and my character into his hand. I am trusting Him to make me holy.

Do you ask, as some are never tired of doing, How far can holiness go? How near to being sinless can a man be upon earth? Well, that is a very speculative question; but my answer would be, he can go a good deal further towards it than you are likely to go! I do not think you need be afraid of going too far in that direction. When you have become, as you think, very good indeed, some day God will show you what He is thinking of you, and you will come to open your eyes and say, "Oh, I never thought I was like that!" Meantime, I would say to you, Do not concern yourself so much about the general and speculative question, but seek from God holiness always; trust Him every moment, for every duty, for every trial.

I would go further. Trust Him, if you can, for every thought. We have in Scotland, where the idea of perfectionism is abhorrent to the whole community, a remarkable paraphrase which I never give out and never sing without many an inward trembling. It prays "that all we think, and all we do, be pleasing in thine eyes." All we think—it is an awful word! I do not suppose anybody ever received all that, or ever had a blessing such as that. But my answer I fall back upon—Don't you be afraid that you will ever come to be too holy. God will give you, as you get better, a wonderful power of seeing where you thought there was only light. I venture to say that one of the characteristics of the deepest holiness is a remarkable and ever-increasing humility and brokenness of heart, when we think first of ourselves and then look at Christ.

THE SPECKS IN THE SUNBEAM

Trust, trust, trust—it is the threefold lesson of the Christian life. Trust, that He may make you better; trust, that He may give you a new work as well as a new character. You will find that the life of the Christian, at its best, is a life of faith; and when you go to ask the Lord, "What must I do that I may work the works of God?" He will say to you, as He says in my text, "The work of God is that you believe on Jesus Christ for all you need." Trust Him, and He will come and do what you need.

The Keswick Mission.

On Wednesday afternoon the meeting in the tent was devoted to accounts of progress and needs in connection with the Keswick Mission, and the general interest therein was evidenced by quite as full an attendance as at the ordinary gatherings of the Convention. Prayer was offered, and praise for God's use of his consecrated instruments in foreign lands, and very affectionately were the workers commended to the care of their Lord. At Mr. Wilson's request, General Hatt Noble conducted the meeting.

Rev. J. Harford-Battersby read the report of the Keswick Missionary Council, from which the following extracts are taken:—

"A year ago we bade solemn and loving farewell to our brother, Rev. Charles Inwood, then about to start with his wife for China, and commended them to the care of our Covenant-keeping God. To-day we are looking forward to seeing them back in our midst, and thank God that He has graciously watched over his servants during perils by land and by water, and has mightily blessed the witness borne in far-off China to his power to save from sin. Mr. Inwood has held conventions in important centres on or near the sea-coast, and at Chungking, which is far in the interior, and involved two months' continuous travelling on the dangerous waters of the Yang-tze River.

"The visit of Rev. F. B. Meyer to India was for a much shorter period; but it, too, has been attended by marked spiritual results. Mr. Meyer visited some of the principal centres in India, Burmah, and Ceylon, under the auspices of the Student Volunteer Movement of India and Ceylon, and everywhere found a readiness to drink in

THE GLAD TIDINGS OF FULL SALVATION.

The Council was very glad to give a grant towards the expenses of this Mission. The Council has received communications from India, the most recent being a weighty memorial from representative missionaries in and around Allahabad, which seem to indicate decisively that it is God's will that we should send as strong a deputation of speakers as possible to hold conventions in India during the cold season of 1900-1901. Negotiations are already on foot with this object in view. The Council earnestly pleads for co-operation by prayer on the part of all.

"Rev. J. Gelson Gregson has had much encouragement in his work among the Reformed Syrian Churches in Travancore. The three years for which he went to work amongst them will soon be at an end, and the grant in aid, which was voted when Mr. Gregson went out, on the understanding that his work would be on Convention lines, will naturally end at the same time. Most interesting and important conventions have been held at Blankenberg, Stockholm, and Berlin, in which Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Mr. W. Sloan, Rev. C. G. Moore, and Rev. E. L. Hamilton took part. The Council hope to take advantage in the coming year of the numerous openings for such work upon the continent of Europe. While these special missions have been in operation in China, India, and on the Continent, the direct work among the heathen has been quietly carried on by our own missionaries who have been working abroad in connection with and organizations. It seems to be of God that as the special mission work has grown in importance, the missionary staff of workers among the heathen has grown less."

VARIOUS MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

The statement of accounts was read by Mr. Albert A. Head, who also conveyed greetings from Rev. Chas. Inwood, in a letter recounting his work up to the time of leaving China. Unity among missionaries in Shanghai had produced a profound impression upon the Chinese. The way in which the people had been reached was very striking. Mr. Inwood's work in Shanghai and Ningpo had been a distinct answer to prayer offered on his behalf.

General Hatt Noble explained that the promoters of the Mission were depending principally upon this meeting for funds from "the Lord's money" to carry on the work.

During the singing of a hymn, envelopes and forms for contributions were passed round; but before the collection, Rev. F. B. Meyer asked God's guidance for himself and his hearers, in regard to words spoken and listened to, and then proceeded to some account of his experiences in India. When he reached India, he had no doubt that promises concerning prayer were being kept. Great gatherings of native people and missionaries were seen, men coming long distances to the blessed meetings. The climate and the unclouded sun, beautiful skies, clear nights, and scenes of historic interest—these things were only eclipsed by coming into personal contact with heathenism and seeing its debasing effects amid splendid architecture and other magnificent surroundings. Society all around was regarding as religious rites things which we hide in the darkness. The first chapter of Romans could be read in the life of any of the great cities of the country. One met with and heard of many who were groping after God. Inquiry discovered cases of this kind through almost every one who was spoken with. Never was he so enthusiastic for the missionary cause as while to-day he looked back upon the immense need of India and the heathen world. In regard to his special work, it had discovered the need of more intense

SYMPATHY WITH MISSIONARIES.

He realized more and more how great their sacrifices had been. Isolation and the pressure of evil must be exceedingly trying to them. It seems as though one is making his way amid the pressure of evil spirits. The depression that comes to young ardent hearts cannot be exaggerated. Oh, for draughts of crystal water to refresh God's tired servants! At every great centre missionaries are eager to greet Christian new comers. Said one: "Mr. Meyer, you need not apologize for Keswick; for we all believe it." If he kept to himself the fact of connection with Keswick, he lost influence and power, and meetings in his own name were much smaller. Missionaries in the foreign field hail the Keswick teaching as a great assistance. Our meetings were attended by great numbers of educated English-speaking natives. At Tinnevelly he conducted a week's mission in the C.M.S. Church among 400 catechists and clergymen, who were found willing to help; and this was indeed a great manifestation of catholicity. He had breakfast with the C.M.S., and supper with the S.P.G., so to speak. Pressure from without drives Christian workers together in the foreign field. The natives at Tinnevelly said it was a new phase to discover that Christianity dealt with the inner life, and was cognate to their own subjective religiousness. "I never knew before," said one, "that Christ deals with the self-life." These men are many of them groping after deliverance from impurity; and Christian doctrine is the very bread for which they are hungering. We are, said Mr. Meyer, giving a side of truth which the native mind appreciates better than do the English. Some of the natives said that Mr. Meyer was within one birth of being a Mahatma. That showed there was something cognate in the power of Christ to subdue the self-life with their own convictions. Mr. Meyer asked that in starting to-morrow for Northfield, and afterwards for Blankenberg, prayer be made for him that his life might be deepened and broadened of God.

General Hatt Noble asked Mr. Meyer and Rev. S. A. Selwyn to convey to Mr. Moody the "Keswick Christian love."

Mr. Robert Wilson said his adopted daughter, who is with Mr. and Mrs. Walker in the heathen mission field, had a warm place in her heart for Keswick, and desired to be remembered in prayer by friends there.

Miss Brook, from North China, thanked God for ever taking her to the province of Ho-nan. In each of the six stations there, God had blessed and saved souls. Concerning two of the cities opened to work in 1895 by Dr. Taylor, suffering had brought the workers into close sympathy with the natives. In one city thirty-one men and four women had professed faith in Christ, and are in much need of prayer on account of trial by famine. The work goes on in spite of difficulties. In another city, twenty-five women openly professed their faith in Jesus. Some of them believed the very first time they heard the Gospel, and most of them have SUFFERED TERRIBLE PERSECUTION.

Devils were cast out, sickness was healed, and souls were saved through the testimony of one native woman. Difficulties can only be met by the power of God's Spirit; hence the need for prayer. Great powers lie hidden in the enormous empire, and call for men of God to lead the natives into the Divine life.

Mrs. Butcher (better known under her former name of Miss Jacob) went into the mission field of India four years ago. She now, in person, thanked friends for their prayers. One of these daily remembrances was met with in Bombay. None can know what a help prayer is to missionaries amid the privations and trials of their work. Illness seemed to indicate that God might use her lips to draw others out if she came home. Miss Tucker (A.L.O.E.) was over fifty when she went out, but Mrs. Butcher testified that she had greatly opened the Zenanas to Christian influence. It was a cure for homesickness to talk with the native women in those places. Her message to sisters going out for the first time was, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the children of God; for such we are," and such a memory as that will be of great use in overcoming difficulties.

Miss Fugill, who had carried on difficult work alone in Japan, spoke of work among the women and children of 12,000 inhabitants in a certain seaport. It was sad to think of a great province of 316,000 souls without a single worker for Christ. Most of us love to carry out loved one's last requests. Are we doing so with regard to our Lord's great commission? The spirit of hearing is so eager that men were found in meetings intended for women only. Miss Fugill trusted that God would give her "a twin sister" from the present meeting.

Mr. Walter Sloan, who had been in Sweden and Germany, spoke of the quickening influences of God's Spirit as seen on the Continent, and the signs of warm brotherhood experienced among Christian people there. Conversions had been abundant during the conference week at Blankenberg; and prayer should be made that it may become a centre of great blessing to Germany. It is delightful to see how God is raising up holy men to carry on his work in Sweden.

In view of the numerous applications for Keswick deputations for the continent, General Hatt Noble pointed out that men as well as money are needed.

THE CLOSING WORDS of the afternoon came from the Bishop of Sierra Leone, who said workers were too busy to be depressed on the West Coast of Africa; but the indifference of Christians in England to the claims of God—this, it is, that depresses. There are here so many children of God disobedient as to missions that they quarrel among themselves. "They have no wine" on that coast; who will be God's cup-bearers to make human lives glad? We need, said he, collections of men more than of means; and we come to tell of the needs of the African field in order that Christians at home may give an answer to their Lord concerning it. May very many from among those gathered at Keswick this week, give themselves to God for this work among the heathen!

A REMARKABLE SCENE

A very remarkable scene took place at the smallest of the three meetings on Friday night. We heard it spoken of by various persons on the same evening, and all seemed to have been overwhelmed by it. A friend writes thus concerning it:—

"I wish I could tell you the blessing we got at the Drill Hall on Friday night. The Rev. H. B. Macartney spoke on two or three verses in John i. But the Lord poured out such a blessing. He opened heaven; He showed us the glory; He showed us Himself. He seemed to come down on to the platform to show us his unveiled face. He came into our hearts. He filled us with such love to Himself, that we still feel the blessed awe of his presence, and are still breathing 'Holy, Holy, Holy.' Never in my long life have I been present at a meeting anything at all like it. Mrs. Henry Varley was with me. There were only about 100 present, but the testimony of the wonderful blessing had spread all over Keswick in an hour. It was the top stone of the Convention, the kernel of all the blessing, for it was Jesus Himself.

"Mr. Macartney did not preach, he did not teach doctrine, he did not expound Scripture; but he was so filled with the Spirit that he seemed to be out of himself. We apprehended nothing but Jesus as God. The words he actually said were so simple that, written down, they might not look much. They were certainly very unconventional. But the Spirit of God, beaming out of his servant, seemed to envelop us all—lifted us out of ourselves—to take us into the glory to see Jesus.

"When he first knelt down to pray, he said, 'Lord Jesus, I thank Thee Thou art going to give us all A GREAT SURPRISE,' and so He did."

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

CARDIFF Y.M.C.A. orchestra won first prize for amateur bands in the Welsh National Eisteddfod.

A large number of young men, representing associations in the south-west suburban district, met for a garden party, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. B. Braithwaite, at "Hookfield," Epsom, on the 22nd inst. Mr. Braithwaite presided over an open-air meeting in aid of the National Council's foreign work, and himself led the contributions with a generous donation.

For the Universal Week of Prayer for Young Men, which will be observed from November 12 to 19 next, the Central International Committee at Geneva have prepared an appropriate series of Biblical topics, entitled "Our Service."

The Wakefield Y.M.C.A. has benefited to the extent of over £100 by a garden party and bazaar recently held in the grounds of Holmfield, the residence of Mr. Alfred Haley, the president of the branch. Amongst those who took part in the proceedings were Lord and Lady Milton and Archdeacon Donne. About six hundred visitors attended the function, for which, in the evening, the grounds were prettily illuminated.

Young Women at Northfield.

THE World's Students' Conference hardly adjourns at Northfield before the Young Women's Conference begins. The ever-increasing crowd of young people, eager for definite and consecutive teaching, tends to make these gatherings of the utmost importance, and year by year the programme becomes more strong and useful. Many of the students at the Northfield Seminary remain for these meetings, and form the nucleus of a useful convention. Added to these are delegates from many other schools and colleges making in all a most interesting company.

The Conference began on July 14, and continued until the 24th. The speakers included Mr. Moody, Mr. Speer, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, Dr. W. W. White, Mr. Torrey, Mrs. A. J. Gordon and Miss Price. Bible classes and conferences were conducted by Miss Laura Wild, Miss Mary Babcock, Miss Condé, Miss Allen and Miss Taylor. An impromptu choir, under the direction of Mr. George C. Stebbins, led the singing and contributed to the interest of the meetings.

Dr. Cuthbert Hall delivered a series of three addresses on "The Quadrilateral of Spiritual Unity in the name of Christ." Ecclesiastical unity on any basis he regarded as very remote and problematical, but Spiritual unity, in and through Jesus Christ, he claimed to be the great message of the New Testament. Three fundamental propositions underlay this statement of Spiritual unity. (1) Unity is the note of God's perfection and of man's completeness; (2) Sin is the interruption of unity, and the incoherence of life; (3) Christ is God's self-revelation for unity. Having elaborated these thoughts in his first address, the other two were given to a discussion of the quadrilateral itself; first, union through Christ, urging the vital importance of the atonement; second, union with Christ, the essence of spiritual experience; third, union in Christ, the basis of enduring fellowship, and fourth, union for Christ, the platform of statesmanship in Christian service.

Mr. Robert Speer delivered morning lectures on the Gospel of St. John. "Christ's proclamation; its reception; victory and defeat of unbelief," were, he said, the three great points of this Gospel. Mr. Torrey spoke on "The endurance of Christ's Word, showing that in spite of criticism and attack, Christ's assertion, "My word shall not pass away," had been proved absolutely true.

Mr. Moody as usual directed all the meetings, and gave occasional addresses. On Sunday evening he gave an exposition of Psalm xci. He said God had made seven promises in that psalm. First, "I will deliver;" second, "I will answer his call;" third, "I will be with him in time of trouble;" fourth, "I will honour you;" fifth, "I will satisfy you with long life;" sixth, "I will set him on high;" seventh, "I will show him my salvation." Each promise was suggestively dealt with, while the people sat around on the grassy slopes of the Round Top, where the service was held. The Young Women's Conference closed on July 24, and the Christian Workers' Conference, at which Revs. F. B. Meyer, G. Campbell Morgan, and S. A. Selwyn will speak, was announced to open on Tuesday last, August 1.

World-wide Circle of Prayer.—Rev. J. O. West, of Rowington Vicarage, Warwick, writes:—"May I ask your readers who are connected with unions for prayer to join us, especially on the first day of the month, in praying for all Christians and all Christian work, that there may be a fuller manifestation of the Holy Spirit's presence and power? Should there be any other comprehensive circle definitely uniting on one common platform, all believers as one in our Lord Jesus Christ for this object, I should be grateful for the information. The invitation thus to unite is now given by several hundred ministers of Christ of nearly every denomination. Will friends who issue cycles of prayer, whether weekly or monthly, endeavour to co-operate with us in waiting upon God as 'all one in Christ Jesus' on the first day of each month? Union is strength. To welcome new members is a constant pleasure; but this is secondary to securing definite, united, and believing prayer."

1091

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Jack's Fidelity.

By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

THE following story was told in a meeting of coloured preachers in New England.

It was in the days of Southern slavery, when Willie, the master's son, brought home a spelling book. A little slave boy, Jack, asked:

"What's dat, Willie?" "A spelling-book, Jack?'

"What's de spellin' book for?"

"To learn how to read."

"How's you do it?" "We learn those things first."

And so Jack learned A B C, &c., mastered the spelling-book, and then learned to read a little, though the law forbade any coloured person to do it.

One day Willie brought home a little black book, and Jack said: "What's dat, Willie?"

"That is the New Testament, that tells about Jesus."

And ere long, Jack learned to read the New Testament, and when he read that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life," and that He really loved us and died for us, and that "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," his heart went out in love for Jesus. He believed in Him, his sins were forgiven, his heart changed, and he became a happy Christian.

Though a mere child, he at once began to tell others of Jesus' love. When he became a young man, he was still at work for the Lord. He used to go to the neighbouring plantation, read his Bible, and explain it to the people.

One day the master said to him, "Jack, I hear you go off preaching on Sunday."

"Yes, mas'r, I must tell sinners how Jesus died on de cross for dem."

"Jack, if you go off preaching on Sunday, I'll tell you what I'll do on Monday. I'll tie you to that tree, take this whip, and flog all this religion out of you."

Jack knew his master was a determined man, but when he thought of Christ's sufferings for us, and heard his Lord saying unto him, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," he resolved to continue his work for the Lord the next Sunday.

With his New Testament in hand, he went down to the plantation and told them his master might whip him half to death the next day; but if he did he would not suffer more than Christ had suffered for us.

The next morning his master said, "Jack, I hear you were preaching again yesterday."

"Yes, mas'r, I must go and tell sinners how Jesus was whipped that we might go free."

"But, Jack, I told you if you went off preaching, Sunday, I should whip you on Monday, and now I will do it."

Blow after blow fell upon Jack's back, while oaths fell from the master's lips, and he said, "There, Jack, I don't believe you will preach next Sunday. Now go down to the cotton field and get to work."

When the next Sunday came, Jack could not stand straight, his back was so

COVERED WITH SCARS AND SORES.

But with his Testament in hand, he stood before the people of the plantation and said, "Mas'r whip me most ter death last Monday, an' I don' know but he will kill me to-morrow, but if he does I shall not suffer more than Jesus did, when He died on the cross for us."

Monday morning the master called him and said, "Jack, I hear you have been preaching again. Now bare your back and take the flogging I told you I should give you if you went off preaching."

Fast flew the cruel lashes until Jack's back was covered with wounds and blood.

"Now, Jack, go down to the cotton fields and go to work. I reckon you'll never want to preach again."

When the next Sunday came, Jack's back was in a terrible condition. But, hobbling along, he found his way to his friends in the neighbouring plantation, and said,

"Mas'r whipped me almost to death last Monday, but if I can only get you to come to Jesus and love Him, I am willing to die for your sake to-morrow."

If there were scoffers there, do you not think they were led to believe there was a reality in religion? If any were there who were inclined to think that ministers preach only when they get money for it, don't you think they changed their minds when they saw what wages Jack got?

Many were in tears, and no doubt some gave themselves to that Saviour, for whose sake Jack was willing, if need be, to die the death of a martyr.

Next morning the master called Jack and said, "I make bare your back again, for I told you that just as sure as you went off preaching I would whip you till you gave it up."

The master raised the ugly whip, and as he looked at Jack's back all lacerated, he could find no new place to strike, and said, "What do you do it for, Jack? You know that as surely as you go off preaching on Sunday I will whip you most to death the next day. No one pays you anything for it. All you get is a terrible flogging, which is taking your life away from you."

"Mer ax me, mas'r, what I'se doin' it for. I'll tell yer, mas'r. I'se goin' ter tak all dos stripes an' all dos scars, mas'r, up to Jesus bye-an'-bye, to show him how faithful I'se been, 'cause He loved you an' me, mas'r, an' bled an' died on the cross for you an' me, mas'r."

The whip dropped, and that master could not strike another blow. In a subdued tone he said, "Go down in the cotton fields."

About three o'clock a measenger came down to the cotton field, crying, "Mas'r's dyin'! Masr's dyin'! Come quick, Jack, mas'r's dyin'!"

There in his private room, Jack found his master on the floor in agony, crying, "Oh, Jack, I'm sinking down to hell! Pray for me! Pray for me!"

"I'se been praying for you all de time, mas'r. You mus' pray for yourse'f."

"I don't know how to pray, Jack. I know how to swear, but I don't know how to pray."

"You mus' pray, mas'r."

And finally they both prayed and God revealed Christ on the cross to him, and then and there he became a changed man.

A few days after, he called Jack to him and said, "Jack, here are your freedom papers. They give you your liberty. Go and preach the Gospel wherever you will, and may the Lord's blessing go with you."

While telling this story at the convention, I noticed a man, perhaps sixty years of age, with quite gray hair, who was deeply moved. When I had finished he sprang to his feet and, with a clear but tremulous voice, said, "I stand for Jack. Mr. Hammond has being speaking of me. He has been trying to tell of my sufferings, but he cannot describe the terrible agony I endured at the hands of my master, who, because I was determined to preach the gospel on the plantations around us, every Monday morning for three weeks called me up and laid the cruel lash upon my back with his own hands until my back was like raw beef. But God helped me to pray for him, until he was forgiven and saved through Christ. And, thank God, Jack still lives."

I have given you only a few of his burning words, but I can tell you there were many eyes filled with tears during this touching scene, which will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 187).

Briefly describe the circumstances connected with the following trees:—Fig (Matt. xxi. and John i). A tree in a garden (Gen. iii.). Oak (2 Sam. xviii. and Judg. vi.). Trees in 2 Chron. ii. Sycomore (Luke xix.). Olive (Gen. viii.). A tree in Dan. iv. One in Gen. xviii. Mulberry (2 Sam. v.) Gopher wood (Gen. vi.).

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen any six; under seventeen any nine; older ones do all.*)

* One of my nieces who has done the "Searchers" every week since February, 1896, and who is now too old to compete for the quarterly prizes, suggests that I should add extra questions for those who, like herself, desire to continue the weekly "Searchers" for their own sake. I am glad to do this, and to retain the interest of my older nephews and nieces.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 186).

I. Truth (John viii. 44).
II. The truth (Gal. v. 7).
III. Mercy and truth (Prov. xx. 28).
IV. I say the truth (John viii. 46).
V. Ye shall know the truth (John viii. 32).
VI. The truth shall make you free (John viii. 32).
VII. Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ (John i. 17).
VIII. Thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth (Isa. xxv. 1).
IX. I am the way, the truth, and the life (John xiv. 6).
X. Because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not (John viii. 45).
XI. O Lord, let thy lovingkindness and thy truth continually preserve me (Ps. xl. 11).
XII. The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon Him in truth (Ps. cxlv. 18).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*.

B—Gertrude Bush, Hannah Bridgman*, Ella Berryman*, Phyllis Boyd, Alan and Maggie Banks, Emily Bridgewater*, Esther Bobroff, Esther and Rachel Blumenthal, Edith Banks, William Berwick.

C—Kitty Cope*, George Cary, Edith Chevalier, Elizabeth Clarence, Lydia Cleary, George and Mary Coward, David and John Colville, Bertha Courtenay, Ida and Mabel Cole, Vernon and Daisy R. Clarke, Grace Charik, Rodia Constantinides, Susie Cumbers, Gladys Clark, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Lucy Davidson, Stanley Drew*, D. and Ralph Daintree, Pelognia Daws, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby.

F—Vincent and Mabel Fleet, Francis Field, Kitty Fausset, Sarah Finkelstein, Hyacinth FitzSimons.

G—Mary Gover, Gracie Grout, Alice Goad, Claire* and Bertie Gale*, Elizabeth Gerechter, Rose and Esther Goodman.

H—Dorothy Harris, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, James Henderson, Hetty Hill, Edith Holms, Bessie Hope, Willie Hooper, Francie, Florence and Stanley Hoyte, Beatrice Hastings, Rosetta and Lottie K. Hamilton, Eric and Mary Hill, Claude Hutchence*, Ruth Hinder, Jennie Holmes.

I—Daisy Iredell*.

J—Sinclair Jackson.

K—Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig.

L—Arthur Lamb, Rosie Langton, G. Lambert, Arthur* and Irene Llewellyn, Sidney, May, Edward and Henry Law, Blanche Lindup, Beatrice Le Mesurier, Annie Lipschitz, Mary and Annie Levine.

M—Emily Maddox, Mabelle Mountstephen*, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Frances Munce, Dorothy, Sydney and Harry Morgan, Lewis, A. and O. L. Morice*, Mildred Morgan.

N—Valerie Noel, Dora and Leah Niels, Maude and Amy Nottage.

P—Maxse Pibel, R. Partridge, Margherita Perlmann, Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Mildred, Evelyn, and Hattie Peters, Ruth Patient, Ethel and Gladys Palmer, Mary Plumb, Ruth Pledger*, Alice Palmer, Daisy Phillips, Leonard, Katie*, and W. Picknell.

R—Marion Richards, Alice Reid, Maud Rosenberg.

S—Flora Shadbolt, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Joseph Stephens, Flora Simmons*, Mary and Alan Symon, Dryll, Fred and Amy* Stileman, Laura* Standen, John Smith, Esther Simmons, Douglas and Kathleen Shepherd, Mary Sowden, Eveline Steed, Ronald Studd, Marjorie and Cicely Shorbrooke, Betty Stocks, Edith*, Bessie and Minnie* Shepherd, Lizzie Simons, Mary Seed*, Ivy, Rosetta and Muriel Sherwin.

T—Frank Tomkins, A. P. Turnbull, Naomi Torff, Rebecca Tuskinsky.

V—Rosetta Viccars.

W—Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Constance Wright, Dorothy White, Douglas Wilkinson, Eva Wright, Agatha Ward, Annie and Sarah Wood, Florence, W. L. and Mabel Wild, Joanna and Louise Wolnitzer, Ronald Watson, Charles and Amy* Wingrave, Edith, Edward and William Wheeler.

No. 185.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Bertha Arres-Mather, Muriel Annesley, Irene Ashdown, William Aston.

B—Mary Bryant, Ethel and John Benger, Dorothy Berry, Massy Conyers and Allen Baker, Louis Berthé*, Susette* and Mary* Beck, Maud, Dorothy, Sylvia and Evelyn Barrett, Catherine Barber, Ashley Bowker*, Mabel Birney, Eva and Robert Browne, Elsie Baker, Dorothy Benson, May*, Gordon* and Daisy Bligh, Stanley, Gordon and Lily Boxer, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl Cordt, Leonard and Lindsay Browne, Maggie Banks, Mabel Bailey*, Frank and Leonard Bantall, Lillian Butler.

C—Janie and Nellie Crawford, Dorothy Cooper, Cicely Craven, Gladys Clark, Jessie Carter*, Ethel Craigie, Dorothy Clarke, Alice Crang, Dora and Edith Corrie, George Crawford, Walter Carter*, Arthur and Winnie* Cox, Bessie Cheale, Isabel, Mabel and Charles Candlin, Duncan Campbell*, Beryl and Gladys Calvert.

D—William Dilly*, J. Davison, Harold Davis, Vera Dickinson, Constance Devenish-Meares, Marjory and Dorothy Dyke, Blossom Davis*, Irene Duke, Gordon Duncan, Esther and Jean Dickson.

E—Muriel Edwards,* Leonard Ewin, Maud Eddey.

F—Bessie and Blanche Freeman, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Helen Forbes, Marion and James Freegard, Bessie and Mabel Fletcher, Agnes, Lewis, Maggie* and Flossy* Fullarton, Jeanne Faucon.

G—Thos. Groombridge, Aileen Gardner, Daisy*, Mary*, Ethel*, and Alfred* Greenacre, Winnie Grove, Edith Grieve, George* and Charles Graham, Gracie Grout*, Stuart, Margaret*, Edith*, Dorothy, and Jack Gray, Kenneth Gabbett, Elsie Good*, Lily Grierson*, Colin and George Graham Brown.

H—Willie Hopkins, Ethel Hutchings*, Elsie Hanson, Theodora Hill*, Helen Hunter, Florence, Stanley, and Francie Hoyte, Eileen Hill*, Violet Holford*, Dorothy Harris, Ella Hake, Edith and Winifred Garvey, Eric Hill, Breda Hanton, Georgette Hoffmann, Bessie Hope, Edith Holms, Kathleen Hughes*, Marjorie Hogge, Rosetta Hamilton.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis, Nellie Irving*, Daisy Iredell.

J—Thomas Johnson, Lizzie Johnstone, Kate Johns, Sinclair Jackson.

K—Agnes* and Isa* Kay, Flossie Key, Dorothy*, Grace* and Philippa* Kerr.

L—Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Dudley Lewis, C. Livingstone Learmouth, Hannah Lovell, B. Le Mesurier*, Grahame and Murray Lloyd.

M—Howard Moir*, Dora Marples, Lewis McGregor, Evelyn and Gwendoline Moir, Margaret Macphee, Bella and Abraham Mack, Charlie Medcalf, Nellie*, Annie* and Daisy* Mackenzie, W. C. Mallinson*, Ada Macnutt*, Dorothy Morgan*, Dorothy*, Margaret* and Daniel* Morris, Mabelle Mountstephen*, Emilie Mathias, Dora Muir, Barbara and J. Maconchy, Harry Malaher, John MacMurray.

N—Peter Nicholson*, George and Edith Nash.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes.

P—Muriel and Theodore Palmer, Daisy Phillips, Daisy Pullen, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Winnie Page*, Louie and M. Penny, Walter Perryman, Edith Parkins, Dorothy Patten*, Ruth Patient, Ada*, Jessie*, Eddie, Winnie*, and Willie Palmer, Alice Powdrill, Laura Percy.

R—Sydney Robertson, Nora Read, Isabel and Jessie Roe, Elsie Ridewood*, Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, C. M. Roberts, Jack Ridley, Lorimer and Rita Romanes.

S—Florence Smith, Emma* and Frank* Sutton, Janet Speed, Evelyn Shaw*, Dora and Ethel Smith, Rita Sidky, Dorothy*, Helen* and Francis* Stalker, Bertha Stocker, C. R. and Violet Salvesen, T. M. and D.D. Stanier, Eric, Mervyn, Wilfred, Undine and Gwendoline Shaw, Bessie Symes*, Dollie* Salt, John Smith, Ivy, Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Kathleen and Elsie Slark, Nannie Shurrock*, Binford Selwood.

T—John Thomson, Louie Tibbits, Marjorie Tracey, Lucy Trotter, Frank Tomkins, Frank and Alice Thompson, Derwent Turnbull.

U—Queenie Upton*.

W—Ellie* and Nora* Wyatt, Louisa*, Violet*, Elizabeth, and Arthur Walker, Walter Wild, Charles Williams, George Willis, Connie Wood*, Frank and Madge Wilson, B. Walls, Pringle Wilson*, Georgina and Sarah Wilson, Charles and Amy Wingrave, Mary Ware, Greta Watson*, Leonard Wall, Ernest Wakeford.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 179, 180, 181.—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale (India).

No. 179.—Daisy McArthur, Janet Garrett, Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa).

No. 184.—Olive van Millingen (Constantinople).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received. It would be better if these were not forwarded in cigar boxes, as the natural scent of the flowers is quite lost by the time they reach the office.

I am glad to receive so many nice little letters acknowledging prizes and certificates, but it would be almost impossible to answer all personally. I am also glad to know that so many nieces and nephews take sufficient interest in their Bibles as not to give up "searching" in holiday time.

The following extract is a type of several letters received lately:—

"My little sister Gladys is spending her holidays with a friend of hers at Elie, in Fifeshire. She is enjoying herself very much, and has asked us to forward the "Searcher" to her every week so that she might send in her answers all the same."

Katie Thomson.—Many thanks for your interesting letter. I am sorry to hear poor Ina has been so ill, and hope she is getting better now.

Uncle Tom.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, Aug. 2-31. Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs, from Aug. 5. Mr. J. R. Naylor, Colwyn Bay, from Aug. 7. Lt.-Col. Dru Drury, Bude, N. Cornwall. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal, July 31-Aug. 31. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey, from Aug. 1. Mr. Phillips Welch, Folkestone, July 31-Aug. 31. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe, from Aug. 8. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton, Aug. 6-Sept. 1. Mr. P. R. Burditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan, Aug. 6-20. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. Wm. Sloss, Nairn. Aug. 6-25. Rev. L. C. Carr, Overstrand, Aug. 7-Sept. 1. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Mr. Wigram, Portrush, Ireland. Mr. C. H. Collier, Ramsey, Isle of Man, July 30-Aug. 13. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl, from Aug. 5. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards, Aug. 8-Sept. 6. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A.. Mr. G. Foster-Carter and Mr. P. J. Fear, Sandown. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Seaford, from Aug. 6. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. Jno. Mitchell, Weston-super-Mare, from Aug. 2. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho, Aug. 2-28. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes. Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending August 12.

Sun., August	6	Mark	iii.	1-19	Thurs., Aug.	10	Mark iv. 30-41
Mon.	„ 7	„	iii.	20-35	Fri.,	„ 11	„ v. 1-20
Tues.,	„ 8	„	iv.	1-12	Sat.,	„ 12	„ v. 21-34
Wed.,	„ 9	„	iv.	13-29

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Westleigh near Wellington, Som.; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Storrington, Sussex, to Aug. 11; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Laxfield, Suffolk; Mr. F. P. Rowe, with caravan, Stisted, near Braintree, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Woburn, Bedfordshire; Messrs. Drake and Charante, with caravan, Cowden, Kent.

Medical Mission Aid to Hop-pickers.

A CALL came to me, not from any human source, very suddenly a few weeks ago, and has remained with me so forcibly since as a summons from the Lord, that although I am much pressed in many ways I dare not disobey it.

Tens of thousands of the poorest classes, old and young, from London and other large centres of population, will gather in Kent in a few weeks for hop-picking. Much has been done by many earnest Christian friends for many years past—both to improve the conditions of life and evangelize these poor people—but I feel that in some centres there is much suffering, especially amongst the aged, the very young, and those in delicate health, from sicknesses contracted by exposure in draughty, damp tents, huts, &c., working amongst the hop-bine in wet weather, eating unripe fruit, drinking impure water, casualties, &c., which might be alleviated by medical mission aid; and that in this way great numbers of very poor people, living in a state of home-heathendom, may be touched by Christian kindness, and have their hearts disposed to hear the Gospel message in a softened and subdued spirit.

We propose to have a very large tent at our headquarters, and other tents at some other centres, as our means and staff of helpers will allow us to cover the field, a qualified doctor, and Sister Grace, of our Medical Mission, in charge of a nursing band. I hope to take charge of the evangelistic arrangements myself.

I daresay that the expenses, including tent-hire, professional services, drugs, &c., will be about £200, but I can only arrange for as many centres as I receive help for in the next two or three weeks.

I am taking this step only under an irresistible sense of responsibility, and in spite of many reasons I might urge as an excuse for declining any further strain upon my strength or means, because I believe God has given me such a clear call to this special service for Him amongst these poor, neglected, indifferent people. I should be glad to hear from any Christian ladies with nursing experience, any Christian doctors or medical students, or from Christian young men or ladies keen in soul-winning, who who would like to spend some time with us in busy, happy home-missionary effort, say from August 26 till September 23, amidst lovely, healthy, rural surroundings.

May I beg an interest in the prayers of all who read this letter that the Lord's presence may be manifestly with us, healing distressed, backsliding and broken-hearted souls?—Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark St., S.E.

Home Missions.

Tent Work in London.

ANYONE interested in the Gospel would do well to visit the capacious canvas tabernacle erected in South-west London in the grounds of Felix College, Clapham Junction. During a period of lovely weather, when even Sunday congregations are apt to be somewhat scanty, hundreds of people are to be found nightly listening with appreciative eagerness to a faithful and thorough-going delivery of the Gospel.

A visit to the tent on a recent evening was as to the interest and respect of the general public. The cool evening breeze that came so refreshingly might well have suggested to many the delights of a stroll under the trees of the Common, or by the park promenade along the gleaming Thames; but a large audience had assembled for the singing meeting, by which the usual service is preceded.

MORE THAN CONVINCING

An erection less like an orthodox place of worship could scarcely be imagined—a plain platform, strong, but of the orange-box order of architecture, a few hundred chairs and some backless forms, with a network of gaspipes swathed in crimson stuff, constituted the furnishing, the flooring being simply a liberal supply of sawdust scattered over the grass. The audience was in itself a study. Here was the earnest Christian, wrestling in spirit on behalf of souls; the swarthy son of industry, with his bag of tools, regarding the proceedings with stolid countenance; faultlessly-attired youths from the chief business houses of the neighbourhood; large-hatted and strident-voiced factory girls; and a sprinkling of church and chapel people. All joined in the preliminary singing meeting with remarkable vigour.

Let it be said, too, that the absence of formal restrictions in no way conduced to levity. On the contrary, there was every sign of reverence. Homeliness was united with seriousness, and with the unwonted freedom there appeared to come an increase of intelligent regard for the great questions of man's spiritual well-being. The power of Gospel song, too, was strongly in evidence. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," and the deep pathos and kindly humour of Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers from Philadelphia, was a great gain to the gathering. A number of gentlemen influential in local religious circles, together with who have joined heart and hand with the movement, took sympathetic part, Rev. W. Hamilton praying with much feeling for the vast masses who remain untouched and unthrilled by the message of Divine love.

SOME LEADING MINISTERS,

Mr. Charles Inglis based some appealing words on Luke xiii. 24-26, remarking on the commanded effort—"strive;" the refuge provided—"enter in;" the barred access—"hath shut to the door;" and the persons excluded. The need of earnestness in seeking Christ was insisted on. People are swallowed up in business, in politics; but no one blames them—it is considered quite a natural state of affairs. Only in religious matters are zeal and energy deprecated.

Mr. Inglis told of an incident which occurred whilst he was labouring upon one occasion at Nottingham. A Sheffield mechanic was converted, and subsequently said, "Now I know why I came to Nottingham. I got up this morning and told my wife to look out my best clothes, for I wasn't going to work, I was off to Nottingham. 'What for?' she asked. 'Don't know,' I said, 'but I must go.' I came, and walked about the market-place, feeling like an idiot, for I had come to Nottingham for I knew not what. Then I heard singing, came into the hall, and the Lord has delivered my soul. I've come for something." The following night Mr. Inglis was surprised to notice the man once more in the meeting, and spoke to him. "Ah!" replied the Sheffield man, "I said to my wife this morning, 'I'll lose another day. I must go to Nottingham again and thee must come too.' So here she is, and she wants to give herself to the Lord." The good wife passed from death unto life, and the couple returned to Sheffield by the midnight mail, rejoicing in Jesus. They were in dead earnest, and obtained the blessing.

Picturing the dangers of delay, Mr. Inglis recalled the wreck of the ship, Royal Charter, which, after many and difficult voyages, called at Queenstown, left for the Mersey, and was signalled at Holyhead. Word being sent to Liverpool, the ship was hourly expected there, and the captain's wife made all preparations to welcome her husband on his return. But there came instead a sudden call from one of the vessel's owners, who broke the terrible news that the ship had missed its track and struck upon a sunken rock, her husband, with many of the crew, being drowned. The wife shrieked, "My God! How terrible, how solemn; so near to home—

BUT LOST AFTER ALL!"

Mr. Inglis enforced his moral. So near to the Kingdom; what did they lack? The saving grace of Jesus Christ—faith in the great Atonement. Let each sinner cry:

"Break down every idol, cast out every foe;
Now wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow."

Illustrating the lamentable state of those who would have to wail, "We have eaten and drunken in thy presence, and Thou hast taught in our streets," Mr. Inglis went on to point out some of the individual needs of the audience, and besought one and all to enter the Open Door. At the conclusion of the address a portion of the tent was cleared and partitioned off for use as an inquiry room, and many, deeply affected, availed themselves of the invitation to go forward. The arrangements for aiding penitents were praiseworthily thorough.

Not the least of the good results of these fervent gatherings must be the stimulating effect upon the Christians of the vicinity, the reminder of what Bishop Lightfoot described as "that almost lost ideal—the universal compulsion of souls."

Tent Work at Hammersmith.

WITH respect to Mr. Ned Wright's Tent Mission, in progress at Hammersmith, we are glad to learn that much blessing is attending it. The numbers continue to increase, and as far as can be known many unconverted people have gone away saved. Last Sunday was a remarkable day here, as well as in all the other tents in and around London.

One important change in the character of the meetings is, that whereas originally men and women came in about equal numbers, now the tent is almost entirely filled with men. A striking feature of the Mission is the attendance of many drunken men, who have caused much annoyance at first, but who have left the meetings sobered and converted. The earlier part of the evenings is devoted to the children, who collect in large numbers, and many of whom have been brought to Christ.

Mr. Ned Wright fears that they will have to shift in about a month, and at present no other suitable spot has been found in which to re-erect the tent. Will our readers pray that a way may be opened up, and will they endeavour to rouse the interest of their fellow-Christians in this work of seeking and saving the lost?

A great rally of friends interested in the London Tent Movement will be held in the Great American Mission Tent in grounds of Felix College, Lavender Hill, S.W., one minute from Clapham Junction Railway Station, on Bank Holiday, August 7. Meetings 11 o'clock a.m., 3 and 7 p.m.

The Wesleyan Conference.

By A MINISTER.

THE representative session of the Conference, consisting of 240 ministers and an equal number of laymen, closed on Friday evening. From first to last the proceedings have been followed with great interest by a large number of ministers and visitors who have been admitted by ticket into the gallery of Wesley's Chapel. Many subjects have been dealt with, the printed agenda for the session forming a bulky volume of no less than 377 pages.

The session which was given to the reception of the Nonconformist deputation was a memorable one. It is the first occasion on which a London conference has received such a deputation, though at a former conference the late Charles Haddon Spurgeon, in an informal way, delighted his Methodist brethren with a characteristic speech. It is the formation of the Metropolitan Federation of Evangelical Free Churches that has made such a deputation possible. It was fittingly headed by Rev. Dr. McEwan, the President of the Federation, who, together with Dr. Clifford and Dr. Parker, addressed the Conference. These Free Church leaders were all warmly received, though Dr. Parker received special recognition, in which not a little sympathy mingled, by the spontaneous rising of the members of the Conference when he commenced his address. Dr. McEwan emphasized the growth of spiritual unity among the Churches, and paid a tribute to the missionary enterprise of Methodism. Dr. Clifford coveted the Methodist fire, and told of the Methodist influences that surrounded his cradle. He congratulated them on the insight and tact with which they had adapted their ministry and services in their mission work in London to meet the old needs of men with the everlasting Gospel. There was no characteristic of the age more consolatory than the outpouring of

THE SPIRIT OF UNITY.

Dr. Parker's speech united humour and pathos, and contained some most impressive passages, in which, with great solemnity, he insisted upon the power of the Gospel to sustain the human heart in darkest hours. He had been called upon to test the Gospel at midnight, when the wind was cold and there was no light that men could enkindle. The Gospel stood the test of sorrow. There were texts that could not be read by prosperity, nor interpreted by wealth; Psalms, which could only be read by poor, desolated mothers, and promises that could only be articulated by hearts that had no hope unless they could find it in heaven. Speaking of the evil of reading sermons, he finely said that a man had better mangle his grammar than lose his fire, and closed his remarkable address by a touching reference to the LOVELY HOME THAT AWAITED HIM.

The President fittingly replied to the deputation, closing with a beautiful vision of the union of the future. He had spent the last hour of the preceding day in his study. And, as he looked upon his book-shelves, he saw there, in strange yet harmonious fellowship, the teachers, and workers, and saints of many ages. He refreshed his spirit with the vision of a fellowship of saints, in which would have faded away the lines of present separation. Rev. W. L. Watkinson and Mr. James Vanner also responded on behalf of the Conference. The former uttered some stirring words on the subject of Sacerdotalism. The Ritualism in the Church of England he declared to be intolerable, and, what was more disturbing still, was the almost tranquil indifference of the bishops. They conjured with the word comprehension, but what the nation cared for was Protestantism. If the Prayer Book sanctioned Popish practices, then they were against the Prayer Book. What might pass in the distress of 300 years ago would not be accepted by this Protestant nation to-day. About questions comparatively immaterial they were not anxious; but in the struggle against immorality and priestcraft, the prolific root of immorality, they were one in their opposition.

The discussion on the Order of Sessions revealed how strongly attached are the laymen of Methodism to the principles of their Church government. Mr. T. G. Osborn, of Colwyn Bay, warned the Conference against the dangers of hasty legislation; and Sir Henry Fowler, M.P., gave an impressive speech, which was listened to with the closest attention. While approving of the change of order proposed, he expressed his strong attachment to the principles of the settlement of 1877, when laymen were first admitted to Conference. The present proposals did not touch their vital principles, but affected a question of convenience. He desired perfect equality and sympathy between the two sessions — each dealing with matters with which it was individually best qualified to deal.

The ex-President and Dr. Rigg supported the change, while Dr. Randles, who has consistently opposed it, uttered a word of protest; but he was joined by only two or three others in voting against the proposals, which were adopted with practical unanimity. It seems probable that this constitutional change, like that of lay representation in 1877, will be carried through without the loss of a single member of society. This is a great improvement upon the VIOLENT DISRUPTIONS OF THE PAST.

The two branches of the work of the evangelization of the people at home and abroad have received due consideration. The reports of the great Central Missions in London and the provinces give abundant evidence of the success of wisely-directed and continuous efforts to reach the masses. Deeply-interesting were the addresses on Foreign Missions, given by Rev. Marshall Hartley and Rev. Thomas Champness, both of whom have recently returned from visits to mission stations in the East. Mr. Hartley declared that he had gone out determined to find out frankly the truth about their missionaries in the East. He had not found among them all in China, Ceylon, and India, a man against whom reproach could be brought on the ground of self-indulgence, or luxurious habits, or of neglecting the natives for European society. He bore testimony to the influence of medical missions in China. His visit to Hyderabad was an inspiration. There were hundreds of villages waiting for the Gospel, but they were waiting to be put into possession of the necessary funds.

Mr. Champness also, whose "Joyful News" agents are a valuable lay auxiliary to the foreign missionary work, gave a touching address, in which he pathetically pleaded for China. He had seen there the utter failure of the religion that did not come of Jesus Christ, and the utter misery of the heathen. They needed, above all, agony before God in prayer for the missionary workers. He was old enough to remember their triumphs in Fiji, and they had to-day the same Lord Jesus Christ.

The conversation, on the work of God called forth hearty love-feast experiences from representative laymen. Mr. T. Barnsley, of Birmingham, rejoiced that the spirit of expectation was being revived amongst them in the circuits of Methodism. Mr. Warren, the Mayor of Luton, spoke of his class-meeting of 140 members as the joy of his life. Mr. W. Shepherd Allen, who has spent some years in New Zealand, standing before the Conference as an old man about to return to that far-of land, with the probability that his voice would never be heard again in the British Conference, earnestly implored his brethren to preach the old doctrines, to maintain the old discipline, to serve God and fear Him. Dr. Rigg confessed that in modern preaching the old evangelical fire and power were often wanting. There was too much that savoured of merely periodical writing and reading, and too little of the profound truths of the Gospel, which were a stumbling-block to mere men of letters. Moral æsthetics would not heal the spiritual maladies of the world. Ethical applications, unless connected directly with the power of the Spirit and the doctrines of the Gospel, were not what preaching ought to be. Never was the full evangelical tone and depth and compass of preaching more necessary than now.

Rev. Samuel Chadwick, the Leeds missioner, contributed a breezy and bracing utterance to the conversation. He rejoiced in the gracious influence and results of the ex-President's conventions. Speaking of his own work, he said that for a considerable time they were shut out of their chapel, and for twelve months he preached to immense gatherings in the Coliseum at Leeds. The Sunday Lecture Society had been obliged to give up the same hall, because they could not get the people to come; but the preaching of the Gospel had filled it to overflowing. The masses did not want clap-trap, nor pretty sentences, nor sensationalism, nor disquisitions in sociology. Any man who could preach the truth, as revealed in Jesus Christ, intelligently, intelligibly, and earnestly, would never lack people to hear him. An employer of labour had been converted at one of their meetings, and the first proof of his conversion was that he went back to his works and raised the wages of every man in his employ. The Conference agreed with the speaker that that was likely to make religion popular with the working-classes. A hopeful spirit prevailed during the conversation, as well it might, remembering that an increase of membership in the Church of more than 5,000 has been reported.

Progress has been reported in the great financial effort of the "Twentieth Century Fund," of which nearly 700,000 guineas have been already promised. The affairs of many departments of Church activity have been reviewed. Protests were raised against the action taken in certain quarters against street-preaching, and against the tyranny exercised over Methodist children in some of the elementary day-schools in rural regions by extreme clergymen of the High Church section of the Anglican Church. A series of remarkable public services have been held in St. James's Hall. The Bishop of London showed his catholicity of spirit by presiding over a children's home meeting on Saturday night. He bore ungrudging testimony to the splendid character of Dr. Stephenson's work. Dr. Fitchett, of Australia, delivered an eloquent eulogium of the Christ-like service of rescuing the children.

Personalia.

Dr. Baedeker has returned to England after seven weeks' journeyings in Austria. He found many interesting openings among the Roman Catholic population, and was impressed with the greatness of present opportunities for full evangelistic work in the Austrian empire. Of course German is an essential qualification on the part of any who would enter this field.

Rev. Charles Garnett, of Arundel Square Chapel, Barnsbury, sailed from Liverpool, on July 29, per s.s. Campania, for the States, where he will spend a couple of months, taking part in many camp meetings and occupying various pulpits. The previous Sunday a "God-speed" meeting was held at Arundel Square Chapel after evening service. Mr. Garnett hopes to resume his ministry at Arundel Square on Sunday, October 8.

The Hope Trust.—During the past year this Trust carried on extensive operations throughout the country. The lecturing season was eminently successful, the agents visiting nearly 400 towns and villages, covering practically the whole of Scotland. A very large proportion of the population have been reached; 382 juvenile and 434 adult meetings having been held. The circulation of Protestant literature has occupied a prominent place in the operations of the Trust.

London City Mission.—The annual outing of missionaries took place last week, a visit being paid, at the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Hope Morley, to Hall Place, Hildenborough, Kent. The weather was faultless, the host and hostess bent upon the happiness of their guests, and so a record day was spent. Games, strolls about the beautiful grounds, dinner and tea in large tents, a display of ambulance work, and the open-air singing of the choir made up the programme. At the one short meeting, Revs. Mr. Baskerville (Tonbridge) and D. C. McGregor (Wimbledon) gave addresses. Mr. F. A. Bevan, on behalf of the committee of the Society, heartily thanked Mr. and Mrs. Morley for their splendid generosity.

Other Lands.

Dr. Baedeker's Travels.

I HAVE laid claim to the prayerful sympathy of God's remembrancers for a journey in the service of the Gospel in several parts of the Austrian Empire. Now I am nearing the end of my journey, and I gratefully acknowledge the fruit of these prayers.

Leaving England, June 8, I arrived at Prague on the 10th, and found my allotted time very fully mapped out for meetings, chiefly amongst the Czechish people, from Sunday, the 11th, for fifteen days. Appointments had been made for every day till the 25th in Bohemia, journeying from place to place, and telling out the Gospel of God's grace to very many Czechish people, mostly rescued from Roman Catholicism.

The history of Bohemia during the 17th century is a history of Christian heroism and of martyrdom such as has no equal in the world, the traces of which are still deeply impressed on the character of the people. The stones are crying out, telling of the cruel barbarity which laid waste the country. The Roman Catholic ruler said he would rather rule over a waste wilderness than over a country peopled by "Protestant heretics." The history of Bohemia should be disseminated wherever an inclination towards Roman Catholicism is feared.

The present movement in Austria, where thousands of Roman Catholics desire to be freed from Rome, is the reaction of Roman oppression.

HUSS, THE MARTYR,

is not forgotten, and young people in their national enthusiasm go in crowds to Hussinec, where the chamber of the reformer's birth, and many other relics, are shown with pride and satisfaction. But the people are not permitted to remember the history of Huss without being reminded that it was the Bible, the Word of God, which made Huss what he was. Thus, large numbers are attracted by the proclamation of Huss' Gospel, and very many come out from a system which deprives the people of the Word of God, and substitutes in its place human tradition and superstition.

The eagerness with which the people drink in the truth is most remarkable. It is to them indeed like good news from a far-off country. Dr. Clark, of Smichow, Prague, is to be congratulated on the success which God has given to the twenty-five years' labours of the American Board of Missions amongst Roman Catholics in Bohemia. Their labours have now extended over the greater part of Bohemia, and there is yet much land to be possessed; likewise in other parts of Austria. From Bohemia I passed through Vienna, having the joy of addressing an encouraging number of young men in the Y.M.C.A. Herr von Ziegler, of Klippenhausen, has, with noble self-sacrifice, undertaken the directorship of the Association in Vienna, and he nobly battles against tremendous difficulties, and with few encouragements. It was a joy to meet with our brother.

From Vienna my programme was waiting for me in the southern provinces of Austria, the Countess La Tour having invited me to make her Castle Treffen, near Villach, in Kärnten, the centre of operations. Arriving at Castle Treffen on June 28, a meeting of a very interesting character was arranged on the 29th in the spacious and very beautiful premises of that magnificent habitation, situated in the midst of in Kärnten. Some pastors from the neighbouring villages had come to the meeting, and large numbers of peasants and others from far and near filled the hall and the splendid garden and avenues. Among them was Pastor Schwarz, from Waiern, who is widely known for his benevolent institutions for poor children and for the sick, which stand on a hill near the station of Feldkirch, a standing testimony of the "faith which worketh by love."

THE GRANDEST MOUNTAIN SCENERY

My noble hostess had mapped out my time, and day by day had its call. In most of the towns in South Austria the churches were opened to me as being the most convenient and spacious buildings, and I had the joy of the hearty co-operation of several pastors. Everywhere the element of Roman Catholics was very prominent; many of them had joined the Protestant churches, while others were prepared to do so. From Budapest, where I had the privilege of spending the Lord's Day with some of God's servants, having fellowship in their ministry, I came to O'Tura to see what the Lord has done and is doing by his Gospel amongst the Slovaks, a branch of Slavs, for the most part scattered in the mountainous regions, and living hard lives. God has given them, as and enthusiastic energy, two dear sisters, the Misses Roy, daughters of a former pastor, very feeble in strength but leaning upon the Almighty arm. By writing and distributing tracts and hymns in the native language, and by assembling the people in their own rooms for Gospel meetings, God has greatly encouraged them, and has given them many souls, and is enlarging their borders in many directions. One of their efforts centres in the abstinence movement under the banner of the "Blue Cross" (Blue Ribbon), and their success in that direction has been very marked and helpful.

WITNESSES FULL OF LOVE

I came to O'Tura for three days, and had the time well filled, the dear people coming from great distances on foot, and having to return late at night. The Misses Roy have need of larger premises, and it would seem very desirable to secure for them a house of their own, where they might carry on and enlarge their work without hindrance. It pains one to notice peoples who live so near the very heart of Europe—such as Hungarians, Slovenes, Slovaks, Croates—so neglected and forgotten with regard to the proclamation of the Gospel. My route will now be viâ Vienna, Prague, Dresden, homeward. This has been a very happy time in the service of the Lord, a real season of rest, bearing the Master's yoke. In answer to prayer, I have experienced his sustaining grace day by day. Praise the Lord. There is room for many more labourers.

F. W. BAEDEKER.

O'Tura, near Vagnjhely, North Hungary.

Colonial and Continental Church Society.

IN an account of work in South Africa, Rev. W. E. Hunter, who is stationed at Alice, writes: "We live in a low, swampy, but fertile country, where influenza is always prevalent. Alice, although but a small village, is the centre of an extensive district. I recently drove over to a police camp about sixteen miles from here, and spent the greater part of the day visiting men and their families.

"The police (mounted) have camps scattered about the country, and they patrol to prevent stock thieving and other crimes of like kind. Theirs is a wild life, and many sorts and conditions of men take to it as a refuge, and some just for adventure. Going on to an adjoining farm, I held a service and baptized four children—two Dutch, one German, and one English—which is some indication, by the way, of the variety of races here. Next morning I held a service, attended by six or seven farming families, at an out-station where there is a school-chapel, provided with harmonium, &c., and standing in the open country, but in a convenient spot for the farmers thereabout, by whom it was built.

"I arrived back in Alice in the afternoon in time for the Sunday school (morning service here had been held by our kind resident magistrate), and then there was a hearty, well-attended evening service in our parish church. A building is much needed that could be used both for church, Sunday and day schools. This would cost about £200, towards which I have £50 in hand."

Notes from New York.

A DAY or two ago I dropped in at Colonel Hadley's new Tea Saloon on Allen Street, lately started in connection with the United States Church Army work. The place has been opened only about six weeks, but the results are quite encouraging, in view of the fact that the location is not a good one for that particular class of restaurant. If it were on one of the great highways of the city, it would probably make money rapidly, and similar places would do well, I should think, in England. For five cents (2½d.) I got a large tumbler of iced tea, with slices of lemon in it, and a good sandwich, the meat for which was cut while I waited for it. The Colonel has just opened his second saloon of the kind at Atlantic City, a great seaside resort, an hour or two's distance from New York.

The tent meetings, both uptown and downtown, and the twilight meetings on Abingdon Square, are being greatly blessed of God in the salvation of souls. One of the encouraging features of these meetings is the readiness with which ministers of large and prominent churches respond to invitations to address congregations differing widely in almost every respect from those that usually face them. On a summer night in New York, too, there is nothing very agreeable to flesh and blood in delivering an address in one of these tents, with a journey of perhaps an hour's duration before and after. Messrs. Moody and Sankey are expected at the large uptown tent shortly. Their help will certainly give the work now in progress there a great impetus.

During August Rev. F. B. Meyer is expected to preach at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. He will be sure to have large congregations. His last visit to this city will be long remembered, especially his great meeting in the Carnegie Music Hall.

A series of leaflets is being prepared for distribution by the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The leaflets will be mailed to 12,000 pastors on August 15. They set forth the plan for organization, and cover some of the most important claims on the Offering, including the Church colleges and the superannuated ministers. Ten millions of dollars have been asked for each of these causes.

ROGER MARTIN.

Ritualism in Tasmania.

A SUBSCRIBER sends us an extract from a letter just received from a minister in Tasmania, confirming the statements made in a recent issue by our correspondent, Mr. Wainwright.

The writer says:—"Since the appointment of a ritualistic clergyman in our district, we have been much harassed and hindered in our work. By his order two buildings have been closed against us, though these have been used for many years by members of the Free Churches.

"This action has compelled us to start building two school-rooms in a very needy district. The settlers are poor and struggling, seldom seeing the colour of money. They barter the produce of their farms for necessaries at the stores. Yet they are acting nobly and with great self-denial. Some have given the land, some timber; others have promised to split [illegible] fencing. One man has arranged to [illegible] materials from the railway stati[illegible] miles distant, and another is making [illegible]ulpit and chair. The project will cost £150, [illegible]hich we have secured £98."

The Monthly Tract Society.—A [illegible]cial meeting of the subscribers of this Society was [illegible] at 8, Paul Street, London, on Wednesday last week F. A. Bevan presiding. On the motion of the c[illegible] man, seconded by Mr. J. G. Alexander, LL.B., it w[illegible] agreed that the Society should in future be manag[illegible] by the trustees of the Stirling Tract Enterpris[illegible] would now undertake the work of preparing a[illegible] monthly, by post, tracts addressed to the [illegible] upper classes. It was felt that this ne[illegible] would secure great economies in th[illegible] the Society, and would enable [illegible] Stirling Tract Enterprise to [illegible] scale than has been possib[illegible]

To Reach the Jews in Russia.

IN latter days the Lord has stirred up many true friends of Israel in this country and in America. Many have linked themselves in a bond of prayer for the peace of Jerusalem and for all its best interests, and there has been a sense of responsibility awakened as regards Gospel work amongst the Jews in all countries. This is shown, among other ways, by the increase of missionary organizations on both sides of the Atlantic.

But there is one field, in every sense the greatest and most important, that receives little attention as regards active effort—that is, Russia, which contains about half the Jewish population of the world—some five millions, at a reasonable computation. I am sure that all the organizations labouring for Israel's good would be only too glad to get at these millions of the chosen people. But there are certain hindrances, the principal of which are found in the laws of the country. By Russian law Gospel work, as such, amongst either Jew or Gentile is not permitted. The Lutherans may work within their own sect, Baptists the same, and so on with all recognised churches, but what we understand in England as a full and free proclamation of the Word of God is impossible in Russia.

I do not mean to say that this has entirely prohibited Gospel work among the Jews. The London Jews' Society has a station at Warsaw, and generally a resident clergyman, though that post is at present vacant. The British Jews' Society has two missionaries in the country, viz., Dr. Frohwein in Wilna, and Rev. Mr. Friedmann in Kowno. A New York Mission has a worker in Warsaw. The Bible Society colporteurs have indirectly no doubt, within these many years of the Society's operations, done much to bring the Gospel before individual Jews through the circulation of Scriptures.

But these efforts are either indirect or else quite local and limited, so that Russian Jewry presents a very real and pressing claim upon the Christian Church.

It is remarkable that while Russian law places such hindrances in the way of direct Gospel effort, it permits and even favours the distribution of God's Word. In this the Greek Church differs widely from the Roman. Thus, when through my father's faith and effort the great work of circulating the New Testament amongst the Jews was commenced we found no real obstacle in Russia. Difficulties and delays were many and great, but the Government actually gave permission, with the gift of each copy of the Word of God to a Jew, to EXPLAIN THE NATURE OF THE CONTENTS.

But this implied that there should be no proselytism to any particular church, nor was that indeed even our wish. Our simple object was to circulate the pure Word, both by lip and printed page, and let the Spirit do his own work through both.

This has gone on steadily for thirteen years. In Russia alone considerably over 500,000 New Testaments and Portions have been distributed during this time, over 100 towns visited, many marvellous opportunities of Gospel testimony presented and utilized, and, as we know, not from tabulation but from ever-recurring testimony brought to our ears, numbers of souls awakened and converted.

At present there are labourers in Odessa, Wilna, Warsaw, and Minsk. They have written permissions to open depôts for the distribution of Scriptures. And this permit, allowing them as I have said "to explain the nature of the contents of the Book," makes each depôt practically a mission room. Such, indeed, it is every case. Numbers of Jews come every , but especially on Saturdays, to read or scuss or listen, and the Scriptures, by regular autious distribution, find their way into ds of homes.

nothing to hinder the increase of to many other towns of Russia Jewish populations. Nothing to as regards the Russian law.

Russian Jews each of these the existing ones at present are, centres of evangelization, not only to the town in which it is placed, but to the villages around. Towns of large Jewish populations, and where little or nothing is done in Gospel effort for the Jews are Lodz, Berditschew, Dünaburg, Riga, Brest, Kischinew, and many more.

Experience of this field enabled us to make suggestions to the British and Foreign Bible Society, by which, as we trust before the close of this year, a Jargon Testament will be produced, which will be not only understood but appreciated by all, even the most ignorant of Russian Jews. In this blessed work the sainted Rabinowitz was engaged till his departure last May, and the eagerness with which he worked doubtless hastened his end. Furthermore, the Lord has graciously supplied us with the means to purchase 100,000 copies as soon as the books are ready. Here again is an open door. The country, as regards its laws, is open for the books and for all the Gospel testimony which accompanies them. The books, as regards the means for their purchase, are ready for the field.

What then is wanted? Men and means for distribution. And before all things prayer that these may both be God-sent. The men who are required for evangelistic work amongst the Jews in Russia must possess many qualifications, and as a rule can only be found in Russia itself. Each new depôt must cost for rent, living, and travelling expenses, transport of books, &c., at least £120 to £130 a year. But the expense is small indeed in proportion to the scope of evangelistic effort which each of these depôts presents. SAMUEL WILKINSON.

Good Work at Buenos Ayres.

THE Forward Evangelistic Movement of the South American Missionary Society, commenced last year in Palermo, Buenos Ayres, has grown rapidly. The Spanish branch of the work now consists of two free schools for native boys, and one for native girls. More than 450 children are attending these schools, and all receive Biblical teaching daily.

We have a large native Sunday School, from which more than 250 children have to be excluded for lack of room in our present hall. Both our Sunday and week-night services are very well attended, and repeatedly it has not been possible to accommodate the crowds. Many have declared that they now stay away until we have more room.

Our Bible workers are disseminating the Word of God, and constantly awakening new interest. A new work has been commenced in Villa Catalinas (some miles from Buenos Ayres), from which some people came twelve months ago, asking us to open a Mission Hall in their town.

We regularly visit the large penitentiary prison, and much Evangelical literature has been distributed among the prisoners and their guardians. Local sympathy and support of really great value have been given to our Free Schools work. It is probable that a monthly grant will soon be made by the National Government to our school work.

The growth of our Palermo work demands greatly increased accommodation. Land has been secured on which to build a hall, and later a large native church also.

By the time this letter is read we trust that the foundation stone will have been laid by Bishop Stirling. The cost of the hall, which will seat about 600 persons, and outer buildings, will be about £2,400; this, together with the amount to be paid for land, makes a total of £2,660 needed.

This is the first hall built in South America under the auspices of the S.A.M. Society for distinctly Spanish work. According to the contract, the hall has to be ready for use by October 1; and before that date it is desirable that promises and gifts to the amount named shall have been received. These may be sent to me (Rev. William C. Morris, Calle Uriarte, 2572, Palermo, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic), or to Capt. E. Poulden, R.N., South American Missionary Society, 1, Clifford's Inn, London, E.C.; marked "For Palermo Building Fund." WILLIAM C. MORRIS.

Sailor's Rest, Port Said.

AS many know, Port Said is a notoriously wicked place, and desolate too, situated as it is between desert and sea; but our friends Mr. and Mrs. Locke have long and patiently sought to be used of God in ministering to the great need of seamen, and also to the large number of the Lord's servants passing to and from the "regions beyond."

It has proved a real oasis in the desert to hundreds, and God has owned the work, many having been turned from the power of Satan to Himself. Only last year at least twenty men of the Royal Navy gave every evidence of really changed lives, but the work cannot be estimated thus. There is so much done in visiting ships and leaving supplies of good, definite Gospel literature, in personal dealing, in arranging services at the Rest and on board ship when possible, of which fruit is often seen but after many days.

Only think, for instance, of the possibilities of a visit to a troopship in the seed sown, and the printed Word left among these hundreds of souls. The work is so familiar to many who are well known in the Lord's service that it needs no commendation, while missionaries of every denomination testify to the refreshing times spent at the Rest.

There is now a special need, as a falling off in contributions has meant trial to our friends Mr. and Mrs. Locke, and there is a danger of the work ceasing, which would indeed be a calamity, considering the great need in this place, "where Satan's seat is." All who know the Rest will surely give their prayers and their substance, and we hope many new friends will be raised up. I shall be pleased to answer any inquiries or acknowledge any help that may be forwarded.

Mr. H. W. Fry, 22, Billiter Buildings, E.C., and Mr. Josh. Alexander, 70, Breakspears Road, St. John's, S.E., allow the use of their names as references. All contributions may be considered as used directly in the Lord's service. Gospel papers and books are also in much request. W. C. THORP.

4, Rona Road, Mansfield Road, N.W.

Notes from Ballarat, Australia.

BALLARAT, the centre of an extensive mining district, is about ninety miles from Melbourne; and, being about 1,400ft. above the sea level, is considered one of the healthiest, and one of the most beautiful, cities in the colony. Its wide streets are nearly all adorned with avenues of gum and fir trees, which provide a very welcome shade from the summer heat.

The question of the Bible in State schools is occupying considerable attention in the city. The other Sunday most of the Protestant ministers preached on the subject. Unhappily they are not entirely agreed among themselves. One of the Congregational ministers objects to religious teaching being given by any but religious men. A meeting is to be held, at which several clergymen will speak in favour of Bible teaching. Most Protestant Christians feel themselves forced to this by observing the disastrous results of an entirely secular education.

The most important event which has transpired in the history of the Colonies is announced in to-day's papers. The referendum in New South Wales on the question of federation has resulted in a majority of over 21,000 in favour of a federated Australia. The days of provincialism and isolation are numbered. The policy of separation has greatly hindered progress in all these Colonies. The recognition that their interests are one will make for the prosperity of all.

For the sake of those who are interested in myself, I may add that my health is good, and that I am waiting to know God's will as to whether we remain in the Colonies or return home. GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Ballarat, Victoria, June 21, 1899.

Obituary.

MRS. S. A. E. FITZGERALD.

A WOMAN of remarkable personality has passed away—Mrs. S. A. E. FitzGerald, of Shalstone Manor, near Buckingham, at the great age of 90 years. She was the widow of the late Thomas FitzGerald, J.P., who died in 1860. For nearly forty years Mrs. FitzGerald was the universally beloved lady of the Manor of Shalstone. Among her friends of the past were Dr. Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, the late Lord Selborne, the late Lord Tennyson, Robert Browning, and Professor Owen. Her memory and knowledge of books were wonderful, and her linguistic powers great. She began to learn Greek when about seventy years of age, and other languages when she was more than eighty. Her correspondence with friends at home and abroad is said to have been prodigious.

MR. WILLIAM JONES.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Mr. William Jones, author of "Quaker Campaigns in Peace and War." A Welshman by birth, and long resident in Sunderland, this well-known member of the Society of Friends had attained the age of seventy-four. He was for some years secretary of the Peace Society. In the Franco-German war Mr. Jones, in company with Dr. Spence Watson and Mr. Thomas Whitwell, visited the districts in which the fighting had taken place, to administer money for the relief of the non-combatants, who had suffered owing to the great struggle. He was also engaged in a similar work in Bulgaria in 1876. He had many thrilling adventures.

CANON PENNINGTON.

The death is announced of Rev. A. R. Pennington, M.A., hon. Canon of Lincoln. He graduated from Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1838, and was eighty-five years of age. After serving as curate of St. Peter's, Colchester, St. James's, Walthamstow, and St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, he was presented forty-five years ago to the vicarage of Utterby, near Louth, which he occupied till his death. In 1882, Bishop Christopher Wordsworth made him a Prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral. He was a considerable writer on subjects connected with the Reformation, and gave cordial support to present-day reform movements in Italy, Spain, and elsewhere. His "Life of Erasmus" appeared in 1875, and he published a biography of John Wycliffe in connection with the Wycliffe commemoration in 1884. At the great age of eighty-three he wrote on "The Papal Conclaves," and two or three weeks ago issued an important and timely volume entitled "The Counter-Reformation in Europe."

GENERAL SIR ARTHUR COTTON.

The death is announced of General Sir Arthur Thomas Cotton, K.C.S.I., in his ninety-seventh year. Born at Woodcot House, Oxfordshire, and educated at Addiscombe, he entered the Madras army when about eighteen years of age, and his earliest experience of active service was on the occasion of the first Burmese war, which ended with the capture of Rangoon, after a campaign of great hardship. Broken in health, Sir Arthur came home to recruit. On his subsequent return to India, the Public Works Department engaged his services, and under his supervision many important engineering works, particularly in the direction of bridge construction and road making, were successfully carried out. His work took him into some of the most unhealthy districts of India, and several times he was at the point of death from jungle fever; but he completed forty-five years' service of this kind before being obliged finally to relinquish it and return to England. His energies in developing the cotton-growing capabilities of India were rewarded with the honour of Knighthood in 1861, and five years later he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Star of India. He was made a Lieutenant-General, and placed on the fixed establishment of General Officers in 1867, attaining the rank of General in 1876. The following year he was placed on the retired list, since when he had lived in retirement at his country house, Woodcot, Dorking.

The funeral of Sir Arthur took place, with semi-military honours, at Dorking Cemetery, on Saturday last, in the presence of a large assembly. The event recalled many memories in the minds of those who attended. General Cotton had all his life been a non-smoker, and in later years he was a teetotaler. We purpose in an early issue giving a portrait of our departed friend, with some particulars of his life work.

Evangelism.

Mr. JOHN QUIGLEY, travelling secretary of the Drummond Tract Society, has been addressing Gospel meetings in the south and north of Ireland. These have been very precious gatherings, and souls yielded to Christ.

A mission, held in a tent at Stansted, Essex, has been the occasion of blessing to many. Mr. J. WHITING and others have faithfully delivered the Gospel message. The meetings grew in interest until numbers were unable to gain admission to the tent.

Mr. R. MCLEAN recently conducted a ten days' mission in Dundee. The tent was pitched at the east end of the city. This was the evangelist's eighth visit. From the first meeting real interest was manifested, until, on the second Sabbath, the large tent was crowded to excess in spite of incessant rain. One feature of the mission was that numbers of God's people received quickening through the Bible readings, while there is reason to believe that, in the evangelistic meetings, many yielded to the Saviour.

Evangelists' Engagements.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—During August, Great Assembly Hall, London.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sun., July 30, at 7 p.m., Mr. P. Garrioch; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sun., July 30, at 7 p.m., Mr. C. Russell Hurditch; Bible lecture, Thurs., at 8, Mr. Thompson.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

MR. LEONARD WEAVER, Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus), until further notice.

REV. THOS. COOK.—Aug. 6, Bridlington Quay; 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

MR. GEORGE HUNTER.—Till Aug. 13, Uxbridge.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT.—Kilburn Hall, N.W., every Sun. and Thurs. during August; Mayes Hall, Wood Green, N., each Wed.; Enfield, N., Sept.; Chester, Oct.

REV. F. C. SPURR.—Sept. 1-8, Downton.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.—Tent Meetings, East Finchley, until further notice.

MR. WALTER NOTMAN (of the Edinburgh Castle), Aug. 6 and 20, Trinity Baptist Church, St. John Street, Edgware Road; Aug. 13, Salters' Hall, Baptist Church, Canonbury, N.; Aug. 27, Chatsworth Road Baptist Church, West Norwood (Rev. Archibald G. Brown's).

MESSRS. ALGERNON AND CLAUD COFFIN.—Tent Mission at Havant, Hants, Aug. 13 to 20.

MR. S. J. ALEXANDER.—At Skegness, on the sands, through August.

Requests for Prayer.

For showers of blessing upon a series of revival meetings in a dark city of India, and for a revival at a hill station.

For blessing upon a tent mission at Havant, Hants, from August 13 to 20, to be conducted by Algernon and Claud Coffin.

For blessing upon a Gospel effort in the village of Hartington during the current month.

Notices.

APPLICATIONS FOR TRACTS.—Leonard Smith, 45, Fentiman Road, Clapham Road, S.W.; W. A. Derby, 18, Stanfield Road, Liverpool, N.; Henry Matthewman, 1, Jubilee Cottages, Coggeshall Road, Braintree, Essex (for children); C. J. Price, Heaton Mersey, near Manchester; A. Rider, 107, Shakespeare Road, Stoke Newington; T. W. Tidy, 17, Kidbrook Park Road, Blackheath; James Fraser, 7, Welbeck Street, Kilmarnock, Ayrshire; E. E. Smart, Hill Street, Lye, Stourbridge; J. C. Martin, 53, Overbury Street, Clapton Park, London, N.E.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—W.K. E.M. H.E.W. J.H.H. I.T.A.A. J.W.C. S.C. R.M.T. J.F. L. E.H. F.L. J.C. J.K. R.D.Y. L.E.T. Mrs. F.J. B.W.R. W.K. J.R.A. P.G. D.H.M. A.H.H. N.H. H.M. J.D.W. G.B.W. Mrs. D. J.A.M. E.G.S. M.G. A.R.S. J.C.W. W.W. E.W. B.B. J.C. W.D.J. J.P.C. W.R. A.J.M. E.C. I.F. M.S. T.S.C. H.T. H.A.H. M.F.G. W.F. W.A.F. S.M. R.S.L. A.S.C. L.W. J.D.K. Mrs. D.R.

Fallen Asleep.

MR. J. BROADBERRY, J.P., first and only working-man magistrate of Lincoln, and for over forty years superintendent of the Primitive Methodist Sunday School in that city.—The Independent body in Wales loses in the death of Rev. D. M. DAVIES, of Talgarth, its oldest minister, known throughout the Principality as "Mr. Davies, Cerygcadarn."—Rev. THOS. LADDS, vicar of Leighton Bromswold, aged ninety-three. He was ever true to the principles and teaching of the old evangelical school.—Rev. F. C. GUISE, formerly Rector of Longhope, Glos. Latterly he had lived in retirement at Torquay.—Rev. J. G. BERESFORD, rector of Bedale, after a long and painful illness. He had been rector for thirty-eight years, prior to which he was rector of Wymondham.

RAILWAY GATE-KEEPERS.—Years ago, a lady organized a mission for sending, monthly, reading to gate-keepers on the Great Western and other railways. A correspondent wishes to communicate with the originator, or with some one who will relieve her from a charge of the work, which she is now compelled to relinquish. We shall be glad to receive and forward particulars.

Church Notes.

The converted Hindoos of Hyderabad have, in order to raise two hundred guineas for the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund, resolved to have a weekly fast.

Bishop Lloyd, who recently resigned the see of Bangor in consequence of a paralytic seizure, is lying hopelessly ill at Llanarth, his native place, in Cardiganshire.

The Baptist church at Wishaw has been reopened, after extensive alterations and improvements, estimated to cost fully £1,000. A hall to accommodate over 200 persons has also been built.

At Weston-super-Mare (Bristol Road), Rev. R. S. Latimer celebrated on Sunday last the fourth anniversary of his settlement in the town, and the second of his pastorate of Bristol Road Church.

A mission church, built at Cannich, in connection with the Church of Scotland, has been opened for public worship. The congregation was large and representative, and Dr. Norman Macleod was the preacher.

The Bishop of Liverpool continues to derive benefit by his change and rest at Lowestoft. The latest reports received in Liverpool show that his lordship's condition has undergone considerable improvement.

Union Congregational Church, Brighton, has decided that the Forward Movement shall be proceeded with. An effort is to be made to sell the old chapel, with a view to applying the proceeds towards the purchase of land adjoining the present church.

In connection with Wesleyan evangelistic services at Kilrush, a sensation has been caused by the conversion of a young Roman Catholic girl, and her subsequent persecution, part of which was being followed to church on Sunday by a jeering crowd.

In connection with the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission a successful gathering was held at St. John's Square Chapel. Rev. David Roe said that their work was not of a local character; the sailors they ministered to, visited every shore in the world, and the spiritual results were far-reaching.

Rev. W. Alex. Findlay has resigned the pastorate of "Carey" Church, Reading, which he has held for the past eleven years; having received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the Baptist Church, Holmerdale Road, South Norwood. He hopes to commence there on the first Sunday in October.

On Thursday last the foundation stones of the new central hall of the Wesleyan South London Mission were laid. The building, which will cost £30,000, is the first central hall erected in London for mission work by the Wesleyan body. When completed the upper hall will hold 2,200 persons, and the lower 800.

Rev. S. Hooke has just completed twenty years' service as Rector of Clopton, near Woodbridge, Suffolk. During that time he has worked unceasingly for the good of the parishioners, and his ministry, which has been carried on on strictly evangelical lines, has been very successful. At special commemorative services, the Bishop of Norwich and Rev. W. Hay Aitken took part.

The Wesleyan London Mission held a great meeting at St. James's Hall. Rev. J. E. Wakerley said the mission in its varied agencies had gained the confidence of the people, which showed that though outside the churches the masses were not hostile to Jesus Christ. They had proved that if the working men were not in our churches it is because they had not laid ourselves out to get them.

The committee of the C.M.S. have approved a scheme whereby they take over much of the work and many of the workers of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. Consequently various institutions at Nazareth, Bethlehem in Palestine, at Multan and Agra in India, and at Hong Kong and Fuh-chow in China, will be added to the institutions at those stations managed by the C.M.S.

The Congregational Twentieth Century Fund will be helped by the recently issued handbook, which gives a brief statement of the historical facts of modern Independency and the principles for which Congregational churches exist, with a comparative statement of their position in 1800 and 1899. The growth in churches, Sunday schools, and pastors is set forth, with a summary of the world-wide statistics of Congregationalism.

The Bishop of Mackenzie River says:—"A find of rich gold-bearing quartz, towards the eastern extremity of Great Slave Lake, is reported, and a rush is being made thither. If it be anything like as rich and extensive as is stated, a mining town will soon spring up there, and we ought to have a clergyman on the spot; but alas! alas! I am so short-handed that I can spare no one for that work. What is to be done? Will no one help us?"

The Freethinker of the 23rd ult. remarked:—"The American clergy would dearly like to get rid of Col. Ingersoll. He won't die, he won't get converted, and he won't stop lecturing." The daily papers of the same date announced: "Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the celebrated . . . infidel died at his country house . . . at half-past one this afternoon, of heart disease. . . . Lunch had just been announced . . . and Col. Ingersoll had risen from his chair . . . to go to the dining-room, when he suddenly fell back dead!"

The villagers of Holton, near Oxford, had to go without their morning service on Sunday week. The rector being away, another clergyman had promised to officiate, but the man who was sent to fetch him forgot his address, and returned alone. The clerk tolled the bell till half-past eleven, and then a member of the congregation arose, and told the shepherdless flock that he would himself offer up a prayer. He did so, and the worshippers then dispersed.

The Archbishop of York consecrated a new church at Bishopthorpe, the site of which is within 100 yards of the Archiepiscopal Palace. The old church had become too small for the population, and as the ground for enlargement was limited, and, being on the bank of a river, frequently flooded, it was determined to have a new building nearer the centre of the village. This has been accomplished at a cost of about £5,000 of which £1,000 has yet to be raised.

In an interesting letter on the foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church of England, Rev. A. Connell remarks: "The general outlook is exceedingly hopeful. Our missionaries were never more enthusiastic about their work. The Church at home, we believe, needs only to be informed of the growth and possibilities of the work to give generously for its support. But in spite of these encouraging signs, the lack of men, both to supply the vacancies on the field and to fill new openings, is a serious disappointment and embarrassment."

Appeal.

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND.—Mr. John Carroll, writing from 47, Cass Street, Nenagh, says it is proposed to procure a movable wooden hall for use in evangelistic work in the south of Ireland. A structure to seat from 100 to 200 people will cost about £50. Further information may be had from Mr. Carroll, at the address given.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, July 31st, 1899.

	£	s.	d.
M.G.W., Tamworth—Please say whose Holiday Fund.
Pundita Ramabai's Work (India)—C.F., £1 10s.; M.P.A.,* 4s. 4d.	1	14	4
S. American Missionary Society—C.F.	1	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India—U.S.	0	10	0
Deacon Abraham's Orphanage—C.F., £1; (Work) U.S., 10s.	1	10	0
Work among Priests in France—C.F., 10s.; U.S., 10s.	1	0	0
China Inland Mission—W.O.W., 5s.; M.P.A.,* £2 2s.; J.A.M., 10s.: Shop Assistant, £1 10s.; U.S., 5s.; For Jesus' Sake, 10s.; Bert, 5s. ...	5	7	0
London Missionary Society—(Tanganyika) M.P.A.,* 3s.; (Mrs Longhurst Ward, Madras) M.P.A.,* £2 1s. 1d.	2	4	1
Spanish Evangelization Society—M.P.A.*	0	7	7
Society Relief Persecuted Jews (Abraham's Vineyard)—M.P.A.*	1	7	3
Miss S. Page, Haiti (Syrian Testaments)—M.P.A.*...	1	1	0
Poor Jews Jerusalem—Newport, I.W.	0	10	0
North African Mission—(Miss Jennings) M.P.A.,* 15s. 10d.; (Mr. P. Smith) M.P.A.,* 17s. 3d.; (Miss Boyt), M.P.A.,* 16s.; (M. Rolland) W.G.G.H., £13	15	9	1
British and Foreign Bible Society—Bert	0	5	0
Church Missionary Society (Famine in East Africa)—M.P.A.,* 5s. 3d.; late C.M.S., £2 10s.	2	15	3
Barcelona Protestant Hospital—U.S.	0	5	0
Baptist Missionary Society—(Wathen Station) M.P.A.*	0	3	3
Church of England Zenana Missionary Society—(Majeatha Station) M.P.A.*	2	18	0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—(Village Work) M.P.A.*	1	10	9
Tibetan Pioneer Mission—(Miss Taylor) M.P.A.* ...	1	5	4
Highways and Hedges Mission, South Arcot—M.P.A.*	0	8	0
Mr. G. R. Witte (Steel Boat for Amazon)—M.P.A.*	2	2	0
Missionary Bureau—M.P.A.,* £5; (Ngelani Mission) M.P.A.,* £1 1s.; (Mission to the Abors) M.P.A.,* £4 2s. 8d.; (Million Farthing Fund, Mandla Leper Hospital) M.P.A.,* £2 2s.	12	5	8
Day Schools, Tientsin—Thankoffering L.	5	0	0
Friends of Armenia—(Orphans) E.P.G., £3; (Women and Children) late C.M.S., £2 10s.	5	10	0
Famine S. Russia—S.F.D., £1; Isa. lviii., 6-7, 4s. 9d.; late C.M.S., £2 10s.	3	14	9
Student Volunteer Mission Union—M.E.M.	1	0	0
Armenian Relief Fund—E.B.	0	10	0
Moravian Missions—H.B., £1; M.E.M., £1... ...	2	0	0
Assyrian Mission (Nestorians)—D.S.	0	1	0
Soldiers' Home, Cairo—U.S.	0	5	0
Figueras Mission, Spain—U.S.	0	10	0
Work at Evian les Bains—U.S.	0	5	0
Pastor Lecoat's Mission, Brittany—U.S.	0	10	0
Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque—U.S....	0	5	0
Balaghat Mission, India—U.S.	0	10	0
Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society—U.S....	0	10	0
Belgian Missionary Church—U.S.	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—U.S.	0	5	0
Society Suppression Opium Traffic—M.E.M.... ...	0	10	0
Dr. Commandi's Work—U.S.	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Wall's Work, Rome—U.S.	0	5	0
Persecuted Stundists—U.S.	0	10	0
Late Cavalier Cappellini's Work, Rome—U.S. ...	0	10	0
Blind Chinese, Mr. Murray—U.S.	0	10	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—J.A.M., 10s.; H.H., £1; M.G., 10s., (Camping Out) B.E.M., 11s.; A.S.G., 5s.; E.A.M., 2s.	2	18	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—C.F., £1 10s.; E.G.P., 3s. 6d. J.A.M., 10s.; A.S.G., 5s.; H.B., £1; M.G., 10s.; late C.M.S., £2 10s.	6	8	6
Day in the Country Fund—Mrs M., £1; J.A.M., £1; D.V.S., 5s.; A.S., 5s.; Hadley, 5s.	2	15	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—Mr. M. 10s.; E.C., £5; H.B., £1; Bert, 5s.	6	15	0
N.E. Lon. Gospel Mission (Children's Holiday Home)—F.R.J., Dulwich	0	2	0
Salvation Army—H.H., £1; (Iceland) M.P.A.,* 10s.	1	10	0
The Bible League—M.P.A.*	0	8	2
British Society Propagation Gospel among the Jews—M.P.A.*...	0	10	0
Welcome Mission, Portsmouth—M.P.A.*	0	10	0
Home for the Fatherless (Mr. Toye)—M.P.A.* ...	0	7	6
Brentwood Conference Hall—M.P.A.*	0	2	6
Jubilee Mission, Hoxton—M.P.A.*	0	6	6
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—J.A.M. ...	0	10	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—J.C.P., 5s.; M.A.W., £1; M.G., 10s.; Selbourne, £1; Bert, 5s.; (Children's Holiday Home) D.D., 2s. 6d.; A.S.G., 5s.; Highgate, £1; late C.M.S., £1 5s.; (Convalescent Home) late C.M.S., £1 5s.	6	17	6
Miss Perram's Poor Fund—E.P.G.	1	0	0
London City Mission—A.S.G.	0	5	0
Uncle Tom's Cot (see page 22)	0	1	6
Kensit Crusade—Charley, 5s.; U.S., 5s.; Late C.M.S., £2 10s.	3	0	0
Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Cripple Children's Holiday) An Invalid, 10s.; F.P., 5s.; M.A.A., 10s.; late C.M.S., £2 10s.	3	15	0
Ragged School Union—(Day in Country) late C.M.S., £2 10s.; (Cripples' Holiday), Francie, 10s.; E.A.M., 2s.; E.T., 10s.	3	12	0
Protestant Alliance—J.H.H.	5	0	0
Evangelization Society—H.B., £1; M.E.M., £1 ...	2	0	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—H.B., £1; U.S., 5s.; late C.M.S., £2 10s.	3	15	0
London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews (Hospital, Jerusalem)—E.H.	1	0	0
Joshua Poole—K.K.K., 5s.; M.E.M., 5s.	0	10	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—U.S., 5s.; M.E.M., £1 ...	1	5	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—U.S.	0	5	0
Rev. T. Connelian's Work—U.S.	0	10	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—U.S.	0	10	0
Friendless and Fallen—M.G.	0	10	0
Scripture Gift Mission—Heb. iv. 12	0	10	0
Stockwell Orphanage—M.E.M.	1	0	0
London Temperance Hospital—M.E.M.	2	0	0
Cardiff Forward Movement—M.E.M.	1	0	0
Mr. Wintle's Work, Pontymotle—M.E.M.	0	5	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Hadley	0	10	0
Sailors' Welcome Home (Miss Child)—M.E.M.	0	10	0
Open Air Mission—M.E.M., 10s.; Late C.M.S., £2 10s.; (Race Course) Thankful Sympathizers, £1	4	0	0
George Yard Ragged School—(Holiday Fund) Late C.M.S.	1	0	0
Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel—Late C.M.S.	1	0	0
Mr. Chas. Cook's Work (Prison)—Late C.M.S., £1; U.S., 5s.	1	5	0
Open Air Mission, Ireland—Late C.M.S.	2	10	0
Irish Evangelization Society—Late C.M.S.	2	10	0
Irish Church Missions—Late C.M.S.	2	10	0
Liberated Prisoners' Relief—B.C.	10	0	0
Total	£167	17	6

* Missionary Pence Association.

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday)—I., £1.

Russian Famine Relief Fund (Mr. Woolrych Perowne)—A Friend in Dresden, 5s.

Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission—Galatians vi. 2., Six comforters, and tracts.

West London Mission (Country Holiday Fund)—Inasmuch, 10s.; A constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN, 5s.

The Lay Secretary of the Church Missionary Society begs to acknowledge with thanks 10s. from K.K.K. for the East Africa Famine Fund.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 93, High-street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent; and for the relief of the poor—E.P., 3s. C.A.H., £1 1s.; M., 2s.; M., 10s.; W., 10s ; J.E.T., 3s.

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The Night Shelter.
The Refuge.
Eight Children's Cottage Homes.

All the Homes are full, but we are just now absolutely without Funds.

SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for to meet the present urgent need.

MARY H. STEER.

28, Betts Street, St. George's,
London, E.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.), its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers gladly received.

Home Secretary: REV. ARTHUR N. JOHNSON, M.A.

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY

Was founded A.D. 1807 for the RESCUE and FREE Admission of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN from all parts of the United Kingdom. 100 Inmates.

MANY THOUSANDS of Penitent Women have been welcomed to these HOMES. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases, and to assist the Industrial Department by patronising its Laundry.

Funds are urgently required to meet pressing needs and to discharge a Mortgage Debt of £4,000, and will be thankfully received by Mr. W. PAGE, Secretary, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington, London, N.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to enable

CURRENT LIABILITIES,

which amount to about £250,

to be met.

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME and ORPHANAGE.

FOUNDER AND PRINCIPAL:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON.

4,300 Children rescued. 1,100 now in residence. 46 waiting to come in.

Amongst the Children are the ORPHAN, DESTITUTE, CRIPPLED, BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB, or otherwise DISADVANTAGED.

IMMEDIATE HELP IS URGENTLY NEEDED.

ADDRESS:
REV. DR. STEPHENSON,
BONNER ROAD, LONDON, N.E.

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE decision of the Archbishops on the legality of incense and lights carried in procession comes as a welcome surprise to most, though it is felt to be a severe blow by the high Ritualists. They have delivered it as their judgment that whereas incense burnt for the purpose of fumigating or sweetening the air of a church is permissible, its ceremonial use is not so; and while lights used for beautifying a church are within the law, the ceremony of carrying them about is another matter, and unlawful. The illegality comes in with the ceremonial uses of these symbolic rites. The decision is a blow against sacerdotal doctrine as such, and it is the doctrine that is dangerous. The deliverance of the two primates is therefore a severe blow to the Ritualists.

With the decision of the Archbishops on the questions submitted to them, the Ritualistic controversy enters on a fresh phase. Though their judgment has no binding force, it comes with the full weight of the highest episcopal authority and prestige. It places those, who have recently been clamouring against the interference of Parliament with matters of faith and practice in the Church, on the horns of a serious dilemma. Either they must bow to the judgment and give up their illegal customs, or they must stultify their demand for the maintenance of the authority of the Church within her own borders.

Whatever be the ultimate action of the Ritualistic party with regard to the judgment, it has so far been one of open disobedience and defiance. Judging from last Sunday's services, it does not appear that any considerable number of men will abandon the use of incense.

Strange misconceptions are to be found among disputants in ecclesiastical controversy. It was recently suggested by a correspondent in The Times that Evening Communions were an innovation of the Low Church party, only dating back some fifty years. Canon Fleming very properly replies:—

I venture to assert, without fear of contradiction, that Evening Communions were not introduced by the Low Church party fifty years ago, but date back more than 1,800 years, from the evening when the Divine Founder instituted the Holy Communion, and left to his Church no word of direction as to the hours at which it was to be received.

That the Peace Congress has done real good is evident from the tone of the speakers—notably that of the President, M. de Staal—at the closing session. The Times correspondent wrote strong words of encouragement at the altered tone of the delegates as the meetings went on. "Two and a half months ago," he says, "the atmosphere at the House in the Wood was one of frigid reserve, not to say mutual distrust. Yesterday was like the breaking up for holidays at school. Everybody was pleased with everybody else." Others speak of the growing interest felt by the members of the Conference in their work, and that many who at first were most ready to scoff seemed at last most deeply impressed with the value of the work. "The good seed," said the President in his final remarks, "has been sown; let the harvest come." To have promoted the sense of goodwill and mutual confidence among the diplomatists of Europe, is thus a great step towards the maintenance of permanent peace.

The Peace Conference contains the starting point of many new things in the history of the nations. 1. It was itself new; the nations can meet in peaceful conference and discuss things of common interest. Russia may be a despotism, but it meets other countries in a common Parliament. 2. Arbitration is arranged for, rather than war. 3. The arrestment of military and naval expenditure is recommended, and may at some future time be taken earnestly in hand. 4. Her Majesty, as a mark of her appreciation of her chief delegate's labours, bestows on him a peerage.

Recent prosecutions (happily abortive) suggest that Government or local inspection of houses where large numbers of people sleep or work may be a good thing, but can sometimes be well dispensed with. If we can obtain management which is honest and sound, then it is best to let it alone. Common lodging-houses need inspecting for very good and sufficient reasons; but shelters, which are worked as religious undertakings, and poor men's hotels, which are worked as philanthropic, but paying, concerns, are best left to the public. We want freedom and elasticity in our social arrangements. It will never do to name a man a pauper, and rob him of his self-respect, so long as he can pay his way, though it be in a humble degree; and it will not do to hamper the churches in their attempts to reach "the submerged," and bring them up again into the sunlight.

A few weeks ago the Christian conscience of this country saved us from the scourge of the seven-day newspapers; a swift, short, uncompromising fight, and the thing was effected; but our real danger is that the Sunday will be filched from us bit by bit. The opening of music halls under the pretence of public worship, the opening of the Crystal Palace for concerts and public dinners, the opening of libraries and museums: all this going on in the metropolis and in large cities will work incalculable mischief, and will surely spread to smaller places. Of course, the men who favour these things will point to the open public-house, and say, "What of that?" We can only say, "It is a curse which we want to remove." We agree with the President of the Wesleyan Conference, that the Sunday will have to be guarded by Christian public opinion, and we have seen how powerful that is.

While we uphold the ancient right of Englishmen to speak and preach in the open-air, we would remind those who use it that they should have due regard to the comfort and well-being of every one. It were mockery to preach the Gospel of love close to a house where a patient is lying sick, and to whom the noise is an insupportable burden. Nor is it a courteous or brotherly thing to hold an open-air service at such a time and place as to disturb another congregration. The abuse of liberty endangers its continuance; it should be used as not abusing it.

The successful plan of appointing holiday chaplains and preachers in the popular resorts of Switzerland and Norway has suggested arrangements for the holding of interdenominational evangelistic services in Paris during the International Exhibition of next year. It is proposed to erect a temporary building in the Exhibition grounds, or near to them, wherein to hold services throughout the period of the Exhibition. It is to be hoped that this excellent idea will be matured. There will be a unique opportunity, and if it is adequately seized, it may lead, under the blessing of God, to splendid and permanent results. Any good done there will be carried as seed to the four quarters of the world, and bring forth its own harvest. But it must be carried out on a bold and impressive scale.

Another scheme on which the National Free Church Council has embarked is one for developing the lay preaching powers of the Free Churches of all denominations. Rev. W. D. Maclaren, a nephew of the great Manchester Baptist preacher, and a man of great ability, has undertaken to deliver a series of lectures during the coming winter under the auspices of the Council. His chief subject will be the importance and best methods of private Bible study and pulpit or class exposition, which he enforces by direct examples, and by practising the preachers in the analysis of a given passage, and in the suggestion of sermon outlines from it. This is a very promising breaking of new ground, and, if well followed up, should have important results.

Dr. Davison called attention to a most important thing in the Wesleyan Methodist Conference when he insisted on the need for quiet moments, and remarked that Gregory of Nazianzen, was not the only saint who avoided ecclesiastical assemblies because they did not help the spiritual life. We cannot do without fellowship, but it must be fellowship in the purest and best, not in the lowest and worst of church life. Discord in a church will sometimes draw larger gatherings than come together for meditation and prayer. "Fellowship in Christ Jesus" is what we need when we come together, and always fellowship with Jesus whether we are alone or with each other.

An interesting experiment in the direction of fraternal co-operation between a big church and a little one is being carried on at St. John's Wood, where for the next month Dr. Gibson's congregation (Presbyterian) joins that at Grenville Place (Congregational) in celebrating united services on Sundays during the month of August. On the first two Sundays the latter church will be closed, and the remnants of the congregation will worship in the Presbyterian Church; and on the last two Sundays this will be reversed. In this way the smaller church will be much encouraged, and the sympathies of the larger will be developed towards its weaker sister. This plan might be well emulated in many districts during the holiday season with mutual benefit and interest.

Last week's debate in Parliament on the Transvaal crisis was so firm, and at the same time restrained, in tone, that there is real hope that it will prove a great step towards the amicable settlement of the questions at issue. The efforts of the "Imperialist" papers to rouse public opinion to boiling point against the Boers has signally failed; but the unanimity of opinion, in and out of Parliament, in favour of equal justice to our fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal, is deep and hearty. Patience and persistence are weapons which even President Kruger and his advisers are sure to find irresistible ultimately. The less we threaten, the stronger will be our case. It is a cheering sign of the times to find that Jingoism, as such, is going so much out of date. In regard to South African problems it was specially futile. The future of that country depends more on the maintenance of peace than anything else, and there is now a good prospect that peace will be maintained.

The anomalous power of the priest in the English Church is seen in facts pointed out in a strong letter by a layman to the Spectator. The writer speaks of a large and contented congregation, used to Evangelical and "old-fashioned ways," to whom was sent a new rector of the advanced Ritualistic type. Without consulting his parishioners, he soon "changed all that," and as a consequence the congregation scattered. The point of the situation lies in the fact that the congregation has no remedy, and that a bigoted clergyman can ride rough-shod over the convictions of his people. There is no reform more needed in the Anglican communion than the limitation of the clergyman's "unchartered freedom" to ignore the worshippers in his conduct of the service. But this will never come till the Church idea is made to include the laity as an integral part of itself. The trend of priestism is altogether against that admission, and herein lies its fatal fallacy as a theory of the Church.

Dr. Fairbairn, in an article in the Contemporary Review, gives to English readers a striking instance of how the idolatry of the mass, as practised by Ritualists in England, is looked upon by the Hindu.

"We," said the Hindu, "make an image, or a symbol, of our god; but we never confound either with the god it speaks of. The most illiterate person knows that there is one Vishnu and one Siva, one Krishna and one Vali, and that there is not such an infinite multitude of these deities as there are symbols or images in the land. But you, you take a piece of bread and a cup of wine; you mutter over them a prayer, and they straightway become the flesh and blood of your God, which you offer up in sacrifice and then consume. In all Hinduism you will find no idolatry so gross as this."

Does not the teaching of sacerdotalism present an almost insuperable barrier to the reception of pure Gospel truth by the educated classes in India? Are not souls for whom Christ died seriously deluded and betrayed by false teachers concealing the living Christ in the perversions of Romish symbolism? What guilt accumulates where these heresies are promulgated!

A committee of fifty, which has been investigating in the United States the economic aspects of the liquor problem, has come upon the fact that in the most highly skilled trades both employers and employed regard drinking habits as hostile to efficient work. Both masters' corporations and men's trade unions treat intemperance as an enemy to their interests. When shall we see joint meetings of men and masters in this country convened to consider how this enemy to all the interests of mankind for time and eternity can be subdued? When shall we see tradesmen combining against "the trade" which is a pirate among all trades? Would that we could see the churches united in one strong and resolute endeavour to drive from among us one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of the Gospel!

Thankful as we are for all strengthening of the bonds between the English and American people, glad as we are to see Americans in our country, we trust that they will not introduce among us "the colour problem." We say this because an Indian gentleman was lately told by a hotel proprietor, after he had taken his rooms, that he must not remain, for "all the Americans would object and leave." Now an Indian gentleman is a British subject (presumably), and so long as he conducts himself as a gentleman his colour should be no bar to his finding accommodation. We want none of the race hatred here that has cursed America.

In vain do men try to bind human thought, whether by political interdict, by religious tradition, or by church creeds. Russia, the land of interdicts, traditions, and creeds, is honey-combed with sects which do not acknowledge her church, and in the arms of a humble member of one of them the heir to her throne breathed a few days ago his last breath. From this same Russia comes the following apparently authentic story:—

Some time ago the Jews in Odessa held a meeting to congratulate themselves upon the revision of the Dreyfus affair. A young Jew rose, and in an eloquent speech said revision of the Dreyfus case put the obligation upon all the Jews of the world to revise another unjust trial, which ended in an unjust sentence of death and the execution of the victim—namely, of Jesus of Nazareth. The Orthodox Jews present protested vehemently, but a number of young men declared the idea to be worthy of consideration, and they have since formed a society, who call themselves the "Revisionists."

If they revise that sentence, they will go on to revise a great many other judgments respecting Jesus of Nazareth.

It has often been charged against the "Pilgrim's Progress" that it teaches a selfish religion; but the imputation has never been difficult to meet. In the current issue of the Family Friend, Rev. J. G. Greenhough once more demolishes the superficial objection. Whatever else Bunyan does he shows the duty and value of single witness-bearing—living the Christian life alone if need be, and at whatever cost.

That was the most effective way of rebuking sin, preaching righteousness, and commending Christ to one's fellow-men. That is what the pilgrim does in the story; and the writer shows in a very touching way the result of this witness-bearing in the later experience of Christiana and her children. Christian's direct appeals to them have been met with derision, but they have watched his life and seen how a Christian died, and that sends them also on the holy pilgrimage. A man may preach Christ in vain, but he never lives Christ in vain.

Such as have misjudged the Puritans in the matter of a spiritual regard for those about them, will find a full answer to their criticism in the second part of the renowned "Progress." Children, neighbours, and others are there shown to go on pilgrimage as a result of Christian testimony and life. Mr. Greenhough truthfully remarks:—

The man who saves himself from this untoward generation does not a little in the way of saving others. An honest Christian life moving quietly among men, and showing the beautiful fruits of grace and righteousness, is often of more value than many fussy religious activities. And if such religion as this is selfish religion, we may well say, "Would God there were more of it!"

"These Forty Years."

Dear Mr. Editor,—It was quite at the commencement that, in a little village shop in Warwickshire, I was attracted by the orange colour of the wrapper of The Revival, and for forty years it has been, I might say, my most important means of grace. Since then, at home and abroad, it has ministered to me when otherwise, I should have been starved. Being deaf, I scarcely ever hear any preacher. I derive great comfort from the notes on the Bible and Prayer Union. Although not able to be with you in person, I shall not forget Aldersgate Prayer Meeting.—Yours ever gratefully,

Margaret Fraser.

3, Villa Noël, St. Léon, Bayonne, France.

Dear Sir,—Excuse me if, as a reader of The Christian for over thirty years, I venture to add my congratulations on its fortieth birthday. I have special reasons for so doing. It was your The Christian which led a fellow worker, now with the Lord, and myself, to start in Madrid a Spanish The Christian, on the lines of your paper, and often using translated matter from it.

It has been fulfilled in The Christian that God's thoughts were greater than yours as to the use which He purposed making of it as his messenger in many lands. Now, seeing this as a present fact, and by faith a future one, you can well say, "How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God!"—Very sincerely yours,

L. B. Armstrong.

Cité 1, Lausanne, July 31.

Dear Sir,—Though I had missed reading the letter of a "A Constant Reader" in the previous number of The Christian, I have read with pleasure Henry Varley's proposal as to a "Birthday Praise Meeting," which I see has been duly arranged for on August 14.*

With all my heart I go with this proposal, and intend to close this office for sufficient time to allow the Evangelistic Mission Staff to go to the City to join in the joyful meeting, which I am also glad to find is extended (seeing it is to be from twelve till two), for I am sure of two facts: First, that God has blessed, in the main at least, what has been, on the whole (as will be undoubtedly conceded by the great bulk of its Christian readers), a sound Scriptural testimony, from which so many other papers have been, alas! seduced. Secondly, that its Editor and Proprietors will be the first among its readers to give all the glory to God. May his Divine blessing be continued and increased with every number of its future issue!—I remain, yours sincerely,

C. Russell Hurditch.

164, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Dear Mr. Editor,—I feel I cannot hold my peace with regard to the fortieth anniversary of The Christian. In common with very many of our dear brethren scattered up and down the land, I was intensely interested in the letter of "A Constant Reader," as also in that of my beloved brother, Henry Varley. I think I must be one of the very earliest purchasers of The Revival, and, from that time, I have watched The Christian's remarkable progress, with much joy and thankfulness. To me personally, its weekly arrival during the years of my enforced retirement from active service, through complete nervous prostration, has been always welcomed with singular pleasure, and the perusal of its pages, during some of the darkest and most trying periods of my illness, has again and again brought to me sweet messages of peace direct from the tender and loving Lord, filling my soul with delight.

Indeed, next to the precious Word itself, nothing has been so helpful to me as The Christian, and I am but one of thousands who could testify in like manner.

I am unfeignedly thankful that it has pleased our heavenly Father to spare its well-beloved Editor, all these forty years, and I pray God that you may be much comforted and refreshed as you call to mind the immense amount of good accomplished by the wide circulation of the paper in every part of the world.

* At Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, from 12 to 2 on Monday next.

Glory be to God for your unflinching, faithful testimony for all these years.—Yours in much esteem and affection, Geo. Hatton.

20, Guildford Street, Tunbridge Wells.

Dear Friend Morgan,—I must be allowed to add my congratulations to those of Anna Shipton and Henry Varley in The Christian of the 3rd instant, and of the many others you have received ere this. I would gladly enlarge upon this interesting theme; but I am writing from my couch, and having just read for the second time the letter of our aged friend, "A Constant Reader," at page 11 of July 27, I see it would be impossible to express more fully my own feelings than he has so fully and so concisely done. Like him, I have read, systematically and with much edification, The Revival and The Christian during these forty years, and have also proved, as he has done, its usefulness "as a means of personal ministry among believers." For the greater part of these forty years I have been in the practice of keeping my bookseller supplied with a list of friends to whom he sends The Christian weekly, while others are sent to missionaries and others in foreign lands direct from the London office. So warm are the thanks of these friends, and so manifest the blessings they receive, that these lists increase yearly. It is disagreeable to have to speak of one's own doings, but I am anxious to encourage others to adopt and persevere in this practice, which I have so much enjoyed myself.

I am glad to observe that, in addition to fulfilling the main object for which The Christian was founded, it is a faithful Protestant witness against Popery and Sacerdotalism now that circumstances render such testimony needful, though very few of its pages are occupied with mere controversy, and its many thousands of readers who are met with throughout the world are known, not so much as Churchmen or Nonconformists, but simply as Evangelical Christians.

Many doubtless are looking forward to the meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday next, as suggested by Mr. Varley, and to me it would give peculiar pleasure to meet once more on earth dear friends with whom I have had the privilege of labouring during "these forty years." But it is some time since I have been in London, and being now an invalid in my eighty-fifth year, I can scarcely hope for this, though I shall certainly be with you in spirit.

Martin Hope Sutton.

Cintra Lodge, Whitley, Reading.

My Dear Sir,—Well do I remember my curiosity on a visit to London to find out Paternoster Row and Amen Corner, where to me the wonderful paper called The Revival came from. The Lord had filled my heart with pity for a class of ignorant men who, by hundreds, were engaged on my brother-in-law's property in Cambridgeshire. After having several mission halls built for them at different villages where their work lay, the poor fellows were most grateful to be taught to read and write in the evenings. Beyond that, we were at our wit's end, when the weekly paper opened our eyes as to the power of prayer, the reading of the Scriptures, and what a simple faith in the Lord Jesus meant.

The Revival messenger opened to us all a new way of working, of expectation—yea, of a present salvation. When we visited London we heard of the Barnet Conference, Reginald Radcliffe, and other burning hearts, hiring theatres and halls, wherein God displayed his mighty power. Then Denham Smith, at Freemasons' Hall, held a series of meetings. Plain questions were asked after each address, such as, "Are you saved?" Every one helped his neighbour. The heavenly fire of love broke all barriers down, and multitudes were saved. Then followed the enlargement of the precious weekly helper, and it was called The Christian.

In those days Christians who possessed large drawing-rooms freely opened them for Bible readings to instruct the ignorant; the joyous doctrine of the coming of the Lord was taught; and the necessity of reaching the perishing masses of our home heathen was pressed upon attention. Since then multitudes have been reached by a wondrous classification of old and young, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, sailors on sea and land, soldiers in camp, barrack-room or battlefield. And our revered Queen and her family are in touch with every kind of humane tenderness, ready for a visit to open a hospital or to secure funds to sustain such for the sick or dying.

These holy influences have spread even across the ocean, and our Colonies vie in how they too can find homes for our homeless, or even those thousands of little pauper children who, it has been proved, with healthy and loving environment, can be loved into useful men and women, rather than be here housed by thousands in huge barracks.

This is not written in the spirit of laudation for Mr. Editor, who would be the first to say, "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto Thy Name be the glory." These forty years have been illumined by a fuller revelation through the Holy Spirit of the Father's love to all sorts and conditions of men.

For one, I offer my sincerest gratitude for the fact that, through the pages of The Christian, holy friendships to last for ever have been formed. Fellow workers have found prayer, counsel, and help, bringing them into sympathy with comrades in the field, and thereby enabling them to share each other's sorrows and joys.

All spiritually-minded workers rejoice that our lot has fallen into these forty years of melodiously sweet and expressive songs. They have given new life to prayer and "sunshine in our souls," enabling us to reflect the glory which shall follow in each of our experiences in due time, when we shall be ever with the Lord.—Yours in his Name, whom we all love,

Annie Macpherson.

As we go to press we receive other letters equally cordial from Mrs. Meredith, Mr. George Pearse, and other friends.

Time to Awake!

By Dr. James W. Alexander.

To remain unawakened is madness itself, unless the Omniscient can be evaded, and the Omnipotent set at nought. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. vi. 7). Beware, lest God, long put off and thrust aside, swear in his wrath that you shall not enter into his rest. The downfall of the secure is sometimes precipitous. "He that, being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." This hardening is produced by a continued process of hearing God's call without heeding it. How knowest thou, O sinner, but that the sentence hath already gone forth against thee: "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground"?

There is a point at which Mercy, after many pleadings for the impenitent soul, stands aside and suffers Justice to take its course. Continued and obdurate resistance to the blood of the Lord Jesus is no venial sin in the sight of God. They who reject this Mediator need look for no other. "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." That measure of concern for sin, of which you are conscious while you read these words, is caused by the Spirit of God. Take heed how you trifle with this monition. The sacred fire within may, by your neglect or transgression, have been reduced to a single coal; a single beam of light touching your ruined state may glimmer within. "Quench not the Spirit." There are critical moments in every biography—instants on which are suspended heaven and hell. Every lost soul has had a last call. There is a possibility that this is yours. Therefore resist not the Holy Ghost (Acts vii. 51). How awful the moment in which an immortal spirit is left of God! The victim of impenitent procrastination may be as little aware of his doom as was Samson, when "he wist not that the Lord was departed from him."

What though no cloud of holy angels be seen with averted faces slowly to return from their watch beside the sinner? What though no muttering thunder rolls its portentous signal of woe along the horizon? What though no gigantic scales, held out from high heaven, bear the inscription, "Mene—thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting"? The deed is nevertheless done; the book of divine offers is closed; the last whisper of Gospel persuasion has died away. For some, this epoch coincides with the instant of dying. Who shall say, that for others it may not fall in with some earlier moment of life? The very hint of such a possibility might well electrify the stupid heart. Do not say there need be no haste, but go, O lingerer, to thy knees, and, bewailing thy impenitent mind, yield thyself to God.

Is the Great King among us of a truth? Then is it time for every living soul to be up and doing. Think you the blind, the halt, the maimed, the palsied, and the leprous, lay asleep when the Son of David was passing through the highways of Galilee and Judea on his errands of mercy? As little should the ungodly be sunk in apathy when the Lord, by his Spirit, is putting forth awakening energy in our churches.

To go untouched through an extensive revival of religion is to be distinguished in a fearful way. Thus we have seen the tall trunk blackened and scathed by lightning, rearing itself among the trees of the forest. Is that your case, my reader? You have listened, cold and hard, to the Word of God, which has been to others "as a fire, and like a hammer, that breaketh the rock in pieces" (Jer. xxiii. 29). You have been present during devotions, in which the hearts of believers have flowed like molten gold. You have been singled out for the prayers of the church, but you have wrought mightily against those prayers by your hard and impenitent heart. If you perish after all, it will not be by the common lot of the lost.

Consent to meditate, to consider, and to return. Our hope of this result leads us to address even the hardened—"If peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may awake themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will" (2 Tim. ii. 26 marg.).

There is a time, we know not when,
A point, we know not where,
That seals the destiny of men
To glory or despair.

There is a line, by us unseen,
That crosses every path;
The hidden boundary between
God's patience and his wrath.

To pass that limit is to die—
To die as if by stealth;
It does not quench the beaming eye,
Nor pale the glow of health;

The conscience may be still at ease,
The spirits light and gay;
That which is pleasing still may please,
And care be thrust away;

But on that forehead God has set,
Indelibly, a mark,
Unseen by man, for man as yet
Is blind and in the dark;

And yet the doomed man's path below,
Like Eden, may have bloomed;
He did not, does not, will not know,
Or feel that he is doomed.

He knows, he feels, that all is well,
And every fear is calmed;
He lives, he dies, he wakes in hell,
Not only doomed, but damned.

Oh, where is this mysterious bourne,
By which our path is crossed?
Beyond which God Himself hath sworn,
That he who goes is lost?

How far may we go on in sin?
How long will God forbear?
Where does hope end, and where begin
The confines of despair?

An answer from the skies is sent:
"Ye that from God depart,
While it is called to-day, repent!
And harden not your heart."

Studies in Zechariah:

The Second Vision.

Zech. i. 18-21.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE next vision was full of comfort. The good words and comfortable words of the previous chapter are continued, like the long-drawn-out sweetness of a lullaby.

As the little group of returned exiles looked nervously out on the mighty world-empires, which surrounded and threatened them, they were filled with alarm. How could they cope with them? There were Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their companions, of the nations whom Nebuchadnezzar had settled in Samaria; Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, so ready in their use of the pen to exert influence on the great kings beyond the river, to make the work of temple-building cease; and the reactionary influences at work in the far-distant court, always adverse to the resuscitation of a subdued nation, like the Jews, which had given such proofs of inveterate independence. Beneath the irresistible pressure of these hostile forces the work of temple-building had already ceased for twenty years, and there was every fear that the new resolve to arise and build would meet with similar opposition and a similar fate. There was singular appropriateness, therefore, in the prophet's vision. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, four horns.

In the language of a pastoral people like the Jews, the horn naturally represents the pride and power of the ravager and oppressor of the flock. The Divine Shepherd is heard from the very horns of the wild oxen (Psalm xxii. 21), and Daniel speaks of with the saints and overcame them, until the Ancient of Days came. The wild fury of man against the people of God is aptly described by the irruption of a herd of tusked boars, by the charge of the rhinoceros, or the rush of the wild ox on a harmless, defenceless flock, which has no powers of resistance, but only of flight.

THE HORN WHICH MADE WAR

The number four reminds us of the cardinal points of the compass, and indicates, wherever the people turned, there were foes, which were sworn to resist their attempt to renew their national life. On the north, Chaldea, Assyria, and Samaria; on the south, Egypt and Arabia; Philistia on the west; and on the east, Ammon and Moab. And it is probable that the Spirit of God looked beyond these to the four great Gentile monarchies, which have occupied, and still occupy, the "Times of the Gentiles," and which were represented in the four metals of Daniel's vision, or in the four great beasts, which one after another emerged from the sea.

As yet Babylon and Medo-Persia alone had arisen; Greece and Rome, the latter including the kingdoms of modern Europe, were to come; but all were included in this one comprehensive glance at the kings of the earth, which set themselves, and the rulers who take counsel together, against the Lord and against his Anointed, saying:

> Let us break their bands asunder,
> And cast away their cords from us.

We must not forget that God Himself gave these world-powers their authority. He says, in Isaiah, "I was wroth with my people; I profaned mine inheritance, and gave them into thine hand" (Is. xlvii. 67). And in Daniel He lifts the veil and shows that the world-rulers represent not flesh and blood merely, but malign and mighty spirits that actuate and inspire them (Dan. x. 13-20). As long as God's people are perfect in their loyalty and obedience towards Him, they need fear the power of no adversary whatsoever; but, when there is a break in the holy connection which binds Him and them in an inviolable safety, it seems as though all the forces of evil are set free to bear down on and ravage them, until their chastisement is completed, and they return to their first love.

If we were asked to name the four horns which are ravaging the Church in the present day, we should not hesitate to say that they are Priestcraft, Worldliness, Christian Science, and Spiritualism.

Priestcraft, which substitutes the priest for the living Saviour, rites for faith, and the sacrifice of the Mass for that once offered and finished on the cross, and which is corrupting and undermining, by the accursed system of the confessional, the home-life of our country, as it has that of every nation which has fallen under its blighting scourge.

Worldliness, to which our Lord alludes in his description of the lusts, the strong desires for other things, which enter into competition with the seed sown in our hearts, and make it unfruitful.

Christian Science, which, under the specious use of Christian terms, really eviscerates Christianity of its essential doctrines, making sin an illusion and its penalty a mortal dream; denying the Atonement, the true nature of Jesus Christ, and teaching men to look on sin, sickness, and death as matters of wrong thinking rather than wrong being and doing.

Spiritualism, which reduces Christ to the level of a medium, and works lying wonders by

THE AID OF SEDUCING SPIRITS.

As we look on these and kindred evils which are just now invading and ravaging the professing Church, we may well adopt the words of the Prophet: And I said unto the Angel that talked with me, What are these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem.

In every life there are similar experiences. Sometimes, when we lift up our eyes, we find ourselves begirt with opposition and threatened by hostile powers. Think of the martyr-host who have witnessed for God in every age, and who could reiterate the words of the greatest Sufferer of all, "Many bulls have compassed me, strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round about; they gape upon me with their mouth as a ravening and a roaring lion." Ignatius, who complains that his custodians were like "ten leopards, who only wax worse when they are kindly treated;" Blandina, the girl slave; Germanicus, the noble youth; the Waldenses, whose wrongs roused Cromwell's wrath and Milton's muse; the Netherlands, in their long conflict with Philip, when the leaders saw their homes covered again by the ocean from which their ancestors had redeemed them; Madam Guyon beset by husband, mother-in-law, servants and priests; Samuel Rutherford, and hundreds of his time, harried by the fiercest and most insatiable hate; William Tyndale, the celebrated translator of the English Bible; John G. Paton, beset with savages—these are specimens of a multitude, which no man can number, of every nation, and kindred, and people, which have seen the vision of the four horns.

But there is something beyond; and surely it is not without significance that the Prophet says: The Lord

SHOWED ME FOUR CARPENTERS

(or smiths, R.V.). We have no difficulty in descrying the sources of alarm for ourselves, but we need a Divine Hand to reveal our assured deliverance. "And Elisha prayed and said: Lord, I pray Thee open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw, and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

For Babylon, the "carpenter" was Cyrus; for Persia, Alexander; for Greece, the Roman; for Rome, the Gaul. Very different from each other, very ruthless and unsparing; but very well adapted for their work. Commenting on this passage, the late C. H. Spurgeon said: "He who wants to open an oyster must not use a razor; for some works there needs less of daintiness and more of force; Providence does not find clerks, or architects, or gentlemen to cut off horns, but carpenters. The work needs a man who, when he has work to do, puts his whole strength into it, and beats away with his hammer, or cuts through the wood that lies before him with might and main. Let us not fear for the cause of God; when the horns become too troublesome, the carpenters will be forthcoming to fray them."

Remember how in every age He has found his appropriate messenger. Athanasius frayed Arianism, and Augustine Manichaeism; Luther frayed the power of the Pope in Germany, and rough Hugh Latimer in England; Wesley and Whitfield frayed the religious indifference of the last century. When Haldane went to Geneva, he frayed the scepticism which was destroying the Helvetian and Gallic Churches. The Lord knows where to find his servants, and when the predestined hour strikes, there will stand the workman ready. "These are the horns that scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head; but these are come to fray them, to cast down the horns of the nations which lifted up their horn against the land of Judah to scatter it."

O child of God! There have been many horns engaged in scattering thee. Year after year they have wrought sad havoc in thy plans, and cost thee bitter tears. But thine Almighty Friend is greatly displeased that they have hurt thee more than his purposes of chastisement required, and He has resolved that they shall be frayed. He is well able to do this, for He hath sworn that no weapon which is formed against thee shall prosper, and that every tongue which shall rise in judgment against thee shall be condemned. Since the discipline has fulfilled its purpose, it shall be stayed; since the refining fire has purged out the dross, it shall die down; since the winnowing fan has purged the chaff from the wheat, the grain shall no longer be tossed in the breeze. Comfort ye, comfort ye, saith thy God. "For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. In overflowing wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

Ross Bible Carriage, Tent, and Evangelistic Mission.—Mr. John Coates writes:—"We commenced tent work in a village in Gloucestershire on May 14, intending to spend a fortnight there; but such an interest was awakened that our visit was prolonged for five weeks. During this time many got blessing, and we expect to find fruit after many days. We then moved on to the adjoining village, where a similar interest was awakened, and a prolonged visit was made. Neither of these villages had been visited with a Gospel tent before. A letter reaches me from a village thirty-five miles west of Ross, saying, 'Bring your Gospel tent for a month. The village is steeped in Ritualism, yet many are hungering for the simple Gospel.' This village is now open to us, and a farmer has offered (a rare thing in such a village) land to pitch a tent on, for as long as needed. We have tent and workers willing to go, and if the Lord incline his stewards to send us the means, a tent will be pitched in that dark corner as soon as possible." Communications to Mr. Coates at "Northleigh," Cantilupe Road, Ross, Hereford.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 13. 1 Kings iii.

THIS that God did for Solomon, He is always doing for those who love Him. "Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David, his father. . . . The Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night." "Eye hath not seen the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him; but He hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit," and to us God says, "Ask what I shall give thee." Let us also, in the spirit of a little child, confess that we know not how to go out or come in, and ask that we may have an understanding and discerning heart. Is not this the same as the "spirit of wisdom and revelation" of which St. Paul spoke, and for which he prayed, for the knowledge of the Son of God, "the eyes of the heart being enlightened to know the hope of his calling, and the exceeding riches of his inheritance in the saints, and the greatness of his power toward them that believe"? This is an all-inclusive gift: it has promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.

Live deep in God. Do not be dazzled and fascinated by the attractions of outward circumstances. Find in Him, and his service, seclusion from the glare of the world. Be content to know his will and realize his purposes, and He will give thee all else which may be needed for this life and the next. Only seek for the tender conscience which love inspires, so that thou cry out when thy Lord is being trampled under foot. This is the lesson of v. 26.

MONDAY, August 14. 1 Kings iv.

What a picture of happiness! We can almost hear the gladsome voices of the myriad-peopled land, teeming with children, laden with wealth and prosperity. "Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating and drinking, and making merry" (20). It was the summer of the national life. Such will be the condition of this world, when Jesus reigns from the river to the sea, and all men are blessed in Him, and all men call Him blessed. And this is a picture of what thou too shalt experience, if thou yieldest the empire of thy soul to the King of Peace. Notice the various points:—

Supremacy. "Solomon ruled over all the kingdoms. . . . They brought presents, and served." But there is another King, one Jesus, at whose girdle hang the keys of Hades and of death; and to whom all races of beings, all angels, and all demons give subjection.

Peace. "He had peace on all sides round about him." But the Lord Jesus made peace by the blood of his cross, and preaches peace. Great peace have they over whose hearts He waves his priestly hands in benediction, and his peace is ultimately to settle permanently over our world.

Safety. "Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, all the days of Solomon." This lively pastoral image, so rich and suggestive, may have its counterpart in our lives also, for we may dwell under Christ's shadow with great delight, and his fruit may be sweet to our taste.

Large-heartedness. There is room in the heart of Jesus for us all. Without crowding, without intercepting the beams which fall from his face on any, without emulation or jealousy, the whole circle of his Church may share his blessed favour—each soul as though a monopoly was granted to it.

TUESDAY, August 15. 1 Kings v.

The wild storm of war which had swept over Israel, in David's reign, had died down, as the winter blast that howls through the forest. And in the summer-peace which brooded over the land, the time was ripe for temple-building. "David could not build a house for the name of the Lord, for the wars which were about him, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet." But when Solomon experienced rest on every side, his first thought was the Temple.

Is it not true that the noblest erections of our lives arise out of years of quiet and peace? When a man is battling his way through opposing foes, he is not likely to paint his fairest pictures, or sing his sweetest odes. You must be still if you will build temples to outlive you. While Mary was sitting at the feet of Jesus, she bethought her of the anointing, which embalms her name for ever. Get to thyself a quiet heart, in which passion's fever and clamorous greed are hushed; this is the best atmosphere for temple-building. Out of this thy holiest, noblest influence will spring and spread.

And make a league with others to help thee. Be not ambitious to do all thyself. It is a greater thing to show others how to work, and set them to work, than to do work which they might do better. Be frank, and say to Hiram, "Thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Zidonians." He will rejoice greatly, and do thee good service.

WEDNESDAY, August 16. 1 Kings vi.

It must have been very magnificent, that first Temple, on which the wealth and skill of the world of that time were lavishly expended. Cedar and fir, olive wood and gold, carved stones and cherubim, tapestry and damask, must have made a fine show. Not wonderful that it took seven years to erect and finish! Some of the foundations of that marvellous structure are still to be discerned, reared from the very foot of Mount Zion upwards, so as to increase the Temple area.

The most interesting statement is that of the absolute silence which prevailed during the erection. The stones were shaped at the quarry, so that neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron was heard in the house while it was in building. This is surely significant of deep, spiritual truth.

God's temples are not built with the accompaniments of outward show and noise, which we associate with the achievements of human genius. Just as Creation grew with its present beauty and order, amid brooding stillness, just as palms upspring, and flowers unfold, in absolute silence; so the Word of God progresses in human souls, in the uprising of the Church, and in the coming of the Kingdom. It is not possible to say, Lo, here! or Lo, there! The Kingdom of God cometh not with outward show. Without blare of trumpet or sound of drum, so as to be distinguished by the world, Jesus came the first time, and so He will come for his saints. Do not be disappointed if there are few traces of the progress of his work in thy heart or the world; the temple is building without sound of instrument or iron. More is being done than the ear can detect. "Ear hath not heard."

THURSDAY, August 17. 1 Kings vii.

The historian exhausts his vocabulary even as Solomon himself seems to have exhausted his powers of computation of the amount of brass work prepared in the clay ground between Zarthan and Succoth (47, 48). How often has human speech broken down before the far exceeding and eternal weight of meaning imposed on it by the attempt to describe the things of God! Like the good Zacharias, the seer beckons with the hand, but remains speechless, and men know that he has seen a vision.

But we must remember that this wealth of material, which so far exceeds powers of computation, was the result of David's wars and conquests. He had brought the wealth and treasures of the nations into the treasuries of Canaan. With his wise forethought he had prepared this great store for the very purpose to which his son placed it. And again we remember that the great multitude, which is gathered out of all lands, to compose the spiritual temple, will be such that no man shall be able to number it.

It should be noticed how greatly the vessels and arrangements of the Temple exceeded all that had been arrayed for the Tabernacle. God never repeats Himself. His progress is always from less to more. The rough sketch precedes the finished picture, and the model, the bronze cast. So the things in the heavens are greater still, more perfect, more delicate, more glorious. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which was natural. Since the spiritual has come, the natural is done away; and the Turk keeps Jew and Christian from Zion, as though to force them to seek God's Temple in the heavens.

FRIDAY, August 18. 1 Kings viii.

Nothing in the ark save the tables of stone. These remain, covered with the words of the Law. The rod that budded, the pot of manna, had served their purpose; but the word of the Law remaineth for ever (ver. 9). Whenever we have done all that heart can devise, generosity expend, or skill execute, we may expect God to come in glory, signalizing his approval (ver. 11). God gives us credit for what is in our heart, even though our purpose is never achieved. It was well that it was in thine heart to be a missionary, though circumstances make it impossible for thee to set thy foot on a foreign shore. It was well that thou didst intend to pay all thy creditors in full, though thy poverty makes thy purpose abortive (18-20). God keeps covenant and mercy with his servants that walk before Him with all their heart. What He speaks with his mouth He fulfils with his hand. He never raises hopes which He disappoints, either because He has forgotten or lacks the power (ver. 25). To pray toward the Temple, where were the Ark and the Altar, suggests the heart and eye lifted to the intercessory work of the Lord Jesus. Whenever, therefore, there is defeat, or sin, or failure of any kind, be sure to turn to Him, in full faith that He hears in heaven, his dwelling-place, and answers and forgives. . . . The man who kneels low before God may stand to bless the people of God. . . . Trust God to maintain your cause, and the cause of his people, as the need of every day shall require (59, R.V., marg.).

SATURDAY, August 19. 1 Kings ix.

God is Alpha and Omega. At the commencement and at the close of Solomon's great enterprise, He appeared to him. Let God precede and follow thee. Never begin a work without the assurance of his co-operation; and never close it without waiting for Him to appear the second time.

Obedience is the essential condition of establishment, whether of a kingdom or a life. "If thou wilt walk before Me . . . I will establish thee." "Be not carried away," says the sacred writer, "by divers and strange teachings; for it is good that the heart be established by grace, not by meats, wherein they that occupied themselves were not profited." It is a rare and beautiful thing to come on an established life, deeply moored and rooted, and rising up in perfect and regular gradations from year to year. The secret of such a life is instant and unswerving obedience to conscience and the Word of God. Rehoboam "did evil because he established not his heart to seek the Lord" (2 Chron. xii., 14). "Jotham became mighty because he established his heart before the Lord his God" (xxvii. 6).

The subjugation of the remnants of the Canaanite population, compelling them to subserve the national prosperity and bear the national burdens, is very suggestive. There are Amorites and Perizzites in all our lives; let us not be mastered by them, but arise to bring them under our yoke, making them minister to our growth in grace, and enlarge our wealth of experience and character. There is no event in your life that may not yield some element to your growing usefulness or holiness. Happy is he who can turn all metals in gold!

Protestant Federation in India.—An effort is being made to establish a Protestant Federation in India on undenominational lines. The object is to bind all Christians together in defence of their common faith, which is being attacked openly by Jesuits and secretly by Ritualists. Rev. Dr. Valentine, principal of the Medical Missionary College, Agra, has consented to act as secretary pro tem. Any of your readers who may be in India are invited to help and join. Yours faithfully,

Agra N.W.P., India ALFRED PERCELLI.

The Students' Conference.

BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONERS.

THE Aberystwith Conference, the opening meetings of which were described in our last issue, increased in interest and usefulness day by day. Our report, it will be remembered, concluded with the Monday evening's gathering. On Tuesday morning, the first fixture was a Bible study, by the BISHOP OF SIERRA LEONE, who instanced, in a few prefatory words, three men to whom he was personally indebted for guidance in the study of the Scriptures. The first was the late Dean Burgon, of Oxford, not so much by what he said, as by his love and reverence for the Word of God; Dr. Waller, late Principal of the London College of Divinity, so apt at bringing out things which ordinary readers pass by, was the second; and Professor Ruskin, lecturing in spiritual and poetical style on the contents of a mountain tarn, was the third.

Remarking on methods of study, the Bishop recalled the advice of a professor who had said, in a reply to a request for guidance, "Which way did you dress? What matter which limb goes in first so long as you get your clothes on? Practice will convince you as to the readiest means." Students would each find the most suitable methods revealed in practice. The speaker's own plan was to ask the Author and Editor of the Book to open his eyes. Did his hearers reply, "We all do that"? Yes; but did they regard it as the most important thing to get into a right attitude with God, remembering that "being" is more than "doing"? Turning to Exodus xvi., with particular preference to the Bishop drew a series of helpful spiritual parallels. The actual manna was to sustain in the daily walk. The spiritual manna is to strengthen us that we may walk in the way of the King's commandments. There is ever enough and to spare. It was an early morning gift, and the reason why some are found unhappy and irritable during the day is because, like pettish, hungry children, they have had no morning meal. It had to be gathered, too, on bended knee, a lesson that we must learn with humility of spirit. There must be, also, an eye to see as well as a hand to gather. Those who study the Bible lazily, lolling in bed, might be said to see with but one eye. As cleanliness is next to godliness, let them take a sponge bath, and with revived bodies, with both hands and eyes alert, be keen to obtain blessing. But the Israelites had not finished when they had gathered: the manna was to be prepared. It was to have a permanent effect, and surely was a daily gift in order that those who received it might consider the daily Giver.

THE GIVING OF THE MANNA,

A word as to the purpose of the gift of daily blessing. It is that we may serve Him. "Go ye into all the world," into Aberystwith as well as Sierra Leone, remembering that there is only one field: "the field is the world." Let all go at his bidding to serve Him faithfully, no matter where, living in accordance with his will.

An admirable example of a faithful servant, continued the bishop, is found in Genesis. In chapter xxii. we have Isaac, as a type of Christ, offered as a sacrifice. In the following chapter we have the death of Sarah, a type, we may say, of the Lord's people, the Jews. Then, in chapter xxiv., we have a type of the dispensation of the Spirit, the bringing home of the bride, the Gentile Church, for her Lord, as Isaac was comforted after his mother's death by the coming of his bride, Rebekah. In this twenty-fourth chapter there are no less than sixty-seven verses devoted to

THE ERRAND OF A SERVANT.

At a first glance this might seem out of proportion; but when we observe anything in the Bible that looks like disproportion, we may depend upon it that there is some special blessing there. It is so in this instance.

Rapidly noting some points for remembrance, the Bishop referred to v. 3: "I will make thee swear," &c. So we, as servants of God, must take the vow of allegiance before we set out to do his will. Verse 5 demonstrates the necessity of prudence, of clearly understanding the message and work. What is he to do if Rebekah refuses to come? In that event he is absolved. If the world will not come to Christ, at any rate, religion must not come down to the world's level. In v. 9 the servant swears to go through with the matter. So we, having put our hand to the plough, must not turn back. We have to bring back souls, a bride for our Master, Christ. The servant's prayerfulness, as shown in v. 12, teaches us to be definite in seeking blessing, and it is "for our Master's sake," not for our benefit. In v. 17 zeal appears, "When he saw the woman coming, he ran to meet her." How often, when we pray, do we run to meet the answer? Some people are zealous but not patient; but, the speaker pointed out, v. 21 shows the servant in question to have been both, for he could not only run, but hold his peace. Some, alas, only "meddle to muddle." "In quietness and confidence shall be our strength." In v. 26 he thanks in anticipation, "being in the way." Hastening on to the 52nd verse, he worships. His every step had been full of prayer and faithfulness:

Prayers and praises go in pairs,
They have praises who have prayers.

This faithful servant esteemed his mission more than his meat. He would not eat until he had told his errand, and how great was his humility. "I am Abraham's servant" (v. 34). It was enough to be so called. "The Lord hath blessed my Master, he is great." Then, with what haste he returned is shown in v. 54, while we have in v. 55 a lesson of the world's demand, "Let the damsel abide;" and in v. 56 the crowning blessing. In this wonderful chapter, the Bishop concluded, we have a full-length portrait of a faithful servant, such a servant as each of us should be of Jesus Christ.

After a brief interval came a gathering of an intensely practical character on "The Goal of a College Christian Union," Messrs. H. C. DUNCAN and S. F. HAWKES reviewing, in pithy and instructive style, a number of desirable aims, and suggesting increased usefulness in several departments of the social side of college life. Mr. Duncan pointed out the grand effect of a truly Christian character; adduced the testimony of a police officer as to the improvement of the moral status of students at one University as a result of a spiritual revival, and mentioned a body of Christian students who had served their college by taking successful action in the purification of the lecture-room from indecency. Mr. Hawkes urged a deeper comprehension of the underlying spirit and great ideals of the Student Movement, in order to preserve hope and confidence when met by the chill shock of the indifference of the non-Christian majority, and added a reminder that the conversion of one soul is as much a miracle as is the conversion of a number. The subject of the next gathering was, "How to Prepare for a Spiritual Awakening;" and familiar and specially welcome as the founder of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, both in America and in England, traced the rise and progress of the Movement, and praised God for its present dimensions—rejoicing, too, in the fact that so many of the former leaders are now in the foreign mission field.

REV. R. P. WILDER,

Coming to the great question of the meeting, Mr. Wilder said the crowning aim of the College Christian Union was to bring souls to Christ. By an awakening he meant a real revival wrought by God, not a fictitious one, worked up by merely human industry and enthusiasm. Let there be in each delegation a spirit that desired conversions more than the athlete loved to gain the prize, or the bookman the scholarship. Let there be definite prayer, remembering his promise, and that "Whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him."

Defining a number of personal and general difficulties that were hindrances to revival, Mr. Wilder earnestly pleaded for a humble searching of heart in the presence of God, for increased and prayerful study of the needs of the student field, and for meetings of the various delegations in their colleges to plan and pray for the evangelization of their fellows. Cheering his hearers with refreshing accounts of awakenings in various educational centres, Mr. Wilder instanced a college where a glorious spiritual work was traceable to the

FAITHFUL PRAYERS OF TWO YOUNG MEN,

and added news of similar revivals, reported at the Geneva conference by representatives of Universities and colleges in various parts of the world. The speaker asked that students should freshly take up the burden of their own college; advocated special efforts for the reclamation of backsliders, whose inconsistencies constituted such an obstacle to the work; and suggested the zealous study of the awakenings recorded under Samuel, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Ezra, dwelling particularly on the deep humiliation, forsaking of evil, and renewed study of God's Word, by which those awakenings were characterized.

At the conclusion of Mr. Wilder's address, the meeting was thrown open for the consideration of special problems and testimonies as to successful evangelistic work. Many useful hints and ideas were mooted, but the general feeling appeared to be summed up in the words "more prayer, and more personal effort on behalf of the unconverted." Good news of spiritual blessing, and souls won for Christ, came from students of Edinburgh, Durham, Liverpool, and Guy's Hospital, London.

Tuesday evening was devoted to foreign missions. The first speaker was Rev. R. P. WILDER, who, quoting Lord Curzon's utterance that "the true fulcrum of Asiatic dominion seems to lie increasingly in the empire of Hindustan," adduced statistics to remind his hearers of the dense populations of the Indian States, and recalled the fact that the country contains 60,000,000 of Mohammedans, and 240,000,000 who profess Hinduism. He dwelt on the appalling character of the latter religion, which has been described by a Hindu as "a religious chaos; a sea without shore or visible horizon." Moreover, "abomination worship is the main ingredient of modern Hinduism." Describing upon its devotees as a whole, and upon certain classes of them in particular, Mr. Wilder said that, in one of the three "holiest places," he had seen a group of nautch girls who had been taken to the temple to be consigned to a life of immorality, in the name of religion. Even in laws which deal with obscene offences, exceptions are granted to temples and religious cars, which are allowed to exhibit such things as would be illegal elsewhere.

ITS DEGRADING EFFECTS

Turning to the question of the Student Movement in India, Mr. Wilder gave some account of persevering effort in various centres, especially at Calcutta and Poona, by means of evangelistic missions and personal interviews. At Poona there were stormy experiences. Having taken a theatre for the delivery of "lectures"—the educated classes have a rooted objection to the word "sermon"—respectful attention was received, until a converted Brahmin gave a somewhat unwise testimony, and asked for a solution of the problem: "If cat is god and rat is god, and the cat eats the rat, does god eat god?" Pronounced opposition ensued, and persecution in various forms, until a Brahmin, who had taken a prominent part therein, ceased his efforts in consequence of a vivid dream which he had of Christ appearing to him. The aim of the work was to influence by in the life, showing Jesus to be not simply an historical personage, but a controlling force in the soul. As to the need of missionaries, nine-tenths of the population dwelt in the villages, of which there were no less than 700,000. Only one person in nineteen could read and write. Mr. Wilder concluded his comprehensive and telling address by urging home the question of personal responsibility.

MANIFESTING GOD'S POWER

Dr. LAVINGTON HART, one of the earliest student volunteers, and now a Chinese missionary, gave notable illustrations of the break-up of the old order of things in the Celestial Empire, and the strong demand for education according to the modern ideas of Western civilization. Education holds a premier position in China. The aristocracy is one of learning. To have passed certain examinations means, ipso facto, that a man is qualified to fill Governmental appointments. If, therefore, the students can be evangelized, the result must be the leavening of the land with the Gospel. Dr. Hart added a brief recital of fact in connection with his work, telling of a number of converted students studying their Bibles and pathetically praying for "poor old China."

The Bishop of Sierra Leone graphically described the work in his vast diocese, especially alluding to Free Town, where the native church evinces may cheering signs of DEVOTION AND ADVANCE.

The six churches in the town are well attended, and the members, out of their poverty, not only support the work, but contribute to missions to the heathen. Other departments include a hospital, dispensary, and industrial missions. The Bishop, after giving a moving account of the lamentable condition and great requirements of the hinterland, and tracing the recent rebellion to the objection of lawless chiefs to proper control, concluded with a searching appeal to his hearers to do the will, not a will of God. The purpose of the Almighty, concerning Israel, was to take them out of Egypt and place them in the promised land; yet, on account of unbelief, they had to wander for forty years in the desert, thus having to substitute a will for the will. Allowing the Spirit of God to bring Christ in all his fulness into the life results in doing, with a joyful heart, the will of God.

Wednesday's meetings were of a highly practical nature. At the first gathering Mr. G. H. Moule (Clare College and Ridley Hall, Cambridge) made some helpful suggestions on the object and conduct of Students' Missionary Bands, organizations which are most serviceable in stimulating interest in missionary work, affording information as to the aims and methods of the Student Volunteer Movement, and inspiring missionary ambitions. Subsequently there was some interchange of thought, one lady delegate voicing the strengthening sense felt in the mission field by the fervent interest and prayers of students at home.

Keen interest was displayed in the second meeting, the subject of which was the principles which should govern the use of money. Mr. F. Lenwood (Mansfield College, Oxford) spoke on the economy of spending, not the economy which prevents, but that which manages expenditure. A great economist had observed that the man who spent all might be the most thrifty, and the man who took every penny to the savings bank the most thriftless. The thought, Mr. Lenwood submitted, has a bearing on our relations with God. For want of governing ourselves according to sound ideas of efficient production, disaster is caused. Primarily, God wants us altogether, not merely our money, and no insistence on the one grace of giving should interfere with expenses to be incurred in fitting the individual for efficient service. Many alternate between self-indulgence and self-torture. Each need should be decided by our common-sense under the guidance of the Spirit. It is a duty to give ourselves to God in the best condition for successful work, thinking not so much of what we take from ourselves, as of what we give to God.

Mr. H. Weir (St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and Trinity College, Cambridge) said that we are God's trustees, provided with money which is to be expended for the benefit of mankind—amongst whom are ourselves. Accepting this, we shall regard ourselves as individuals supported with money lent by God, not as possessing money to spend part on ourselves and give part away. Living according to this principle, we shall avoid the two dangers—first, of impairing God's work by neglecting to spend when necessary; and second, of wasting God's money. The latter amounts to a misappropriation of funds.

Enumerating some guiding considerations, Mr. Weir said we must ascertain in what way the Owner would have the money spent. The need of the object, too, must be thought of. Sir Philip Sidney, at Zutphen, had his own necessities; but he gave away the historial cup of water as "thy necessity is greater than mine." In conclusion, gifts should be made secretly, to guard against pride; and sympathetically, for "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

A striking address was delivered on Friday morning by Rev. G. A. Johnstone-Ross upon PRACTISING THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

The mission of the believer is by practice and precept to suggest to men the presence of the Eternal. He is bidden to "deny himself." The primary significance of this phrase is not so much to cut off this habit or that pleasure, but expresses rather the confession of John the Baptist, "I am not." The denying of self involves the assertion of someone else—"He is." "He that cometh to the Father must believe that He is."

If we would live worthily the Christian life we must continually remind ourselves of (1) the priority of God's presence. He is there before we seek Him. (2) He is ubiquitous. Do not ecclesiasticize God overmuch, as if He were to be found only in, as it were, sacred associations. (3) He is "in secret," as declared by Christ in Matt. vi. 6, implying that, although He is present before we seek Him, there must also be the definite act on our part of seeking Him if we would come into fellowship with Him. (4) His is a mediative presence: (a) Through Christ—"The only-begotten of the Father, He hath declared Him." "No man cometh to the Father but by Me." (b) Through his people, for in fellowship with them do we attain greater fellowship with Him.

Following close upon this practical exhortation, Mr. Ross gave another address dealing with the Relation of Sanctification to Missionary Work. The ultimate hope of God's people is that "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ" (Rev. xi. 15). But ere this can be realized the kingdom of the heart must be subdued unto his will, nor can be fruitful until he has thus surrendered himself, body, soul, and spirit, unto Him who died for him and rose again.

THE MISSIONARY'S WORK

There are three conceptions of salvation that move different types of persons to enter upon Christian life and service:—1, the eschatological idea, in which fear of future punishment or hope of future reward is the prime factor; 2, the ethical conception, based upon obedience to the principles laid down in the Sermon on the Mount; 3, the sociological idea, which concerns itself with the elevation of the social conditions of mankind. Neither of these, taken singly, fulfils the plan of salvation. There is truth in each, but the three must be correctly balanced.

Some who have laboured in heathen lands have told us that nothing will adjust the balance of religious thought like studying the process of Christianization in virgin soil, where the impressions of the Gospel are received for the first time by those who have no preconceived ideas or prejudiced training as to its details.

The speaker then entered upon a line of thought, which seemed at first to be a digression from his subject, but, ere he concluded, his purpose revealed itself. He combated the Unitarian conception of Jesus as "a Man." As such the substitution of one man for another would be inherently an injustice; but not so when Jesus is regarded not as a Man, but as Man Incarnate—the representative of the race. He then delineated some of the

CHARACTERISTICS OF OUR LORD

as indicating one who was absolutely unique among men: (1) As to character—none like Him have ever united the qualities alike of man and woman. Either sex find Him adapted to their needs. (2) As to race—He is equally suited to every clime. (3) As to time—his words were not ephemeral nor limited to his own generation. (4) As to social position—we hardly know if He were nearest akin to peasant or king; nor (5) as to habits of life which preponderated, the convivial or ascetic, the contemplative or active. In all these respects men of every position and temperament find in Him a Friend and Saviour.

Now does this affect the missionary question? In this way. The universality of Jesus as God stands in strong relief to the tribal or sectional deities of non-Christian peoples. There are men who say "Jesus Christ for England, Buddha for India!" But Jehovah is God of every nation, and not of any limited sphere, and only in proportion as grasp this truth can interest in the missionary cause prosper in our hands. If our God is also the God of the heathen them must we face our responsibility to declare Him to those who, sitting in darkness, know Him not.

On Saturday morning Rev. W. D. McLaren, M.A., spoke on to our Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. McLaren, who has been a prominent figure at the Conference, and has helped many by his quiet talks to little knots of students, spoke of the need for absolute loyalty to the will of Christ, loyalty in ascertaining, in accepting, in doing, and in declaring that will.

PERSONAL LOYALTY

The bond of all friendship, he said, is loyalty. There is nothing so bitter to memory as the recollection of lapses of loyalty to our friends. Surely "sorrow's crown of sorrow" is the memory of our disloyalty to our Lord and Saviour. There are four chief ways in which our loyalty to Christ must be shown: in ascertaining, in accepting, in doing, and in declaring his will.

(1) In ascertaining his will. It is a common, but a great, mistake to try to do his will before trying to ascertain it. It is not the memory of a martyr to which we are loyal, but the presence of a Master. So we can always turn to Him in fellowship and seek from Him the knowledge of his will. It is not to be found out by superstitious tokens, easy to consult and easy to interpret in accordance with our own desires. It needs diligent search and patient waiting upon God. It needs, above all, a constant and prayerful reference to the Word of God in which that will is revealed. Yet there is no reason to be afraid of religious emotion, so long as that emotion is controlled by reference to the mind of Christ.

(2) In accepting his will. Paradoxical though it may sound, it is often difficult to believe that which we have ascertained to be true. If the truth we have ascertained is something we dislike, something from which we shrink, we are often tempted to "interpret" it in such a fashion as to interpret it away. For example, on studying the matter in God's Word, we may find that the view of God represented there is sterner and more solemn than we like — something too strong to please the mawkish sentimentality of this end of the nineteenth century. Are we, then, to try to explain it away? No, if we are loyal to Christ all truth ascertained must be fairly and frankly accepted as true.

(3) In doing his will. Christ never gives us knowledge for its own sake. He teaches us in order that we may put his teachings into practice. At the very outset of his ministry it was said of Him, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." And this means nothing less than the imitation of Christ. Thomas à Kempis' great book is, as someone has said, a better book to live by than to die by. It will make you feel how very far short you come of the perfect imitation of Christ. "What would Jesus do?" you ask. The first question is, "What has Jesus done? What is He doing now?" Let us see to it that all the different types of thought and habits of mind which have been so happily represented during this week of meetings shall find their proper consummation in vigorous and reconsecrated action when we go back to our work.

(4) In declaring his will. It may be that this is the only thing for which some of us are holding back, and in some respects it is the most delicate and difficult work that He calls us to. May I give you one word of earnest counsel? In dealing with souls, always try to deal with them on the lines on which the Spirit of God has already been dealing with them. For instance, if you are talking to a student of history, try to get him to see how God is working in the history of the world. Similarly with students of science and others. But, on the other hand, there is a danger lest we should be too accommodating, and suppress part of the truth through fear of giving offence.

And where can we get all this manifold loyalty? Just where you get your loyalty to an earthly friend: by constant intercourse with Him, by the "practice of the presence of God," by realizing that He who sits upon the throne of heaven is the man Christ Jesus, who has left us an example that we should follow in his steps. You have sometimes seen pictures in which the face of some well-known person is skilfully concealed in the drawing of a tree or a landscape. You only see the face as you look closely at the picture. Even so, as you look long and closely at the King upon the throne, you will see in the midst "a Lamb as it had been slain;" at the centre of the throne is the cross.

Mr. L. H. Gaunt, who is editor to the London Missionary Society, followed with an address on "Social Work." Taking Mansfield House, Canning Town, as an example of the Social Settlement, Mr. Gaunt gave a brief account of the work carried on there, and urged the students to consider the claims of settlement work upon them. He strongly recommended a year's residence at a settlement as an excellent preparation for missionary or ministerial work, and insisted earnestly on the importance of doing such work in a deeply religious spirit, and of letting it be clearly known from the outset that the object of the work was, first and last, a religious one. In this connection he spoke with candour of the comparative failure of the settlement ideal to win men where the Gospel was not kept to the front. He gave it as the opinion of some who have been in the work for several years that the men and women who have come to the meetings, and joined the various clubs and societies, have not, in the majority of cases, been secured as permanent helpers, because they have not been laid hold of by the Spirit of God.

We, he said, who have spoken to the people from week to week, have held up Christ as Master and Teacher, as Social Reformer and Example. We have tried to apply the laws of Christ to common life; but we have not—at least not so earnestly and consistently as we ought to have done — preached Christ crucified, and insisted on every man's need of a new birth. It was perhaps only natural that the early residents, believing that many of the people would fight shy of any openly evangelistic work, should have tried first of all to get hold of them in other ways, hoping that it would be possible, when once their sympathy had been gained, to speak to them plainly of their souls' need of Christ. It was natural; but I have no hesitation in saying that experience proves it to have been a fatal mistake. Having once taken up that attitude, it becomes increasingly difficult every month to change it. Let me say then most earnestly to those of you who are thinking of taking up settlement work: Let it be clearly known from the first that you are doing it as a servant of Christ, and with the aim of winning men to Him.

What countless opportunities you will have of leading men to Christ! There is no talent a man possesses which may not be put to the highest service in this way. Are you athletic? Join the football and cricket clubs, and your influence will soon be felt there. Are you musical? Organize an orchestral society or a singing class. Are you fond of science? Start a science class, and make it preach of God. Whatever advantages and gifts you may possess, you can use them here for God. Many of you are going to be doctors. Can you not give a year to this work before you settle down? Some of you will be lawyers, teachers, business men in our great cities. Will you not give your evenings to these hopeless brothers and sisters of yours? And you who are to be ministers and foreign missionaries, where can you find a better preparation for your life's work than in a year's residence among the toilers of the world?

The students, having had the claims of many different fields and forms of work brought before them during the week, were invited on Saturday evening to consider "The Choice of a Life Work." The first address on this subject was given by Rev. A. Lisle Carr, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. Mr. Carr began with a reference to Lot as "the disappointed man," the man who spoilt his life by making a wrong choice at a great crisis. In strong contrast to this stood the figure of Paul, who at the end of his life might fairly have been considered by the world a disappointed man, but who could say with glad assurance, "I have finished my course with joy."

Dr. J. R. Williamson.

Speaking of the difficulty of finding out what the will of God for each of us is in the disposal of our lives, Mr. Carr mentioned three slight "threads" which might help to lead us to it. First, family tradition had often to be taken into account; then come the wishes of parents, which could never be lightly set aside; and thirdly, there was a man's own judgment—his judgment of his own powers and aptitudes, his judgment of circumstances, and of the urgency of the various calls which come to him. It was not well to decide in a hurry: our Lord spent thirty years in preparation for a three years' ministry; Paul, though burning to preach the Gospel to his brethren, went first into Arabia to commune with God in quietness.

After Mr. Carr had urged the claims and opportunities of the ministry, Dr. Arthur Lankester, of Peshawur (C.M.S.), set forth very simply and earnestly the claims of medical missionary work on students. Miss Rouse brought the meeting to a close with a few weighty words on the need for trustfulness in making a decision: God is guiding us, and we need not worry. The only thing to fear is lest, through cowardice or selfishness, we make a wrong choice, and choose merely what is "good" in preference to the "best," which is God's will for us.

On Sunday morning all the churches and chapels in Aberystwyth were filled, many of them to overflowing. Most of the students went to Holy Trinity, where Rev. W. E. S. Holland, M.A., for many years one of the leaders of this Student Movement, was preaching. Mr. Holland spoke from the words, "Fellow-workers with God," and made a powerful appeal to the Church to awaken to its duty of evangelizing the world in the present generation.

In the afternoon was held what was to many the most impressive and inspiring meeting of the whole Conference. Farewell messages were given by thirty-two student volunteers who are going abroad before the end of the present year. Many of them were not present in person, but had sent messages to be read. No less than seven were going out as lady doctors. Many who were thus giving farewell messages were the men and women who have been the leaders of the movement in England during the last few years, and whose counsel will be sorely missed at future gatherings. There will be no fear for the cause of foreign missions so long as it keeps so powerful a hold upon the student life of our land. Would that our ministers and churches could rise to an equal sense of their privilege and their responsibility in this matter!

The last meeting of the Conference was held on Sunday evening, when Dr. Rutter Williamson spoke on "Friendship with Jesus," from the words in Mark iii. 14. "He ordained twelve, that they might be with Him, and that He might send them." He spoke of Christianity as a great system of friendship, the personal relation between Christ and his followers being always uppermost. Between friends, the one thing always necessary is harmony, and it is when we begin to think of the need for harmony between ourselves and Christ that we become most profoundly conscious of our own sinfulness. We must notice the diversity of Christ's friendships. What a strange medley of characters we see in that chosen band of twelve! The quiet brotherly Andrew and the fiery Zealot, the impulsive Peter and the calculating Thomas, the mystic John and the business-man Matthew. It almost seems as though our Lord had purposely chosen twelve men as diverse as possible in order to teach his Church a lesson of toleration and comprehensiveness. Among the 350 students gathered in this Conference, there are of necessity many different types of character, and we sometimes find it hard to see eye to eye with every man we talk to. Yet we are "all one," for Christ "has ordained us that we may be with Him and that He may send us." Let us cultivate his friendship and go forth day by day in its strength to overcome the world.

Early on Monday morning a special train took away most of the delegates. The thunderstorm, which had almost swept the camp away during the night, had evidently not damped the ardour of the men, and any chance wayfarer who saw the party in the station must have been struck with the fine type of Christian young manhood and womanhood drawn together by this Students' Movement.

It can be no mere sentimental piety which attracts so large a body of young men and women to such gatherings. They represent a force of intellect and of character, which is surely destined to play a great part in the religious life of the early years of the coming century.

And now all eyes are turned to the Great International Conference of the S.V.M.U., which is to be held in London at the beginning of January, and at which some 2,000 delegates are expected to be present. The prayers of all Christian friends are earnestly asked for the success of this important Conference.

Gen. Sir Arthur Cotton, R.E., K.C.S.I.

By LADY HOPE.

FROM his earliest days my father's life was one of earnest purpose. His brothers' recollections of him, too, all bear the same stamp. His characteristic zeal, his fearlessness and determination, were points that always marked him as unique amongst those who surrounded him, and these characteristics never altered.

He was born in 1803, and entered Addiscombe very early. He started on his Indian career at the age of sixteen, when he was, amongst a number of the cadets, drafted on to the Burmese frontier. When there, he was engaged at the first Burmese War, and had many narrow escapes of his life. Once he was with a small party of gunners, every one of whom was shot down except himself.

He used also to describe another occasion on the field of battle, when he could hear the bullets whizzing all round his head—but he remained unhurt! Several officers, who were his contemporaries, have told us of a terrible day when the fight was at its hottest, and he was seen alone leading a troop of men into the thick of the battle, cheering them on, and cutting his way through the enemy's flanks as he went.

He returned to India after the campaign was ended; and it was while sitting on the deck one evening, admiring the moonlit sea, and the sky illuminated with silver light, that the thought struck him most forcibly, "Who made these worlds? Upon whose handiwork am I gazing now? It is the work of God, our great Creator."

He had never been what is called a religious man, and had never studied his Bible; but this thought so impressed him that it brought naturally with it the practical inquiry, "If there is a great Creator, if He made the world, the sun, the moon, and the stars, what do I know of Him? Has He ever spoken? If so, what are his words? The Bible is the Word of God. I ought to read it; I should like to know what He says."

There and then, on the impulse of the moment, he went into the saloon, where the ship's officers and some of the passengers were engaged in playing cards. As he entered the saloon, he asked the question, "Is there a Bible on board the ship?"

A loud shout of laughter greeted his question; and he was asked if he was going to turn religious. However, on again making his request, it was suggested that some one present possessed a Bible, which was packed at the bottom of his box. It was brought, and handed over to him; and we may say from that hour, until the last days of his life, his delight was in the study of Scripture. He pored over the Bible that was lent him there; the rest of the voyage was full of the deepest interest to him, as he drank in this new life-giving truth.

When he returned to England on leave, life had a new aspect for him; he saw everything in a new light. Hunting, card-playing, dancing and other amusements and recreations, which formed a great portion of the interests of those amongst whom he spent his leisure time, were nothing more nor less than torture to him! He used often to describe what he felt when asked to join in these amusements, the hollowness of such a life, the way in which it pained him to see reasonable men and women thus employing their time; and I have heard some of his relatives describe his gloomy countenance as he sat moping in one corner of the room, while all the others were enjoying themselves. The fact was that he was seeking the Higher Life—he longed to know more of the true foundations of belief; he wanted to consecrate his energies to the Creator who had been so manifesting Himself to his heart; and his sole inquiry was, "How shall I live my life for Him? What shall I do for his glory and the benefit of men?"

This question could not be answered amidst the scenes of friendship in which he was then living. So, making his own choice, as usual, he struck out a path for himself. He went down to a village in Oxfordshire, where one of his brothers, who was an earnest and devoted Christian, a clergyman of the Church of England, and a devoted student of Scripture, had his tiny rectory. There my father remained for a time, helping him in his parish, and holding cottage readings, and together the two brothers would read the Word of Life and learn its blessed truths.

From a photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker Street, W.

He returned to India not only a devoted soldier, and keen about his profession, but earnestly determined to serve the living God, and to extend his kingdom to the utmost of his power.

His tour in Palestine took place about this time, and was marked by deep interest in the few missionaries whom he met and with whom he travelled, and also by the blessing that he was to some of the young Syrians he met in the Lebanon. One travelled with him, and left a bright testimony of the benefit he had received by his teaching.

When quite a young man, my father had so severe an illness at Bagdad, when with Lord Congleton and two other men, as he often used to tell us, that the coffin was made, no one thinking that he had many hours to live. But he was raised up again to carry on his great work in India; for when he had been some little time in the Madras Presidency, he undertook the promotion of irrigation works which were started in connection with the Cauvery River.

He went to Australia on sick leave, and was married there. Returning to India, he continued for thirty years his shemes for irrigation and navigation in connection with the Godavery river; all of which have brought priceless benefits to the countries that have been fertilized by them. But throughout his life, my father's only sorrow was the disappointment he experienced through not seeing the extensions that he desired in this noble work. Wherever the water flowed, it brought blessing and prosperity with it, the revenues were increased, the people were saved from famine and all its attendant evils, the country was enriched, and the way opened up for missionary effort without let or hindrance; and to this hour that oasis may be seen fertile and prosperous.

Can it be wondered at that he poured out the very longing of his heart almost up to the last month of his life in pleading with those in power to increase and extend these channels from river to river throughout that country? "India is a great responsibility," he would sometimes say. "It has been given to us by God, and, as a nation, we owe it a debt which we have never paid."

Both spiritually and temporally, he always had India much upon his heart. When he looked at the luxuries and enjoyments of those who dwell in this land, he longed to have them shared in the beloved field of his early labours.

He delighted in missionary work of every kind, and in every part of the world, and was an earnest and devoted Protestant. He loved the Church of England with all his heart, although, with a most sincere love and ardent enthusiasm, he also worked with every denomination which he considered to be maintaining the truth of God, and "holding forth the Word of Life."

He was always "up-to-date" in everything connected with the spread of the Gospel, even to the most distant places; whilst in his own neighbourhood, he was keenly alive to the importance of every step made for the furtherance of the good of the people, whether in Gospel preaching, temperance work, Bible classes, colportage, or out-of-door preaching.

It was, indeed, a touching sight on the day of his funeral, when we all stood in the picturesque cemetery at Dorking, to see crowding round the open grave numbers of men whom, by his kindness, generous help, and sympathy, I was allowed to gather into classes when they were boys, and lead them to the feet of the Saviour, whilst I helped them to learn the Divine truths of Scripture.

He built me room after room for the purpose of classes and meetings, where both old and young could be instructed in the Word of God. His enthusiasm in such work as this was unlimited, and it was always soul-stirring and encouraging beyond words to see his keen appreciation of every effort made.

I remember his words to me once when I asked him if he advised me to take a short journey for the purpose of speaking to some of the poor people, of Christ and his love. His reply was, "My dear girl, I would like you to go to the North Pole if it were to save one soul."

On another occasion, I was walking with him down to the town, where a very large number of working people were expected for our Sunday night meetings, and I was to give an address—in fact, to take the whole meeting myself. I had already taken three or four classes that day, and I remember saying to him, "I am so tired to-night, I really do not feel able to do my work."

"Why," he said, "what is the matter?"

"Well," I said, "I feel so stupid that I do not think I can speak well enough."

His answer was, "Surely you are not more stupid that a post!"

"Well, no, perhaps not quite so bad as that," I replied.

And he then said, "All you want is to be God's finger-post, pointing poor sinners the way to Heaven,—surely you can do that! And of one thing you may be certain, some will accept the message, and turn the right way; because God never wastes his people's time and strength."

On the subject of temperance he was intensely keen. I well remember the evening when I had been relating to him some of the sad stories connected with the drinking habits of the people, and my fervent desire to remove this hindrance from them, and his saying, "I will never have wine again on the table. Take it away; do not let me see it again." And he wore the blue ribbon from that day to the day of his death; refusing, at last, even the stimulants ordered by the physician.

Of course, his enthusiasm cheered and helped many a young beginner and many workers in the cause.

Another of his very great interests was the improvement of agriculture. He adopted plans of a very simple kind, but so thorough that they were marvellously successful on the small scale on which he was able to carry them out. The size and value of his tiny wheat crops, his Indian corn, and other cereals, could hardly be credited; and touching indeed it was, as he lay in his quiet sick-room—his strength daily fading away—to see the beauty and richness of his garden plots.

His illness was simply occasioned by collapse of strength; he became weaker and weaker every day, but up to the end his wonderful brightness continued. Some of his last sentences were very striking. When he could hardly speak, he asked me, with that same keenness of interest, "Is there any Protestant news?" The Protestant movement, it is needless to say, had his most ardent sympathy. When on his death-bed he said, "Sin is an infinite evil, but God has provided an infinite remedy."

One morning he told us that during the night he had received a manifestation of the Atonement for Sin, and the next night a revelation of God's righteousness provided for sinners.

The end came very gradually, and was, indeed, one of perfect peace. His life has left behind it a rare fragrance, which can never cease to influence those who knew him best. May that fragrance be extended far and wide!

Bull-fights in Spain.—An esteemed correspondent writes describing the brutality of these sports. A fight is announced at Roubaix for September 3 between a bull and a lion, a wolf and a bear, successively. Another is advertised for the present month at Malo les Bains, at which six bulls are to be killed each day. But the most astounding fact is this, that at a similar gathering at Roubaix last Sunday fortnight, of the 10,000 persons present, English people paid the highest prices for seats. Our correspondent requests prayer with reference to this matter.

Epworth League.—The International Convention of the Epworth League has been held at Indianapolis, U.S.A. Upwards of 8,000 delegates registered their attendance, but it was estimated that fully 14,000 visitors were present at the Convention. Three or more meetings were being held all the time—the same programme, dealt with by different persons, being used in each sectional meeting. There are but few Epworth Leagues in England, but the Wesley Guild will presumably fraternize and send delegations to these biennial conventions. The Epworth League is the Young People's Society of the Methodist Churches in the United States and Canada

(1020)

The Wesleyan Conference.

By A MINISTER.

THE sessions of the Wesleyan Conference closed on Wednesday evening. Amongst the last business transacted was the appointment of ministers to their circuits for the coming year. On the average, some six or seven hundred brethren change circuits each year. Now that the Conference is over, these brethren return to their present charges for a few weeks more, and on the first Sunday in September they will enter upon their work in new spheres. Considerable difficulty was experienced in finding suitable appointments for several estimable senior brethren, some of them of considerable gifts.

The tendency of circuits to desire youth rather than experience in their pastors is becoming so pronounced that the President of the Conference on several occasions dwelt upon the painful result of this development if unchecked, in the case of brethren who had seen many years of service, but who by reason of ripe wisdom and mature gifts were eminently fitted to feed the flock of Christ. At length the stations of ministers were completed, and the spheres of toil fixed for some 2,000 ministers during another year. The prayer of the hymn sung by the brethren immediately before the last reading of the stations, was indeed appropriate:—

Give the pure Gospel Word,
The word of general grace;
Thee let them preach, the common Lord,
The Saviour of our race.

The Ordination Service, at which forty-six young men who had already done ministerial service for four years as probationers were solemnly set apart for the full work of the ministry, was a memorable time. The service was held in the Great Queen Street Chapel, which was filled to its utmost capacity. It was conducted by the President, and the charge to the newly-ordained ministers was given by Rev. H. Price Hughes, the ex-President. Mr. Hughes founded his discourse on 1 Cor. i. 17, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel." It is impossible in a few lines to summarize what was a remarkable and powerful setting forth of what the ex-President declared to be the Scriptural Doctrines of the church and the sacraments. The impression made upon the young men putting on the armour must have been deep and lasting, and if they are able to translate into life the excellent advice of Mr. Hughes, Methodism will feel the effect for years to come of their successful ministry.

Very strongly did the ex-President insist upon the importance of preaching. It was when Christianity became corrupt and paganized that preaching was disparaged and degraded. He begged them to magnify their office as preachers of the Gospel, and warned them against fatal conceptions of preaching. They must not seek to satisfy literary taste, nor, indeed, chiefly to instruct people. Their main business was to save sinners, and to make Christians more Christ-like. The reading of sermons in the pulpit was strongly condemned. The proper place for the essay was in the school of learning. The great preachers who moved nations had never read their sermons.

Mr. Hughes quoted, with great effect, the passage from Dr. Dale's biography, in which is described the great preacher's rediscovery of the truth of the living Christ. He declared to his young brethren that they would never have true serenity of soul nor invincible confidence in their mission, until they were vividly conscious of the Living Presence of Christ.

Mr. Hughes then dealt with the Church and the Sacraments, seeking to meet sacerdotal error by positive teaching of Scriptural doctrine. Christ came not merely to save individuals but to found the Church. As Dr. Hort said, an unattached Christian was in the Apostolic age absolutely unthinkable. If they were to be Christians of the New Testament type, they must be churchmen as well as Christians. When asked "What Christian organization constitutes the Church?" Mr. Hughes answers with Ignatius, "Wherever Christ may be, there is the Church." Finally, they were to preach the kingdom of God. The Christian programme was not completed by the conversion of the individual, and his incorporation with the real and visible Church of Christ. The Church was to extend the Kingdom of God, which was human society as a whole reconstructed on the Christian basis. Christianity was the very salt of human life, and must permeate every aspect of human existence with sacred and Divine things.

Thus for the space of an hour and a quarter did Mr. Hughes pour forth with fervid eloquence what he afterwards described as the deepest convictions of his life. He was heartily thanked by the Conference for his "timely, powerful, and inspiring charge."

The obituary service for ministers who had died during the year was marked by solemnity. After the singing of the hymn—

Come let us join our friends above
Who have obtained the prize;

the Secretary slowly read the roll of the honoured dead, which contained the names of thirty-one ministers who had died at home, six ministers of the Irish Conference, and twelve foreign missionaries.

METHODISM AND TEMPERANCE.

The subject of the relation of persons interested in the drink traffic to office in the Methodist Church was raised by the presentation of some thirty-four memorials from circuits asking for a pronouncement from the Conference that such persons were ineligible for office in the Church. The Memorials Committee had given prolonged consideration to the matter, and recommended a series of comprehensive resolutions. These were moved by the ex-President and seconded by Rev. Peter Thompson. Mr. Hughes spoke with great force and eloquence. He illustrated the great progress of temperance principles in the Methodist Church, and urged that they should continue to use the same methods of moral suasion as in the past. They must not seek to coerce the conscience of the individual. He objected to the creation of two standards of conduct—one for office-bearers and another for members of the Church. The indiscriminate application of the test proposed by the memorialists would be unjust and impracticable. Their people already had absolute power to protect themselves in particular instances from the appointment of drink-sellers to office. Rev. S. Chadwick sympathized with the memorialists; though, after the resolution of last year, he thought the request inopportune. After further discussion, in which Dr. Rigg and Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts supported the recommendation of the Memorials Committee, and Revs. Thos. Champness and Wm. Bradfield expressed sympathy with the purpose of those who had memorialized the Conference, a series of resolutions were agreed to, in which, while declining to interfere with the rights and responsibilities of local authorities in the election of Church officers, the Conference deeply deplored the manifold evils arising from the existing liquor traffic, and exhorted the Methodist people to keep themselves free from complicity with the traffic, and to give their active support to all well-considered efforts on behalf of temperance reform.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

A Scripture Compendium.

By Rev. C. A. FOX.

I PURPOSE, this morning, to take a general view of the Bible, especially in its bearing upon the life of God in the soul of man; and this brief view may be summed up in three words. The Old Testament is comprehended under this one word, the Fatherhood of God; the Gospels under the priesthood, or priestly mediation of Jesus Christ; Acts, Epistles, and Revelation, under the possession of God's people by the Holy Ghost.

Mal. i. 6 at once gives us our first point: "A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name." In the Old Testament, God is shown to be dispossessed of his honour as a Father. He created, clothed, educated, blessed, taught, and led his people; but they fell away from his holy will and law. For confirmation of this, see 2 Chron. xxxvi.14. The word faith occurs only in two Old Testament passages, which set forth God's faithfulness and man's unfaithfulness, namely, Deut. xxxii. 20, and Hab. ii. 4 (Luther's passage, as it is called).

The Old Testament was marked by faulty obedience and consequent sacrifice; but the New Testament discovers faith in the sacrifice of Another, and ungrudging surrender to the Lord who died for us. Coming to the Gospels in one word, the mediation of Jesus Christ works dispossessing man of his shame and restoring God the Father to his honour; for our Lord was for ever speaking of his Father. We may comprehend all four Gospels under the words atonement and anointing, as brought out at the beginning and end of two of those Gospels. See John i. 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" and Luke xxiv. 49: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you." In the Epistles we find that God the Holy Ghost dispossesses man's self, and occupies the soul, in the name of Jesus Christ, for ever.

A WONDERFUL CHANGE,

BRIEF SURVEY OF THE ACTS.

May I supplement all this by a very brief survey of the Acts of the Apostles, which is absolutely essential to our especial argument this morning? I have given you the whole Bible in three words; now I will give you the whole of the Acts of the Apostles in four words. I am not about to refer you to passage after passage; but mine is the humble purpose of taking a passage or thought here and there that I may hand it on to you.

The Acts of the Apostles is the Book of God the Holy Ghost; and it is the only book in the Bible that is unfinished. It is like a grand fragment—a torso, as artists would say. You and I, and all the servants of God, have to finish it. The book has four divisions, and we may inquire what it has to teach us concerning the life of God in the soul of man, or the spiritual life of the Church.

First of all, that life is founded upon supernatural facts: "To whom also He (Jesus) showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs" (chap. i. 3). The death of Jesus Christ on Calvary is the of the spiritual life; but upon this I do not dwell. To my mind, the resurrection of Christ is included in that passage, as well as his death.

FIRST GREAT FOUNDATION-STONE

We have, in verse 10, the ascension of Jesus Christ unto the throne of power: "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as He went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel." I wondered, as a boy, how it was that some of the most precious references to the death and ascension of Jesus Christ were reserved for the Acts of the Apostles; seeing that I always looked upon it as "a cold book," something which does not appeal to the feelings. But I began to see, as time went on, that these fragments of the historic Christ were embodied in the Acts of the Apostles for a very definite reason; namely, that they are the foundation truths upon which the spiritual life of the Church is built.

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus," &c. It is my own Jesus, thank God. I assure you this morning that, in the midst of what are called the dark hours, it was worth anything to feel that the Lord Jesus was just my Jesus. Oh, Christians, missionaries, ministers, whosoever you be, this is the very essence of the Gospel, that Jesus is my Jesus—"this same Jesus."

Thus we have, in Acts i., the three foundation truths of the spiritual life and of the life of the Church of God: The Death and Resurrection of Jesus; the Ascension of Jesus into the place of power; and the Return of Jesus. So that the Church is enclosed between the going of Jesus and his return.

How is the Church worked? or, as our American brethren would say, How is it run? It is a good word, and we should run looking. They do not, generally, add that word. We are dealing with a sublime power, one that is supernatural. Now, I believe in the supernatural. Friends of mine are sometimes rather critical towards me, saying that I use words transcendentally. However that may be, I think it is no use coming to Keswick unless you believe in the supernatural. Dear friends, let us wake up to lay hold of the great sublime truths that are before us.

Secondly, the life of the Church is upheld by one great supernatural Power, God the Holy Ghost. If you cannot sleep at night, or are up early in the morning, you will see how secretly and silently God brings up the great everlasting dawn, again and again. So does He work in the Church. The Holy Ghost is the one great engine which works the whole Church. I may take you over some great factory until we come to an outhouse for which you have little regard; but there is the great engine or wheel which works the whole. The supernatural power of God the Holy Ghost of the Church of Christ. Some say, "Give me this gift or that blessing." My dear friend, God does not hire out his gifts. He has not come to that! If you want a gift from Him, you must have Himself. Himself He gives to do his own work, and you cannot have his attributes, gifts, powers or blessings, without having Himself. Power is a Person, a fact which the Church of Christ has more fully perceived quite recently, and that Person is God the Holy Ghost.

WORKS THE WHOLE MACHINERY

Oh that we may wait, as Gideon did in the dark, by the fleece of the stainless Lamb, until the dews of God fill it! We rush here and there, by express train if we may, and do our utmost to get blessing; but will you wait on the floor, in the dark, like Gideon's fleece, until you know what it is to have the Holy Ghost filling and transforming your soul? Thank God, we have known many who have been utterly changed by waiting upon God until the Spirit has filled them; and then there was no need but to wring out the fulness of God, with the two hands of faith, and to distribute thereof to others.

Thirdly, introduction to the spiritual life is supernatural. Why is there so much about St. Paul's conversion in the Acts of the Apostles? It is the typical introduction into the spiritual life, with its new relation between God and the soul. Saul said, "Lord, you and I are strangers. What art Thou to me?" The Lord gave a very brief answer, which touched the soul of the man who asked that question: "I am Jesus whom thou art persecuting." Saul said at once, "Oh, I perceive; it is discovered to me. Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do? Thou art my Lord and Master; what am I to Thee?" "Thou art a chosen vessel to bear my name." Have you had this introduction into the spiritual life? Has it changed all other relationships? How is it that in a family one is changed from all the rest? It is because God has secretly told that one of this relationship, as He told Saul; and that one has yielded himself or herself, body, soul, and spirit, to be a chosen vessel unto the Lord.

THE NEW RELATIONSHIP

When, as a schoolboy, I went over my father's library, I came across a little old-fashioned book. I do not know why it laid hold of me, but it did. It had on the cover, "The Life of God in the Soul of Man." I thought, "This must be some pioneer who has discovered a new route." Ever since then that phrase has been dear to me; and the thing which it represents is founded upon the great supernatural facts of the death, resurrection, ascension, and return of the blessed Master. May He soon come! Will it be at this year's Keswick gathering that He shall come, arriving in our midst, not by Mr. Budd's train, but by his own express; so that all shall be clear, and all shall be cleansed?

Fourthly, the spiritual life is maintained by supernatural simplicity in our daily walk. The Acts of the Apostles begins with the ascension, in splendour, of the Lord Jesus Christ to his throne of glory through an avenue of angels. Then comes the sweeping down, with fire, shaking, trembling, and glory, of God the Holy Ghost, until the disciples are filled. Coming to the end of the Book, we read, "Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house,"

IT MIGHT BE IN KESWICK,

"and received all that came in unto him." How very commonplace! "Preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him."

Trailing clouds of glory do we come,
From God who is our home.

You know Wordsworth's lines. So do we come from the splendours of the Ascension and the descent of the Holy Ghost, to the common, every-day life of Paul the Apostle. You, too, come to the like life; speaking Jesus, living Jesus, though it be in the commonest house of Keswick itself!

Fellowship with God: How attained.

By Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

"Abram fell on his face, and God talked with him." (Gen. xvii. 3.)

THIS passage takes us into the very holy of holies, and it shows us a soul in closest, sweetest, most direct, and most personal fellowship with God. On his face, overwhelmed with marvelling at the condescension of God, Abram lies; and to his servant, as friend with friend, God speaks. It is a scene on which no Christian man can look without the deepest reverence, and it is a scene on which none such can gaze without the most ardent longing. To have our God pouring his love in mighty flood through our hearts, and to have our love rise in full flood to Him, is the highest bliss of which the human soul is capable. It is desire for fellowship of this kind that has brought us to this holy Convention, and there are many men and women here present who, to know this fellowship as a constant experience, would give all that they possess. This intense, passionate longing for direct fellowship with God has been characteristic of God's people in all ages. You remember the words of the Psalmist, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." The same desire is voiced in these New Testament times:

For Thee, my God, for Thee alone
My spirit faints with ardent love.

This longing for God lies deep in the heart of every one of his redeemed children.

Is this direct, soul-thrilling, heaven-opening fellowship with God ever attained? or is it an ideal longed for, but never reached? To answer that question,

I CALL THREE WITNESSES.

Read the Old Testament, my first witness, and it will tell you that, through a long life of three hundred and sixty-five years, Enoch walked with God. Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, and others, knew this fellowship. Then I cite the New Testament to tell you that this fellowship is not only attainable, but it is the intention of God that all his children should live in the enjoyment of it. Oh, men and women, access—free, open, absolutely unhindered—into the presence of our God, is set before us as one of the sweetest fruits of Christ's redeeming work. The aim and object of the writer of that marvellous letter to the Hebrews is to tell the people of God that the way to the Father's heart lies open for them, and to encourage them to live in his very presence. "A new and living way" is open; and we have boldness, through the blood of Jesus, to draw near unto God.

The third witness now summoned is the Church of Christ. Its history shows that all down the ages—even in the darkest days of Christendom, when the organized Church seemed given over to the devil—there were tens of thousands of devoted souls living in the very light of God and giving joy to his heart. These experiences do not belong only to the early Church. You remember Jonathan Edwards. No one would speak of him as an emotional fanatic, for he was a strenuous thinker, with one of the most acute intellects that God ever gave to his Church. He says, "I often found an inward sweetness carrying me away in contemplation. This I know not how to describe, save as a calm, sweet abstraction of the soul from all the concerns of the world; and sometimes a kind of vision of being alone on the mountains, far from all mankind, wrapt in and swallowed up in God."

SWEETLY CONVERSING WITH CHRIST,

Of John Flavel, it is said that such was the vividness of his sight and sense of the things of the world to come, that he lost consciousness of being on this earth, and for hours knew no more where he was than if he had been in a deep sleep. There is the still more remarkable experience of President Finney: "While I was in my office," he says, "I received a mighty baptism of the Holy Ghost, which seemed to come in waves of liquid love, like the very breath of God. I wept aloud, crying with joy and with love." I might cite testimony after testimony to show that God calls us, his people, whom He has redeemed at such infinite cost, into enjoyment of sweetest fellowship with Himself, and, through that fellowship, unto completest victory over the sins that beset us on every side. We are living below our blood-bought privilege if we know nothing of such experiences.

How is such experience to be attained? This fellowship of which I speak is no ordinary experience, nor is it altogether easy of attainment. It belongs not so much to the sphere of life as to that of life more abundant; and it has to do, not with the infancy, but with the manhood, of Christian experience. It belongs not to the carnal Christian, but to the spiritual one; and the conditions upon which we may enjoy it are two.

The first of these conditions is separation unto God. Abram fell on his face, and God talked with him. This was not his first meeting with God; but there was a long history of lessons learned before he was lifted into this blessed fellowship. He was separated unto God from all earthly and fleshly love: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went" (Heb. xi. 8). Was it that he loved not country and kindred? Nay, but because

HE LOVED GOD MORE.

It was God first, and a willingness to go all lengths with Him.

Moreover, he was separated unto God from all worldly ambitions. When the whole of the wealth of Sodom and Gomorrah lay at his feet, he would not touch any of it. What cared he for gold or silver? He had God; and in Him he had all things. He found it hardest to get away from self; and it was confidence in that direction which cost him the bitterest humiliation of his life. He believed that what God had promised He was able to perform; but, like so many of us, Abram thought God would be none the worse for help to fulfil the promises; hence that miserable and shameful story of Hagar. But Abram drank his bitter cup; and if we had listened to him as he lay on his face, we might have heard him say, "No confidence in the flesh."

As it was with Abram, so it must be with us, if we are to enter into this life which is filled with all the fulness of God. There is a "must" in this matter. If we are to stand face to face with God in his light and love, with the ear ever open to his guidance, we must be separated unto Him. Until our idols are put away, it is simply no use speaking of the glory of the life into which God will lead his people.

We must be separated from sin. Oh, man and woman, has that been done? You who testify by your presence here to your longing for a deep spiritual life, are you done with sin? Or have some of you quarrels that are not yet made up? Can it be that you are in the habit of evil speaking? Are you careless about unpaid debts that cause suffering to the poor? We must be separated unto God from all toleration of sin in our life.

SEPARATION MUST GO FURTHER, and must deal with matters of self-indulgence. If we are to know this fellowship, we may have to ask our God questions concerning eating, drinking, smoking, dress, and our habits of sleep.

If we are to know full fellowship with God, there must be in our life, as there was in Abram's, separation from earthly loves. The claim of Jesus Christ upon us, in this matter, is absolute, before father, mother, wife, children, God first. If you are separated in that sense, why have you, a Christian man, given the love of your heart to an ungodly girl? If all that you love you hold in God, why have you, a Christian girl, given the love of your heart to a man who cares nothing for Christ? How is it with us? Is Christ first in our hearts? Mother, would you give that daughter, who is the very apple of your eye, to go into the darkness and peril of China as God's witness? Daughter, would you part with that mother, whom you love as life itself, if God calls you to go forth as his witness? God would have us love our dear ones with love infinitely more intense than we show them; but all our love is to be in Him.

Then God would have us separated from worldly ambition. When our Lord said, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness," He meant far more than the desire for money. But are you separated from that latter desire? Why, then, are you in partnership with that ungodly man who leads you into ways that he calls "business ways," which are dishonouring to God and defiling to your conscience? If God were to deal with some of us here, many incomes would be far smaller within a few months. What about the desire for reputation? How greedy we all are of praise, and how much of our life is spent in seeking the goodwill and approbation of others!

The life of fellowship with God demands separation unto Him from self; and it is only the power of the Cross of Christ that will do this. How awfully subtle is this self! How much we need to realize that no resolution or effort of our own can put self out of our life, but that it must be driven out by the revelation to our souls of the glory of God.

Now a few words about

THE SECOND CONDITION

of fellowship with God—namely, abasement before Him. This is naturally consequent upon that separation from self of which I have already spoken. How profoundly significant it is that, as Abram lies on his face, God speaks to him! In this self-abasement before God there are two elements.

There is, first, the recognition of our own sinfulness; and this is sometimes realized with such intensity as to fill the soul almost with terror, for no matter how vast the stoop which God in his infinite love may make towards us, He is the Lord God Almighty, before whom seraphs veil their faces, as they cry, "Holy, Holy, Holy!" We remember the effect of God's glory upon Isaiah; how, from the same cause, John fell at Christ's feet as dead, and how Peter leaped out of the boat, crying, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man."

Another element of self-abasement is recognition of our own nothingness. Even in the assertion of our own sinfulness, there is a trace of self. You may get self in, even when you are speaking of sinners "of whom I am chief." God would have us ignore self, and let it die of neglect. Pray that God, by the Holy Ghost, may bring us to that now.

Oh, to be nothing, nothing!
Painful the humbling may be;
Yet low in the dust I'd lay me
That all may my Saviour see.

The Missionary Meeting.

From ten to one o'clock on Saturday, July 29, the crowded meeting in the tent was occupied in missionary addresses from a large number of workers representing various fields of labour in almost every known part of the world. After a time of silent waiting upon God, and the singing of "All people that on earth do dwell," Rev. H. E. Fox led in audible supplication and thanksgiving, followed by Mr. Wilson in the same holy exercise.

Mr. Eugene Stock, who conducted the meeting, asked all missionaries who have actually been in the foreign field just to rise, and these were followed by accepted candidates for the same general sphere of labour. All of these friends were lovingly commended to God's fatherly care, guidance, and grace by Rev. John Wilkinson. One line in the next hymn, "Reinforcements now appearing, victory is nigh!" was suggestive of a great need which is far from being fully met.

Various Scriptures were read without comment by Mr. Eugene Stock, beginning with the following verses:—Gen. xii. 2, xxii. 16; Psa. lxxii. 17, Acts iii. 25, Gal. iii. 6, 13, 26.

Rev. Geo. Hunter, from China, was the first speaker. He said that sometimes work goes on quietly and slowly; but Christian progress in that land is now making marked advance. China has been brought by God's providence right into the forefront of attention at home. The country is open as never before, and God has wonderfully

BROKEN DOWN NATIVE PREJUDICE.

The ruling and literary classes are now peculiarly susceptible to missionary influence, from the sea-coast to the borders of Tibet. Right across the land there are now stations with men preaching the glad tidings. Missionaries have a wonderful advantage over commercial enterprise, which is often pursued with a critical spirit, in a knowledge of the language. Writing of Hu-nan, down to last year the most hostile province in China, Dr. Griffith John, who went round that province in the spring of this year, was quoted as saying that the magnitude of the Christian movement witnessed in almost daily intercourse with Christian converts made it a journey that remains in the memory. There are thousands of inquirers. We baptized, says he, 192 on this visit, and might have baptized hundreds more. Mr. Hunter testified that the missionaries themselves had been lifted into a higher plane of spiritual life. Are young ministers, said he, the only class who are not to be promoted to this important field?

A series of short addresses represented, of necessity, only a selection from among the many who were anxious to speak, and Mr. Eugene Stock mentioned for prayer some—and even these very numerous—from among lands not represented by workers here, such as Egypt, the three great Soudans, Central Asia, India, the Americas, that great closed land Arabia, Burmah, Siam, and the Straits Settlements. In a comprehensive prayer, Prebendary Webb-Peploe besought God to stir the present company to do something to meet the enormous spiritual needs of neglected parts of the world.

Dr. Anderson, from Galilee, thanked God that there is so much Christian interest in the Jew. Work on the shores of the sacred lake had occupied his attention for some five years; and at first much opposition was experienced. A certain influential Jew was bitterly opposed to the work, and he published a cherem, or execration. He has now become a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, though an undeclared one.

Rev. J. Marriott, from Samoa, traced the blessings which attended the labours of the pioneer missionary, John Williams, in the South Sea Islands in 1830, and showed that his ideal of an educated native pastor for every village in Samoa has been realized. Native Samoan Christian effort long ago reached other island groups. In fact, no greater success has been seen since the days of the Apostles than in the Coral Islands of the Pacific. In the great island of New Guinea there are now thirty native Samoan pastors, striving earnestly with other teachers, to evangelize the people. We thank God, said the speaker, take courage, and strive to go forward in the work of training native pastors, whose hearts are afire with love to Christ, and who are striving to thoroughly evangelize these islands of the Pacific.

Mr. Eugene Stock gave interesting details of the introduction of the missionary element into Keswick twelve years ago. One of those then present, who had not seen Keswick again until to-day, is an African clergyman, Rev. James Johnson, who now spoke of his land as being thoroughly open to the Gospel. Missionary enterprise there is covering ground once open to it, but subsequently closed through the slave trade. Commercial agencies of the present day may have a tendency to prejudice the people against religion, unless the open door be extensively utilized. The liquor traffic is growing, and its very apparent fruits in Africa call for its entire and uncompromising suppression. Now is the Christian opportunity to gain Africa for Christ. Mohammedanism is making strenuous efforts to contest this ground against Christianity; and there is a loud cry for young Davids to go out and use sling and stone in the service of their Lord.

After a verse or two of a hymn, a word of exhortation was spoken by Rev. John Young, of Greenock, who declared that Christ needs his people to satisfy his affections, reproduce his character, re-embody his spirit, and to minister unto his saints; but particularly of salvation to the perishing at home and to the heathen abroad. Difficulties in the way of this service, when hearts are moved to go to the mission field, must be trustfully committed to Christ while duty is done. Parents who hesitate to yield their children to missionary work may well remember that "God loveth a cheerful giver." No parent who has accepted God's will in this respect will ever be found to say there is any cause of regret therefor. Nine of the speaker's "best young people" from his congregation had been thrust out into the mission field. It may be asked, if we give our children to this work, shall we not have trials? Yes, but there will be abundant compensation, and dear ones will become dearer to you. "It is an only child," you say; but remember that God gave his only begotten Son for your salvation.

TO CARRY HIS MESSAGE

Miss Harding, from Bengal, came from a district where there are a million and a half of souls, with only a handful of Christian workers. A Hindoo gentleman said, as she retired from speaking in his zenana, "It is you English ladies that have the key of India. It is the mothers of India who are teaching our men. How is it that England, which sent armies of soldiers to conquer our country, is not sending out thousands of missionaries to conquer souls for Christ?"

Miss Craven, of Madagascar, said that the island is not yet wholly Christian; indeed, there are thousands in outlying tribes who have never heard of Jesus. While the country appears too vast for us to compass with the Gospel, it is not so in God's view. Queenly persecution has cast onerous work upon the missionaries, but many true Christians were added to God's Church there. The recent time of trial, through Jesuit intrigue, has only determined workers to "Hold the fort" by the grace of God. Malagasy testimony concerning these same Jesuits declares that they are no servants of Jesus, inasmuch as they act contrary to his spirit. The people know that they are and may yet be loyal subjects of France, thanks to the teaching of godly missionaries from that land.

FREE TO BE PROTESTANTS,

Miss Howard (Japan), daughter of the chairman of the China Inland Mission, asked prayer for Christians in all heathen countries; and for conversion of the foreigners, who are not missionaries, in the treaty ports of China and Japan. Her adopted country, she urged, is waiting for the Gospel; and her appeal was strong that none should leave the tent without settling the question whether there is not a call, in any given individual case, to come to the help of the Lord in the great lands named.

Miss Gabb, from South Africa, testified concerning God's grace toward the "white people" in that land, as well as to natives. In Swaziland it had been found to be grand to live among the heathen and to find that in God his workers have all that they can need. Do not go out to the heathen, said she, only because the fields are white to harvest, but wait until God's Spirit really separates you unto the work; then that work will become not yours, but God's, and will thus demand his blessing.

Rev. J. B. Figgis prayed that God's voice only might give the call; but, said he, "Do send, Lord: and may Thy voice come to each of those whom Thou shalt select, saying, 'As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you.'"

With a passing reference to the familiar facts of a recently-threatened prosecution, Mr. Stock called upon Bishop Tugwell to address the meeting. The Bishop said that he was daily called upon to have dealings with five governors representing vast districts in Africa; and in view of the small number of missionaries at his disposal, he is weighed down by the sense of responsibility. He had come home to confer with the C.M.S., more especially about an advance into the Haussa country, for which a small band of pioneers is ready, actuated by the spirit of the British soldier who is determined to do his duty—he can do no more—often against overwhelming difficulties and dangers. In the stirring words of Viscount Cranborne, on another occasion, he would pledge that meeting to uphold the Christianity of the British empire, and in God's name would ask men and women to come forth and encourage those who bear the unequal burden of a grand and glorious work.

Archdeacon Phair, who has seen over thirty years' missionary service among Red Indians, quoted an old conjurer who said, "I lived

FORTY YEARS IN A NIGHT.

But when the Great Book came over, it was like the rising of the morning sun, and it showed me where to put my feet. I hear you people say I am dying. I was dead, but now I am just beginning to live!" The mission field is the very place to learn the secret of the Lord. Missions are a reality, and must no longer be played with.

A medical missionary from the Afghan frontier, Dr. Arthur Lankester, expressed confidence that God will bring the day when some of the closed lands bordering the British camp shall be opened to the Gospel. There is a little girdle of medical missions on the frontier, like the few engineer heroes who long ago stormed the gates of Delhi; but where is the missionary army which should be ready to rush in when the breach is made? Keswick has developed fresh spiritual energy and has kindled a new holy fire in many. Is this to flicker out during our holiday months in empty desires and resolutions? Oh, that God may touch one here and another there, all over the tent, until an army, mighty in God, be sent forth by Him, the remainder being those whom He hath really selected and chosen to stay at home, where there is equal room for the heroism of simple obedience to the call of the Master!

Miss Nicholson, an unattached missionary in Palestine, said that God's work in Moslem countries might be compared to that of sappers and miners; and this hard and monotonous effort needs the remembrance that God's strength is made perfect in our weakness. Digging may be patiently prosecuted in the search for living stones to enrich the Lord's Temple. She had been in the blessed work for seventeen years, and was to it. Children are gathered into various mission schools, hundreds of suffering ones are reached through medical missions and hospitals, and women are told in their own homes of the love of Jesus. We cannot think that such work has no results, and if we patiently submit to the working of God's Holy Spirit, in and through us, his purposes shall be accomplished in his own way and time.

LONGING TO GET BACK

Some practical thoughts touching fellowship or partnership, and based upon the words in 1 John i. 3, were offered by Pastor Geo. Soltau. In the name of the meeting, he thanked the missionary brethren and sisters for the fellowship afforded by what had been heard from them concerning the spiritual need of the world and the power of the Gospel which God had provided to meet that need. Their fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ; and their present partnership will only be exchanged for that of Christ's glory. But to many of us there comes the crisis question, Who among us shall enter into closer fellowship and truer partnership with the great firm (using that term most revently) of heaven for the carrying out of its business in this world? God the Father put all his love into it, Christ the Son put all his life into it, and the Holy Ghost has come to conduct and carry it on. We have had four days of receiving, and are now to have some minutes of giving. How much of your means, your comforts, your social position can you invest in this holy partnership? How much dare we withhold from this investment? It would seem as though the Father and the Son beckon to us, their partners, to come to their help. What wondrous condescension! Fellowship of the Holy Ghost, fellowship of the Gospel, fellowship in Christ's sufferings; but, presently, fellowship in the glory! Say to God what you propose to do with regard to the fellowship, the communion, the partnership of the Holy Ghost.

Heads were bowed while the hymn,

When I survey the wondrous Cross, was softly sung, the verses being interspersed with solemn, searching words of application by Mr. Stock; and many afterwards rose in token of acquiescence in God's purposes for themselves or for their dear ones. Commendatory prayer was offered by the Bishop of Mombasa, and the meeting came to a close with the grand strains of the "coronation" hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name."

Christian Endeavour Rally.

One of the brightest spots in this great Convention was the Y.P.S.C.E. Rally, with its clear, concise testimonies, and short to-the-point prayers. Held in the Congregational Church, presided over by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, it comprised much in less than an hour.

The President first called for promises from Scripture for assurance as to the power of prayer. Then followed a chain of praise and thanksgiving for special and personal blessings.

After one verse of "Praise Him, praise Him," testimonies as to blessing received at this present Convention were asked for. Some of these were very striking. One minister said he had come to Keswick prejudiced against the movement, but was returning entirely changed, and prayed that he would be made a blessing to the society and union over which he presided. Young men spoke of having come to Keswick more for a holiday than anything else, and of receiving an unspeakable blessing and up-lifting. Ladies also testified as to illumination, and being brought nearer to Christ than ever before. Many said they came to Keswick thinking they were something, and had learned that they were nothing, and Christ was all, and in all.

Mr. Macgregor said he was greatly tempted to give an address on prayer. Power with God is what we want—power with God in prayer. Covet the power of prayer, get the gift of intercessory prayer. We need the vision of God to break in upon our souls, and then we shall prevail. He then asked for intercessory prayers in order, (1) for our societies by name, (2) for our churches, (3) our countries, (4) nations lying in darkness, (5) for those preparing for mission work, (6) for missionaries and their work in all lands, mentioning the names of the various mission fields in rotation. All these prayers were interspersed occasionally with the well-known chorus, "I believe God answers prayer." In closing, Mr. Macgregor said that, instead of the usual pledge, he would ask all who felt that they could do it to join him in solemnly repeating a Scotch covenant which had been often very helpful to himself. The words were as follows:

I TAKE

God the Father to be my God (1 Thess. i. 9).

Jesus Christ to be my Saviour (Acts v. 31).

The Holy Ghost to be my Sanctifier (1 Pet. i. 2).

The Word of God to be my Rule (2 Tim. iii. 16, 17).

The people of God to be my People (Ruth i. 16).

I GIVE

Myself—all I am and all I have—to the Lord (Rom. xiv. 7, 8).

And this I do—deliberately (Josh. xxiv. 15), sincerely (2 Cor. i. 12), freely (Ps. cx. 3), and for ever (Rom. viii. 35-39).

The Young Men's Meetings.

The young men's meetings have always been an interesting feature in the Convention. From the earliest days, when Canon Battersby's four sons gathered round them a number of Cambridge and Oxford friends, the joy and freedom conspicuous in these meetings, and the stimulating message of full deliverance from the dominion of sin, have attracted year by year large numbers of young men. This year had the usual full complement. The bicycle shed (a useful addition of recent years) was crowded with bicycles. Snatches of joyous song echoed in every street.

When the young men gathered for their own special meetings, the Drill Hall, holding about 350, was well filled, and on the last day crowded to its utmost capacity. At the first of these meetings your correspondent received an encouraging testimony as to their practical value. A young man came up to him and said, "A year ago to-day, at this very meeting, I received a mighty blessing, and the last twelve months have been full of victory. I have a class now of fifty-five young men, and they have all felt the benefit of what Christ did for me here last year." God had convicted him over smoking, although the subject had not been mentioned at the meeting, and he had trusted Christ for deliverance.

The addresses at these young men's meetings are almost entirely practical and experimental. Coming after an hour's Bible-reading, application prevails rather than exposition, and the speakers draw a good deal from their own personal experience. Two stories, one by Mr. Macartney, the other by the Bishop of Sierra Leone, were peculiarly happy.

A very poor countrywoman was handing to an agent of the Bible Society her "mites," kept in a jug. More than half-a-crown had been gathered in her poverty, chiefly in farthings and halfpence. Not liking to take the money, the agent said: "Are you sure, Mary, that you gave this out of your heart?" "No, sir; indeed, it is out of the jug." "Yes, but did it first come out of your heart?" "Nay, nay, sir, for it was never there." If Christ can keep the heart free from the love of money, He can keep it free from any other sin.

"That man wants a prop on each side of him," said Bishop Taylor Smith, when a curate near London, of some unhappy specimen at a tramps' breakfast. "No, sir," replied the worker, himself a reclaimed tramp; "he wants a new stem right down the middle." And the Bishop urged all present to lean upon God only and to cease from man.

The last few minutes of each meeting were given to definite waiting upon God. It was very sweet as, with a freedom impossible in the larger gatherings, each heart rolled off its burden in a sentence or two of personal petition, both confessing the individual need, and claiming deliverance in Christ. "Many interpret Gal. iii. 14," said one of the speakers, "as if it ran, 'that we should receive the promise of the Spirit through feeling;'" and the warning was not disregarded. There was a healthy absence of mere emotionalism; there was much of the "joy unspeakable and full of glory" that results from steady, purposeful looking off unto Jesus.

The Ministers' Meetings.

Not the least profitable and enjoyable meetings of the Convention were the daily gatherings of some 300 ministers in the Pavilion. A spirit of deep earnestness and expectation pervaded the assemblies, and the speakers were evidently impressed with a sense of their great opportunity. It is impossible to characterize all the addresses; but those of the Bishop of Mombasa and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor stand out from the rest as particularly helpful, while that of Professor Laidlaw was most suggestive, even if it did not always betray quite the Keswick "accent."

Bishop Peel's solemn word from 1 Cor. iii. 10*ff* was the manifest outcome of his long missionary experience in India, and emphasized the need of personal fellowship with God and individual faithfulness to the heavenly vision as the secret of ministerial power. Mr. Macgregor spoke from Rom. vi. 14, and in a simple yet scholarly way showed from the exegesis of the passage the imperative need of and call to a life of dominion over sin. His own personal testimony drove home the message with power.

Professor Laidlaw dealt with St. Paul as a model for ministers. His relation to Christ as the pervading and permanent element of his life was finely depicted, and several "mottoes" from the epistles were most delightfully applied. In particular, Dr. Laidlaw dwelt on the need of receiving our message from the Lord, and not from men, emphasizing this as the secret of power and blessing.

The attendance of ministers was quite remarkable, Scotland furnishing an unusually large contingent. If only all go back to their congregations in the spirit and power of the Convention, this autumn should see a great revival in our midst.

Ladies' Meetings.

The general features of the ladies' meetings have been much the same as in former years, and yet marked by a greater intensity than in them. The Lecture Hall was filled, and the patient standing of many revealed that a thirst and a desire were there which intended to be satisfied, and minded no inconveniences.

It was a great joy to have Mrs. Bannister with us this year, after several years without her presence. Mrs. Penn-Lewis, too, was welcomed with special feeling, having been raised up from a very critical illness.

A hush was over the whole throng as we met on Tuesday morning in spite of the heat and the standing. After opening prayer Mrs. Bannister spoke words of strong truth and tenderness on Ezek. i. 1-3. She traced the expression, "The Hand of the Lord," as used in connection with the prophet, specially in ch. iii. 14. "The Hand of the Lord was strong upon me." She spoke of the bitterness and heat of spirit which He felt, and which we, too, may have felt, when his hand has been laid on us, and we resented it, taking it to mean woe and trouble. But to yield to it is the preliminary to the "Visions of God," which every true child of his longs to have. The next mention is in v. 22; All the bitterness and heat gone, and the "glory of the Lord" seen there again (v. 23) as by the river. On the closing day, without premeditation or planning, the passage chosen by her was Matt. viii. 14-15, where the hand of Jesus touched the fevered patient, and she arose, not merely into restored strength for herself, but into immediate ministry to Him. And this would be the result of his hand laid on us.

Without going over the meetings day by day, it will suffice to give a general idea. Instead of set addresses, the words from each speaker seemed the concentration of another year of learning from the Lord and living with Him, and they seemed like sparks from an anvil freshly struck where the fire was laid and lit. The words from Mrs. Penn-Lewis were very blessed, full of the tenderness of one who had learned in suffering and had been face to face with God. Her first message (Wednesday) was that glowing passage of Hebrews xii., from v. 18. "Ye are not come unto the mount which might be touched." The very reading of it was an inspiration, as "ye are not come" was repeated between each point. "Ye are not come unto blackness. Ye are not come unto blackness, and so on, until it rang through all hearts with a triumph echo; but ye are come unto JESUS!" It seemed to need little more—so calming, so satisfying, so conquering did it sound. She dwelt much on the next points—"Ye are come unto the blood of sprinkling—ye are come unto the Mediator of the new covenant." The foundation truths of the ground of a sinner's acceptance with God were forcibly dwelt on, and no one could wonder at brief and intense, which flowed from the audience after it, and the new yielding of heart, and will, and life to Him who had poured out all for us.

THE STREAM OF PRAYER,

On the next day this was followed up by her dwelling on words from Heb. vi. 17-20: "The immutability of his counsel" and "anchored." How there could be no sure growth, no steadfast walk unless the soul was anchored on "the immutable counsel," the unchanging Word of God, and on the living person of our Forerunner "within the veil." Anchored thus, the rested, settled soul will stand whatever shaking (xii. 26) our God shall choose to send. And what a joy to remember about that "immutable counsel" that it is what God is "willing to show!" "Willing to show to the heirs of promise," if they are willing to see. Some other blessed truths were brought out, and many searching things said. The home relationships were much dwelt on—child to parent, parent to child, sister to sister, sister to brother, and mistress to servant. The light of God was turned full and strong from his word on home life and witness-bearing.

Not many requests for prayer were sent in, as they are now gathered up at the early morning meeting; but a few special ones were pleaded each day—among them for Mrs. Baxter, whose presence was much missed this year, that her journey to India might be under the hand of the Lord, and she and all her band be kept in the heat of it. And the many not present, who longed to be there, were very specially asked for.

The verse given by Miss Nugent was with particular reference to the after-time. After speaking for those here for the first time, in the simplest way, of what the aim and purpose of this Convention was, she said that Micah i. 15 had been the chief thought in her mind. It gave the one secret of continuance after the step of full yielding or presentation of self had been made. The words of the R.V. are—"Yet will I bring unto thee, O inhabitress of Mareshah" (so it was definitely a pledge to us as women), "one that shall possess thee." "One that shall possess thee." There alone was the guarantee that the work done here now would last. And the remainder of the verse shows that none need say out of self-despair, "He cannot mean to come to me;" for it runs, "The glory of Israel shall come even unto Adullam." "Even to Adullam," den of discomfort, debt, and unconquerable difficulties; and out of it could spring a band of mighty men, ready to dare great things for the One who is indeed "the glory of Israel."

The parting motto given by her was:

Thou renewest,
Thou remainest.

And thus the renewing here shall be abiding. All, then, stood and repeated together in united thanksgiving, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, be glory and dominion for ever and ever! Amen."

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Flowers.

NO! I do not think it is because they are cheaper than jewellery that so many people wear flowers. I believe it is because they love them. Flowers are great favourites all the world over.

In Japan I am told that nearly all the girls are given the name of some flower. While I do not know whether that is true, I am certain of this, that mothers in England often name their precious babes after some flower. For instance, we meet with Rose, Violet, May, Olive, Flora, Daisy, Camelia, and Lily over and over again in any assembly of girls.

It would be impossible to speak about all the flowers now, but I want to tell you something about as many as there are letters in the word flowers.

The first letter is F. F is the beginning of the tiny flower—

FORGET-ME-NOT.

Its vocabulary is "true love." Just think of that. There are many legends told of the forget-me-not. One says that when God made the flowers He gave them all a name and then left them. When He returned they were all happy and dressed in their best, except one. When God asked that one why it was sad and drooping, it replied, "I cannot be happy like the other flowers, for I do not remember the name you gave me." Instead of being angry and chiding the little flower, God said: "Do not be cast down, cheer up; be bright and glad; in the future your name shall be Forget-me-not." When I read that, I could not help thinking of God's goodness to us. He made us in his own image, but sin marred and spoilt us, and left a very bad stain which nothing but the blood of Jesus could wash away. God then sent Jesus to die for sinners, and all who accept Him as their Saviour received the new name of Christian. If you have ever been like the little flower and have forgotten your name, I would advise you to "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

The next letter is L. That commences Laurel, an emblem of "Glory," but most young people will think of the Lily. But which kind? The White Lily, having for its emblem "Purity and Sweetness?" or there is which means "Happiness." No one can be happy in the dark. It is the wicked who love darkness better than the light. A parable tells us that two lily bulbs lived side by side under the ground. One said: "I have heard if we push forward we shall come to a brighter and better place than this," but the other said "What nonsense! We are well off where we are. Why not be contented?" "I cannot," the first replied; "if there is a nobler world I want to get to it," so it pushed upwards and by perseverance it overcame several obstacles in its way, and one day it was able to peep above the earth. It saw the blue sky, fruitful trees, smooth lake, and green grass; felt the warm sunshine, and heard the merry voices of little children, and admired their bright eyes and curly locks. It would have liked to have gone back and told the other one how beautiful all was above, but it could not. It could only feel sorry for the silly bulb, knowing nothing, seeing nothing, enjoying nothing, through unbelief. There are boys and girls, and men and women, too, like that bulb. They have been told of a better world above, but will make no effort to get out of the darkness into the light. Are you one of them?

THE LILY OF THE VALLEY,

The third letter is O. That stands for Orange Blossom, which is worn by the bride on her wedding-day. O also stands for Olive, the emblem of "Peace." It would be good to speak about these things but space will not permit. I will tell you of the which stands for "Charity." Its native home is in the tropical forests. The plants are laden with beautiful blossoms of a great variety of forms. Some appear like glittering butterflies, others like a stately swan, and some like descending doves. It is called the Holy Ghost flower. While it lives and thrives amid poisonous gases, decaying matter, and impurity, it gives back all that is lovely and worthy of admiration. You may learn from this flower to be beautiful yourself, even though you may live in a street where you hear and see many things displeasing to God. If you are placed where there are cheats, thieves, swearers, and people who use improper language, you are not to imitate them, but you must endeavour to shine for Jesus and win for yourself the name of Charity.

ORCHID

The fourth letter is W. There are flowers beginning with this letter which stand for riches, anger, time, talent, good nature, freedom, mourning, bravery, deception, independence, and many other things, but there is one very common flower which signifies "Fidelity in adversity," or "Faithful in misfortune." It is

THE WALLFLOWER.

A man lived in a lighthouse, and his little daughter was sick and ill. One day when he was going on shore, she asked him to bring her some wallflowers. The father promised her he would, but he was sorry for it afterwards. He tried at all the florists', gardeners', and other places to procure some, but was told by all that it was not the right time of year for them. With a sad heart he went back to the lighthouse with a big packet of seeds, but no flowers. Almost the first words his darling girl said to him were, "Papa, have you got the wallflowers?" He pretended not to hear her, and left the room; and as on each occasion when the same question was asked he returned no answer, his sick child turned her head to the wall in a pet. She said: "Papa always forgets me. Papa never gives me what I want. Papa does not care for me. Papa cannot love me. I will not ask him for anything else." Some time after the father said to his daughter, "I want to wheel you about a little to-day, dear." So, placing her in a bath chair, he pushed it to one part of the lighthouse, where against the wall were growing a large quantity of lovely wallflowers. "There, my dear," he said; "the day you asked me to bring you flowers from the town I could not procure any; but I bought some seeds, and the seeds have grown into those beautiful flowers. Are they not lovely?" Then the girl burst into tears, and told her father how unkind she had been to say that he did not care for her, that he did not love her or give her anything. But he soon kissed the tears away, and told her of the Heavenly Father who made the flowers, and the unkindness of his children who did not trust Him at all times, but who thought Him cruel, careless, unloving, and indifferent to their wants and requirements, while all the time He was doing all things well that He might at the right moment give them exceeding abundantly above all that they ask or think. If every boy and girl who reads this will trust God and obey his commandments, they will find the garden of life full of flowers.

The fifth letter is E. E. is the beginning of the sweet

EGLANTINE (SWEETBRIAR).

It means, "I wound to heal." That is what the doctor frequently has to do. He cuts above the wound that he can apply his remedies, and while the patient wonders why, he does not say a word. He knows what is needed, and he does what he believes to be the best for the sufferer. Jesus, the Great Physician, often has to wound the sinner before He can heal the sin-sick soul. There are pride, ambition, selfishness, and many other irritating things that have to be got rid of before He can make a perfect cure, and the sinner does not readily and willingly part with these. He set an example Himself, for He humbled Himself, and was wounded for our transgressions.

The sixth letter is R. You know that stands for and the rose is an emblem of "Love." There are many varieties of roses. The rose is a great favourite. It grows in the poor man's garden as easily as in the Queen's conservatory. You have no doubt read of the War of the Roses, but did you ever hear the story of the loveliest rose in the world? It is only a parable, but it is very instructive. There lived a queen who had spent many years of her life collecting and cultivating roses. She had all sorts of them growing in her gardens and about her palace. They were of every fragrance and colour. One day the Queen fell ill, and the doctors said she must die. "There is only one thing that can save her," said one of the wisest among them. "Bring her the loveliest rose in the world—the rose which exhibits the purest and brightest love: if it is brought to her before her eyes close, she will not die." Then from all parts of her dominions came those who brought roses that told of love. They brought a crimson bud from the place where a patriot had died for his country, and a pure white blossom from the garden where two children played together. They brought a rose from the arbour where a mother nursed her babe, and one from the fields where men toiled for bread. But the wise doctor shook his head. "The roses you have brought are very beautiful; but the Rose that will save the Queen is more beautiful by far," he said. Then the Queen's son brought the Bible and read to her of the Rose of Sharon. She looked to Jesus, the loveliest rose in the world, accepted Him as her Saviour, and gained everlasting life. I want you all to secure this Rose.

THE ROSE,

The last letter is S. Among the other flowers beginning with S is the which no doubt you have been told is an emblem of "Hope." It speaks of hope in dark days, tells us that there is a friend in need. All the flowers are God's missionaries sent to cheer sad hearts and lighten dark places. An old lady kept a few poor little withered, dried-up snowdrops between the pages of her well-worn Bible. She had an only son—a bright, bonny boy. A lady gave him a bunch of snowdrops one dirty day. His mother had just finished scrubbing the boards of her room, when he came into the house and asked for some water and a glass to put them in. The mud came off his boots on to the clean boards, and his mother was very cross and angry with him. She threw the flowers into the dustbin and ordered her lad to go at once to school. Poor little fellow! All the gladness faded out of his face in a moment, but he obeyed his mother and went to school. The clock struck four, but her boy did not return home. She waited and wondered, but still there was no sign of him. She went to the door and looked down the street, and saw, surrounded by a crowd, a tall policeman carrying a little motionless figure in his arms. It was her darling son. He had been run over. He lived long enough to ask his mother to forgive him for not wiping his boots, but his blue eyes closed for ever in the sleep which knows no waking here. When his mother found that he was dead, she picked up the snowdrops, washed them and dried them, and placed them in her Bible. Years after many friends asked her why she kept the faded flowers, but they all received the same answer. It was this: To remind her of her hasty words, and help her to be gentle, forbearing, patient, and loving; but above all to fill her with hope. She believes that she will see her lad in the home above. Have you any hope of meeting your friends in heaven? If there are any on earth with whom you have had hasty words, go as quickly as you can and make it up with them. You never know how soon they may be called away for ever beyond the reach of earthly love or kindness.

SNOWDROP,

Learn from the flowers lessons of love, peace, and hope, and endeavour to keep away the weeds of passion, jealousy, pride, animosity, presumption, and deceit.

J. L. Nye.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 188).

The (a) initials, read downwards, spell the name of a centurion who feared God; the (b) finals, the name of one of the first followers of Christ.

1. Whose sacrifice was not accepted? (Gen. i.-v.).
2. The son of Nun (Num. xiii.).
3. A title applied to Christ (Rev. iv.-vi.)
4. A victim of Ahab's jealousy (1 Kings xx.-xxii.).
5. A prophet to whom a little maid sent her master (2 Kings).
6. A famous mountain.
7. A region from which a great multitude followed Christ (Mark iii.).
8. A helper in Christ whom Paul saluted (Rom xv.-end).
9. A king of Israel.
10. Say briefly what you know of (a) (Acts viii.-xii.).
11. Say briefly what you know of (b) (John i.-iii.).

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen, any six; under seventeen, one to nine.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 187).

1. The fig-tree whereon was found nothing but leaves (Matt. xxi. 19).
2. The fig-tree under which Jesus saw Nathanael (John i. 48).
3. The tree of knowledge of good and evil (Genesis iii. 3).
4. The oak in the branches of which Absalom was caught by his hair (2 Sam. xviii. 9).
5. The angel which came to send Gideon as Israel's deliverer sat under an oak (Judges vi. 11).
6. Cedar, fir, and algum trees were used in the building of the Temple (2 Chron. ii. 8).
7. Zacchæus climbed into a sycomore tree to see Jesus (Luke xix. 4).
8. A leaf of an olive tree was brought into the Ark by the dove to Noah (Gen. viii. 11).
9. The tree seen by Nebuchadnezzar in his dream (Daniel iv. 10).
10. Abraham entertained three angels under a tree (Gen. xviii. 8).
11. David smote the Philistines near the mulberry trees (2 Sam. v. 24).
12. The Ark was made of Gopher wood (Genesis vi. 4).

Owing to Monday being Bank Holiday, I have not given a "first list" of correct answers to last Searcher (No. 187). A complete list will appear next week.

No. 186.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—
A—Irene Ashdown, Maggie and Bertha Arres-Mather, Percy Allen, Enderby Anderson.
B—Eva Browne, Massy and Allen Baker, Mabel Birney*, Teresa, Frank, and Avory Blackie, Mabel Bailey, Lily and Stanley Boxer, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Evelyn and Dorothy Barrett, Lindsay, Corbet*, and Leonard Browne, Ashley Bowker, Nellie Buck, Dorothy Benson, Gladys, Godfrey, and Dorothy Bates, Robert Browne, Catherine Barber, Mary Beck, Dorothy Berry, Lilian Bulter*, Louis Berthé.
C—Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Bessie Cheale, Edith Corrie, Ethel Craigie, Isabel, Mabel and Charles Candlin, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Eleanor Chance, Arthur and Winnie Cox, Dorothy Clarke, Duncan Campbell*, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Maggie, Jessie and Walter Carter.
D—Irene Duke, Marie Denizot, Albert Davis, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, Harold Davis, Gordon Duncan, Vera Dickinson, William Dilly, Agnes Darke.
E—Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*.
F—Mary and Blanche Freeman, Richard Farmer, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Agnes, Flossy, Maggie and Lewis Fullarton, Bessie, Kate, Maggie, Eva and Mabel Fletcher, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Helen Forbes.
G—Dorothy, Jack, Edith, Stuart, and Margaret Gray, E., Mary, Daisy and Alfred Greenacre, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Kenneth and Constance Gabbett, Aileen Gardner, Thos. Groombridge, George and Colin Graham Brown, Mary Glass, Edith Grieve, David Gardiner, Effie, Mary and George Graham.
H—Winifred and Edith Harvey, Georgette Hoffmann, Violet Holford, Ella Hake, Helen and H. Hunter, Theodora Hill, Ethel Hutchings.
I—Nellie Irving*, Isabel and Ami Inglis.
J—Lizzie Johnstone, Thomas Johnson, Betty Jacobs, Kate Johns, Rita Jones.
K—Dorothy, Grace and Philippa Kerr, Max, Eva and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Agnes, Willie, Alex and Isabella Kay.
L—Georgina and Cecilia Lichtenstein, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, C. Livingstone Learmouth, Guinefred Leigh.
M—Ada Macnutt, Hedley Meader*, Harry Malaher, Margaret, Dorothy and Daniel Morris, Marie Meek, Christina Marshall, Howard Moir*, Charlie Medcalf, Evelyn Moir, Lillie Mallory, Barbara Maconchy, Kathleen and Gracie McClure, Bella and Abraham Mack, Hylda Medill, Lewis McGregor, Daisy, Nellie and Annie Mackenzie.
N—Marjory Northover, Cissy and Peter Nicholson.
O—Maude and Eva Oakes.
P—Winnie Page, Hilda and Ernest Pearce, Walter Perryman, Gladys and Isabel Phipps, Kathleen Pincott, Dorothy Patten, Edith Purkiss, Myrtle Perry, Alice Powdrill, Willie, Winnie, Jessie and Ada Palmer, Lilian Pearson, Laura Percy, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach.
R—Elsie Ridewood, Elmina, Jessie and Isabel Roe, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Gwennie Ravenhill, Gordon Remington, Kate Rosenbloom, Nora Read.
S—T. and D. D. Stanier, Florrie Smith, Undine, Wilfred and Mervyn Shaw, Nannie Sturrock, Binford Sellwood, Kathleen and Elsie Slark, Bertha Stocker, Lucy Soltau, Solomon Stockfish, Dolly Salt, Violet and C. R. Salvesen, Herbert and Marie Stuart, Bessie Symes, Fanny Stileman, Bessie Scantlebury, Frank Sutton, Evelyn Shaw, Mary de Spiganovicz, Dorothy* and F. Stalker.
T—Frank Thompson, Theodora Thorn, Louie Tibbits, Olive Taylor*, Marjorie Tracey.
U—Queenie Upton.
W—Annie and Lucy Willis, Georgina and Sarah Wilson, Mary Ware, Bertie Walls, Ernest and Queenie Wakeford, F. and Madge Wilson, Connie Wood*, Pringle Wilson.
Z—Sophia Zascitsky.

FOREIGN LIST.

PRIZE COMPETITION.—Katie T. Thomson (Bulgaria), 1st Certificate, Division II.
No. 180.—Minnie* and Cuckoo Lister, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). Nos. 180, 181.—W. B. Henderson* (Jamaica). No. 181.—Rotha, Lottie and Ivan St. George (Canada), Charlotte Cane (S. Africa). Nos. 181 and 183.—Jean Scott (Canada). No. 183.—Eliza Scott, Dora Wallace (Canada). Nos. 183, 184, 185.—Nettie, Will and Katie Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received.

DOROTHY GOLDSMITH.—You gave no reference to question six in No. 183.

NELLIE BUCK, IRENE DUKE.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers."

HELEN FORBES.—Thank you for your little letter. Could you not try and write a little smaller?

TEMPERANCE FOSKETT.—Your answer to question nine was wrong, as you will see if you turn to the answers given to No. 185.

Uncle Tom's Cot—One who loves little ones, £2; C.R. and W.R., 10s.; L.R. McG., 1s.; M.F., 2s.; 2 13 0

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending August 19.

Sun., August	13	Mark	v. 35-48	Thurs., Aug.	17	Mark	vi. 45-56
Mon., "	14	"	vi. 1-13	Fri., "	18	"	vii. 1-13
Tues., "	15	"	vi. 14-29	Sat., "	19	"	vii. 14-23
Wed., "	16	"	vi. 30-44

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Westleigh, near Wellington, Som.; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Patridge Green, West Grinstead, to Aug. 25; Mr. F. P. Rowe, with caravan, Stisted, near Braintree, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Woburn, Bedfordshire; Messrs. Drake and Charante, with caravan, Cowden, Kent.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, to Aug. 31, Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Lt.-Col. Dru Drury, Bude, N. Cornwall. Rev. W. H. Brealey, Clevedon. Mr. J. R. Naylor, Colwyn Bay. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal, to Aug. 31. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Mr. Phillips Welch, Folkestone, to Aug. 21. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton, to Sept. 1. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan, to Aug. 20. Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Mr. Wm. Sloss, Nairn, to Aug. 25. Rev. L. C. Carr, Overstrand, to Sept. 1. Mr. V. C. Brown, Paignton. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Mr. Wigram, Portrush, Ireland. Mr. C. H. Collier, Ramsey, Isle of Man, to Aug. 13. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards, to Sept. 6. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., Mr. G. Foster-Carter and Mr. P. J. Fear, Sandown. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Seaford. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. Jno. Mitchell, Weston-super-Mare. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho, to Aug. 28. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes. Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley. Mr. G. Watson, Withernsea, Yorks. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

Other Lands.

India's Aborigines.

IN the past I have tried to find the English friends who are interested in the well-being of the Aborigines of this empire. I have repeatedly heard there is a society that interests itself in these disappearing peoples, but I have failed in every attempt to find such friends.

In asking the editor of THE CHRISTIAN to publish this letter, I hope that some one will see it who will put me in communication with any friends or society whose hearts go out toward the neglected people in question.

Most interesting, accessible, and yet sadly neglected by the Christian agencies of the church of Christ, they afford unusual encouragement to missionary faith. Without priests, temples, or idols, as a rule they are hidden away in the hill recesses of India, deeply bound in the fetters of demonolatry. Undivided by caste, practically free from polygamy, allowing their women a much better social position than their Hindu neighbours, they are children of the forest. They possess languages of their own, which, however, are unwritten, and no doubt many of them will disappear.

We are trying to do something for the Kois of the Nizam's dominions and Bastar State. But we are more and more convinced that work among the Aborigines will not mix with work among other classes. At Yellandu we have baptized over fifty of them, but have utterly failed in one year to persuade any of them to meet with the converted Hindus in worship. We regret it, but this is the fact. It leads us to conclude that work among Aborigines must be carried on by itself, and thus a special agency and friends for it are needed.

I would ask prayer for these people, and sympathy and help on their behalf.

C. B. WARD.

Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, India.

Finland's Troubles.

I HAVE long known something of the sadness and sorrow which have entered thousands and tens of thousands of Finnish homes through the threatened changes in the Finnish Constitution. Never, however, did I realize this so much as of late.

The Finnish people love their country, stony and sterile though it be, with a love so true and deep that hardly anything except dire necessity will induce them to leave it. To leave it without hope of return is almost worse than death. Yet 500 are thus leaving it every week from Hangö alone. Many of these have had to sell their all to raise the money needed to place them, homeless and penniless, on Canadian soil. It is on behalf of these poor and almost heart-broken emigrants that I now write.

A Christian lady has lately been induced to try and give each one, as they leave the country, a copy of the New Testament, with something like the following written in each copy—"A parting gift from the Fatherland (date); read John xiv. and Psalm xxiii." Other ladies have joined her in the work, but the cost is necessarily heavy. I feel sure that the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society would be ready to help in this work; but they have so generously granted large supplies for gratuitous distribution among the Russian peasants in the famine-stricken districts, that we do not feel we can apply to them again. Will some of your readers help?

I would prefer if any wishing to help would kindly send their gifts to you, or to Mr. Mandelöff, Ekenäs, rather than to myself. Should more money come in than is required, it will be used for tract work in the poorer and more needy parts of Finland.

Let all friends, whether they can give or not, pray that God will overrule the terrible and unexpected troubles which have come upon Finland to the spiritual and eternal good of its people.

J. D. KILBURN.

Torneo.

Swedish Missionary Work.

THE Swedish Missionary Association is a union of the free churches in Sweden, largely resembling in church government the Congregational churches in England. It was formed for carrying on home and foreign missions, and has made remarkable progress. At the twentieth annual meeting, held recently at Stockholm, it was reported that there are about a thousand churches, with a membership of at least 90,000. At this year's convention thirty-seven churches were received into the union.

The income for 1898 was £13,540, and the expenditure £12,100. Of this sum £9,000 was spent on foreign missions. The Society's most important field is on the Congo. This mission was commenced in 1881 in connection with the old Livingstone Inland Mission, and has been prosperous, in spite of all difficulties. The first missionary, the writer of these lines, had to return home on account of the climate, after only a short stay, and this year has been a specially trying one to the health of the workers. In less than six months

SEVEN MISSIONARIES HAVE DIED.

Reinforcements are, however, to be sent out immediately.

The mission on the Congo has five stations, and there are forty-two out-stations, where regular mission work and schools are carried on. There are twenty-four European workers, and fifty-six native evangelists; 270 have been baptized during the year, and the Church members numbered 908. Extensive educational work is carried on; there are now fifty-one schools, with 1,579 scholars. Medical missionary work is also done. At Diadio 4,500 patients were treated. To the mission work the native Christians have given in collections £25. Besides the direct mission work, a great deal of manual labour is done, such as building, agriculture, and household work.

In the mission printing house at Londe there is great activity. Last year an arithmetic was published, a new edition of 6,000 copies of a Bible study, and 4,000 copies of the Epistle to the Romans. Of the monthly paper, Minsamu Miayenge, which is very popular amongst the natives, 650 copies have been printed, also a Kifioti almanack, besides many smaller publications.

NATIVE EVANGELISTS

are trained. The last course of study at Mukimbungu was attended by seventeen natives.

In the east of China the Society has three stations—Wuchang, Ichang, and Shasi, with ten missionaries and some native helpers. One of the missionaries writes:—"This year has been one of the best. All societies can rejoice over great blessing attending their work." The work includes schools, distribution of books, evangelistic and medical work. The schools have been well attended, more children having applied for admission than the missionaries have been able to receive. About 16,000 copies of books, larger and smaller, have been circulated amongst the people. The church members at the three stations are eighty-three. Sungpu, where a few years ago two Swedish missionaries were killed, have been visited by the missionaries, and a native worker stationed. The missionaries themselves hope before very long to be able to settle down there. In the West of China (at Kashgar and Yarkand) there are two stations with seven labourers. The work here was commenced only a few years ago.

Besides the work in Congo and China, the Swedish Missionary Association carries on missions in Russia, in Algiers (among the Jews by Dr. J. E. Nyström), in London (among sailors), and in the North of Sweden amongst the Lapps. The Home Mission has also been richly blest by the Lord, and there have been revivals in many places.

17, Percy Street, W. E. J. ENGVALL.

American Notes.

By Rev. George C. NEEDHAM.

WE are in the midst of quite a revival of tent evangelism this summer. In several cities simultaneously the tent has been brought into requisition for reaching the non-church-going population. A few evangelists, notably Rev. Thomas Needham, have utilized this form of temporary tabernacle in itinerancy for many years. Quite recently I joined him for a week in the mountains of Virginia. There was no difficulty in filling the tent with eager listeners in that remote place, where a Bible Conference had not been previously held. Its success this year will probably establish it as another annual gathering for the poorer disciples who cannot travel to larger conferences. In addition to the great New York tent, under the management of Evangelist Pratt, Philadelphia has already erected five, and others will soon dot the city. Already there is proof that we are in the beginning of a gracious revival.

As by common impulse, several pastors, with their elders, deeply feeling the enervated and enfeebled spiritual life of the churches, consulted together over ways and means for giving the life-giving Gospel to the people. Tent preaching was considered the most practical. Immediately meetings were called for prayer. I am now a veteran in Philadelphia evangelism, having, with my brothers, used tents in the city and neighbourhood during the past quarter of a century; but I have not seen heretofore anything comparable to the sweet and serious spirit of the present movement. Both pastors and business men are heartily enlisted, and some of them have abridged their vacations in order to further the effort during the summer in

THIS DISTRESSINGLY HOT CITY.

The character of our Weekly Noon Prayer meeting indicates the spirit of the campaign. Our city has had spasmodic revivals where the human element predominated. Men and machinery interfered with God's Holy Spirit. This fatal mistake is fully recognised, and now the earnest supplications are toward the exaltation of God's Son, and the hiding of God's servants. The newspapers are publishing reports of the work, and other cities are considering what to do.

The striking feature of the Philadelphia movement is, that it did not originate with any of the numerous societies, but with the Church through her officers. The Spirit has chosen the old historic Presbyterian body of believers to inaugurate it; but we hope soon to see other churches merged into a united and aggressive campaign.

NOR IS IT A SECTARIAN MOVEMENT.

The evangelists at present who preach in the tents are Dr. L. W. Munhall, Rev. Thomas Needham, and the writer. Dr. Wharton will soon join us. Several pastors from other cities are participating. Local ministers, business men, and members of the young people's societies, are co-operating. A perfectly competent local organization has charge of details in each district. Dr. John MacIntosh, who had experience in the great Irish Revival of 1859-1863, with Mr. Ely, a young missionary from India, have assumed the burden of secretaryship. Mr. Converse, manager of the Great Baldwin Locomotive Works, is president. Such men of note and consecration give a decided character to the work.

Our Niagara Conference for Bible Study, the oldest of its kind in these United States, has just closed its sessions. It certainly was a period of refreshing. The teaching was strongly orthodox, the old lines of evangelicalism being rigidly pursued. Many modern fallacies and delusions were Scripturally exposed, and "the blessed hope" made prominent. The place of appointment was at Point Chataqua (not the place of the Literary Assembly), which may hereafter become the permanent location of this great school of Bible Students. Dr. W. J. Erdman, the honoured secretary for many years, has impressed his characteristics of modesty, spirituality, and accurate Bible scholarship, upon the Niagara Conference. As the years go by, we more than ever miss our Great-heart, the valiant soldier with his trusty blade, Dr. James H. Brookes.

Germantown, Philadelphia.

Special Needs of China.

I AM exceedingly thankful that my previous list of suggestions have proved helpful. May I therefore plead for more earnest prayer for the following needs of this dark land?

I. That God would graciously raise up a large band of truly consecrated native witnesses to go forth and spread his message of salvation. I think the time has come for us to be in dead earnest about this question. At the present rate of sending out workers, it is practically hopeless to imagine that China is ever to be evangelized. As you look over the immense field, and remember the comparative few who are out here, and then make the necessary deductions for those on the sick list, the many "at home" on furlough, and the number required to "abide by the stuff" for business and other departments, it seems nothing short of "playing at missions" for the Church at home to do as they are doing. Therefore, it is imperative that we cry to God, and ask unitedly for a band of godly natives to be raised up and sent forth.

II. That special blessing may rest upon those who are instructing and otherwise preparing native Christians for so great a work. It is of vast importance that such men and women be taught of God; mere learning will not avail. It is possible to have a most cultured native preacher without any spiritual power. Therefore, let it be united pleading, for men and women of simple faith, great love, and

WELL-TAUGHT IN THE LIVING WORD.

III. That the missionaries themselves lose not their first love for these perishing millions. Those who think it an "easy thing" to be superior to such heathen surroundings, had better come out and learn for themselves. Praise God, we have our rich compensations, and He faileth never. Yes, we are not without compensations, for God is ever teaching us to profit (Isa. xlviii. 17). The inner side of every cloud is bright and shining lining.

IV. Pray that many of the Lord's messengers may come from the home lands, and visit needy China. I was reading that old story of the lepers the other day, in 2 Kings vii., and as I read I began to wonder how far we might read into it a message to privileged Christians at home. My eyes lighted on verse 9, and these were the words, "We do not well." And then I turned to those earnest words in Neh. viii. 10, and I read, "Go, eat, drink, and send," and I began to wonder how it was that no men and women of means came out to teach and cheer the lonely and needy ones—such as could give themselves for two or three years to this sort of deputation work—of course only those of ripe Christian experience, apt to teach, and able to cheer, &c. Then I thought of the recent visit of Mr. Charles Inwood. What a help it had been, and how sorry many were that he could not carry out his desire to visit far-off inland workers, &c. And so the most needy places are still left.

But then I called to mind the secret of all the difficulties—how that Christians at home prefer the "easy life." Yet I thought there must be some who love their Lord, and who think it a joy to serve Him only and wholly. To such, then, the words, "We do not well," may be a silent preacher; hence I pass them on. No time like the present. The days are evidently darkening. Let there be much waiting on God, and if the call does come, let there be no compromise, but a ready, hearty answer, "Here am I, send me."

I shall be glad to hear from any who find these suggestions helpful.

John A. Stooke.

C.I.M., Chefoo, N. China.

International S.S. Lessons.

August 20, 1899.

The River of Salvation.

Ezekiel xlvii. 1-12.

Golden Text—Rev. xxii. 17.

Introductory.

YOU will remember that the Jews were in captivity in Babylon, and that the prophet Ezekiel was also an exile, and lived on the banks of the river Chebar; and there God gave him some wonderful visions (recall last week's lesson). To-day we are going to read of another vision which God gave to Ezekiel when he had been about twenty-five years in Babylon. It was a very long vision, beginning at chap. xl. The prophet thought he was back again at Jerusalem, which had been destroyed fourteen years before, and saw the New Temple which should be built when the Jews returned thither, and every part of this Temple building was measured. There was deep meaning in all that was done. Then "the glory of the Lord filled the house" (chap. xliii. 5-7). The Temple was the place where God's presence was manifested. Where is God's temple now? (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19). Now follows our present lesson.

Geographical.

Point out Jerusalem on the map, also the plain leading to the Dead Sea and beyond it. This sea covers the site of Sodom and Gomorrah, and in its bituminous waters no vegetable or animal life can exist; hence a picture of the deadness of the soul without Christ, the Living Water. Engedi means "the fountain of the kid," and is situated about the middle of the west shore of the Dead Sea. En-eglaim, "the fountain of the two calves," is supposed to have been near the mouth of the Jordan. "The Great Sea" was the Mediterranean. It is a natural fact that a little stream issued from the Temple hill; it was the only spring of water in Jerusalem, and flowed gently eastward (Isa. viii. 6). On this the vision may have been founded.

Explanatory.

Verses 1, 2. Joel iii. 18; Zech. xiii. 1, xiv. 8, 9; Isa. xxxv. 1; John iv. 10-14, vii. 37, 39; Rev. xxii. 1, 2. These texts give us the meaning of the "waters." Jehovah is the source of all life; from Him flows every blessing. Through Jesus Christ his Son the "water of life" reaches our dead and desert souls, and through the children of God all nations on the earth are to receive the blessings of the Gospel

Verses 3-5. The stream gradually broadened as it flowed on. This reminds us of "the stone" in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and of some of our Lord's parables (Matt. xiii.). The Kingdom of Christ slowly, but surely, increases. At the end of the first thousand years there were fifty millions of Christians, 500 years after there were 100 millions, and so on the Church has increased more and more.

Verse 6. Ask the same question of the scholars. Do you understand as far as this? Then we will go on.

Verses 7 and 12. The results of the living waters. Trees bearing fruit for the healing and feeding of the nations. (Ps. i. 3; Rev. xxii. 2.) Speak of the fruit of the Spirit in a child's life.

Verses 8-10. The River of Salvation brings life wherever it flows. Illustrate by the value of the large rivers in hot countries where they only have rain once a year. Dr. Livingstone discovered in Central Africa, in the broad upland, the sources of the great rivers, innumerable gushing streams, the life-giving power of that hot country. Wherever the Gospel is taught, God's Holy Spirit works the mighty change. (This can be illustrated ad libitum from the history of foreign missions, or work in the slums, or change in the life of individuals and children.)

Verse 11. It was only where the river flowed that the life came. There are still miry places full of sin in the world, where the life-giving Gospel has not come.

Personal Questions.

The river of the water of life is flowing past me. Am I any better for it? Does it flow through me to others? Am I bearing the fruit of the Spirit? Read it in Gal. v. 22. Am I getting broader and better by God's grace day by day, and taking heed that the waters from which I drink issue out of the fountain which "proceeds from the throne of God and of the Lamb"?

White Cross League.

SOME time ago we printed an appeal for funds to extend this work in the army. The Secretary writes as follows of the work of the League:—

"The results have, I am glad to say, been most encouraging. We have been invariably well received in garrison towns, and have been afforded opportunities of addressing large numbers of men who have listened attentively to the speakers and appeared grateful for the advice given them, and frequently anxious to assist us in the promotion of our objects. In several instances the officers in command of the districts or regiments have been present at the lectures, and given us their personal support.

"Correspondence with non-commissioned officers and men has been constant and regular. We have now men in the ranks actively engaged in advocating our objects and distributing our literature amongst their comrades, whenever they think it likely to do good, in upwards of seventy garrisons in India and the United Kingdom. Last year the camp on Bulford Down was visited by Col. H. Everitt, and several meetings addressed; and this year, during the July autumn manœuvres, the secretary visited Salisbury Plain at the invitation of the chaplains, and addressed large gatherings of men in each of the three camps. At the conclusion of each meeting he personally distributed large numbers of our papers, which were eagerly received. Of course, each of these papers would be read, not only by the man who received it, but, in all probability, by his comrades in the same tent. It is proposed to visit each of the camps again this month when fresh bodies of troops are in them.

"Our little volume of pamphlets, bound together for the use of sailors and soldiers, has been accepted by the Admiralty, and a copy placed in the seaman's library of each ship in commission, and each hospital and gaol. A supply asked for by the secretary of the Army Temperance Association in India, to be placed in the reading-room in every garrison, was despatched last month, amounting to nearly 200 copies."

The headquarters are at Dean's Yard, Westminster Abbey, S.W.

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.

THIS useful institution continues to exercise beneficent influences, social and moral, on the youths of the East End of London. One orphan lad, whose only home was the streets, was taken in the Institute Home; a change of clothing was provided, and his needs attended to. Soon after his admission he decided for Christ, and is now a bright and happy youth, satisfactorily occupying a respectable situation in the City. Another youth who had been dishonest, and who, coming to London from his home in the country, fell amongst thieves, was admitted. He subsequently attended a meeting for Bible reading and prayer, and was led to Christ. He is now creditably filling a position in a railway office. The prodigal son of a Christian minister has also been rescued. He became transformed, both temporally and spiritually. The method of Rev. Thos. Jackson, the hon. superintendent, in discriminately selecting lads from the common lodging-houses, and from among the outcasts of Whitechapel, admitting such to the Home and bringing them under sympathetic but definite Christian supervision, has resulted in much blessing.

Meetings for Christian Workers. — The Committee of the Central Y.M.C.A. feel that many Christian workers would welcome an opportunity for fellowship and communion at the beginning of next winter's work, and that the interdenominational platform of the Association might well be used as the medium for bringing Christians together for this purpose. It has therefore been arranged for meetings to be held from Tuesday, October 3, to Friday, October 6, inclusive. The subjects chosen are as follow:—"The Christian's Life," "The Christian's Calling," and "The Christian's Hope."

(1023)

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD, with all its "light and leading," lags behind in some most important matters. The question of the housing of the working classes is one that needs serious consideration just now. It is undoubtedly true that there are unhealthy areas among us which cry loudly for demolition, and that there is an increasing demand for the erection of workmen's dwellings at a rental, say, of 5s. per week. Under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, if an area is proved to be unhealthy, the local authority may acquire the land; and we are glad to observe that at the present time this subject is being carefully investigated by the Oxford Branch of the Christian Social Union, with a view to making proposals to the City Council. May the City Council soon see its way to use the powers at its command, and may the Christian Social Union have the support of the churches in its effort to bring the subject before the Corporation.

We are glad to find that among the arrangements made for the University Extension Students, who meet this week, the spiritual needs have not been forgotten. Besides the course of lectures, a debate at the Union, a visit to Blenheim, and other plans for recreative enjoyment, special sermons are to be preached, and we hope that, under God, they will give to the gathering a distinctive note which will linger in the memory and stamp an impression which will not easily fade away.

The New Road Baptist Church is fortunate in having as its pastor the Rev. James Dann. Some interesting facts about his life are published in the current number of The Baptist Magazine, and they present a profitable study to those who love to trace the hand of God in leading men into his vineyard. Mr. Dann's ministry in Oxford has been strikingly successful. His strong powers of organization have made his church a centre of life to the villages around, operations in a large number of stations being conducted by zealous voluntary helpers.

Missions to Hoppers and Pea Pickers.

A NUMBER of missions are being arranged just now for the benefit of people working in the hop yards. Mr. William Luff, with Mr. Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, is proposing to visit, for the seventeenth time, the hoppers of Worcester and Hereford. The missioners look to Christian friends for financial aid. Supplies of tracts should be addressed care of Mr. P. Clissett, Stanley Hill, Ledbury.

Larger numbers of hoppers than usual are expected in the Hampshire district. One missionary writes respecting last year's work: "I have come across at least ten cases in which blessing was received. One man said: 'I have never forgotten the hymns and the words spoken.' To-day he is a Christian man." Address, for tracts, &c., Miss Chinn, Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

Mr. John Burnham writes of good work among the pea pickers. The camps were visited with a portable organ, hymn sheets and tracts, as well as booklets for the bairns. A number of very degraded characters were reached. Many signed the temperance pledge. Some yielded to Christ. Mr. Burnham is proposing to visit the hop yards also. Address, Fern Bank, Brentford.

In Mr. J. W. C. Fegan's letter of last week, the writer did not intend his appeal to be read to the prejudice of existing missions, among which, in addition to those noted above, are the Church Mission Society and the Christian Mission to Hop Pickers.

The British Chautauqua.—The first programme of the forthcoming meetings of the British Chautauqua at Saltburn is now before us. The president is Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne Park, who preaches the Chautauqua sermon. Dr. Monro Gibson, the retiring president, lectures on "Greek and Christian Thought on Religion." A lecture on "The Coming Century," will be delivered by the great American orator, Dr. Lorimer, of Boston. A class in New Testament Greek will be conducted by Professor T. Williams, B.A., of Aberystwyth, while lectures will also be delivered by Professor Vernon Bartlet, of Oxford, Rev. W. D. McLaren, of Putney, and Rev. Chas. Brown, of Hornsey. These, with conferences, model classes, coach drives, and other excursions, make up a most delightful programme. Further particulars may be had of the Secretary, Mr. L. W. Gibson, 111, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood.

Letters to the Editor.

The Transvaal Crisis.

SIR,—Mrs. Josephine Butler has the respect and admiration of all Christians, but I regret to notice that she bases her appeal for prayer to God to avert war on the assumption that the English are in the wrong. We should certainly pray that God would so overrule events, and so dispose the hearts of both people, that the peace may be preserved. Mrs. Butler, however, states with approval that the Dutch in Holland are appealing to the English people to use their influence against the threatened war. Why to the English? Why not rather to their kith and kin in the Transvaal, the Boers? Mrs. Butler seems to think the English want to oppress the Boers, and only as a sort of parenthesis does she admit that "the Outlanders have just cause of complaint and protest." If they have a just cause, why write as though they were in the wrong? Is not the underlying principle in the present crisis the old struggle for civil and religious liberty and freedom from bribery and corruption — a struggle which, in our past English history, especially under a Cromwell, has received the approval of Nonconformists? —Yours faithfully,

H. A. Henderson.

"The Words of the Pure."

DEAR SIR,—The few words you published recently from Rev. Silvester Horne's sermon are, indeed, timely words, and certainly "point to one of the most subtle and pervading evils with which Christian teachers have to deal." The Archbishop of Canterbury has said that the greatest sin of to-day is not intemperance, but impurity; and I, for one, believe him.

This temptation, to which Mr. Horne says "people lightly and readily expose themselves," is manifest on every hand. In fact, many a man is so possessed with the spirit of impurity that he allows everything to minister to evil imaginations, which is invariably made manifest in his conversation, "though he hide it under his tongue." Stir a pool with a lily—the very emblem of purity and sweetness—and mud will arise. So it is with the minds of some men. For let them but be stirred with the purest thought, and filth will arise. ("As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.") Are these they in each of whom eight evil spirits dwell, and make the last state of such a one worse than the first?

We are told that education is "a drawing out." Then, if this be true, I maintain that evil is chiefly "a drawing out." For if the heart, which is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," has not been changed by "the washing of regeneration," it is more easily educated in the ways of evil. I have strong reasons for speaking on this subject, because I have been a public servant for several years, and have had opportunities of studying the general tendencies of the people of all classes, and there is scarcely a day passes but what I find this spirit of impurity exhibited in someone's conversation, and very often in professedly good company. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," said Christ. How many of the poor wretched women on our streets can trace their fall to their toleration of ambiguous conversation!

Many a man who, in the days of his youth, was guilty of "indiscretions," but is now, by God's help, leading a pure life, knows something of the struggle against the snarling hounds of memory, and, in God's strength, seeks to overcome them, trusting in his promise to restore unto him "the years that the locust hath eaten." And one of the means he employs is to enter the company of professing Christians; but, alas! he but too often finds that, as a result of these "Christians'" ambiguous conversation, the sleeping dogs of memory are aroused within him. And if he has not got a firm trust in God, he is in danger of turning back. Oh! "purify your hearts, ye double-minded!"—Yours faithfully,

Paul Grey.

Evangelistic.

THE Gordon Evangelistic Mission, in addition to having four tents at different points between Nairn and Brechin, has this summer erected a large tent for Gospel work in Aberdeen. During the month of July Mr. McFarlane has been the evangelist, and has addressed large gatherings.

The evangelist presented Christ in all his fulness and power to save, and the Lord set his seal to the word in bringing lost ones to Himself. A gratifying feature of the work was the hearty co-operation of Christians of all denominations. Mr. Arthur Klein is continuing the mission.

Mr. W. R. Lane sends some interesting particulars of the evangelistic meetings in Keswick Market Place:—"We have had a splendid time. The Word was evidently blessed to some. Each night we also had opportunities of personal talk with those who professed faith in the Lord Jesus. The closing Sunday was a grand day. Every street and alley was visited, and the Gospel preached and sung. A procession through the main streets made a deep impression. The tent was filled, and I had the privilege of preaching the Gospel. Many remained for personal dealing, and several seemed to accept Christ."

A three weeks' mission has been held at Stenhousemuir, N.B., in one of the Evangelization Society's tents, conducted by Mr. Robert McLean. From the beginning the people came in large numbers, and at the close of each meeting anxious souls were found seeking Christ. In some instances husbands and wives decided, while others yielded to Christ while the address was being delivered, and came back to tell us what God had done for them. God's own people have been helped and quickened. We trust that the mission will be the beginning of a mighty revival.

In one of the lowest parts of Sunderland a tent to hold about 1,000 persons has been erected, and for four weeks the Gospel has been faithfully preached to large and attentive audiences by Mr. Rowland Edwards, of the Evangelization Society. Many have been under deep conviction of sin, and some have turned to the Lord. The mission is the outcome of a monthly union meeting of four mission Churches, all in the same part of the town. Two portions of the tent were shut off and served usefully as inquiry rooms. The special afternoon services for women and for children proved very attractive. The gatherings were characterized by deep blessing.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—During August, Great Assembly Hall, London.

Mr. Newton Jones.—During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

Mr. Leonard Weaver, Gospel Tent, Tooting (near the Tramway Terminus), until further notice.

Rev. Thos. Cook.—Aug. 13, Llandudno; 20, Colwyn Bay Sept. 3, Blackpool.

Mr. George Hunter.—Till Aug. 13, Uxbridge.

Mr. James Sprunt.—Kilburn Hall, N.W., every Sun. and Thurs. during August; Mayes Hall, Wood Green, N., each Wed.; Enfield, Sept.; Chester, Oct.

Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Sept. 1-8, Downton.

Mr. John Elliott.—Tent Meetings, East Finchley, until further notice.

Mr. Walter Notman (of the Edinburgh Castle), Aug. 20, Trinity Baptist Church, St. John Street, Edgware Road; Aug. 13, Salters' Hall, Baptist Church, Canonbury, N.; Aug. 27, Chatsworth Road Baptist Church, West Norwood (Rev. Archibald G. Brown's).

Messrs. Algernon and Claud Coffin.—Tent Mission at Havant, Hants, Aug. 13 to 20.

Mr. S. J. Alexander.—At Skegness, on the sands, through August.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Aug., the Tent, East Greenwich.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a tent mission at College Park, Willesden, August 12 to 23, to be conducted by Mr. H. Collins.

For a blessing at a mission to be held at Downton, Wilts, by Rev. F. C. Spurr from September 1-8.

For one terribly under the power of intemperance, that God may convert him speedily and make him a "new creature in Christ Jesus."

On behalf of special services to be conducted on Sunday, August 13 at Duckpool Baptist Chapel, Maindee, Newport, Mon., by Mr. Opie Rodway. "Pray that many souls may be saved."

Notices.

Applications for Tracts.—Mr. Sidney T. Cooke, Schoolwood Cottage, Cowley, near Chesterfield; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.; Mr. W. Bilton, Evangelist (for children), Cosgrove, near Stony Stratford.

Communications Received with Thanks.—N.K. G.S.E. H.A. J.S. I.M.M.Y. A.W. L.P.McL. W.A. W.K. H.L. F.S. F.W.B. L.P. B.F.B. W.R. A.B.P. F.W.E. S.F.C. W.L.M. C.R.H. H.B.W. G.H. E.O. C.W. W.O.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE Oldham Association, which was formed in January last, has now 150 members. Suitable and central rooms have been acquired, which are lighted by electricity and nicely furnished.

The Y.M.C.A. camping season is now in full swing. The Blackburn camp at Keswick was a great success, and another large party is going into camp near Penrith, while the Devonshire camp of the Plymouth association has proved more popular than ever. The members of the Derby Y.M.C.A. are arranging one near Matlock; the Nottingham association has about fifty members in camp near Scarborough, and hundreds of Y.M.C.A. members have joined Mr. Cunningham's camp in the Isle of Man.

The committee of the North Liverpool Y.M.C.A. has decided to establish a junior section, and orders have been given for various structural alterations in the premises to be proceeded with, in order to provide reading, recreation, and cloak rooms for this new department, as well as a large parlour for meetings, &c. These rooms will meet the requirements of a membership of 250, and another room will be added to the section if money is forthcoming.

Naples Sailors' Rest.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes writes that the recent cruise of the mission steamer St. Paul has resulted in blessing at several ports. At a number of new centres colportage work has been initiated on behalf of British seamen, while the Gospel has also been preached to the Italians on shore. The staff has been reinforced by an additional missionary. Rests and homes on undenominational and temperance principles are maintained at Naples and Catania, and general mission work is carried on at these and other ports.—Address, 7 Vico 2, del Piliero, Naples.

The Dover Temperance Council has taken up the cause of Rev. H. E. Olivier, who some time ago wrote an article in which he charged the inmates of Morley Home, St. Margaret's, with being constant customers at the village public-house. Although he secured considerable evidence, which does not seem to have been disproved, he was mulcted in £100 damages, besides over £300 costs. Mr. Olivier acted in the interests of temperance, believing what he said, and the Council very properly propose to relieve him of the financial burden entailed. The treasurer is General A. H. Heath, 100, High Street, Dover.

VAN HOUTEN'S

It ranks among Chocolates
as Van Houten's Cocoa does among Cocoas; it is unequalled!
Wholesome, Nourishing & Digestible.
GIVE IT A TRIAL!

CHOCOLATE

For Eating.

Sold in the following sizes:—
Croquettes ... 5½d. per Tin.
Drops ... ... 5½d. per Tin.
Square Tablets 5½d. per Tin.
Bars 1d. each.

Give it a Trial

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Saturday, August 5th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

	£	s.	d.
M.G.W., Tamworth—Please say whose Holiday Fund.
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—M.S., £5 5s.; In Memoriam, H.S.B., £1	6	5	0
China Inland Mission—In Memoriam, H.S.B., £1; X.Z., £1 5s.	2	5	0
Cantonment Rescue Work, India—E.J.G., Glasgow	0	2	6
Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Cripple Children's Holiday)—A.J.R., £1; M.J.M., £1; G.J.F., 10s.; F.L., £1	3	10	0
Ragged School Union (Holiday Homes)—N.K., 2s. 6d.; Mrs. L.M.C., £1; (Cripples)—E.H., £1...	2	2	6
Day in Country Fund—N.K., 2s. 6d.; T.W.G., 2s. 6d.; Mr. and Mrs. W., £1; E.H.O., £1; H.E.T., £1; Langland Bay, 10s.; W.A., 5s.; C.K.A., 10s.; A.W.J., 10s.; W.H., £5; J.A.L., 2s.; G.H.R., £1 1s.; Cruachan, £1; G.W.N., 5s.; R., £2; W.W., 10s.; E.G., £1; Miss W., 10s.	16	8	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—G.J.F., 10s.; R., £1; (Camping Out)—H.E.T., £1; M.J.M., £1; W.A., 5s.; E.F., 2s. 6d.; For Jesus' Sake, 4s.; W.G.O., 2s. 6d....	4	4	0
St. Giles Christian Mission (Sick and Poor)—D.T.H., 2s. 6d.; (Children's Holiday Home)—M.J.M., £1; F.R.B., 2s. 6d.; F.P.H., 2s.; (Discharged Prisoners)—Miss W., 10s.	1	17	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—Langland Bay, 10s.; S.A.P., £5; W.A., 5s.; T.M., £1; R., £1	7	15	0
Uncle Tom's Cot—See page 24, Young People's Page	2	13	0
Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association—C.K.A.	1	0	0
London City Mission—C.K.A., 10s; (Holiday Fund)—Mrs. L.M.C., £2	2	10	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—T.M.	1	0	0
Open-Air Mission—E.F.	0	2	6
Mildmay Mission to Jews—Farthings...	0	2	1
Mr. J. Girling's Appreciation Fund—M.S.	2	0	0
Costers' Mission (Mr. Orsman)—R.	0	10	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—R.	0	10	0
Friendless and Fallen—R., 10s.; Miss W., 15s. ...	1	5	0
Miss Perram's Poor Fund—R.	0	10	0
Dr. Stephenson's Homes—R.	0	10	0
Mrs. Meredith's Mission (Prison)—R.	0	10	0
Friedenheim Home for Dying—J.H.H.	3	3	0
Church Association—T.O.	1	0	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—Miss W.	1	0	0
Destitute Children's Dinner Society—Miss W. ...	0	10	0
Poor Shirtmakers—Miss W.	0	5	0
Miss Macpherson's Little Match Box Makers—Miss W.	0	5	0
Soldiers' Homes (Portsmouth)—Miss W.	0	5	0
London Tent Campaign—M.S.	50	0	0
Mr. Charles Cook's Work—M., £10; M.S., £15 ...	25	0	0
Total	£138	19	7

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Dr. Barnardo's Homes—W.X.Y.Z., £5.

Ragged School Union (Holiday Homes)—M.D., 10s.

Bethnal Green Free Library, E.—Mrs. E., "In Memory of Willie," 5s.

Flower Girls' Mission (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday Home)—M.D., 10s.

Temperance Notes.

AT Douglas a man was charged with illicit sale of drink at a boarding-house, and was fined £20. One hundred and twenty-one bottles of beer were found and seized. Two constables visited the house in plain clothes, and were supplied with the beer. Among other pleas the defendant said he had got the beer under doctor's orders for his wife.

. . . . .

Pleasant Row is the name given to a thoroughfare in Maidenhead, where a temperance meeting was recently held. We read that "there are less than a score of houses, but each of three breweries maintains a public-house in the row."

. . . . .

The Sunday Closing Association has issued a letter claiming that the Commission report settles for ever the controversy as to the success of Sunday closing in Wales; and the suggestion of its extension to Monmouthshire clearly proves that the people who live near and see its good results desire to share its benefits. A meeting has been held in Newport to promote this, and the Central Sunday Closing Association are taking steps to organize the county.

. . . . .

The new Association at Redhill has secured the upper part of premises known as Globe Buildings, at Linkfield corner, and is desirous of adapting the various rooms to the requirements of the work at a cost approximating £400. A new Association at Poole has secured the use of the White House upon favourable terms from Lord Wimborne.

The Y.M.C.A. and Missions.—At the inaugural meeting of the missionary union of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A., thirty-two members were enrolled, who promised to subscribe one penny per week to the foreign work of the National Council. An effort is being made to form a similar missionary department in every Association.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The Night Shelter.
The Refuge.
Eight Children's Cottage Homes.

All the Homes are full, but we are just now absolutely without Funds.

SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for to meet the present urgent need.

MARY H. STEER.

28, Betts Street, St. George's,
London, E.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to enable

CURRENT LIABILITIES,

which amount to about £250,

to be met.

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.
Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN

And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

Obituary.

BISHOP LLOYD.

THE late Bishop of Bangor, Dr. Daniel Lewis Lloyd, died on Friday last. Born in 1843, he was ordained in 1869, Dolgelly being his first curacy. He achieved distinction as an educationalist on his appointment to the headmastership of Dolgelly Grammar School, and was subsequently elected to the headmastership of Friar's School, Bangor, and Christ College, Brecon, respectively. He accepted the bishopric in 1890. It will be remembered that some time ago Dr. Lloyd was stricken down by an attack of paralysis, and, after resigning the bishopric, retired from Bangor to his native place.

REV. DR. BRUCE.

The death is announced of Rev. Alexander Balmain Bruce, D.D., Professor of Apologetics and New Testament Exegesis in Free Church College, Glasgow. He died on Sunday last at the age of sixty-eight. He was one of the best known theological writers in Scotland, and was highly esteemed in the United States and on the continent of Europe. Dr. Bruce's expository power was acknowledged by all—even by those who objected to his method and challenged his point of view. His works were characterized by serious limitations, and these, with his distinctive views on controverted questions, stood in the way of his enjoying the confidence of Evangelical Christians.

MR. T. W. STIDOLPH.

The many Christian workers and friends who have, at various times, laboured in connection with the Heath Street Hall and "British Workman," Dartford, will receive with regret the news that the founder and supporter of that work has passed away. For more than twenty years this persevering servant of God toiled in aggressive Christian effort in the most needy part of the town. Having established a Working Man's Temperance Boarding House, with mission hall adjoining, he worked in the face of much discouragement, contending with many forms of evil, preaching the Gospel, and endeavouring by means of night schools and Bible classes to reach the people. After many months of suffering, borne with exemplary patience, he has gone, at the age of seventy-three, from labour to rest.

PROFESSOR DAVID JOHNSTON.

On Sunday last Dr. David Johnston, Professor of Biblical Criticism in the University of Aberdeen, died at his residence in Old Aberdeen, aged sixty-three. He had not been in robust health for some time, and was seized with paralysis two weeks ago. Dr. Johnston was a minister of the Church of Scotland, and laboured for many years in Orkney. In 1893 he was appointed Professor, in succession to the late Professor Milligan. As a Hebrew scholar he had high qualifications, but he discharged his professorial duties in a somewhat unconventional manner. At length the University Court called on him to retire, owing to his unmethodical treatment of his subject. The Privy Council ratified this decision, but would not allow the University authorities to pay his retiring allowance from the emoluments of the chair; and, as there was no other fund available, Dr. Johnston retained the office, though the work was done by Dr. Gloag.

CAPT. GEORGE KIRWAN.

A warm friend of Christian work in the Army has passed away in the person of Capt. George Kirwan, who recently died at his home at Bedford. For some years he has acted as deputation secretary of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, in which capacity his voice has often been heard throughout the land. He was an ardent advocate of total abstinence, and, in his lecturing, he delighted to set forth the Christian character as exemplified in the lives of such men as General Gordon. In latter years he had known much of sorrow and affliction, but through it all he rested himself in the precious promises so often proclaimed to others.

Captain Kirwan was the second son of the late Captain Richard Kirwan, of the 94th Regiment, by Ellen, daughter of Mr. George Bond, barrister-at-law. The Kirwans are descendants of an historic Irish family, who settled in Galway more than 400 years ago, in the year 1488, and they have always been noted for their noble aims, their undaunted courage, and their love of learning. The deceased entered the army in August, 1867, and became lieutenant in February, 1871; he entered in the 7th Royal Fusiliers, and later on changed into the King's Own Scottish Borderers; settled in Bedford in 1878, and there he resided until his death. Captain Kirwan married Miss Ellen Ewbank Chambers, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Chambers, and their family consisted of five sons and six daughters, of whom seven survive.

DR. WM. WRIGHT.

On Monday last week, Rev. William Wright, D.D., died after a few hours' illness at his residence in Norwood, aged sixty-two. He was known to many as the editorial or linguistic superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. A native of the North of Ireland, he was educated in Belfast and Geneva, and spent his earlier years of active life as a Presbyterian missionary in Syria, developing considerable knowledge both of Arabic and of the local antiquities, especially in relation to the old-time empire of the Hittites. In 1876 the Committee of the Bible Society appointed him to the oversight of the translation department, in succession to Canon Girdlestone, and in that capacity Dr. Wright accomplished a great work. In the course of the past twenty years the circumstances of missionary activity have given the Society opportunities of adding to its translations of the Scriptures at the rate of about ten languages or dialects yearly; and all this, together with the revision of older versions, passed through Dr. Wright's hands. Since his appointment to this work he had seen 153 new versions of the Bible, in whole or part, added to the Society's list. Dr. Wright will also be remembered as the author, a few years since, of an attractive book on "The Brontës in Ireland," his other publications including "The Empire of the Hittites" and "Palmyra and Zenobia." He had been suffering for several years from a heart affection, but was in harness up to within the last few days of his life.

Personalia.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of St. Petersburg, has continued his journey to Kolari, which is about seventy miles beyond the Arctic Circle. He writes: "The poor people are everywhere open to spiritual truth. No one can know them without loving them. Their unexpected troubles have stunned them. All Christians ought to pray that these troubles may be sanctified spiritually, even though they lead, as they seem likely to do, to social and pecuniary ruin."

Rev. and Mrs. G. Campbell Morgan arrived at New York, per s.s. Teutonic, on Wednesday morning last, en route to Northfield, where he is expected to speak daily at the Bible Conference. From thence he goes to Wenonah, a conference on similar lines, but organized under the direction of Presbyterian ministers, led by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia. Mr. Morgan's pulpit is being supplied, during August and the first two Sundays in September, by Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., Pastor of the Metropolitan Temple, New York; and during the balance of September and October by Dr. Scofield, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Church at Northfield.

The Dangers of Lead-working.—At length there is reason to hope that the time is not far distant when the use of lead, with its peculiar dangers to the worker, will be dispensed with in the pottery trade, Messrs. W. T. Copeland and Sons, Stoke-upon-Trent, have executed for the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland an extensive order, under conditions and with results which should have an important bearing on the question. The Duchess, in giving the order, stipulated that every piece of ware should be made with leadless glaze. The experiments for securing the condition that the glaze should be without lead have been on an extensive scale. There has been considerable trouble with respect to the waviness of the glaze, but by perseverance the difficulty has been quite overcome.

Church Notes.

The annual conference of the Bible Christian body has been held at Holsworthy, Devon. Rev. T. Braund was elected president.

Rev. W. J. Woods, who has been prostrated with an attack of diphtheria, is progressing towards recovery, and is practically out of danger.

The Bishop of Worcester has conferred the Hon. Canonry in Worcester Cathedral, held by the late Canon Wilkinson, upon Rev. A. J. Robinson, his successor as rector of Birmingham.

The new mission church of the Church of Scotland, at Cannick, Strathglass, has been opened by Dr. Norman McLeod of Inverness. Rev. Mr. Fraser announced that the building was about free from debt.

The Baptist Union of Great Britain will meet for its autumnal session this year at Leeds, under the presidency of Dr. Clifford. The union sermon will be preached by Dr. Parker.

Rev. Charles Pittman, late of South Africa, has accepted a call to Bognor, on the unanimous invitation of the Kent and Sussex Baptist Association together with that of the friends worshipping at the new cause in Bognor.

The Baptist church and congregation at North Bradley, Wilts, have presented the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Davis, with an address and token of their appreciation of his work, wishing him much happiness in his approaching marriage.

The Bishop of London has offered the Vicarage of Brompton, vacant by the transference of Prebendary Covington to St. Giles's to Rev. A. W. Gough, Vicar of St. John's, Highbury Vale. Mr. Gough has always been associated with the evangelical party.

In connection with the open-air mission carried on by St. Paul's (Baptist) Church, Skegness (Rev. G. Goodchild), large companies of listeners have gathered, and many friends have testified to blessing received. Mr. Alexander, of the Open-air Mission, is now occupied in the campaign.

Rev. S. Horton finds affairs in Edinburgh Primitive Methodist station in a very involved and difficult position. It seems likely that the present building must be abandoned and a more suitable one obtained. The Connexion will give Mr. Horton every support. It will pay off arrears and secure a sound financial basis.

Before starting for his holiday, Dr. Guinness Rogers intimated that he intends retiring from the pastorate of Grafton Square Congregational Church, Clapham, at the end of this year. He will then have been fifty-three years a Congregational minister, having entered the pastorate in 1846. He went to Clapham in 1865.

At the annual meeting of the Ladies' Mission to Hop-pickers in Kent, Canon Carter, of Wateringbury, who presided, said that the object was to provide lady missionaries, who worked among the poor of London in various parts of Kent during the season. Last year's work was made conspicuous by the fact that a well-known East End clergyman paid a visit to one of the busiest of the hop-picking districts, where he opened a dispensary, and actually nursed several of the hop-pickers' babies while they were at work.

The opening of the new building of the First Baptist Church at Columbus, Ohio, has attracted considerable attention because of the internal arrangements, the church being planned exactly like a theatre. There are private boxes with curtains, while the choir and instrumentalists, numbering forty, sit before the stage in the place usually occupied by the orchestra. The pulpit, or preacher's platform, is in the form of a stage.

The Congregational churches in London have received full particulars of the Twentieth Century Fund, and thirty-one have already begun collecting. Among these Lyndhurst Road (Dr. Horton) and Kensington (Rev. C. S. Horne) and Highbury Quadrant (Rev. W. J. Dawson) promise £5,000 each; Finsbury Park, £2,000; Leytonstone, £1,500; Tollington Park and Wandsworth, £1,000 each; Clapton Park, £750; Enfield and East Ham, £500 each, &c. In some instances the promises received already exceed the total fixed, and great enthusiasm prevails.

In connection with centenary services at the Baptist Church, Coleford, the building, having been thoroughly renovated, was reopened, sermons being preached by Rev. Henry Knee. Subsequently there was a public opening of the almshouses, which Mr. Isaiah Trotter, J.P., the oldest member of the Church, has handed over to the minister and deacons as trustees. Accommodation is provided for five men and five women, who will each receive an allowance of 7s. per week. Applicants are subject to no religious test; but, other things being equal, the preference is to be given to members of the Baptist Church. This gift has cost the donor about £10,000.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. John Foulkes, Congregational minister, of Aberavon. He deservedly occupied a prominent position in his denomination. Last week he was one of the two leading preachers selected to deliver the official sermons in connection with the meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union at Llanelly, but was prevented from attending by the illness which resulted in his death.—Mr. William Houldsworth, a noted local preacher. He was in his ninety-fourth year, and had for nearly the whole of his life been associated with the Methodist New Connexion. When eighty years of age he took part in five services in one day, and walked a distance of fifteen miles.—Mr. Tom Williams, editor of The West Briton and a devoted supporter of the church at Truro.—Rev. W. B. Birtt, formerly pastor of Stourbridge Congregational Church.—Mr. Robert Bonner, a well-known and most active member of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, has recently died at the age of seventy-five.—Rev. Thos. Ladds, vicar of Leighton, Bromswold. He was the oldest clergyman in Hunts, taking his degree in 1829, and being ordained three years later.—Rev. John Buckle, forty years vicar of Stretton Grandison-with-Ashperton, near Ledbury, at the age of eighty-six years.—Mrs. Vaughan, widow of the late Dean of Llandaff, who had been lying ill at Chertsey for some time, died on Wednesday morning. Mrs. Vaughan was the second daughter of Dr. Edward Stanley, Bishop of Norwich, and a sister, therefore, of Dean Stanley.

The Lord at the Loom and For a Child's Sake. (6d. nett. Hastings: W. Slade.) "M. R. L." the composer of "Listening Heavenward" and other recent pieces, has here set two of Dr. W. R. Nicoll's little poems selected from "Sunday Afternoon Verses." The pieces are likely to be of service to those whose mission is to comfort those who are cast down by reason of affliction or bereavement.

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

[Communications respecting forthcoming meetings cannot be inserted unless received by Tuesday morning at the latest.]

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, or Wales, on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey Street, Strand, London, W.C.; or The Sec., Evangelisation Society, Scottish Branch, The Grove Street Institute, Glasgow.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send lay preachers to any Evangelical denomination within the London postal area. Apply, Hon. Sec., 8, Grange Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

The Country Towns Mission, in co-operation with local friends, provides missionaries for temporary or permanent work in towns and villages. Apply to Mr. G. H. Mawer, secretary, 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.—Sun., Aug. 13, 3.30 and 7, Mr. P. S. Badenoch.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E.—Week nights at 8, Sun., Aug. 13, at 11 and 6.30, Mr. W. D. Dunn. Men's Own, 3 p.m. The Jubilee Singers will sing during Sunday evening.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E.—Sun., Aug. 13, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D.; 3 p.m., P.S.A.

Polytechnic, 309, Regent Street.—Mr. Charles Ingliseach Sunday during August, at 3 and 7.

Mr. Henry Varley, Sun., Aug. 13, at 10.30 a.m. and 6.30 p.m., Christ Church, Upper Bar, Southampton. Sun., Aug. 20, at 10.30 a.m. and 6.30 p.m., Baptist Tabernacle, Worthing.

Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, W.—Sun., Aug. 13, 11 a.m and 7 p.m., Mr. Wm. H. Gaussen, M.A.

Eastbourne House of Rest, 14, Burlington Place.—Daily Prayer Meeting at 12. Open to the public.

Tent Mission, Putney (in Wymond Street), conducted by Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Wood. Public meetings every evening at 8.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sundays at 7, Mr. James Sprunt; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sundays at 7, Thursdays at 8, Mr. George Andrews; Willesden Hall, Willesden Lane, Sundays at 11 and 7, Mr. Barnard-Smith (Aug. 13), Mr. E. Clarke (Aug. 20 and 27).

Special Religious Services in Theatres Halls, and Mission Rooms, for Aug. 13.—Myddleton Hall, Upper Street, Islington (in continuation of Agricultural Hall Services), at 3.30, Rev. G. L. Hurst; at 7, Mr. Haynes. Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing Broadway, at 7, Mr. Bailey. Old Gravel Pit Mission, Chatham Place, Hackney, at 3, Mr. W. H. P. Walker; at 7, Young Men's Meeting. Grand Hall of Varieties, Clapham Junction, at 3, Mr. Gann; at 7, Mr. Job Williams. Woodberry Town Hall, South Tottenham, at 7, Mr. Wm. Cottle.

Tent Bible Readings, for the deepening of spiritual life, at Villa Flora, Upperton Road, Eastbourne, every Friday at 3.30 p.m., during the months of August and September. The Speakers will include Revs. F. Paynter, J. B. Figgis, J. J. Luce, W. Houghton and C. G. Moore, Captain Baring and Captain Tottenham. All are cordially invited to attend.

Central Y.M.C.A. Autumn Convention, Exeter Hall, Strand, Oct. 3-6, 1899, at 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. Subjects—"The Christian's Life," "The Christian's Calling," "The Christian's Hope." Speakers—Revs. Archibald G. Brown, J. T. Butlin, W. Fuller Gooch, Dr. G. Hanson, H. J. R. Marston, F. B. Meyer, W. Darlow Sarjeant, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Griffith Thomas, E. N. Thwaites, F. S. Webster, Frank H. White, and Dinsdale T. Young. There will be an Opening Service for Prayer and Praise in Exeter Hall, Mon., Oct. 2, at 7.30 p.m.

Pakefield (near Lowestoft) Conference.—Aug. 15—17.

Evangelical Alliance Annual Conference at Clifton Bristol, October 31st, November 1st and 2nd.

Rothesay Convention.—September 20—25.

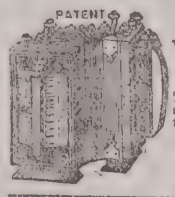
Salisbury Conference.—September 18—23.

Blackheath Convention.—October 10—13.

Perth Conference.—September 12—14. Subject, "Thy Kingdom Come." Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Hon. Sec., Free St. Leonard's, Perth, N.B.

Blankenburg Conference, Thuringia (Allianzhaus), Aug. 28—Sept. 1. Revs. F. B. Meyer and C. G. Moore will be amongst the speakers.

The First Bayswater (London) Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life; Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's Road, W., Oct. 30 to November 4, 1899, at 11 a.m., 3, 6, and 8 p.m. daily. Speakers: Revs. C. A. Fox, Dr. George Hanson, Evan H. Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, G. H. C. MacGregor, E. W. Moore, J. G. Pilkington, W. Darlow Sarjeant, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Griffith Thomas, F. S. Webster, Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and Dinsdale T. Young. Captain Tottenham, Chairman. Convention Secretary, Mr. Walter Wild, 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.



Conventions on the Spiritual Life.—Park Hall, Sept. 6—8; Kingstown (Co. Dublin), Sept. 11—16; Cork, Sept. 18—22; Aberdeen, Sept. 25—29; Wakefield, Oct. 2—5; Newton Abbot, Oct. 10—12; Ealing, Oct. 10—13; Newport, Oct. 23—26; Star Hall, Manchester, Oct. 10—15; Stamford, Oct. 16—20; Bayswater, London, Oct. 30—Nov. 4; Croydon, Nov. 13—17.

Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission.—Mrs. Henry Cook writes:—"During the past two months we have again been privileged to distribute bags of Testaments, books, and tracts among the yachtsmen visiting the neighbourhood, and should be grateful for gifts of booklets or Christian periodicals, as our supply is for the time exhausted. There are yet many weeks in which we may expect fresh yachts almost daily, and we desire to utilize as far as possible this opportunity to reach these men, who, in many cases, are utterly Godless, and have so little done for their spiritual welfare." Parcels may be addressed to Mrs. H. Cook, 47, Stoke Road, Gosport, Hants.

(1032)

MUSIC FOR SUMMER EVENINGS.

CAMPBELL'S Gold Medal MELODEONS.

With Organ and Celestial Tone, and Charming Bell Accompaniments.

No Home should be without one.

The solemn Psalm, the soul-stirring Hymn and the cheerful Song can all be played on these charming Instruments.

No knowledge of Music required.

ENORMOUS DEMAND.

200,000 TESTIMONIALS.

Special offer to the readers of The Christian.

Campbell's "Gem" Melodeon	Price only 6/9
Campbell's "Miniature" Melodeon ...	,, 10/9
Campbell's "Paragon" Melodeon ...	,, 14/-
Campbell's "Favourite" Melodeon ...	,, 16/6

Cut out this and send P.O.O. for the amount. Either sent carriage paid in Great Britain and Ireland. Money returned if not approved

All lovers of music should at once send for Campbell's Illustrated Privilege Price List of all kinds of musical instruments for season 1898-9. 50,000 of these valuable lists sent out yearly. Send 1d. stamp to CAMPBELL & CO., Musical Instrument Makers, 116, Trongate, Glasgow. Established 50 years.

N.B.—CAMPBELL'S are the ONLY GENUINE Melodeons. Beware of WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

EVERY LADY WHO VALUES

HER PLATE AND JEWELS, SHOULD USE

SPINK & SON'S PLATE POWDER

Of Chemists, Grocers, &c.

Valuable Booklet and Sample Post Free.

17, PICCADILLY LONDON, W. Est. 1772.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SPECIAL SACRED SONGS (No. 2),

Compiled and arranged for use in the

NORTHFIELD CONFERENCES.

By IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN, and GEO. C. STEBBINS.

Tinted Covers (122 Pieces), ONE SHILLING.

London: Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

BIBLE STUDENTS, EVANGELISTS, OPEN-AIR PREACHERS, and CHRISTIAN WORKERS generally should write to MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for CATALOGUE of their BOOKS, Tracts, Leaflets, Hymn Sheets, &c.

CONSUMPTION

AND OTHER DISEASES

OF THE LUNGS.

See Mr. G. T. CONGREVE'S BOOK

ONE SHILLING, POST FREE, SMALLER EDITION 6d., FROM

COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, LONDON, S.E.

RECENT INTERVIEW

(No. 204) by Mr. Congreve's commissioner with Mrs. S. Crawford, 61, Garland Street, Bury St. Edmunds, November, 1898.

Mrs. Crawford is enthusiastic about Mr. Congreve's treatment, and with good reason. Generally speaking, she has not had good health. Quite a number of years ago she slept in a damp bed—with the result that her health suffered severely. Over thirty years ago she was under treatment at an hospital for consumption, and for the time, got better. A fresh cold then caused a return of the symptoms, and, having seen Mr. Congreve's announcement in one of the weekly journals, she communicated with him at the beginning of 1897. I give the result in her own words.

"This cold brought all the old symptoms back again," Mrs. Crawford said. "I suffered with blood-spitting, a bad cough, and a choking sensation. I have been told that I have only one lung. I found a great deal of benefit from Mr. Congreve's medicine, and feel I cannot speak too highly of it. I have lent a number of the books on Consumption to people who have suffered in the same way, and have known cases where they have adopted the treatment with the best results."

In one of her letters Mrs. Crawford mentioned that her son had also taken the medicine, so I asked what the effect was in his case.

"My son had a severe cold," she replied; "but a course of the medicine quite cured him. I am never without a bottle of the Elixir in the house, and shall always recommend its use when I have the opportunity."

I duly received Mrs. Crawford's permission to make these facts public.

The practice of the late Mr. Congreve is still carried on at Coombe Lodge by Mr. J. ALEXANDER BROWN, who for many years was Mr. Congreve's qualified Medical Assistant and Manager. PERSONAL CONSULTATIONS on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings from 10.30 to 12.45. No consultations will be given during the month of August and first week of September.

Letters should be addressed (as formerly) to G. T. Congreve, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

MESSRS. MORGAN AND SCOTT'S

SPECIAL OFFER

OF

BIBLICAL WORKS

To Readers of The Christian.

The following selection of Books are now offered, and the Parcel of Five Volumes, value 12/6, can be obtained for 6/- on conditions printed below.

CONTENTS OF PARCEL.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE. Popular Edition ...	3/6
SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES. By Dr. J. Anderson	2/6
THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER. Handbook to the Old and New Testament	2/6
THE BIBLE INTERPRETER. An Illustrated Dictionary of the Scriptures	1/6
PEARLS OF WISDOM from the Parables of Christ. By A. L. O. E.	2/6
The above Works to the value of	12/6

will be sent (Carriage paid) for Six Shillings, together with some copies of The Christian, to any reader resident within the United Kingdom, who forwards remittance, and will undertake to send the copies of The Christian to friends not already acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may be induced to become regular subscribers.

Readers in foreign countries included in the Postal Union can secure the same advantage on forwarding a Money Order for 9s. 6d.

Early application, with remittance, should be addressed to—

MORGAN and SCOTT, Office of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IN a letter introductory to the Report of the Triennial Reunion, held at Ridley Hall, Cambridge, the retiring principal, Professor Handley Moule, alludes in touching and graceful terms to the severance of the official bond which has connected him with the Hall during the past eighteen years. Dr. Moule has done exceptionally useful work for the Evangelical cause, and his powerful influence upon the spiritual life of students for home and foreign mission services will be greatly missed. He says:

Memories which warm the soul, but also deeply move it, rise all round me as I think. Let me only refer to them now to humble myself afresh with solemnity, for sins and failures, to renew my thanksgiving to my Heavenly Master for all his mercy. . . The new work to which our Lord, as I trust, has called me has this great solace along with its grave responsibilities, that it not only still attaches me closely to Cambridge, but does so in a way which will surely keep me in near and constant touch with Ridley and its workers.

There has been time for reflection in religious coteries upon the decision of the Archbishops on the ceremonial use of incense and lights. While one or two members of the E.C.U. have expressed their opinion, no official utterance has yet been made. So far as the law-breakers themselves are concerned, there seems, at least, no haste to yield to the Episcopal appeal, or to abandon the practices condemned. The Bishop of Chester has spoken on the judgment with most emphatic approval. It would be well if other bishops were as prompt to insist upon the enforcement of their lordships' decision amongst their recalcitrant clergy. All doubt as to the legality of the disputed practices has now been dispelled; those who have the interests of the Church of England at heart should bow to the authoritative opinion.

It has often been noticed that Roman Catholics make much effort to get hold of the children, knowing that, if they can instil their teaching into the youthful mind, there is promise of a fruitful harvest. In Ireland they have long made it a part of their policy to be in attendance at the police courts, with a view to having children, charged with minor offences, committed to Roman Catholic reformatories. So notorious has this become that the authorities have been compelled to take notice of it. The Belfast Christian Advocate says that:—

An order has been sent from Dublin Castle to the various magistrates throughout the country instructing them that in no case are they to hand over children for the purpose of having them educated in a Roman Catholic reformatory, unless it has been clearly proved that both their parents were Roman Catholics; and, of course, the same rule applies to children who are claimed as Protestants.

The same paper also gives the following illustrative incident:—

A case came before Mr. Justice Boyd in the Queen's Bench, Dublin, last week. A girl named Lizzie Walsh, who had been brought up as a Protestant by her mother's uncle, Thomas Daunt, was a few weeks ago, when leaving the National School at Minane Bridge, forcibly taken by Mary Mahony, her maternal grandmother, and driven on a car into Cork, and there placed in the Convent of St. Mary of the Isles. Her father and mother had both previously died in America; but before going to the United States her mother had expressed, in writing, the desire that her child should be brought up a Protestant, and this had been done. Without, however, deciding anything as to the religion of the child, Judge Boyd decided that there had been an illegal interference with her liberty, and accordingly he made an order that she should be handed over to Thomas Daunt. He also gave costs against the parties who were responsible for the kidnapping of the child, including Rev. Michael Cotter, C.C., of Carrigaline, County Cork.

It is refreshing to find the perpetrators of such outrage brought to justice. But we fear that they are too often successful in evading such publicity. Protestants need to watch the children, and above all to realize the immense importance of their early training in the principles of Bible truth.

In volume six of Harnack's "History of Dogma" the writer puts his finger on a characteristic of the Papacy, which tells heavily against the Papal assumption of infallibility in matters of doctrine. Theology never was a favourite theme with popes and cardinals, who have always been too much absorbed in temporalities:—

In Rome theology never flourished, either in antiquity or the Middle Ages. . . . For the Curia only the student of law was of any account. The great majority of the cardinals were well-equipped jurists, not theologians; and the great Popes of the Middle Ages—Alexander III., Innocents III. and IV., Boniface VIII., &c.—come to the Papal chair as highly-esteemed legal scholars.

A healthy theology can only spring from a vigorous religious life. Dr. Robertson's article on page 15 amplifies this contention.

A list of the admissions of sceptics would form a grand armoury of defence for faith. The difficulties of believing are nothing compared with the difficulties of not believing. An illustration of this fact is seen in the last words written by the late Colonel Ingersoll, who has been called by the Spectator the "Spurgeon of Negation."

They are these:—"Immortality, with its countless hopes and fears beating against the shores of time and faith, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as love kisses the lips of death. It is the rainbow hope, shining on the tears of grief."

The ambiguity and the questionable elements in these words cannot cloud their strong testimony to the indestructible impulse of the human heart to believe in a hereafter. It is to this instinct for immortality that the Gospel speaks with such commanding and convincing power, turning a vague hope into an assured certainty.

Death must be a dark experience indeed to the atheist. To look back over a life, the sole business of which has been destructive, can surely give no sense of satisfaction, while the future admittedly has no gleam of hope. Death, at any rate, gives a standpoint from which life can be viewed in true perspective, and its value measured with reasonable accuracy. If this is so, surely Col. Ingersoll must have realized at the end the utter failure of his life. The New York Mail and Express, in a leading article, says:—

In the large sense of the word, Col. Ingersoll's life was a failure. He was a phrasemaker and magician, who fascinated his hearers, but never instructed them. He appealed to the imagination, but not to the soul. He painted beautiful pictures, but they faded like mists in the sunshine. His life was one long protest against truths which he was too small to grasp, and which, for that reason, he held to be non-existent. He was a destroyer as far as he could be, and had nothing to offer in place of that which he destroyed. He taught only the gospel of doubt and dark despair; his spiritual vocabulary contained no such word as faith, and in all the beautiful things he ever said he never brought cheer to an aching heart nor hope to a troubled soul. The ideals and aspirations which he decried still thrill the heart of humanity; the institutions at which he scoffed still shed their benign radiance upon the races of the earth, and he leaves the world without having added even a fragment to its knowledge or a single ray of light to its joys and hopes.

In an article in the Fortnightly Review, on "The Dying of Death," Mr. Joseph Jacobs contends that the most distinctive note of the modern spirit is the practical disappearance of the thought of death as an influence directly bearing upon life. There is something in the generalization; it is sadly true that men have allowed themselves to be lulled into a condition of indifference regarding the solemnities of "the latter end." It is not, however, in the power of "the modern spirit" to deliver from "the fear of death"; therefore it is not a good sign that men should talk of "the dying of death." Christ has indeed "abolished death" for his people; but, on the other hand, for those who have not made peace with Him there is "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." (2 Tim. i. 10; Heb. ii. 14; ix. 27; x. 27.)

The writer of the article is responsible for the statement:

One of the most striking things about the Old Testament is the complete absence of death as a motive from its pages.

This is not according to our reading of the Old Testament. To confine attention to one book, Ecclesiastes, we have there a plain and complete answer to the criticism. "Man goeth to his long home;" "The dust returneth to the earth as it was;" "God shall bring every work into judgment." Again, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Moreover, the simple fact that the ancients prayed to "die the death of the righteous," and execrated "the death of the wicked," shows that death with its terrible issues was a real and potent motive with them (Num. xxiii. 10; Prov. xi. 7; xiv. 32; Ezek. iii. 19, 20, &c.).

As a fact, the motive from death has always had its limitations, and in the Old Testament we find the fear of God overshadowing and overwhelming every other fear, pious people not so much looking to the dark valley as to the prospect of being "bound in the bundle of life with Jehovah." The same is true to-day of the servant of Christ. Having "passed from death into life," his motive emanates from his Master, rather than "the last enemy," whose sting has been drawn and whose power has been destroyed. The reviewer asks whether there will be a revival of the fear of death. We believe there is a deeper fear than the essayist reckons on. We pray that there may be a revival of the fear of the God who delivers from death, and gives men to share Christ's victory over sin and the grave.

The scheme decided upon regarding out-relief of the poor by the Mile End Guardians is both daring and novel. It suggests a solution of the Old-Age Pension problem.

All the old people in the workhouse who have friends or relatives outside are at liberty to leave with a weekly grant of 10s. for married couples, and of 7s. for a single person. The guardians define "old people" as meaning all those inmates who are sixty years of age or more, and all those under sixty who are physically unfit to earn their own living.

Although this reform is bold and startling, it is to be commended. The proposal requires the approval of the Local Government Board.

No woman is more interested in the best welfare of her sex than Lady Aberdeen. Her latest effort is on behalf of working women. The scheme is that of Mr. Gilbert Parker, to "increase the accommodation for educated women in London." A home-like private hotel is at present under consideration. Since the Gospel of Christ has done so much in the elevation of womanhood, Christian philanthropy may well debate how best to provide comfortable and suitable homes for those compelled to compete with men in commercial and professional life.

In view of the bill for the promotion of seats for female shop-assistants, the recent demonstration of this class in Hyde Park brings to light many other grievances from which they suffer. Their poor pay, long hours, and frequently tyrannical treatment on the part of employers, make up a severe indictment. The chief grievance under which they suffer is the imposition of all sorts of irritating deductions from their scanty pay, for doctor, laundry, library, and arbitrary fines. These charges at the least require careful consideration. That the majority of employers are guilty of the above practices is, of course, not to be imagined, but the worst of it is that the few hard and unsympathetic masters make it very hard for the better-disposed to treat their employés generously. The above state of things is the fruit of the fierce competition that goes on in these forms of business. A general understanding among employers to work for the good of their employés as well as their customers will be the best remedy.

A suggestion made in the recent correspondence of a contemporary, by which the insufficient salaries of village pastors might be supplemented, and their work in no wise suffer, is worthy of attention. It is to emulate St. Paul's example of combining tent-making with evangelising; in other words, of combining some secular employment with that of preaching. Instances are given of several cases where this is being done in various parts of the country, and with marked success. A generation or so ago, Wales was almost entirely evangelised by men who combined farming and other employments with their ministry. What was so efficiently done once in the Principality might well be done again in many country districts, where there is no hope of stemming the ebb-tide of decreasing population. The difficulties of country pastorates are increasing steadily, and this is one way of meeting them.

The latest manifestation of social disorder in France is assassination. The civilized world was astonished on Monday last by the report that Maître Labori, the leading counsel of Captain Dreyfus at the trial at Rennes, had been shot by some miscreant who was still at large on Tuesday afternoon. There are reasons for fearing that this wicked act is the outcome of an organised attack upon the institutions of law and order.

(1044)

"These Forty Years."

A Commemoration

AT ALDERSGATE STREET Y.M.C.A.

(BY A SYMPATHISER.)

A DEEP sense of gratitude to God was the key-note of the special gathering at the noon prayer-meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last, in recognition of The Christian's fortieth birthday. Among the large audience were many well-known leaders of Christian work, and their reminiscences of revival times, and of the beneficent workings of Divine providence under varied circumstances, contributed to render the gathering one of interest and stimulus.

After the preliminary exercises, Mr. Henry Varley, who presided throughout with characteristic tact, referred in feeling terms to the interesting occasion which had brought so many friends together, and read a selection from the many cordial messages of regard which had been received.

From Sir George Williams (telegram from Braemar): "I join my thanksgivings with you all for the wisdom, love, zeal and courage given to the Editor and staff of The Christian during the forty years of its history."—Miss C. M. S. Lowe wrote:—"I have cause for more thanksgiving than I can express. Under the influence of Reginald Radcliffe, of ever blessed memory, my cousin, the Dowager Lady Rowley, and I first began work at the East End. She was shortly called to her heavenly rest, and, my own means being small, I could not possibly have continued the work had not the Editor opened the pages of The Revival to my appeals for means and workers. I join with countless others in thanksgiving for spiritual strengthening and refreshment received through The Christian."—Mr. T. H. Grubb (Tenby): "As one who helped to circulate The Revival from its birth I shall gratefully remember the meeting to-day."

Dr. Baedeker telegraphed:—"Praise God for the forty years. Ebenezer."—Pastor Frank White: "Grateful, affectionate greetings to Editor from his old, true, attached, over forty-years' friend. Psalm xlviii. 8, 9, 10, 14."—Mrs. Tufnell wrote: "Had Mr. T. R. Tufnell been here in the flesh, he would have joined in good wishes and thankfulness for The Christian. His widow does it for him, and testifies to its usefulness and faithfulness all the forty years."—Mr. Philip Hurditch: "Workers of Children's Special Services, Llandudno, heartily join you in praising God for forty years' blessing."—Mr. Barry Wake: "An increased circulation is to my mind most desirable, both in respect to the sound Gospel ring and of its value as an antidote to evil. Copies, after being read, should be passed on. Pray you may have a useful gathering."

Mr. Joseph Leng: "I find The Christian a store-house of blessed teaching that I look for with deep interest from week to week."—Mr. John Hawkins (Railway Mission): "It is with great joy that I should like to hear my humble testimony to the constant help and inspiration I have derived from The Christian these sixteen years. I was converted, through the mercy of God, when I was twelve and a half years of age; and when I was thirteen, as soon as I could secure a penny weekly to purchase it, I began to read The Christian, and it has ever since been a weekly counsellor and friend. I thank God for all the personal profit and blessing it has yielded."

Mr. Wm. Noble: "I rejoice in all the good work accomplished through the columns of The Christian, and the strong stand it has made upon the great moral questions, including that of Christian temperance. In the early days of the Blue Ribbon movement its influence was a great help. Many Christians were led into service on behalf of the sufferers through strong drink. From all parts of England and other lands we received proof of the far-reaching influence of your paper. I trust its circulation may be extended, and join with others in wishing the Editor every blessing."—Mr. G. B. Cairns (Philadelphia, Pa.): "Your noble stand for sound Biblical teaching has cheered us—many times when we have feared the enemies of Jesus would triumph. God grant your work may continue to receive our Father's blessing. I send greetings as one from far across the sea. Your paper has never been limited to a local sphere, but has gone to the ends of the earth as a witness."—Miss Child (Canning Town Welcome Home): "The Revival was most inspiring to me, and I cannot number the benefits I received from it. I am constantly receiving testimonies from sailors and others, all round the world, of the great good derived from reading The Christian. May God graciously continue and increase its usefulness."—From an Edinburgh Friend: "Please return thanks for profitable reading these forty years, also for sixty-three years unceasing mercies completed to-day."

The Chairman, after brief but telling references to his personal experiences in connection with Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel's Church, and in early days of work in Notting Hill, recalled with warmth and satisfaction his associations of friendship and prayerful co-operation in aggressive work with Mr. R. Cope Morgan and the late Mr. Samuel Chase.

"Some," Mr. Varley went on to say, "will recall the wide waves of blessing which went forth in of '59, especially in the north of Ireland. What numbers one subsequently met with who were brought to Christ on the crest of that marvellous awakening! Let it be our prayer to-day that a new revival may break forth. I should certainly say, if asked, that the chief feature of The Christian's testimony has been a marked and distinguishing faithfulness to the Word of God as a whole. Next to that I place its endurance amid a great deal of marked declension. I rejoice that the Editor has not found it necessary to recognize two Isaiahs, nor drift away with doubtful schools. Moreover, he has exercised forbearance amid great diversity of minds. The ministry of the paper has developed a spirit of ministry among the people of God, the value of which is not to be overestimated. 'All one in Christ Jesus' is written over the tent at Keswick, and I rejoice at the testimony of The Christian in respect of that truth. The Editor stands out in no mean sense, too, for his clear testimony against national sins. It has been delightful also to note the strong declarations (baptized with John iii. 16) of the love of God to guilty sinners. Last, but not least, this journal has exalted the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. With true catholicity it has developed world-wide interest in the spread of Christianity abroad, and has given due prominence to the humbler as well as the greater missions, and declining to advocate any petty shibboleths. As a result of its consistent effort, it has been honoured with the confidence of Christians. What a valuable testimony to this effect is the sum contributed through The Christian donation list. People do not entrust their money with men in whom they have not confidence."

THOSE GLORIOUS DAYS

STEERING CLEAR OF PARTY STRIFE,

After pointing out that The Christian had never been made the vehicle of broad statements in which Evangelicals had no share, Mr. Varley concluded by commending the future of the journal to the Most High, and expressing, in the kindliest terms, "every good wish that our hearts can suggest."

After renewed prayer and praise, Rev. Joseph Harris moved a resolution, "That this meeting congratulates the Editor of The Christian on his having been spared to see the fortieth anniversary of his publication of The Revival and The Christian, and praises God on this behalf. It also prays that his life may be prolonged many years, so that he may continue to engage in the service of the Master with untiring zeal and godly sincerity."

Dr. Barnardo, who had been brought into the light as an outcome of the revival movement, said he thought few realised how much of the breadth and force of the revival was due to the spirited character of its printed record. As to the present day position of The Revival's successor, The Christian, it was the fact that if one went into circles where the journal was taken, one was sure to find strong, deep sympathy with Christian work. "May I add, that in my opinion, we have in this paper a valuable offering to the Christian Church. I was recently speaking to a Russian lady of rank and education who was visiting this country in connection with the Conference of Women. She visited our institutions, and in the course of conversation I was much struck by her spirituality and simple-hearted craving for all that had to do with the 'root of the matter.' It appeared that she was converted fifteen years since, her husband and older children subsequently coming to the Lord; and that the means of her conversion was the perusal of a copy of The Christian sent her for successive weeks by an unknown friend. Desiring to improve her English, she carefully studied the journal, with the result I have indicated. To-day she is the centre of a most useful sphere of service. I have purposely confined my remarks to the public side of this matter, saying nothing of a personal character; yet I may be permitted to add, in a word, that I have found the Editor a steady friend under all circumstances; in bad weather, amid dark clouds and wintry aspects, at such times as

TRUE FRIENDSHIP IS MOST NEEDED.

I especially love The Christian because of its unfailing readiness to voice the claims of the children. If all journals which profess to deal with the great social troubles and difficulties of our nation and generation were equally and emphatically devoted to the cause of the sorrowful and distressed, most of the problems which harass us and bar the way of true progress would long ago have been solved."

Dr. Barnardo concluded his telling remarks by turning to Mr. R. C. Morgan and cordially wishing him, as a friend, the friend of them all, long and continued prosperity in conducting The Christian on its familiar lines according to the principles of Evangelical truth.

Mr. T. A. Denny said they were all delighted to take part in that pleasant and profitable gathering and to wish Godspeed to The Christian. He strongly sympathized with the Editor, who must surely be feeling exceedingly uncomfortable (here that gentleman gave, smilingly, an expressive shrug of acquiescence) at the many kind and true things that had been said, but they could trust him—he would not lose his balance. Mr. Denny added a thoughtful word of remembrance of Mr. Robert Scott (absent in America), whom he described as "the complement of his partner, Mr. Morgan," and trusted that The Christian would continue its career with increased vigour. The speaker concluded by across the chairman's table, and, amid cordial signs of general approval, shaking hands with the Editor, on behalf of the assembly.

EXTENDING HIS RIGHT HAND

Singled out from the many veterans present, venerable Mr. George Holland next came forward. This whole-hearted worker, still toiling at an age when rest might be regarded as a well earned right, spoke with something less of strength, but with the old time gleam in his eye, as he recalled former days of blessed revival in the East End, and pictured the conversion of entire families in the degraded haunts of Whitechapel. He joined heartily in the expressions of thankfulness to God for help and counsel afforded in hours of need, and added, "as for me, give me The Christian, for one can depend upon it."

Ireland having spoken in the person of Dr. Barnardo, it seemed only right that the "land of brown heath and shaggy wood" should be heard, and Mr. Varley accordingly turned to Mr. W. D. Dunn, who said that he felt, personally, that God was filling that prayer meeting room with his presence, as He filled the Temple of old and the upper room at Pentecost. He was deeply grateful for the original issue of The Revival handed to him by his spiritual father, Robert Steel. The little paper continued to act, week by week, as the speaker's pastor, teacher, and evangelist. His soul longed for the sound instruction and news of the Lord's doings in many lands. As he read, the fire burned in his very bones, and he had found it a joy, when possessing a spare shilling, to spend it in purchasing copies of The Revival, to place in the hands of young converts. "In fact," continued Mr. Dunn, "it is to my soul the religious publication. In these evil days when there are so many departures from truth, I feel we could not do better than determine to diffuse The Christian in a way we have never done before. I congratulate the Editor, and wish him and his son and all the staff Godspeed."

Mr. W. R. Lane briefly related an instance of blessing far away in Central Africa, among the missionaries on "outpost duty," and then Mr. Broomhall sounded a note of thankfulness for the journal's stimulating effect upon sympathizers with foreign missions, and expressed his sense of gratitude more particularly for the

HELP WHICH HAD ACCRUED

to the China Inland Mission. He prized it, too, for its value as a means of distributing the truth as to the great verities of religious belief.

As a representative of the Y.M.C.A., the kind and transparent testimony of Mr. Hind Smith was both well-timed and forcible. Describing himself as "one of the venerables," Mr. Smith told of his experiences in Ulster at the time of the '59 revival, and his conversations with Mr. Chase upon the subject. As to The Christian, one of the outcomes of that revival, they all praised God for it, and wished a long career for its faithful testimony.

Next came Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, with reminiscences of prayer meetings with the conductors of the journal in its earliest days, with an interesting story of his first reading in its columns of the toils and labours of the lady who subsequently became Mrs. Hurditch, and with prayers for the future usefulness of Editor and journal. Then came a breezy word from the veteran evangelist, Ned Wright, who had found spiritual guidance, lessons of reliance upon God, in The Christian. He recalled the all-night prayer meetings of revival times, which had been characterized by such a deep sense of responsibility, and so much agonizing for souls. Mr. Alfred Holness, after thanking God for The Christian's fidelity to fundamental truths of the Word, said they had met to praise God for his goodness. It was essentially a Scriptural meeting, recalling the words, "Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee 'these forty years.'" The speaker mentioned a curious instance of the out-of-the-way places to which literature penetrates. A missionary travelling in the land of the Eskimo, entered one of the beehive-like tents of the natives, and on his eyes becoming somewhat accustomed to the smoke and gloom, the first thing he discerned, on the ground, was—a copy of The Christian.

After Mr. J. F. Shorey had spoken of high esteem on the other side of the Atlantic, Mr. M. H. Hodder expressed his peculiar satisfaction in view of his long personal relationship with Mr. R. C. Morgan, and their many associations with Christian work in London. It was fitting that that gathering should be held in connection with which was so bound up with revival thoughts and experiences. Many of the great Christian undertakings of the land had grown practically out of that meeting. Thirty years since he had, at the invitation of Mr. R. C. Morgan, taken his stand there. It seemed at first a difficult matter for a business man to devote the prime part of the day to a prayer meeting, but he left that with the Lord and stood by his friend, with whom he had been identified in many things, and with whom he was glad to rejoice on that happy occasion.

THE NOON PRAYER MEETING,

Mr. Charles Inglis spoke of his delight, in the days of youthful joy, in a new-found Christ, and of glowing desire to serve him—at obtaining The Revival on the day of its issue. It had a blessed part in shaping his Christian life and his service for the Master.

After so many and spontaneous words of regard and goodwill delivered with such obvious sincerity and depth of feeling, Mr. R. C. Morgan rose with a sense of combined humility and gratitude, not merely to express his personal thanks, but primarily to give God the glory of The Christian's life and record. He warmly thanked his friends for their kind words, but said it had been a somewhat painful ordeal. One knows more of one's own heart than anyone else, and their too kind expressions were discounted by his own consciousness of failure and short-coming. But, for all the grace of these forty years, His Name alone be glorified from whom it came.

Some present remembered the men of God who were prominent in the earlier days, and who have passed away. Among them were the Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, an unobtrusive but influential man of God, who made John Street Chapel sacred by his own ministry, and invited there the men whom God was thrusting forward in the Gospel; Macdowall Grant of Arndilly, an indefatigable and wise winner of souls; William Pennefather, with heaven in his face, and his wife truly a help meet for him; Brownlow North, delivered from the depths, and mighty in convicting sinners of their sin; Captain Trotter, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost; Dr. J. F. Elwin, whose frequent writings in the early numbers of The Revival were signed "A Servant," which he truly was, and saw His face; Lady Rowley,

PIONEER OF THE WEST-END LADIES who have sojourned among the poor in the East, and whose mantle fell upon her relative, Miss Clara M. S. Lowe, the truly soldier-daughter of Sir Hudson Lowe; Denham Smith, whose seven "togethers" were a compendium of sound and Scriptural theology; Sir Arthur Blackwood, who, with Captain Trotter and Brownlow North, preached Christ in Willis' Rooms, where he had been the most graceful dancer in the ballroom; Reginald Radcliffe, who, before 1859, was locked up for preaching on Chester racecourse with Richard Weaver, whom he had brought out of the coalpit, and with whom he moved Scotland by the power of God upon them; Gordon of Parkhill, remembered for his hospitality and liberality; and Henry Bewley, of Willow Park, a man of the same spirit, whose guests at Conference times were numbered by hundreds, and whose home remains

A SACRED MEMORY OF A SAINTLY FAMILY;

George Hitchcock, the worthy predecessor of his worthy son-in-law, Sir George Williams; William Carter, whose children, with Ned Wright at the head of them, have risen up and call him blessed; Henry Reed, of Tasmania, who spent nights in the cells, speaking of Jesus to convicts who were to be hanged in the morning; John Hambleton, who, like Israel at Jericho, walked round the Exhibition of 1862 seven days, with words of warning and invitation from the Book of God above his head; James Robertson, of Edinburgh, the inimitable children's preacher; Charles Graham and John his brother; Robert Steel, the farmer preacher, an apostolic successor of the historical Billy Dawson; and Duncan Matheson, who preached a Gospel which had teeth, with eternity stamped upon his eyeballs. These are a few of the great cloud of witnesses, who bore their testimony in those glorious days, and by whom we are compassed about.

Mr. Scott, who had been appreciatively mentioned by his friend Mr. Denny, is on his way home from America; his absence was much regretted. Mr. Morgan said he had had two excellent partners—Mr. Chase, who had left a fragrant memory wherever he was known; Mr. Scott, who was loved most by those who knew him best.

Mr. George E. Morgan, M.A., who sat by his father's side, had also been more than once cordially referred to as sharing in the editorship of The Christian. On being called upon by the Chairman, he feelingly expressed his sense of responsibility in following a father with such a record. A lady had complained that The Christian was "too spiritual;" but, despite such occasional criticism, it was essential to MAINTAIN THE SPIRITUAL STANDARD.

In these days of changing thought and shifting sand, God required a firm stand for truth. While all of us had not had the privilege of participating in the wonderful times of the '59 revival, he hoped that his generation might be found ready, if another revival came, to take part therein in the spirit of the older workers, praying

O God, to us may grace be given,
To follow in their train.

Mr. Varley seemed scarcely willing to bring this fragrant and stimulating meeting to a close. First came prayer, then "God be with you till we meet again" was sung; following this were additional references to well-known figures who have passed to "where, beyond these voices, there is peace;" then the Chairman asked all present to link hands and repeat the 121st Psalm. Finally came a note of triumphant praise in the grand old hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name," and with the refrain "Crown Him Lord of all" lingering in the mind the audience dispersed, praising God for a remarkable time of blessing "in his Presence."

We continue to receive letters of encouragement and sympathy. The following is typical: others will appear next week:—

Dear Mr. Morgan,—I have been much interested in the letters in The Christian about the early days of The Revival. My father, Reginald Radcliffe, was a warm friend and supporter of The Christian from its beginning until God took him home. With a heart full of gratitude I would thank you for all the help and blessing the paper has been to us; and especially now would I thank you for assisting in spreading the facts about the Prayer Union for World-wide Evangelization, In memoriam Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe.
—Yours sincerely,

Catherine E. Radcliffe.

Hydro, Crieff, N.B.

The Negro in the South.

LONGFELLOW'S WARNING.

Beware! the Israelite of old, who tore
The lion in his path,—when, poor and blind,
He saw the blessed light of heaven no more,
Shorn of his noble strength and forced to grind
In prison, and at last led forth to be
A pander to Philistine revelry,—

Upon the pillars of the temple laid
His desperate hands, and in its overthrow
Destroyed himself, and with him those who made
A cruel mockery of his sightless woe;
The poor blind slave, the scoff and jest of all,
Expired, and thousands perished in the fall!

There is a poor, blind Samson in this land,
Shorn of his strength, and bound in bonds of steel,
Who may, in some grim revel, raise the hand,
And shake the pillars of this Commonweal,
Till the vast Temple of our liberties
A shapeless mass of wreck and rubbish lies.

MR. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, President of the Negro Training Institute at Tuskegee, Alabama, in an admirable letter to a Southern paper, has shown that the lynchings (we call them murders) in the South are not, as alleged, perpetrated exclusively, or even chiefly, on Negroes who commit outrages on white women. He says, "Within six years about 900 persons have been lynched in our Southern States. During 1892, 241 persons were lynched in the whole United States, 36 of this number in Northern and Western, and 186 in Southern States. Of the 241 lynched in the whole country, 160 were Negroes, five of whom were women. Out of the 241, only 57 were even charged with such outrage or an attempt, leaving 184 lynched for other causes. During one week last spring, thirteen Negroes were lynched, not one of whom was charged with this offence. When four-fifths of the people lynched in one year are for some other crime, we can no longer plead and explain that we lynch for one crime alone."

Showing the demoralizing and brutalizing effect of these atrocities, Mr. Washington well says: "I am not pleading for the Negro alone. Lynching injures, hardens, and blunts the moral sensibilities of the young and tender manhood of the South. Never shall I forget the remark made by a little nine-year-old white boy with blue eyes and flaxen hair. The little fellow said to his mother, after he had returned from a lynching, 'I have seen a man hanged; now I wish I could see one burned.' Rather than hear such a remark from one of my little boys, I would see him laid in the grave." We believe we have not a reader who would not say the same.

In an Atlanta (Ga.) paper of June 20 we find an

INFAMOUS AND MURDEROUS

"Topical Talker" talking thus:

For the honour of Southern manhood, be it said that lynching will never cease while the above offence continues. Therefore, wipe from the penal code every syllable of law in regard to this crime. It is beyond and outside of the law, and brave men will never permit it to be tried by law. Then let every man in Georgia supply his home with a goodly stock of fire-arms; and when a crime of the sort under discussion is committed, let the entire white population of the community arise and kill every negro, guilty or innocent, who can be found. One such extermination of the negro population of a community would be a very wholesome warning to the rest of the race. Such a course would make of the negroes active supporters of law and order, and by appealing to fear—the only influence to which they are susceptible—would go further to produce peace and good order than all the kindergartens in Christendom.

The above atrocious incitement to murder implies that lynching is perpetrated to avenge one crime only; but the letter of Mr. Booker T. Washington conclusively proves that this is very far from being the case. It also implies that the crime is always committed by the black upon the white. But for every such case it is safe to say that twenty coloured women suffer dishonour from the whites.

The Daily Chronicle says that—

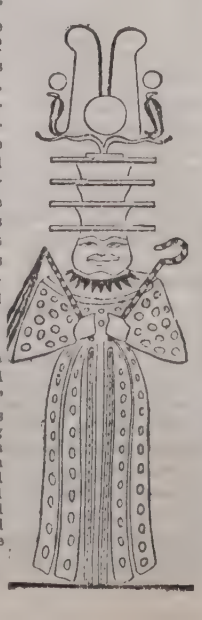
The worst sign of the dangerous condition of things which is now arising is to be found in the "platform" of the present Democratic candidate for the Governorship of Mississippi, Major Vardaman. This gentleman evidently thinks that the result of the Civil War was a step backward, for he proposes not only not to recognize the civil rights of the Negro, but to deny him education, and it is on that issue that he is largely making his fight for office.

It is folly (says Major Vardaman), and criminal folly, to talk about advancing the negro race by education. The negro is not permitted to advance, and his education simply spoils a good field hand and makes a shyster lawyer or fourth-rate teacher..It is futile to attempt to elevate the negro..The final outcome of the negro question in the South is the scattering of the negroes so that they will cease to cut any figure in economic conditions, or their reduction to a state of peonage [serfdom]. These are my views and the platform on which I am running.

And this false and inhuman platform seems to be widely approved, not only in Mississippi, but in other States.



EXTERMINATION OR DEPORTATION.

"A writer in the Forum, himself a coloured man, accepts the fact that there is an irrepressible race-war in the South which can have but one ending. Mr. W. H. Councill, the writer in question, is head of a small Negro college in Alabama, and is well acquainted with every phase of the conflict. He says there are only two alternatives—extermination of the coloured race in the United States, or wholesale emigration to Africa." The Daily Chronicle, however, suggests another possible solution of this vital problem, if the United States Government should put its hand to the question in a serious spirit. That is, the gradual transference of the coloured population to Central America, which is still undeveloped for lack of population.

It may be questioned whether either of these is the Divine remedy. God hath made of one blood the black man and the white. And He who made them has not abrogated his right to deal with them. He separated the family of Abraham to Himself, and divided the nations according to the number of the children of Israel. He afterwards scattered them among those nations for their sins. But He that scattered Israel will gather them, and will make them a burdensome stone to all nations. Of this a striking and typical illustration is before our eyes. The oppression of one Jew is shaking La Belle France to her foundations.

There is an older people than the Jews—a race which was once at the head of the nations. The first of the princes of this world after the Flood was Nimrod, who was represented as a Negro in ancient sculptures.

Wilkinson, Vol. 6, Plate 83.

"We have unequivocal evidence that Osiris, the son and husband of the great goddess-queen of Egypt, was also represented as a veritable Negro. In 'Wilkinson' may be found a representation of him,* with the unmistakable features of the genuine Cushite or Negro. Bunsen would have it that this is a mere random importation from some of the barbaric tribes; but the dress in which this Negro god is arrayed tells a different tale. That dress directly connects him with Nimrod. This Negro-featured Osiris is clothed from head to foot in a spotted dress, the upper part being a leopard's skin, the under part also being spotted to correspond with it. Now the name Nimrod signifies 'the subduer of the leopard.' This name seems to imply that as Nimrod had gained fame by subduing the horse, and so making use of it in the chase, so his fame as a huntsman rested mainly on this, that he found out the art of making the leopard aid him in hunting the other wild beasts."—This note and the annexed illustration are from Hislop's "The Two Babylons." Partridge & Co.

The descendants of Canaan had become servants to the children of Shem and Japheth, before Abraham was born, and through four millenniums they have been held down under an unparalleled oppression. But God is no respecter of persons. The God of Abraham is the Negro's God. It may be that, as "the first shall be last, and the last first," through long centuries of service the Negro may have learned to rule, and the white races may have to learn that "whosoever desires to be the chiefest shall be servant of all."

Nothing appears to us more deplorable in this whole matter than the attitude of the professed people of God in the Southern States. God exhorted the prophets of old to lift up their voice like a trumpet, "and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." And He denounced some watchmen as "dumb dogs that cannot bark." If public opinion in the South is to be changed, it must be by the living, pungent testimony of men of God. Evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and all Christians in the United States, may be assured (and we say so upon the testimony of some of their best and best-informed men) that there is no more urgent question before their country than the position of the Negro in the South. But at present, while the Press, in papers like the Atlanta Constitution, were directly suggesting the torture and burning of "Sam Hose," the Pulpit, with possibly a very few exceptions, was and is absolutely dumb. R. C. M.

"Precious Seed."

Sown, where a preacher's failing voice,
His heart within him broken,
Pleads with each soul to make their choice,
And seems to win no token.
Reaped, where with robe and palm and ring
The ransom'd hosts assemble,
And lo, the children of a King,
He sees his flock resemble.

Sown, where some two or three are found
In spite of wind and weather,
And know that it is holy ground
Where they are met together.
Reaped, where on many a distant plain
Gladly they lay them down,
And count their dying anguish gain
So they may win a crown.

Sown, when at threat of burning flame
Exclaim the children three,
"We were not careful when it came,
O King, to answer thee."
Reaped, when unhurt by tyrant's wrath
The fiery path they trod,
And in their midst beheld a fourth
Like to the Son of God.

Sown, when the martyr is allowed
To quell the angry strife,
And one is standing in the crowd
Who hears those words of life.
Reaped, when he lifts his angel face,
Oppressed by cruel load,
And sees his Lord appoint his place
At the right hand of God.

What tho' it is with weeping
Thou goest forth to sow,
All that is in his keeping
Hereafter thou shalt know.
O reaper, when thy story
Thro' all the world is spread,
Eternal "weight of glory"
Shall rest upon thy head.

Tewkesbury. E. A. Scott.

System in Bible Study.—Our friends in America are widely adopting what is known as the Travis Reference Live System, comprising three distinct divisions—the Life of Christ—Old Testament—and Apostolic Study—each in itself complete. By means of maps, plates, slips, &c., to be inserted in one's own Bible, a subject is followed without reading intervening matter not germane to the theme under consideration. Mr. G. W. Langdon, who is in England at the present introducing the scheme, may be addressed at the G.P.O., Liverpool.

The Lord's Prayer.*

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

II.—The Hallowing of God's Name.

THE order of the petitions of the Lord's Prayer is not accidental, for it was Jesus Christ who said, "After this manner pray ye." We should notice, therefore, what we are to put first when we come to God. It is not a request for anything for ourselves. Important and pressing as our needs may be, we are to set them aside while we ask for the hallowing of God's name. In the opening words we are taught, not to pray to God for ourselves alone, but always to bring others with us—"Our Father." Here we learn further that God Himself must be put first.

The truth is that naturally we get but little beyond ourselves and our own personal wants in our praying. We do not think of our brother, and even the honour of God is forgotten. We bring to the altar a list of requests, pressing our fears, our dangers, our selfish desires. Even in the narrowest sense this is not worthy praying. If, when we meet a human friend, we do nothing but ask favours of him, tell him of our troubles, and implore his help, we would soon destroy the friendship.

Ofttimes, in friendship's most sacred communing, there is no request made of one or the other for any gift or service. The two sit together in close fellowship, talking over things that are dear to both. Why should it not be thus in our communing with God? In our times of closest fellowship with Him, asking favours for ourselves would seem to be almost a

DESECRATION OF THE HALLOWED TRYST.

At least, our first thought should not be for ourselves, but for God's honour.

Of course we need bread. Our bodies have their hungers, and God is not indifferent to our physical needs. A little later in the prayer we have a petition for bread. But before we come to this we have three other petitions—for the hallowing of God's name, the coming of his kingdom, the doing of his will. All these great objects are to be put before any request, even for daily bread. The same lesson is taught in another part of the Sermon on the Mount: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added." "These things" are bread and raiment, and whatever we may require for our bodily sustenance and comfort. We are to think first of God's will, and He will supply our wants.

This teaching applies also to the spirit in which all our prayers should be offered. In making any request, we are to think first of the honouring of God. If the thing we desire would not be for his glory, we should be willing to do without it. A father and mother sat beside their little child who was apparently near death. The minister came in and was about to pray. Turning to the parents he asked, "What shall I ask for your child? that it may recover?" For some moments there was no answer; and then the father, in a low voice and with deep emotion, said, "We dare not choose; leave it to God." He understood the meaning of prayer—that it is not a mere selfish presenting of our own wishes and desires, but is

FIRST THE HONOURING OF GOD.

We do not know that the thing we want would really honour God's name; and hence, after our most earnest requests, we should say, "Hallowed be thy name, even though this that I seek be not granted to me; though this sorrow or loss, from which I plead to be saved, come upon me."

"Hallowed be thy name." What are we to understand by the name of God? Among the ancient Jews there was one Divine name which had peculiar sacredness. It was so holy that they never pronounced it in public. When they came to it in reading they would pass over it in reverent silence, not daring to take it upon their lips.

The Mohammedans also have a great reverence for the Divine name. They will not tread upon a piece of paper, even the smallest torn fragment, which they see lying upon the ground, but will reverently pick it up, saying, "It may contain the name of God." In this there is little more than superstition in the form of honour shown to the name. Men with wicked hearts will treat the written name with seeming reverence, bowing at its every mention; while in their own life they have no true regard for God.

It is very evident that more than this is meant in this petition for the hallowing of God's name. We must honour it in our heart and life. In the Bible a name stands for the character of the person. Many Scripture names have meanings in which are enshrined the qualities which belonged to the person. Even among us a name comes to stand for all that there is in the person's life and character. A little child is born without a name, and when a name is given to it it means nothing as yet, for the child has no history, has done nothing to individualise itself. But as the days and years go on, and the child grows into manhood, everything he does and all that he is, are gathered into his name, until by-and-by the name has a meaning wherever the man is known. Any man's name, when spoken in the ear of his friends, conveys to them his character, his disposition, his history; all that he is, is enshrined in his name. There are certain names in every community which, by reason of the noble life which the persons live, mean a great deal, standing for honour, for patriotism, for heroism, for philanthropy, for religion.

A CONCEPTION OF HIS PERSONALITY,

So the name of God includes all that God is and all that He has done—that is, all the revelations which have been made to us of Him. When we speak his name, there arises before our mind a vision which gathers in itself all that we know about God—all our thoughts of Him, our impressions of Him, our experiences of his goodness, his mercy, his help. When we mention the name of Christ, the whole story of his life is suggested to us—his condescension, his beautiful character, his gentleness, his works of power, his teachings,—above all, his atoning death, and then his resurrection and ascension. Thus the name of God stands for God Himself, all that God is. In this petition we pray, therefore, not merely for the honouring of a name, but for the honouring of God Himself in the revelations of Him which have been made in the world.

We cannot add a particle to the essential glory of God's name. Nothing we could do would make his character any more glorious. We cannot add to the sun's brightness by on the earth; nor can we, by anything we may say or do, make God any more glorious than He is in his essential character.

LIGHTING CANDLES AND LAMPS

What, then, is meant by the hallowing of God's name? It is a prayer that God Himself will hallow his own name; also, that He would enable us to hallow it. There are several ways in which we may do this:

We may add to the honour in which we hold God's name in our own heart. Some persons live year after year and give little serious thought to the Divine character, not studying the Scriptures to discover its beauty. The more we learn about God, the more will we honour his name. In one of his most recent books, Dr. Pierson gives this illustration: In a Russian palace there is a gallery in which are hung several hundred portraits of young maidens. These pictures were painted by Count Rotari for Catharine II. The striking feature in the collection is that those who were familiar with the Empress and her habits and tastes could find in each portrait, half concealed, half revealed, something that reminded them of her—in one, a jewel that she admired; in another, a flower that was dear to her; in another, a style of dress that she liked; in another, some feature of her face; in another, a scene which had some connection with her life.

Everything in this world has in it for a devout mind some suggestion of God. Every flower that blooms, every plant that grows, every bird that sings, every cloud that flits across the sky, every star that shines, every human face, suggests something about God, the Creator. In the Bible there is not a chapter, scarcely a verse, in which the child of God may not find something which suggests his Father. As we thus learn about God, the honour in which we hold Him in our heart becomes greater and greater.

We ask in this prayer, also, that God's name may become better known among men. Dear as God may be to us, and highly as we may honour Him in our own heart, He is not worthily reverenced in the world about us. In one of the Psalms we read, "They that know thy name shall put their trust in Thee." We say of a good man that he needs only to be known in order to be loved. If we can get men to know God, they will love Him and trust Him. We should pray, therefore, that his name may become better known; that those who have no thought of Him now shall learn about Him, and shall thus be brought to know Him. What joy it would give to thousands of weary sufferers in this world to-day

IF THEY KNEW GOD!

We ask, also, in this petition, that we may be enabled to hallow God's name in our life before men. If a child does well and lives worthily, he honours his parents before the world. If he lives unworthily, he brings reproach, shame and grief upon them. We, as God's children, bring either honour or dishonour upon the name of our Father by our life. It has often been said: "Christians are the world's Bible." The world does not read the written Book, but it does read the lives of those who profess to be God's children. If our lives are to be the interpretation of God's Word to the world, we should write nothing in them which would in any way misrepresent or misinterpret God. If we live carelessly, speaking lies, acting deceitfully, doing unloving things, we are dishonouring God. It is important that all those who stand for God in this world shall live in all their common days so that all who see them shall learn something more about God's grace, and the beauty of holiness.

Religion is not merely a matter of creed and profession, or of church-going and public worship; it is far more

A MATTER OF DAILY LIFE.

It is not how we behave on Sundays, nor the kind of creed we hold, nor the devoutness of our worship. It is the way we act at home, in school, in business, in society, in our associations with men. It is vitally important that all who are Christ's in name shall manifest his beauty in their lives.

Let us so live that at all times we shall, indeed, not only with our voice, but in our life, give honour and praise to Him whose name shall be hallowed above all other names. "Therefore, with angels, and archangels, and with all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify thy glorious name, evermore praising Thee, and saying, 'Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of hosts; heaven and earth are full of thy glory. Glory be to Thee, O Lord Most High!'"

* This series of articles will appear monthly.

Power in Prayer.

MANY are beseeching God for Pentecostal blessing; if we really want this, let us adopt Pentecostal practice in the worship of our God and Father.

In Christian circles where dry, powerless "extempore" prayers are in evidence, the cure will not be found in a human liturgy, however seemingly "helpful," but in beseeching God in genuine, heartfelt Spirit-indited prayer, to fill us with his Spirit, and to grant us constant, close communion with the Father and with the Son; and then instead of "soulless" prayers, there will be prayers "like the sound of a mighty rushing wind," and "rivers of living water" will flow out of every believer who, humbled before God, counts on Him for power in prayer.

A. F. Harris.

Ratcliff Sailors' Rest.—Special gatherings were held in the Sailors' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, on Bank Holiday, and the proceedings were of a most helpful character throughout. The workers included brethren of many nationalities. A fruit tea was followed by indoor and outdoor meetings, the chief feature being a meeting in English, at which a number of stalwart men gladly told of the great things the Lord had done for them.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 20. 1 Kings x.

COME to Jesus with your hard questions about your life's purpose and duty, about the conflict which rages within, between your perception of his choice for you and your choice for yourself, and about all things else that trouble you. Commune with Him of all that is in your heart. Bring Him of the gold of Sheba, and abundance of spice—the gold of obedience, the spice of love and praise and adoration.

He will answer your hard questions, not so much intellectually as spiritually; that is, you may not be able to put down in so many words his solution of your difficulties, but He will be their answer. He will give you such an enlarged view of his purposes, such an entire and childlike faith in Himself, that you will be at peace. The soul may have all knowledge, so that it understands all mysteries, without being really at rest; whereas, it may rest in ignorance of the provision for to-morrow's need, because it reposes so absolutely in Christ's charge and care.

We will not wrest the holy meaning of Scripture, nor impose a rendering which the obvious meaning of its words will not bear. But that allusion to Solomon's ascent to the House of God reminds us that no knowledge of Christ is complete which does not view Him in his risen and ascended glory, and which does not lead the soul, not simply to listen to his voice on the outward ear, but receives Him to indwell the inner being.

The half has never been told, and never can be told, of what Jesus will be to the inquirer. His wisdom and glory will always exceed their fame. And when He gives, it is according to his royal bounty—all we ask and all we desire. Would that all the earth would seek his presence, bringing every man a present! Because God loved men, He hath made Him king.

MONDAY, August 21. 1 Kings xi.

It is sad to see the break-up of some strong constitution, which has braved disease and exposure, but sadder to watch the deterioration of a noble character. But such is the delineation of this chapter. The magnificent tree is pierced by the borer-worm, and rottenness is already at its heart. Luxury, wanton loves, passionate self-indulgence, were the cause in the case of Solomon, as of thousands more, of an impaired character, and immediate loss of imperial power.

Oh, let us ponder the sad record! Listen to the boom of the waves, as they break up this noble ship. "King Solomon loved many strange (or foreign) women, . . . and his wives turned away his heart." . . . "His heart was not perfect with the Lord his God." . . . "Solomon did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." . . . "The Lord was angry with Solomon." . . . "Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon."

Let us never forget that the position we hold is in trust, and that He who gave it can as easily remove. So long as we please God in our endeavour, though amid much ignorance and imperfection, to do his will, we may count on Him to maintain us; but so soon as we allow ourselves to use for self-indulgence what was entrusted for his glory, we expose ourselves to the imminent peril of seeing our kingdom crumble.

Notice how, throughout this chapter, the name of David is repeated so frequently and tenderly. As though God had indeed forgotten his great sins. It was out of respect for the covenant into which He had entered with him, that one tribe was left to his son (vv. 12, 32, 38, 39). Your prayers may bless your posterity when you have passed home.

TUESDAY, August 22. 1 Kings xii.

From the view of the despot, the people exist to aggrandise his power. Why should he not answer them roughly, and add to their burdens? From the view of the people, the king exists simply to secure good order and just government, so that they may be able to pursue their life without annoyance or interruption. Rehoboam richly deserved his fate. He had no right to speak as he did. Not only did it indicate a weakling who boasts loudly of deeds he cannot perform, but it betrayed a thorough want of perception of the changing order of the times in which he lived. We need to pray that our rulers should be men of understanding, who "know what Israel ought to do."

Twice over we are told that it was a thing brought about by God (15, 24). Beneath political changes and revolutions, God has a purpose. The riders on the white, the red, the livid, or the black horses, are sent out from his palace and bear his commission. They only do whatever He has counselled beforehand to be done. This gives immense rest of soul, when we look out on the play of earthly politics. A friend of mine, a saintly man, as he opened the morning paper, would say, "I want to see how my heavenly Father is governing the world." When God has given you your place, do not resort to questionable methods for its maintenance, as Jeroboam did. The plans he laid to secure the stability of his throne resulted in its overthrow, and covered his name with undying infamy—He "made Israel to sin." "Thou maintainest my lot."

WEDNESDAY, August 23. 1 Kings xiii.

The lesson of this chapter is very needful. It is clear that God spake by the man of God who came out of Judah to Bethel. By his voice the Spirit of God cried against Jeroboam's altar. It is equally certain that He who gave him his commission bade him eat no bread, drink no water, and return home by another way. This as a protest against the idolatry of Jeroboam and his people. When, therefore, the old prophet alleged that an angel of God had bidden him cancel these first directions, and bring the man of God to his own home, he should have replied that he must abide by the marching-orders which had come to him at first, and by direct revelation. If he had done so, he would have been saved the final catastrophe so graphically narrated.

God never contradicts Himself. He never goes back on his first instructions. He does not say yea and nay. He leads the soul, always forward, from one point to another, but never to and fro. When God has spoken to your soul, act on what He has said. Do not look here and there, or correct your first impressions by what friends and advisers say. You must obey your Divine Guide, and the impression which his words have made. If He wants anything else, He will make you know it by an impression as direct and personal at that of which you were at first conscious. No man, however holy, has a right to intrude into the sacred dealings between God and the individual disciple. We may often detect the false voice, because its suggestions so exactly chime in with the weakness of our nature, which is so willing to "eat bread and drink water," and enjoy society.

THURSDAY, August 24. 1 Kings xiv.

The description given of David is very beautiful—that he kept God's commandments, and followed Him with all his heart, to do only that which was right in his eyes. This was the basis of the Psalms. They are full of noble sentiment and emotion, but they are based on the fact of a resolute determination to do God's will, a purpose which was steadily pursued, except in one terrible episode. How dear such a life is to God! How He recalls it! How He causes it to be held in veneration! Be sure that your life may attract the same loving regard!

But in sad contrast to this is the idolatry of Israel, and the shameless sin of Judah. How strange is that inevitable drift from God, which is so evident in the story of the chosen people. It may be accounted for in part by the close association of idolatry with sensuous practices; these have always been combined, and thereby a religious sanction has been lent to the grossest forms of uncleanness.

How foolish and short-sighted sin is. Here is the king of Israel counselling his wife to disguise herself, so that she be not recognized as his wife, and sending her to inquire of the old blind prophet what shall become of their son. He seemed obtuse to the thought that the same power which could penetrate the veil that hung over the future could penetrate her disguise. In fact, the blindness was with Jeroboam, and not with Ahijah. Alas for those whose eyes sin has blinded! "Professing themselves wise, they become fools."

FRIDAY, August 25. 1 Kings xv.

Again the references to David are as we noticed in the last chapter. "Not perfect as the heart of David." . . . "For David's sake." . . . "David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from anything that He commanded him all the days of his life, save only—." . . . "Asa did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, as did David his father." David's name lingers as sweet fragrance in the air, or as the after-glow of sundown.

Asa's reign is more clearly delineated in the Book of Chronicles. There we are told of the sincere piety which actuated his early life, and which shone out very conspicuously in his iconoclasm, his drastic purging of the land from the idols which sprang up, with mushroom rankness, on the corrupt soil. Strange that such a man should afterwards turn to methods of expediency in his conflict with Baasha, and summon the help of Benhadad to restrain his invasion! It seems as though the Spirit of God would impress on us again and again that endurance to the end is the only perfect test of our real condition. "He," said our Lord, "that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved."

The hand of God is ever at work shaking all that can be shaken, that what cannot be shaken may be approved, and remain. Before that scrutiny, Abijam and Asa, Nadab and the house of Jeroboam collapsed. Oh, beware, for the winnowing fan and the earthquake come to all men, and it may be that you are yet to be proved to be a hypocrite. Watch and pray!

SATURDAY, August 26. 1 Kings xvi.

A wretched story of intrigue, anarchy, and murder! We might be inclined to think that there was nothing to feed our spiritual life in the story of the overthrow of Baasha and his house, the drunkenness of Elah, the conspiracy and ruthless vengeance of Zimri and his own miserable end, the brief conflict of which the result is summed up in the concise epitome, "So Tibni died, and Omri reigned." What is there here to detain us?

There is much, if we take it as illustrating, and enforcing, the great lesson that the one bulwark against universal anarchy is the maintenance of true religion. People talk with glib tongues against the Puritan conscience, and demand the secularization of the Lord's Day, and the curtailing of the religious landmarks of the past, but they are surely imperilling the order and stability of the realm. More than we realize, the relations of man with man are ordered and maintained by the national recognition of the claims of God. The writings of Voltaire induced the French Revolution, and have been the source of France's unrest ever since.

So with the heart of man. Where Christ is supreme, there is an orderly advance in knowledge, love, and grace. Otherwise, imperious passions break into revolt, and assert their claims to the throne of the heart. Conspiracy against God, revolt, lawlessness abound, and are the foes of peace, and the equable development of character. Oh, that the inner realm might become the kingdom of our God, and of his Christ, and that He might reign for ever!

Christian Literature in Camp.—A number of readers of The Christian kindly aided in providing literature to be distributed among the various military camps at Brecon and in the neighbourhood, for the summer training. The papers and tracts were carefully distributed with the happiest results. The behaviour of the men was excellent. On the last two nights of the training Mr. Devoir Thomas, with Mr. Phillips, evangelist, secured over a hundred temperance pledges.

Glimpses of Romanism.

XI.—The Papal Church and Education.

By Rev. Alexander Robertson, D.D., Venice.

IN 1481, when Erasmus was a boy of fourteen in a monastery near Deventer, in Holland, "he found," as Mr. Froude tells us, "that he might get drunk as often and as openly as he pleased; but study was a forbidden indulgence." And in 1881, when Count Campello was a canon in St. Peter's, Rome, there was, as he has often told me, only one sin he could commit in the eyes of the Vatican, and that was to think for himself. Thus, down the centuries the Papal Church has ever been, and now is, the implacable enemy of education. Knowledge has ever been regarded by the Papal Church as synonymous with heresy, and ignorance with orthodoxy. The faith of the Christian leads him to investigate all things, and to hold fast that which is good; but the faith of the Papist is a barrier to all thought and study. And the reason of this is not far to seek. The Papal Church is, to a large extent, a system of jugglery and imposture.

The Reformation was brought about, as Mr. Froude has said, "by the people being unwilling longer to believe a lie." Such being the nature of the Papacy, ignorance is essential to its very existence. Let in the light, and this system of darkness must be dispelled. Let in the truth, and this system of falsehood must be exposed. That Church consulted her life's interest when she decreed knowledge to be identical with heresy, and heresy to be punishable by death. And before the Reformation, when the civil power was simply the tool of the Church, the scientists, philosophers, and scholars who dared to investigate the truth and to think for themselves were simply

STRANGLED AND BURNED.

As Fra Paolo Sarpi told Galileo at a somewhat later date, "the only arguments known at Rome are the rope and the stake." Galileo's mouth was stopped; Giordano Bruno, his forerunner in scientific study, was burned. But it is often stated that, before the Reformation, learning was entirely in the hands of the clergy. To a certain extent it is true. But what they knew—speaking of them as a whole—was entirely unworthy of the name of learning. They could read and write, which the great bulk outside their ranks could not do; but this acquirement was valued by them, not for any useful purpose, but because it enabled them more effectively to dominate over the minds of others. And the knowledge they had and did impart was utterly useless and often mischievous. It consisted of theological hair-splittings and of fables regarding the saints, always incredible and childish, and often scandalous and immoral.

A great part of a monk's time (and well for him if he were not worse engaged) was occupied in copying, and sometimes illuminating, useless missals and breviaries. But one has only to remember the awful wickedness that obtained in all religious houses before the Reformation, to realize the impossibility of the existence of any real, valuable learning alongside of it. Let me again quote a few words from the letters of Erasmus, as given by Mr. Froude, bearing upon this matter. He says: "Obedience is so taught as to hide that there is any obedience due to God. An abbot will issue an order to a brotherhood in the name of holy obedience. And what will such order be? An order to observe chastity? an order to be sober? an order to tell no lies? Not one of these things. It will be that a brother is not to learn Greek; he is not to seek to instruct himself. He may be a sot. He may be full of hatred and malice. He may

NEVER LOOK INSIDE THE SCRIPTURES.

No matter. He has not broken any oath. He is an excellent member of the community; while, if he disobeys such a command as this from an insolent superior, there is stake or dungeon for him instantly." Elsewhere he speaks of the love of learning having gone from the clergy to secular princes, and that whilst the former talk about their wine, the latter talk over it of useful topics. As a matter of fact, European education dates from the Reformation.

But for Luther and Melanchthon, we might still be living in the Dark Ages. The schoolmaster was the direct creation of Protestantism. Wycliffe, by his translation of the Bible into English, long before Luther's day, too, helped to "roll the stone from the well's mouth;" and the English Reformers were those who enabled the common people to draw from that well living water, and opened for them many a well of wholesome secular knowledge besides. And everyone knows what Scotland owes educationally to John Knox, "the one man without whom Scotland, as the modern world has known it, would have had no existence." The public provision now made in every civilized state for the securing to all those born within the realm the blessings of a good, sound, elementary education is the direct fruit of Protestantism.

In Italy, where there was no Reformation, or rather where the Reformation was effectually stamped out by "rope and stake" (a quarter of a million people having been in the sixteenth century), there was virtually no education till the overthrow of the temporal power and the birth of the young kingdom of Italy, not yet thirty years ago. In 1870, when Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi entered Rome with their victorious troops, and the King uttered the ever memorable words that have sealed the fate of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope to all time, "Ci siamo, e ci resteamo" (Here we are, and here we will remain), they found that 85 per cent. of its inhabitants could neither read nor write. In no other parts of Italy were things in a worse state. Luther said in his day, "If there is a hell, Rome is built upon it"; and it has ever been the case, that the nearer one approaches to the seat of the so-called Vicar of Christ, the blacker the darkness, educationally, morally, and spiritually.

BUTCHERED BY THE PAPACY

And in regard to the state of education inside the walls of the Church's own establishments, the writer of the article on "Education," in the Encyclopædia Britannica says: "The Italian Government, in taking possession of Rome, found that the pupils of the Collegio Romano were far below the level of modern requirements." During the years immediately following the establishment of the unity and integrity of Italy, when education was still in the hands of the Church, it continued to be the worst possible. The priest-teachers were thoroughly incapable. The time of the scholars was largely taken up in the rehearsal of the same frivolous and absurd and martyrs that were taught in the days of Erasmus. But, beyond that, the Church had the stern facts of modern history to deal with—the facts of the Reformation and the new era of progress it inaugurated—and these it manipulated and falsified to suit its own ends. The text-books used were for the most part tissues of falsehoods.

LEGENDS ABOUT SAINTS

I have spoken to men who were trained in these schools, and they have told me they had to unlearn, when they came out of them, everything they had been taught. But in course of time, amongst the thousand and one reforms with which the Government had to deal, it found the opportunity to take up that of education. It created an Educational Department, and popularly elected local school boards, after the model of England. The first thing they had to do was to get rid of the Romish text-books, which were condemned as useless or worse. The next thing was to get rid of priest-teachers, who were found to be like their text-books. They were, therefore, bundled after them out of doors. All the teachers in the national schools are laymen. Priests are denounced as unfit by birth, by training, by profession, by celibacy, to come into contact with the youth of the land.

The system of education is national, secular, compulsory, and free. The result is that there are now comparatively few children in Italy who have never been at school, and the number of the illiterate is steadily decreasing. If the Government educational regulations were enforced, there would be none. But when I once asked the syndic of a village why he did not to send their children to school, he said, "We do nothing by force now in Italy. But," he added, "though we cannot exact fines, there is one penalty we exact which is sufficient to cause parents to see that their children, if not at the day school, yet at the night schools, learn to read and write; a man who cannot do that loses all his civil rights." There is no illiterate voting in Italy. What a good thing it would be if there were none in Ireland!

FORCE THE PARENTS

An attempt was made, I remember, some years ago, to get the falsified Church text-books into the hands of pupils, by the parish priests giving them away as prizes. Signor Crispi instantly checkmated the Church, by getting a bill passed which forbade the giving away of any book as a school prize which had not first received the imprimatur of the Educational Department.

Of course, the Church still trains its priests in its own seminaries, for the State has long since shaken itself free from all responsibility in the matter, by abolishing all theological faculties in the universities; but the training they receive only fits them for

THE MECHANICAL PERFORMANCE

of their duties at the altar. The writer in the Encyclopædia Britannica, from whom I have already quoted, speaking of the teaching given by the Jesuits, says, "They gave the best education of their time in order to acquire confidence, but they became the chief obstacle to the improvement of education. . . . They have tracked out the soul to its recesses, that they might slay it there and generate another in its place; they educated each mind according to its powers, that it might be a more subservient tool to their own purposes." That is exactly what the education of the Papal Church amounts to to-day. Its system of training is deliberately designed, not only not to educate the mind, but to benumb and dwarf and crush its powers, so that the man may not commit the one crime, in its eyes, of which Count Campello speaks—that he may not "think for himself." The Papal Church ever was, and now is, and ever will be (for it would slay itself if it were otherwise), the implacable foe of education. Knowledge is still in the eyes of the Papal Church heresy, and heresy is still punishable by death; and that the heretic is not hanged or burned is simply because the power of the Papal Church to kill has been taken from her.

Christian Endeavour Convention.

THE eighteenth annual Convention of the United Societies of Christian Endeavour, held at Detroit, Mich., was a grand success. The 30,000 delegates and members present represented 55,813 societies, with a total membership of about 3,500,000, extending through nearly every country under heaven.

The two gigantic tents, in which the greatest meetings were held, were surrounded by over 100 others, covering three entire city "blocks." From the press tent over 200 reporters, from all over the country, sent accounts of the meetings in every direction. On even the first night an audience of 15,000 people faced the speakers on the platform (which had been built fifteen feet high, so that the addresses might be heard all over the tent). The meetings in the tents every morning and evening only formed part of the work of the Convention.

Every day there were conferences, addresses and lectures in all the churches of the city, at which spoke men famous throughout the land. But the crowning act of the Convention took place under the oaks of beautiful Belle Isle in the middle of the river dividing the States from Canada. There was started a movement which will have encircled the globe before it ends. Here the Endeavourers adopted a memorial asking the world to lay aside the sword, and invoked God's richest blessings upon the Czar of Russia, to whose initiative the Peace Congress at The Hague owed its existence.

It is curious that the island upon which this gathering was held was one of the "peace islands" of the Indians long before any white man ever saw it. There, while the Indians could fight on the mainland, no strife ever took place; and, whether their tribes were at war or not, the savages had always to smoke the pipe of peace when they reached its shores.

"He Abideth Faithful."

Another Year's Testimony from Ashley Down, Bristol.

IT is nearly eighteen months since the venerable and beloved founder of the Bristol Orphan Houses was called home, and still the Institution which he was permitted to rear holds on its way prosperously. On nothing did Mr. George Müller more strongly insist than this, that the orphan houses were not his orphan houses, but God's; that the principles on which he acted were no special prerogative of his own, but the common privilege of all Christians. His removal from the scene of his earthly labours has given opportunity for the demonstration of the truth of these statements, and the result proves how true were the sayings of this modern "man of God."

The Annual Report (the sixtieth) has just appeared, giving the record of work and experience for another year, and we venture to say that the hearts of devout readers everywhere will rejoice at the evidence it affords of loyalty to principle on the one hand, and Divine fidelity to promise on the other. The removal of the beloved founder was, indeed, a momentous change, and many were the questions asked about the future by those interested in the welfare of the work. The pages of the new report will, we think, make it very clear—first, that the old principles are still adhered to; and, secondly, that

THE PRINCIPLES STILL WORK.

The report abounds in striking and impressive incidents, to one or two of which we call attention. Here is one of a very testing nature: "From Anglesey, £50 for schools, &c., with £1,000 for the Orphans. Four days previous to the receipt of this large donation, I received a letter from the donor, who was an entire stranger to me, in which he wrote as follows:—'I am very wishful to know what is the pecuniary position of your Orphanage this year, more especially since January 1 last. I had a somewhat unusual conviction brought home to me about your needing help, one night when lying awake in bed. My inquiry is in strict confidence. Give me at the same time the name in which a draft should be made out.—Yours very faithfully, ——.'"

On this Mr. Wright remarks:—"To this letter I replied, expressing my full appreciation of the kind interest in the Institution which this writer's letter evinced, but adding that the principle upon which my late father-in-law had from the first carried on the work was its present financial position. That only once a year, in the annual report, a financial statement was published, but that this always referred to a state of things eight or ten weeks previous to the date of publication; and that, as I had received the responsibility of carrying on the work as a sacred trust, I could not depart from the principle which had been undeviatingly adhered to up to the present hour. Three days afterwards—that is, by return of post—I received the following letter, enclosing a draft for the amount above stated: 'Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your report, and note it is your rule not to give information as to your present needs. I now enclose draft in your favour for £1,050, to be devoted to the maintenance of the Orphans and your other objects as God may direct you. Please acknowledge receipt to me in enclosed envelope, and please note it is strictly private. He gave it me in a very direct manner with what appeared to me a plain intimation that you required it. No thanks whatever are due to me. Trusting this instance of his wonderful kindness may still further strengthen your faith in Him, whose goodness is so great that words cannot characterize it,—I am, yours truly,——.'"

NEVER TO DIVULGE TO ANY HUMAN BEING

Mr. Wright then, in order to make more evident the interposition of God, states what was the financial position at the time, showing that whereas he had the prospect of liabilities in connection with current expenses for May, amounting to from £1,500 to £2,000, he had only £374 in hand to meet them. Under these circumstances came the letter and donation referred to. An instance like this is enough to show how real is the position of maintained by the directors, and how equally real is the Divine response to the faith of his servants.

DEPENDENCE UPON GOD

A perusal of the report will show how much cause there was for constant waiting upon God. Again and again the funds were reduced to a very low figure, and the week's income was often totally inadequate to the week's expenses; but again and again, through various channels, the supplies flowed in and the needs were met.

The Orphan account, with a total of over £23,000 expenses, closes with a balance in hand of £728 1s. 5½d. Space prevents us multiplying quotations. Our readers should procure the report for themselves, for they will find in its pages much material for spiritual edification.

Not only in finance, but in the general work of the Institution, and in spiritual movements amongst the children of the Orphanage and the Schools, is there much cause for thanksgiving. The missionary extracts likewise will be found to be of a very encouraging character. We rejoice in the prosperity of this good work, and are glad that another annual report goes forth on its world-wide mission with so clear and blessed a testimony.

Ministers' Prayer Union.

TOWARDS the close of last year a circular was issued, signed by some fifty ministers of the Free Church of Scotland, and bearing the title, "A Proposed Union for Prayer." In that paper it was suggested that a ministerial Prayer Union should be formed within the Church, on the understanding that each member of the Union should set apart one evening a month for special prayer, "first for ourselves, that we, as ministers, may receive a fresh anointing from the Holy Spirit; and then, that the Lord would give to our office-bearers, to our people, and to the whole Church, 'times of refreshing' from his own presence."

To that appeal a very gratifying response was made. From each of the seventy-five Presbyteries in the Church, and from the Professoriate in each of the three colleges, members were enrolled; and at this date the Union numbers, exclusive of friends belonging to other denominations who have asked to be allowed to join, almost exactly 600.

At a general meeting in connection with the Union, arrangements were made for the carrying on of the work, and a committee of management appointed. With reference to the time for special prayer, it was unanimously resolved (1) that that should be weekly, instead of monthly; and (2) that, whilst no pledge is exacted of members each being left to make such arrangements as may be most suitable for himself, it be suggested that an hour on Saturday evening (say from 8 to 9) would be peculiarly appropriate. All the members may not be in a position to give effect to this suggestion, but those who can will have the stimulus of feeling that at that hour they are in sacred fellowship with many brethren.

The Secretary of the Union is Rev. W. B. Hutton, Crailing, Jedburgh.

Work on the Gold Coast.—In order to bring his work in the hinterland of the Gold Coast before the people of England, and to secure from them the means for its extension, Rev. Mark C. Hayford is on a visit to this country. He comes of a family of native ministers, his father and grandfather both having been workers under the Wesleyan Missionary Society. He himself entered the Civil Service, and held several important appointments, in all of which he received the heartiest commendation of his chiefs. Several years ago he received a definite call to a fuller ministry, and although it meant abandoning two-thirds of his income at that time, he unhesitatingly followed his convictions, and has since been doing good and successful work. His address is African Institute, Colwyn Bay, North Wales.

Bishop Hooper's Memory.

IN the midst of St. Mary's Square, Gloucester, on the site of the venerable Reformer's martyrdom, stands the Bishop Hooper Monument. The first memorial was erected by Mr. James Clealand, of Bangor, Ireland, in 1826. In 1862 this was superseded by the present structure.

In a letter to the Gloucester Journal, written many years ago, Mr. Henry Jeffs stated that the project of a more suitable memorial to the memory of Bishop Hooper originated with him, for he started the fund by making the price of his services as a contributor to the Gloucester Mercury a subscription of £50 from the publisher, which was willingly given. The money required for the erection of the monument was eventually raised by public subscription.

Under the canopy of the monument—which is in the Early Decorative style of English architecture—is a statue, by Mr. Thornhill, of Dublin, representing the martyred bishop in the act of preaching. The tablet on the east side of the monument bears a brass plate with the following inscription:—"Gloria soli Deo. 'For the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God,' 'not accepting deliverance,' John Hooper, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Worcester, was burnt to ashes on this spot, February 9. Anno Domini 1555." On the opposite tablet another plate bears the inscription: "This monument was erected by public subscription, Anno Domini 1862, on the site of a smaller one, the gift of James Clealand, Esq., of Bangor, Ireland."

The ravages of time have made it necessary that something should be done looking toward the renovation of the monument, and consequently a demonstration was arranged for Bank Holiday. It was announced to be held in St. Catherine's Meadow, but rain drove the people to the Corn Exchange. Mr. John Kensit was the chief speaker, and was supported by a number of the local clergy and laymen. Rev. J. C. Wilcox, who presided, made a statement as to the funds required, and a committee was appointed to carry out the scheme.

The Russian Famine.

THE total amount of subscriptions to the Russian Famine Relief Fund received by the treasurer up to July 19 is Rs.23,431·40. Other sums contributed in England, to the amount of Rs.3,000, have still to be forwarded to the treasurer; and there have also been contributions of food, materials, medicines, &c., to the value of about Rs.2,000. Thus, the full total is Rs.28,431·40, and contributions are still coming in. Of this amount, there was raised in St. Petersburg Rs.9,744·55; from England were received Rs.8,305·50; and Sweden sent Rs.5,344·09.

The money has been spent in relieving distress in the Chistopol, Spassk, and Mamadish districts of the Kazan government, and also in the Samara and Nijni Novgorod governments. Several ladies, of whom five are English, are in these districts administering the fund; they have all worked harmoniously with the Red Cross and the local authorities, from whom they have received great courtesy and assistance. The Chairman of the Relief Committee, Rev. A. Francis, has twice visited the region, organizing the work of relief. All the moneys have been received and paid out by Mr. J. L. Nobbs, Private Commercial Bank, St. Petersburg, treasurer of the fund.

In the famine districts, the harvest prospects are generally good; but over a large part of the Mamadish district of the Kazan government there is a complete failure of this year's crops in addition to last year's failure, and therefore the efforts of the Relief Committee are now specially concentrated on that district.

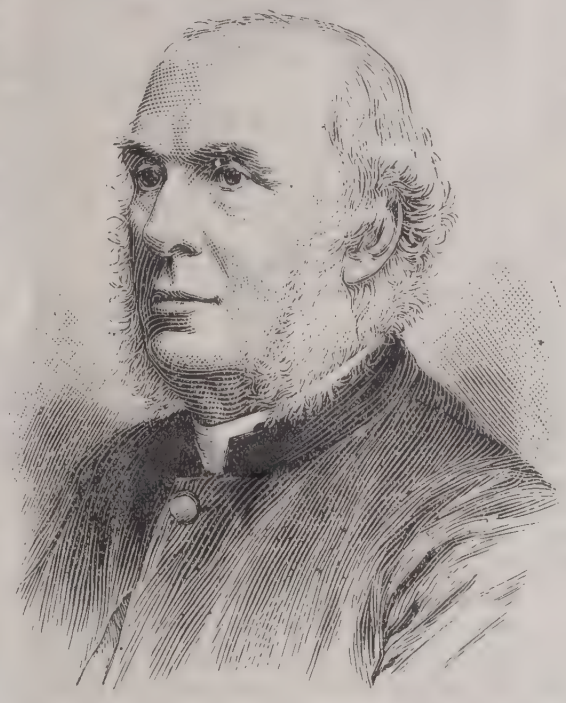
Mormonism in America.—A war against the Mormon elders is now being waged in Tennessee and Kentucky, where the people declare they are determined to get rid of these "licentious miscreants." Many of their churches have been destroyed. The Mormon leaders have been stoned and many of them seriously injured. Almost all are boycotted. The governors of all the Southern States are deluged with messages from Mormons claiming protection. The president of a rich Mormon society has offered rewards of 1,000dols. to any whose evidence will secure the conviction of persons assaulting the elders. He says their Church will spend a million dollars to protect her missionaries.

Rev. William Wilkinson, D.D.

Late Rector of Birmingham.

By Rev. CANON SUTTON.

IT is no discredit to any man to be remembered rather for what he was than for what he did. This will certainly be the case with the subject of this sketch. Not because the record of work done, even so far as that can be tabulated, is meagre or unimportant, but because it was the influence of a peculiarly pleasing and lovable personality which rendered the late Rector of Birmingham so great a power in the city.



William Wilkinson, who was born in 1816, lived his early life in Ireland. There was always a slight suspicion of an Irish accent in his speech, and he had the ready wit, the eloquent tongue, and the charming manners which are so characteristic of the Irish people. He was, however, of English parentage. His father was registrar of the diocese and vicar-choral of the Cathedral of Cloyne. He was educated at Midleton School, in the county of Cork. This school had for many years a great reputation in the South of Ireland, and sent up many excellent scholars to Trinity College, Dublin. Without being a profound scholar, William Wilkinson had a capital acquaintance with classical literature; and it may be that his remarkable facility of speech was in part due to the Irish method of translating fluently, rather than construing, Latin and Greek authors. His career at Trinity College, Dublin, without being specially distinguished, was of a highly creditable kind. He took his degree in 1839, and was but, coming under deep religious impressions in early manhood, he resolved to devote himself to the ministry. Amongst the distinguished men of his day in Trinity were George Salmon, the learned Provost of Trinity College to-day (whom may God spare to do for the Old Testament what he has done for the New!); William Magee, afterwards Archbishop of York; George Lee, afterwards Fellow of T.C.D., the able author of a standard book on the Inspiration of the Scriptures; and the brilliant, though sadly erratic, Isaac Butt. Whether young William Wilkinson ever attended the lectures of James Thomas O'Brien, who became Archbishop King's Lecturer in Divinity in 1833, may be doubtful. He was certainly influenced by the remarkable sermons which Dr. O'Brien (who became Bishop of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin in 1842) preached and published on the "Nature and Effects of Faith." The foundation of his theological faith was laid firm and deep during his career at Trinity.

INTENDED FOR THE BAR;

The prevailing characteristic of the Irish clergy in those days was a very pronounced Calvinism. Without being a narrow Evangelical, or a Calvinist of a strict sort, Canon Wilkinson was always an outspoken preacher of the doctrines of grace. In 1840 he was ordained to the curacy of Aston-Flamville-cum-Burbage. He ever spoke with deep affection of his vicar, the Rev. Willoughby Balfour, after whom he named his eldest son (now Vicar of Bishop's Itchington), born whilst the late canon was still curate of Burbage. His gifts as a preacher and speaker, and his earnest devotion to missionary work, rendered Mr. Wilkinson, whilst still a curate, a very welcome advocate of the Church Missionary Society, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and of the London Jews' Society. Towards the close of 1849 he became secretary of the Irish Church Missions, and was brought into close contact with the Rev. A. R. Dallas, the founder of that Society, which came into existence on March 20, 1849. Mr. Dallas was honorary secretary till his death in 1869.

Although Mr. Wilkinson held his secretaryship barely two years, it doubtless had a great influence on his future life. In London he met many of the leading Evangelicals. Mr. Dallas was a man of very marked spirituality; he was held in high esteem by Dr. Sumner, then Bishop of Winchester—so much so that that Bishop appointed him one of his chaplains. The whole atmosphere of the Irish Church Missions was that of prayerful reliance on God the Holy Ghost. Its friends were the very cream of Evangelical Churchmen. To be associated with its work as organizing secretary, meant to be well known to the most devout and influential clergy and laity who were decidedly Protestant and Evangelical. It may not be amiss to quote here the words of one who, though a High Churchman, was a true Protestant, the late Bishop Wordsworth:—

From a photograph by Mr. H. J. Whitlock, New Street, Birmingham.

His Divine Word forbids us to look for union with the Church of Rome. We cannot unite with her as she now is, and it forbids us to expect that Rome will be other than she is; it reveals the awful truth that Babylon will be Babylon to the end; it displays her ruin; it says death, mourning, and famine are her destiny, and that she will be burnt with fire; it shows us the smoke of her burning.

Without ever being a bitter controversialist, William Wilkinson was all his life a strong opponent of Romish error, and of Romanisers in the Church of England.

His first incumbency was at Holy Trinity, Sheffield. The patronage was at that time in the hands of the Misses Harrison, who were for many years foremost among the "honourable women" who devoted their time and wealth freely to the Lord's work in Sheffield. At Holy Trinity, Wicker, Sheffield, Mr. Wilkinson laboured with great zeal and acceptance from 1851 to 1853, when he was appointed by the Vicar of Sheffield, Dr. Sale, to the important living of St. Mary's in that town.

There is an inscription on Dr. Sale's tomb in Sheffield parish church which bears witness to the fact that having become deeply convinced of the need of a changed heart before a man can be a faithful and efficient minister of Christ, he took the greatest pains never to appoint any man to a living in his gift unless he were assured that he was a converted man. St. Mary's was one of the most important churches in his patronage; it was very large, and the parish had a population at that time of nearly 10,000. Soon the church was well filled; the parish was vigorously worked; a new vicarage was built. St. Mary's was to the front in home and foreign missionary work. I find a characteristic entry in the Church Missionary Report of 1855-56. Amongst the amounts sent up from St. Mary's, Sheffield, appears "Thankoffering £20, Rev. William Wilkinson." Thankofferings for societies in those days were rare. All through his life the late Rector of Birmingham was most liberal in giving,

MOST UNSELFISH AS TO MONEY.

The first time I saw Mr. Wilkinson was in 1862. He took the chair at the Sheffield C.M.S. anniversary meetings, and was then, as always, an admirable chairman. His fine presence, his beautiful voice, his ease and facility of speech, his gracious manner, and, not least, his brevity when speaking from the chair, rendered him almost ideal in that capacity. It may not be out of place to mention that whilst Mr. Wilkinson was evidently profoundly impressed with the great truths of religion, and never for a moment forgot, or allowed others to forget, that he was an ambassador for Christ, he was most cheerful, genial, and charming in society. In this respect he commended Evangelical religion, as the early Evangelicals had done. What Dean Burgon (no lover of Evangelicals) says of Legh Richmond ("Lives of Twelve Good Men," II. 360) might well be said of the subject of this sketch: he was "a very entertaining person, besides being a sincerely pious man." As a very young, inexperienced deputation, it was to me a great encouragement to meet with a man of recognised position in the great town of Sheffield, who gave me kindly words of appreciation, as well as excellent advice as to the kind of sermons and speeches people really want from those who represent great societies in the pulpit and on the platform.

It was in 1866, after fifteen years of faithful work in Sheffield, that the important living of St. Martin's, Birmingham, was given to Mr. Wilkinson. He succeeded a man of great power, Dr. Miller. No two men could well be more unlike each other. Dr. Miller was a born controversialist. He had the fighting instinct. Mr. Wilkinson, on the contrary, detested controversy, though well when he thought it needful. His first work, after he had gained the confidence of Birmingham people, was to rebuild St. Martin's Church. This meant a big effort. The old church had to be pulled down and an entirely new one erected, at a cost of many thousand pounds. The work was splendidly carried out under the skilful guidance of the architect, Mr. C. A. Chatwin.

ABLE TO GIVE SHREWD BLOWS

Like other churches built by Mr. Chatwin, and unlike many churches erected by other architects, St. Martin's is admirable for sound. It can, at a push, accommodate well on to 2,000 persons, and yet any man with a clear voice can be heard in its remotest corners. As a proof of the kindly feeling the new Rector had won in Birmingham, it may be mentioned that on the last day of the octave of services held at the opening of St. Martin's, when the Rector himself preached, the collection amounted to £1,000. A very large amount of the needed money was collected by Dr. Wilkinson personally.

He took his B.D. and D.D. degrees at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1866, and even after he became an Hon. Canon of Worcester Cathedral, in 1871 (appointed thereto by Bishop Philpot), he was affectionately known as "the Doctor" rather than as "the Canon."

For many years Canon Wilkinson was one of the Hon. Secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Birmingham. He delighted in work which brought him into friendly, and at the same time useful, COMPANIONSHIP WITH NONCONFORMISTS.

The first School Board Election in Birmingham was a time of somewhat fierce feeling. Canon Wilkinson was elected a member of that Board, and it says much for his genuinely Christian character that, though he gave and received many a hard blow during the previous contest, and whilst a member of the Board, he yet lived in friendly intercourse with his opponents.

Of late years the Rector took hardly any part in School Board contests. He was always a warm friend of Scriptural teaching in elementary schools, but he had an increasing dislike of controversy. Until very nearly the close of his long clerical career, he preached twice, and often three times, every Sunday.

He was in much request as a preacher, as a speaker at parochial meetings, and at clerical gatherings.

HIS SERMONS

were of the type most in vogue during his early ministry. They never failed to set forth ruin by the fall, recovery through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ, regeneration by the power of the Holy Spirit. In his treatment of younger clergy he was peculiarly happy. By the members of his own congregation he was much beloved, and it is safe to say that there was no more popular man in Birmingham, with members of all parties, than the Rector. It is a pity that he had a rooted distaste to the use of the pen, so that there are no sermons from which quotations can be given, or other written remains to give permanent value to his public utterances.

A man of cultivated mind and kindly spirit, conscientious in the discharge of duty, a devoted adherent of the church of which he was an ordained minister, large-hearted and liberal in his appreciation of those who differed from him, Canon Wilkinson, during a ministry of well-nigh sixty years, won the affection of many friends, was a power for good to many souls, and at length, at the advanced age of eighty-three years, entered into rest, fully relying on the all-prevailing merits of the Redeemer.

Soldiers' Home, Dover.

THE work of the Soldiers' Home, which has been carried on for twenty years amongst the large number of soldiers stationed at Dover, still shows signs of the Master's blessing. The men gather together almost nightly for prayer and the study of God's Word. There is an earnest band of Christian soldiers now in Dover, whose influence cannot fail to be felt by their comrades.

There have been several interesting cases of conversion, showing God is answering prayer and owning his Word. One young man of good social position, who had left his home, and, unknown to his parents, had enlisted in the militia, became a changed man in consequence of visits to the Home, and is now reconciled to his friends.

When the torpedo flotilla visits Dover the blue jackets are welcomed to the Home, and they have expressed a deep sense of gratitude for the comfort and help received during their stay.

The work is one which tends to make the lives of our soldiers and sailors brighter and better. Owing to unavoidable and unexpected expenses the Home is greatly in need of funds. The treasurer is Major Elverson, 12, Victoria Park, Dover

(1052)

Open-Air Work in Ireland.

THOSE who know what Ireland was, so far as the open-air preaching of the Gospel is concerned, only a few years ago, will rise with wonder and thankfulness from the perusal of the Report for last year. Who would have believed that the work, begun in four towns so recently as 1893, would have extended to thirty-three in 1898? that the immense mobs, who assailed the preachers with stones and showers of mud five years ago, should now have subsided into perfectly quiet and attentive listeners?

Take this one fact: "It was no uncommon thing, in 1898, for Nationalist bands to cease playing when passing the preachers, so as not to disturb them." Contrast this with the howls, shrieks, and curses of a few years before! Equally gratifying results attend the work of the itinerant preachers of the Irish Church Missions Society in the fairs and markets (200 fairs in 1898), and of many other witnesses for Christ in various parts of the land, in towns, cities, and villages.

My object now is to express my astonishment that the income of the Open-air Mission is only about £400 a year. Is this all that England can give to such a work? Are we still, most of us, doubtful whether any good thing can come out of Ireland? To me it seems as if the prison doors had been thrown wide open everywhere, and the Angel of the Covenant had given the command, "Go, stand, and preach to the people all over Ireland all the words of this life." But wisdom and tact are necessary, and above all the fulness of the Spirit. I have no wish to see a number of excited and inexperienced holiday-makers engaging in this work. Let any, who feel their hearts stirred to take it up, seek instruction and guidance from experienced workers, such as those whose names they will find in the Report, or they may do much mischief.

I have no official connection with the Society, but cannot forbear calling attention to its great importance, and wishing it increased support. The Report can be got from the hon. secretary, Capt. R. W. Thompson, J.P., 13, D'Olier Street, Dublin. What I have said will give but little idea of the interest to be found in its pages.—Yours obediently,

F. T. Haig (Major-General).

South Nutfield, Surrey.

Be Generous.

Give God the whole!—no paltry thing retain
Out of his gifts to thee.
Give up thy treasures!—'tis our sweet gain,
Losing the boons we see,
Christ's creditors to be!

Love Him the while!—and smiling bid Him take
All causes of thy pride.
Off'ring the sacrifice for his dear sake,
Jesus, whom all denied,
Who for each sinner died.

M. Hampden.

Clifton Conference is announced to be held on October 3, 4, and 5, at Victoria Rooms. The meeting hours are to be 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., the three subjects being:—The Lord's Witnesses; their Testimony of the Truth; and their Lord's Present and Future Approval. It is proposed to devote the last evening to the Conference sermon and the observance of the Lord's Supper.

From Needy Southwark.

THE ancient Baptist church, meeting in the Borough Road Chapel, Southwark, have been re-organizing their work, and henceforth the cause will be known as the "Borough Baptist Mission." The circumstances of the neighbourhood call for this.

Rev. E. Poole-Connor, pastor, writes to us:—"Sin, and want, and debasement meet us on every hand. Here are lodging-houses, where degraded men who were once statesmen, clergymen, lawyers, and doctors, creep and herd. Here are taverns, gambling hells, and other places where bodies are ruined and souls are lost. And here, too, are respectable working classes, who, with excellent traits, are yet utterly indifferent to the Gospel.

"Efforts upon ordinary church lines are not suited for the evangelization of the district. Long ago our Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist brethren saw this, and their mission churches are doing excellent service. We have therefore determined to make our premises—the freehold of which, by the mercy of God, has been recently purchased—a centre for definite Gospel work, upon, as far as we understand, a Scriptural basis. We have secured the services of some of the best living evangelists, such as the Weaver Brothers, Messrs. E. P. Telford, Charles Inglis, and J. S. Harrison; and we hope to secure sisters to tread in the steps of our deaconess, whose ministrations to body and soul are a daily benediction.

"We are earnestly planning and praying over a Gospel compaign during the coming autumn and winter; and I would seek the intercession and sympathy of readers of The Christian. We shall gladly welcome workers to our midst; and should any of the Lord's stewards entrust us with money, it shall be expended as in His sight."

Missions to Hop-pickers.

FOR several years, worthy brethren have traversed the hop-districts of Worcestershire, scattering the good seed of the Kingdom. We thank God for their earnest efforts, which have, in many instances, borne abundant fruit. Mr. John Burnham writes:—

"It has been felt that organized and centralised effort was needed, after the pattern of hop-pickers' missions in Kent and Hants. In response to a request we opened a centre in Tenbury five years ago, working it as a branch of the Kent mission. So much interest has gathered around this work, that we feel the time has come for a 'Forward Movement.'

"With the full consent of Rev. J. J. Kendon, president of the Kent mission, we are now taking over the Tenbury branch as a nucleus of the new mission; opening another centre nearer Evesham; and a third near Bromyard, if support is forthcoming to justify the step. We have determined to work on Gospel Temperance lines.

"We propose to visit the hop yards daily and the camps each evening for al fresco services, song and chat with the children, and now and then a lantern Gospel service. We shall also seek opportunity to bear our testimony for Christ in the villages." Communications (also parcels of Gospel books) may be addressed to Mr. Burnham, at Fern Bank, Brentford.

The members of the Hereford and District Evangelistic Associations have for the past five years held meetings among the hop-pickers of Herefordshire. Large numbers have gathered to hear, and quantities of tracts have been distributed. The work is to be continued this year. Financial help is asked for, also Gospel books. Communications may be addressed Mr. E. Pritchett Brown, Y.M.C.A., Widemarsh Street, Hereford.

Workers of the London City Mission will again visit the hopfields of Kent, Hampshire and Worcestershire during the season which is just commencing. They find this an excellent opportunity for getting into touch with some of the poorest and most neglected classes.

London City Mission.—A special interest attaches to the work in Hoxton, because it was here that in 1835 David Nasmith, with two friends, founded the Society which has succeeded so well that increased accommodation has had to be sought. Accordingly, a new hall has just been taken possession of. A meeting held last week, in which friends representing nearly every section of the Christian Church participated, helped to stimulate the work, in addition to reducing the debt which rests on the new premises.

Letter from Rev. F. B. Meyer.

S.S. Campania.

IT is an ideal morning on the broad Atlantic; and it has been, and promises to be, an ideal voyage. Few passengers have come on deck, and my heart is at leisure to look up, and back, and on. Up to Him who sitteth on the floods for evermore, and the saints that stand victorious on the margin of the sea of glass; back to the true and devoted friends, to whose prayers I owe an untold obligation; and on to the work awaiting me; also to the future, beyond and yet beyond, as there are numberless circles of new horizon, beyond that far-away rim where sky and sea are meeting.

The ocean is spread out like a sea of glass; so perfectly smooth that it seems a wanton sacrilege to cleave it with the prow of this mighty vessel, as, beneath the propulsion of her marvellous engines, she turns the water right and left, as a plough-share the loamy soil. There is no sign of life. Whatever there may be below—and sometimes a porpoise rolls for a moment or two in sight—there is no living thing within view. But just sheets on sheets of silver water, as if rolled out under a celestial cylinder drawn by angel strength. The sky is light blue, and even the clouds seem asleep, or it may be they are filling their cisterns for SERVICE TO DROUGHT-SMITTEN LANDS.

The mind is rested by such scenes—and the heart. The noise and shape of the great world, the murmur of many voices, the rivalry and strife of religious controversy, the fever of ambition and pride, the buff telegraph envelope, the postman's knock, the appeal of need—are all far away; and this must surely be a tabernacle, such as David speaks of, where God shelters his children from the strife of tongues and the pit of noise. How miserable do the aims appear that dazzle and fascinate us! How unworthy any object to engage a redeemed soul, but the pure service of God, to be what He desires, speak what He indites, do what He commands! How befitting to fall down before Him in absolute silence and humility, crying "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord God Almighty: heaven and earth are full of thy glory!" "What is man that Thou art mindful of him; or the son of man that Thou visitest him!" But Thou art mindful, and Thou dost visit!

It was a great pleasure to take the morning service on Sunday; and, in addition to the reading of the prayers, to preach to a great audience which filled the saloon. In the evening I went aft, and had an open-air service for the steerage passengers, who crowded around, listening attentively, and joining in the hymns. If only I had not needed the rest, how much might have been done! There are several godly people on board—large numbers of Americans—with whom offer. A voyage is indeed full of opportunities of intercourse with people whom one would never otherwise encounter. Last night I presided at the usual entertainment on behalf of the widows and orphans of sailors. It was of a high-class, and £50 was raised for this good object. Mr. Zangwill greatly contributed to the enjoyment by his strange stories of Jewish beggars.

OPPORTUNITIES OF CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

To be gliding thus over the waters, with so little motion, reminds one how quickly life glides through the years to its end. After a few hours we shall see the coast-line and the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbour. Within a few years the measure of our days will be fulfilled, and the ship will be in port. There is less and less satisfaction in reviewing the past. What is there to show, when judged by God's standard of motive and intention, but a few handfuls of withered leaves? If it were not for the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, what hope could we have of being accepted at last, or of any service outweighing the sins, and failures, and mistakes of past days?

God give us (my wife is with me) as good a voyage back, leaving U.S.A. on August 19; and may calm seas and clear skies be the portion of all whom I address, to the Port of Heaven.

F. B. MEYER.

Letters to the Editor.

A New Form of Evil.

SIR,—Will you permit me to call the attention of your readers to a new form of evil which has sprung up, especially at seaside resorts. I allude to the exhibition of indecent and demoralizing pictures, by means of penny-in-the-slot machines.

I have had several communications on the subject from Rhyl, Southport, Blackpool, and other places; and I put a question to the Home Secretary on the subject; but, in his reply, he doubted whether criminal prosecutions could be sustained.

It is, unhappily, true that it is difficult to get convictions against the scoundrels who trade upon the worst passions of mankind, unless the offence is so glaring that it cannot be passed over. In many cases, however, the local authorities can suppress these disgusting exhibitions, as they are often held on land belonging to the community; and this has been done at Rhyl, owing to the courage of a local paper which boldly denounced the abuse.

Many houses, also, have been taken in London at which demoralizing pictures are exhibited. I earnestly hope that means will be found to stay this new plague, which has been the ruin of France, and will equally ruin the youth of this country if it cannot be stopped. Hoping you will raise your voice against this new eruption of evil, I remain, yours faithfully, SAMUEL SMITH.

Thoughts for Churchmen.

SIR,—One branch of Church Reform, viz., a lay ministry and perpetual diaconate in the Established Church, has been advocated by me for many years. But, though I have not modified my view, based upon the Methodist and Scotch Presbyterian systems, I think it necessary to-day to add a caution. Of late, it has become one of the proposals of sacerdotalism, so as to justify "a sacrificing priesthood," to confine its ministry to the so-called Seven Sacraments. Sacerdotalism would have the laity preach and conduct the ordinary church services as secondary matters, reserving to the priesthood what are designated as the chief priestly functions of the sacraments. Caution is needed.

As to "Baptismal Regeneration," negatively advanced by the Bishop of Norwich, it is important to note two facts. When the late Dr. Pusey launched his scheme known as the Catholic Revival, the first active aggression took the form of teaching "Baptismal Regeneration." This naturally developed the theory that unbaptized persons, adult and infant, were outside the pale of salvation. During the last quarter of a century, this teaching has spread very much. And I regret to say that not a few of the section known as neo-Evangelicals both hold and teach this doctrine at the present time. Many of the manuals, Sunday school lessons, and other Church literature take this view of baptism for granted. It is a form of teaching which the older Evangelicals, known as Protestant Churchmen, could never accept, and which is heartily repudiated as unscriptural and sacerdotal by, Yours faithfully,

A PROTESTANT CHURCHMAN.

The International Sunday School Union. Mr. T. F. Wurts, formerly of the American Sunday-School Union, is prepared to send to newspapers, free of charge, sketches of the International Sunday School Lesson, providing they are not used for Sunday editions. The lesson matter is good "copy" for many a provincial paper, and likely to be a help to both teachers and scholars in Sabbath schools. Address 5,219, Morris Street, G., Philadelphia, Pa., U.S.A.

"God, my Exceeding Joy."—This is the title of a little book containing the diary of the late Miss Jean McLean. Those who knew her have been eagerly looking for the publication of this book, and will be glad to know that it is now receiving its finishing touches. It will help to preserve the fragrancy of a sweet and beautiful life among her friends, and be a source of encouragement and inspiration to others not blessed by her acquaintance. The book is 100 pages larger than was at first anticipated. The price will be from 1s. 6d. to 3s. 6d., according to binding. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

International S.S. Lessons.

August 27, 1899.

RETURNING FROM CAPTIVITY.

EZRA i. 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ps. cxxvi. 3.

LESSON CONNECTION.

THE time for the great event to which the exiled Israelites had looked forward for seventy years had come. They had for ever renounced idolatry, and had learned to value their Sabbaths. Read 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 21, and note that v. 22 and 23 are just the same as Ezra i. 1, 2. Ps. cxxxvii. describes what the people felt in captivity. Ps. cxxvi. gives their feelings when they were told that they might return. There had been three eras of captivity. First, when Daniel and his friends were carried away (Dan. i. 1-6). Seventy years from this brings us to our present lesson. Second, when Nebuchadnezzar sent the treasures from the palace and temple to Babylon, and Ezekiel went with 10,000 captives. Third, when, after a year and a half's siege, Jerusalem was entirely destroyed. Seventy years from this saw the completion of the new temple. There were also three eras of return. Our lesson is the first.

EZRA

was a Jewish scribe, a Levite, descended from Aaron, and lived nearly eighty years after the return to Jerusalem. Jewish tradition says he was the founder of the Great Synagogue. He collected together the books of the Bible, and was famous for his knowledge of the law and his obedience to it (Ezra vii. 1-10).

THE BOOKS OF EZRA

and Nehemiah were originally one book, containing the history of more than 100 years, partly written by Ezra and Nehemiah, in two different languages. The first six chapters of Ezra seem to be compiled before Ezra's appearance in history. Between chap. vi. and vii. there intervene about fifty-eight years. Chapters vii.-xi. are Ezra's own reminiscences.

CYRUS

was originally King of Anzam, or Elam, in the east of Chaldea. He conquered Media, Persia, and Babylonia, and the greater part of Asia Minor. Daniel was living, and held a high position at court (Dan. i. 21; vi. 28; x. 1), and it is most probable that he pointed out to Cyrus the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah concerning him (Isa. xliv. 26-28; xlv. 1; Jer. xxv. 12; xxix. 10), and then God put it into his heart to fulfil his will. Cyrus was a wise and politic monarch, and no great conqueror ever left a fairer fame than did Cyrus the Great (Isa. xlv. 13).

EXPLANATORY.

Verse 1. God's prophecies are always fulfilled, and He, by his Holy Spirit, influences whom He will for their fulfilment. Point out on the map how near Egypt was to the great Persian Empire. It would be greatly to the advantage of Cyrus to have a fortress in Palestine.

Verse 2. "Jehovah." Cyrus seems, in each country that he conquered, to have restored the worship of the god of that place; the writings on the ancient monuments and cylinders teach us this. But the words in this verse and verse 3 lead us to hope that he became a true servant of Jehovah, as far as he knew how.

Verse 3. The return was to be a voluntary act; no one was compelled to go, and many who had always lived in Babylon would not care to break up their homes.

Verse 4. Those who would not go were to give. It is the same in the Christian Church: there is a part for each to take. Two funds were needed, one for rebuilding the temple, and one for the expenses of the journey.

Verses 5, 6. The return was headed by Zerubbabel, a prince of the house of David (ch. ii. 1). Note that those only can work for God who have his Spirit in their hearts; also God only accepts willing offerings.

Verses 7, 11. Cyrus and his people all helped, and he restored to God what Nebuchadnezzar had stolen and Belshazzar had defiled. God had used Nebuchadnezzar to take care of all these precious things.

PICTURE

the great caravan starting from the gates of Babylon, about 50,000, with an escort of 1,000 cavalry, a mounted band of music, 200 minstrel slaves, 128 singers, 435 camels, 736 horses, 6,965 beasts of burden, to carry the women and children, and the treasures, &c. OH, WHAT JOY! and there is joy in the presence of God TO-DAY, over each sinner who repents and is returning (Luke xv. 10).

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

Spiritual Conflict.

By Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY.

"Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."—Gen. xxxii. 24.

"THERE wrestled a man with him." That man was God; for Jacob says, "I have seen God face to face." That is the first kind of wrestling—God wrestling with a man, to break him to pieces, to strain him in every nerve and sinew, to crush him up altogether. In Australia, when we get auriferous quartz, we put it under pounders in order to reduce it to dust and get out the gold. God takes us in nature's strength and crushes us to bits, not to get the gold out, but to put the gold in. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou will not despise." The High and Holy One dwells in him that is of a broken and contrite spirit. So, the first kind of wrestling is God wrestling with man to reduce him to nothingness. There is a stage beyond the hymn, "Oh, to be nothing!" That is a sigh and a cry; but the fact is, I am nothing.

Now look at Isa. xli. 14: "Fear not, thou worm Jacob." There you are, a heap of broken bones, and strained muscles, nerves, and sinews; and all the brightness is out of you because He has thrown you. "Fear not, I will take thy right hand." God stoops, as He afterward stooped to lift up John when he had fallen down as dead. He will take thy right hand, and will begin a new creation. He will make you a new, sharp, threshing instrument, so that you shall thresh the mountains and beat them small as chaff. In Eph. vi., that little Apostle Paul says,

"WE WRESTLE."

You, Paul? With what are you going to wrestle? "I am wrestling with principalities and powers, with world-rulers of this darkness, and with hosts of wicked spirits." There are principalities and powers round about God, Jesus, the throne. While God has principalities and powers, the great wings of his mighty heavenly army, the devil wants to display his array. Look at the words "principalities and powers;" then see how the devil calls up new orders—first world-rulers, then hosts of wicked spirits. They are there; for, in chap. vi. 12, it is said that we wrestle with these principalities, and powers, and world-rulers, and hosts of wicked spirits in heavenly places.

Now, the question is, What are we to do? We want to get among those angels, we want to be near the throne, we want to become possessed of all spiritual blessings practically, and we want to be with Jesus for ever and ever. What can we do? It seems as if a great river flows between. But what does this Book say? According to the theory which we heard so helpfully put forward just now, there is really no river between; because God hath raised us up together with Christ, and hath made us sit together with Christ in heavenly places.

I want to get over to the practical part of my subject, and I continue

THE EMBLEM OF THE STREAM.

There is Jesus, there is the glory; and you are here. You have a right to Jesus, and a right to the blessings; but you are not in the enjoyment of your rights and privileges. Jesus has purchased those privileges for us, and they are ours, just as much as they are his, in the purpose of God.

As you stand on the bank of the river I would examine you, my brother. What is hindering the blessing? Are you in a fit state as regards your personal life, and your domestic life, and your public life, and your life as a Church member and citizen?—are you in a fit state to go in for your inheritance and to receive it all over from God, as a blessed, holy, pure saint of his? I want to ask you this, Are you perfectly right in your dealings with God's Book? Do you take time to get the words of God into your heart? Do you love to be in the presence of God more than you like to be in the blankets? Do you rise early? Do you deny yourself?

DO YOU TAKE TIME

to be holy? God does not come into a person simply because he gets down on his knees and up again. The sort of man that God likes is he who finds it hard to get off his knees, because he is tied and bound by the Divine presence. He is in love with God, enchanted with God; and when he is in the Divine presence, it is only the call of duty that takes him away. I want to know whether, when you come downstairs, you get what the Old Testament Christians had, if I may so call them, in Deut. vi.—God's Word in the heart? Do you also teach that Word diligently to your children (v. 7)? I am afraid it is not so in most cases. It is done once a week, and sometimes by deputy; but you are to do it, my brother!

What about your ecclesiastical and political life? Have you asperities and bitternesses? and do you write hard things, and think hard things? I say, cleanse yourself if you want to inherit the heavenly blessings that are yours by right and by inheritance. And ask yourself about your purse. I do not care a straw what your income is. Even if you have £10,000 a year, I ask, are you keeping yourself poor? Is your soul blind and dead to your own wealth and position, that you may have eyes for the poor souls who are going over into hell, as the waters of Lake Erie tumble over the falls of Niagara? Are you eager and, in a holy way, excited and athirst about souls? and can the angels see the mark on your forehead, as among those who sigh and cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst of the city?

Further, I want to say this: as soon as you have

PUT YOUR LIFE RIGHT,

as soon as you have the passion to become possessed of Christ in his fulness, with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, and to get over there to have your home and dwelling-place with God Himself, the minute you take the plunge into this river, and stretch out your hands to swim, the devil marks you as an enemy to his kingdom and empire worthy of his steel; and he will be upon you with terrific force. He will meet you half way across the stream. You may look at it as if there were a little island there. You are determined to get Christ and his fulness, to get all spiritual blessings, to be no longer a sham going about asking people, "Do you think I really have the baptism of the Holy Ghost?" propping up the horrible fraud of your life by the flattering things which people think or write of you. Let us have done with that, and let us strip ourselves as a man strips who, with both hands empty, plunges into the dangerous tide, because he is determined to get the prize on the other side.

The devil will meet you, take you, try to break you. But what doth the Scripture say? "Ye are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you; and ye have overcome the wicked one." It is not only the wicked one with whom we have to contend, but, as Paul says, it is the WICKED ONES, HOSTS OF THEM!

You may think that you have overcome the devil on one point, and that he has gone off to torment and try some one else; but perhaps you may have another devil upon some other point.

An Indian officer loved and married a grand English girl. He brought her to India, and was proud of her in every respect, physically, intellectually, and morally. But there was one thing that caused him continual pain and vexation as a soldier—namely, her timidity as to insect and reptile life in that distant land. He determined to cure her of this, after trying in vain to do so by speech and argument. One day he met with and killed a python, decided to try an experiment, and laid the dead thing across the entrance to his dressing-room. At dinner he asked his wife to get something for him from the dressing-room; and, when she had disappeared, he thought to himself, now she will make a great outcry about a dead serpent. Apparently, she did not see the reptile, for he heard only a faint sound, then another fainter still; and, at last, there was no sound, and no wife returning. Becoming uneasy and alarmed at her long absence, he went to the dressing-room, crossed the dead python, which, by some means, had escaped his wife's notice; but saw her standing in the apartment wrapped round by another serpent! It was the mate of the python, come to look for its dead companion.

O beloved friends, we may go from Keswick having slain one form of sin, only to be overcome of another. We go and powers; with world-rulers and hosts of wicked spirits, that come against us again and again. We need to put on the whole armour of God, to be filled with the Spirit, to be expert in handling that sword which, in the hands of Jesus, once slashed Satan to the quick. Well does the devil remember that wound, and he will tremble when we use the same weapon. Seek to be expert in the use of the sword of the Spirit, and the devil shall flee before you, as he did before Jesus Christ, and as darkness flees before the sun.

TO BATTLE WITH PRINCIPALITIES

Increasing in Strength.

By Rev. S. A. SELWYN.

"Saul increased the more in strength."—Acts ix. 22.

TO-DAY I have a few words specially intended for the many who yesterday, I am certain, made a very real and definite consecration or reconsecration of themselves to God, both here and at the neighbouring Pavilion. The one thing that consecrated souls long for, is that they may become more Christlike; and we have in this chapter a few points showing us how St. Paul—whose name, at this time in his story, was Saul—increased in strength.

When God regenerates a soul, He does not bring that one immediately into ripeness, any more than, in the realm of Nature, He causes the harvest to come about at once. We will look for awhile at the picture, in the chapter before us, of Saul laid by Christ's wondrous power—dazed, blind, and astonished—like a broken vessel at the Master's feet. This is where we first meet with him, immediately after his conversion.

Look at the end of his spiritual life here on earth (2 Tim. iv.), and you have the brave, strong, inspiring words that he wrote to his dear friend and co-worker, Timothy: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day. And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

What was it that brought about this great, deep growth in grace? There were various things which I will mention, because there is not a single help that Paul had to bring about this wonderful, deep growth in grace, which cannot be yours to-day. We find in verse 6,

OBEDIENCE.

Think what had happened. Saul had fallen upon the ground, blind, astonished, and, in a spiritual sense, broken at the Master's feet. The Lord met with him and asked, "Why persecutest thou Me? And he said, Who art Thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest; it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" There was his conversion; and here is his succeeding obedience: "The Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do . . . And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink."

Saul's nervous system must have had a terrible shock. He had lost his sight, his prejudice and pride had been broken down, so that he was glad to be taken by the hand and led into that very city where he was going to work havoc against the Master and his cause. Here was his obedience; and, dear friends, if you and I are to have the fire kept burning upon the altars of our hearts, there must be the most complete obedience within our knowledge.

Do you remember that passage in Lev. vi. 12, where we are told how the fire was to be kept burning upon the altar? The priest had a special command to put fresh fuel upon the altar every morning of his life; and then would the Lord see to it that the fire was kept burning. It is so upon the heart-altar to-day. Some of us, if not all, have been

FRESHLY LIGHTED UP.

The fire has come and is burning now upon the altars of our hearts. The one thing we are thinking about now is, How will it be a week hence, or longer? When we get home to our work, will the fire be burning as brightly then as now? The devil comes to us and says, "No, how can it be so?" Dear friends, there is every possibility for us so to walk with God, and so so obey Him, that the fire shall blaze brighter and brighter as life goes on, and as ministering service proceeds. We have to see to it that the altar be supplied with fresh fuel, and the Lord will see after the fire.

What is our fuel to be? The priest had to put upon the altar, wood, which begins with the letter w. Is there not some fuel, beginning with the same letter, which we do well to put upon our heart-altars to make the fire burn? There is—it is God's Word, read and studied; and that must be a much more definite and methodical study than heretofore. Then, there is God's will to be readily and gladly done day by day. We have also to be his witnesses; and the more we witness for Him, so much the more shall the fire burn upon the heart-altar. Let us see to it, then, that there be the most complete obedience up to the light that we possess; and the Lord will see that, like Saul, we grow in spiritual power.

There was something more that Saul did. "And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus; for,

BEHOLD, HE PRAYETH."

Had he never prayed before? He had made prayers, standing at the street corner, so that every man who passed by might see him; for, had he not been a Pharisee of the Pharisees? Now, however, it was the Lord's testimony that he prayed; and that is a very different matter.

With some of us there may have been a great deal of formal, indefinite prayer, something like a long dream, or a long, weary succession of words fastened one to another; but words are not necessarily prayer. Henceforth let us be more methodical, definite, and expectant in regard to our prayers. Let us get a real prayer-book; that is to say, a book without a word in it, that we may put down subjects of prayer for every day in the week, taking care to leave a blank page opposite for recording fulfilment of the answers we expect. Then shall you realize that the Lord constantly puts fresh fire upon the heart-altar, making it blaze forth as you seek to do his will in the matter of prayer.

You remember the words of John xvi. 23, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you." The secret of that verse is "in my name." A wife may come to the bank in her husband's name, and by arrangement may sign his name upon cheques in order to receive the money she needs; and, in other matters and various relationships, like action may be made available. See to it, then, that the words "in my name" are right and true in your experience, and you shall realize the rest of the verse for yourself.

I have little time for other points, but must mention them. There was, with St. Paul, a public confession of Christ. For most of us, the demand may not take the same form as in Paul's case; but by lip, by life, by letter or otherwise, there must be the confession that God has given you the greatest blessing you ever had in your life, and that you are determined, come what may, to walk with Him and to be his servant for ever. Let us see to it that is real, true, faithful and humble. Many ministers who have been at these meetings go straight to their pulpits and tell what a blessing they have had. They may get a few curious glances from various eyes in the congregation; but what of that? If these ministers are the means of bringing a Pentecostal blessing to their people, who will care what some may say, so long as our brothers are faithful in their testimony?

OUR TESTIMONY

Follow St. Paul, too, in this, "Straightway he preached Christ." In the very place where he was going to do all he could to upset Christ's cause, he went to work to build it up. For this he had been specially equipped, filled by the Holy Ghost as well as converted; and, being equipped for the Master's work, he immediately went and did it. Send in your name quickly to some one—to clergyman, pastor, Sunday-school superintendent, or missionary society. The whole world is waiting to-day for freshly-baptized and Pentecostal Christians. There are many souls looking out for your help, for your bright word of testimony, for your bright, changed, happy life. See to it that you do not refuse, should the Master call you into the mission field, as He may this very day. Thus—God grant it!—you will be strengthened, you will grow in grace every day, and you will find the fire kept brightly burning upon the altar of your heart.

After the Convention.

SOLDIERS IN EGYPT AND THE SOUDAN.

A very earnest and representative audience crowded the Lecture Hall on the Monday evening following the Convention. When Christians are brought into right relationship with the Lord, their interest in the work of saving souls seems to be not only wonderfully quickened, but also to take on a beautiful new garb of reality. There was certainly nothing formal or perfunctory in this meeting. Rev. J. J. Luce presided, and in a few opening remarks said he doubted if any one present could be more warmly interested than himself in the work of the Lord among soldiers, seeing he himself owed his conversion, thirty-four years ago, to a young officer.

Mrs. Lawrence spoke of Alexandria, and of the work carried on by her husband and herself and their fellow-helpers in the Soldiers' Institute there. God has greatly encouraged his servants, and there is urgent need for increased accommodation, involving an outlay of £1,500, and also for a lady worker. Captain Gamble followed with a striking testimony to the good results which he himself had seen of the work carried on in Soldiers' Homes. He had observed the blessing which these places had been to men when they were in barracks, and also when they were on the field of battle. He could wish that wherever there was a depôt there could also be a Soldiers' Home to counteract the evil influences by which our soldiers were surrounded the moment they got out of barracks. He earnestly pleaded for help in the behalf of the ladies who were devoting their lives to this work.

Mr. E. H. Thompson, of the Egypt Mission Band, then spoke of the opportunity for work which the Lord had set before his people in Egypt and the Soudan, and Mrs. Todd-Osborne closed with a soul-stirring account of the dealings of the Lord with her in regard to Cairo. In answer to prayer, a large and central building, known formerly as the Alhambra, had been purchased; and would be converted into a Soldiers' Home as soon as the £4,500 still required had been contributed.

Notes by Dr. Newman Hall.

During the impressive conference referred to in my last, we were warned that the hour (9.30) had struck for the "Bible Reading" in the great tent, which was crowded by 2,500 people, many of whom had been waiting half an hour to secure seats. Singing, prayer, and Scripture reading were followed by an earnest address from Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who gave a condensed statement of the doctrinal teaching of what is regarded as the Keswick School. The following digest is from my hasty notes:—

We come together here, hoping to have conscience quickened and the will strengthened. Satan would persuade us that God's promised gifts are too good to be true, and so we neglect them. But there are better things in store than we used to think possible. Let our faith in God accept all He gives, and at once; not content with forgiveness now and deferring all else till we reach the other side.

Some say, "I believe in the forgiveness of sin; but it is presumption to say, I know my sin is pardoned, and joy bestowed." But, inasmuch as Christ said, "He that believeth in Me hath everlasting life," we may know that we already possess it. It is to come to God as sinners for pardon, and at once accept eternal life; and to believe that He is able to keep the soul thus surrendered. Whatever Satan, the world, and self may say, we do believe, and will believe, what God says. "He that saith he abideth in Him, ought to walk even as He walked."

NOT BOLDNESS, BUT MEEKNESS,

If we say this is impossible, though our duty, shall we say that our weakness is greater than God's omnipotence?

May we put off to a distant future what is commanded this very day—"Walk worthy of God unto all pleasing"? "We ought;" i.e., it is God's due and our debt every day to walk as Christ did; and He who paid our debts by dying for us will not allow his servants to run into debt. We have both the command and the promise of perfect holiness. How can this be? "Abide in Him." We were in Christ when He died on the cross. When He rose, we lived in Him, and He in us. "Our life is hid with Christ in God." But we are commanded to "abide" in Him. This word is used eleven times in John xv., and twenty-three times in John's Epistle. We are to pray to be "rooted and built up in Him;" and that we may evermore "dwell in Him, and He in us."

We are one with Christ for safety, and He is one with us for holiness. By abiding in Him, we bear "much fruit." For security, I am in Him; for holiness, He is in me. If, by the Holy Ghost, we enjoy his life, as we open the ducts of our hearts to let Christ be in us, we shall be working as we are trusting,

NOT BY EFFORT, BUT BY RECEPTION,

We may hinder the development by obstructing the flow of the vital stream. There is no drawing of spiritual good from Jesus without our receptivity. We are not to look off to a distance for a blessing, but to Christ living in us.

We should identify ourselves with Christ as He does with us. We should be fully receptive. We speak of ourselves as to become "kings and priests" in the next world. We are so now. As paupers, yet as princes, being possessed by Christ; and then, "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Thus we are to fulfil the command—"Walk as Christ walked." Not in quantity, but in quality. Walk in the Father's love, in the Son's righteousness, in the Holy Spirit's guidance; walk in "the truth," walk in "the light," walk "in faith," walk "in love."

There is a new life to be lived by some of us, of which we as yet know little. There is a salvation in the past, by the cross; a salvation in the future, by glory; but also a salvation in the present—precious secret! Let God possess us fully; as Chrysostom says—"The eye, the tongue, the foot, the hand, the mind, the heart, the life—a sacrifice of first fruits to his glory"

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The King's Messengers.

I EXPECT you all know something about M. Coillard, for in the pages of The Christian, meant for grown-up folk, there have been notices of him from time to time. He is a Frenchman who, since 1878, has been labouring on the behalf of the Barotsi, a savage people living in the upper valley of the Zambesi, the great river which divides South from Central Africa. Dr. Livingstone had made known to us the Barotsi Valley; but the difficulties of the journey there, and its deadly climate, proved serious drawbacks to any attempt either to explore the country or to teach the people about the Lord Jesus.

When M. Coillard first planted his mission there no European Power had claimed the land; but now it is under British protection, so there is special reason why English people should help in the work of bringing the Barotsi to the Lord. It was in order to rouse interest in England in what is going on in this far off land that M. Coillard's book, "On the Threshold of Central Africa," was translated into English. Even quite little children would, I think, be interested in some of the tales he tells us in it. The Barotsi are not a pleasant people. They are cruel, fickle, and often do very wicked deeds. We must remember that they have not had the advantages we have had. Till lately they have never heard of the Saviour, and they have been brought up to lie and steal. But, bad as they are, M. Coillard tells us a story which may well put some of us to shame.

One day, when he was on an expedition up the river Zambesi, Lewanika, the King of the Barotsi, thinking that the French missionary might need, for his journey up the river, a change of oars, sent them in a canoe after him. M. Coillard, who had landed at some distance further up the river, saw the canoe approach. How well the men were rowing! They were straining every muscle, and evidently wished to do their work as well and as quickly as possible. One of the Barotsi standing by M. Coillard exclaimed: "Those are the King's messengers; when he sends us, that is how we row." And so it turned out to be. Are not those poor ignorant Barotsi oarsmen a pattern for us? We have also a King whom we have promised to serve, and He is far greater than King Lewanika. Has He not given to each of us, even the youngest, a work for Him to do?

Perhaps we do not refuse to do the work He gives us, but do we always do it as well and as quickly as we can? Are we known to be the servants of our great King because we are diligent at our lessons, good tempered at play, kind and truthful, each one resembling "the children of a king" (Judges viii. 18)? or are we only supposed to be such because we go to church or belong to a Scripture Union? Our "King's business requires haste" (1 Sam. xxi. 8). God grant that we may not at the Last Great Day be put to shame by the heathen who only now are beginning to call upon his name. Margaret A. Rolleston.

Faith for a Sixpence.

I WAS walking along the streets of London one cold and wet night with a desponding friend, trying to cheer him, and longing to see a spark of hope kindled in his heart. In our walk we arrived at Victoria Station. While talking together a little child stepped forward and said, "Any lights, sir?"

"No, Topsy," I replied, "I don't want any; I don't smoke."

"Oh, but please, sir, do buy a box!" she persisted in a pleading tone.

"No, no; run away, Topsy," I continued; "I have no use for lights."

But still she persisted. At last, seeing her earnestness, I asked her what she did all day, and at what time she was going home, for it was then past ten o'clock.

"Oh," she replied, "I go to school in the day, and after four o'clock I come out here."

"But why do not your father and mother take care you?" I asked.

"Father has run away, and mother is ill in bed."

"And what do you come out here for?"

"I come and stay here till I have taken sixpence."

"But you don't always take sixpence, do you?"

"Yes, I do, sir."

"But you won't get sixpence to-night."

"Yes, I shall, sir."

"Well, how much have you now?"

She seemed inclined not to let me know; but I said, "Come, Topsy, you must tell me all about it." So, half afraid, she drew some coppers from a pocket in her cotton dress, and counted out threepence-halfpenny.

"Well, now, you will never get sixpence to night," I said.

"Oh, yes, sir," she answered, "I shall. I always take home sixpence."

"Now, Topsy, tell me what makes you so sure of getting sixpence."

For some she would not answer, but after a little pressing she said:

"Because, before I come out I kneel down by mother's bed and say the Lord's Prayer; and mother says our Father will help me to get sixpence; and He always does."

"Oh, but I thought you said your father had run away?"

"Don't you know, sir," she simply asked, "that we have a Father in heaven?"

"Yes; but you don't mean to say He hears you about a sixpence?"

"Yes, he does, sir; and He will send me sixpence."

"Well, if I were to give you twopence-halfpenny, what would you do?"

"Why, sir, I should run home to mother, because my Father had given me all I asked for."

It is needless to say that the twopence-halfpenny was speedily produced, and suitably acknowledged by the little one, who merrily tripped home. I turned to my friend, who all this time had stood by without saying a word; our glances met, and my only remark was, "There, H——, you have got your lesson." We forthwith separated—I to my bachelor chambers; he to be led into hope and brightness by the faith of a little child. John Shrimpton.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 189).

1. Say in which verses the appeals given below occur.

2. From the other chapters given, select a verse in similar words to form a response to each of the several appeals, and write it out.

(a) "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters" (Isa lv. Response, John iv.).

(b) "Trust ye in the Lord for ever" (Isa. xxvi. Response, Isa. xii.).

(c) "Let us draw near hither unto God" (1 Sam. xiv. Response, John vi.).

(d) "Seek ye my face" (Psalm xxvii. Also response).

(e) "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Psalm xxii. Response, Heb. xiii.).

(f) "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed" (Psalm xxxi. Response Pro. xxix.).

(g) "Send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me" (Psalm xliii. Response, Psalm lxxxix.).

(h) "Shew me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths" (Psalm xxv. Response, Isa. lviii.).

(Children under ten do any two; under thirteen, any four; under seventeen, any six.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 188).

1. C ai N (Gen. iv. 5).
2. O she A (Num. xiii. 8).
3. R oo T (Rev. v. 5).
4. N abot H (1 Kings xxi. 7).
5. E lish A (2 Kings v. 3).
6. L ebano N
7. I dumæ A (Mark iii. 8).
8. U rban E (Romans xvi. 9).
9. S au L (1 Sam. x. 24).
10. CORNELIUS (Acts x).
11. NATHANAEL (John i. 43-51).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

B—Lilian Butler, Phyllis Boyd, Gertrude Bush, Hannah Bridgman, Esther, Rachael and Leah Blumenthal, Edith Banks, Violet Braun, Esther Bobroff, William Berwick.

C—Isabel Candlin*, Gladys Clark, Mabel, Ida* and Edith Cole, Kitty Cope, Grace Charik, Rodia Constantinides, K. Carey-Brenton, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Oscar, Katie and Philip* Cross, Ida Cullen*, David and John* Colville.

D—Nellie Dowsett*, Dorothy* and Ralph* Daintree, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson.

F—Sarah Finkelstein, Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Kitty Fausset.

G—David Gardiner*, Mary Gover, Kathleen and Irene Gough, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Esther and Rose Goodman, Elizabeth Gercohter.

H—Beatrice Harland, Ella Hake, Willie Hooper, Nellie Hatchett, Ruth Hinder, Betsy Hollk, James Henderson.

J—Thomas Johnson, Betty Jacobs.

K—Max, Stanley and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Gertrude Kramback, Lily and Brada Kinvig.

L—Blanche Lindup, Georgina* and Cecilia* Lichtenstein, Sidney, May, Edward, and Henry Law, Rosie Langton*, Beatrice Lowe, Annie and Mary Levine, Annie Lipschitz.

M—Mabelle Mountstephen*, Dorothy Morgan, Margie Marston, Dorothy McMullin, Hedley Meader.

N—Leah Niels.

P—Alice Palmer, Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Louie Penny, Margherita Perlmann, Ruth Pledger*, Mary Plumb*, Daisy Pym, Winnie Page*, Kathleen Pincott, Evelyn Peters, Laura Pratt, Daisy Phillips, M. and W. M. Penny, Walter Picknell.

R—Alice Reid, Kate Rosenbloom*, Marion Richards*, Maud Rosenberg.

S—Fanny Stileman, Mildred and Gertrude Scott, Hilda Schaeffer, Marjorie and Cicely Sherbrooke, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Eveline Steed*, Ronald Studd, Solomon Stockfish, Douglas Stevens, Edith Shepherd*, Betty Stocks, Lizzie and Dora Simons, Flora Simmons*.

T—Theodora Thorn*, Rebecca and Rachel Tuskinsky, Naomi Torff.

W—George, Annie and Lucy Willis, Joanna and Louise Wolnitzer, William Wheeler, Cecile Wright, Edward Wheeler, Ronald Watson, Robert and Thomas Weddell.

Z—Sophia Zascitsky.

No. 187.—Correct answers have been received from:—

A—William Aston, Mabel Adams, Violet Ashworth.

B—Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Stanley and Gordon Boxer, Phyllis Boyd, Nellie Buck, Ella Borryman, Mabel Birney*, Emily Bridgewater*, Corbet, Lindsay, and Leonard Browne, Robert Brotchie, Esther Bobroff, Esther Blumenthal, Hannah Bridgman, Robert Browne, Catherine Barber, Mary Bryant, Florence Blackman, Charlie Banks, Sylvia, Maud, Dorothy and Evelyn Barrett Susette*, and Mary* Beck, Ashley Bowker, Dorothy Berry, Allen Baker, Avory, Frank, Lilian and Teresa, Blackie, Alan Banks, Eva Browne, Cecil, H. S. and Mabel Bailey, Jas. and Edith Barker, Lilian and Rose Butler, Edith Banks, Violet Braun, Rachel and Leah Blumenthal, Massy Baker.

C—Ida*, Edith, and Mabel Cole, Kitty Cope, Ethel Craigie, Gussie Clark, Jessie*, Walter*, and Maggie* Carter, Gladys Clark, Mabel, Isabel, and Charles Candlin, Daisy R. Clarke, George Crawford Bessie Cheale, George Cary, Mary and George Coward, Dorothy Clarke, Winnie and Arthur Cox, Susie Cumbers, Philip*, Guy, Oscar, and Katie Cross, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Dorothy Cooper, David* and John* Colville Alice Crang, Sophie Cohen, Anna Chanyen, Rodia Constantinides, Grace Charik, Duncan Campbell*.

D—Nellie Dowsett*, Marie Denizot, Pelognia Daws*, Albert Davis, Willie Davies, Mai and Violet Davidson, Ralph and D. Daintree, Stanley Drew*, Ruth Davidson.

E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*, Maud Edday.

F—Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Francis Field, Kitty Fausset, Hyacinthe FitzSimons, Mabel and Vincent Fleet, James and Marian Freegard, Aileen Figgis, Mary and Bessie Freeman, Flossy* and Maggie* Fullarton, Sarah Finkelstein.

G—Tom Garfit, Colin and George Graham-Brown, Edith Grieve*, Kenneth and Constance Gabbett, Jack Gray, Elizabeth Gerechter, Esther Goodman, Irene and Kathleen Gough, Thos. Groombridge, George Graham*, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Ethel*, Alfred* and Mary* Greenacre, Mary*, Effie* and Charles Graham, Stuart, Margaret* and Edith* Gray, Rose Goodman, David Gardiner, Gracie Grout.

H—Georgette Hoffmann, Ruth Hinder, Hetty Hill*, Muriel Hare, Edith and Winifred Harvey, Beatrice Hastings, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Hewer, Dorothy Harris, Beatrice Harland, Violet Holford, Lila Hughes, H. and Helen* Hunter, Lottie K. and Rosetta Hamilton, Jennie Holmes, Ella Hake, Willie Hooper, Eric and Mary Hill, Theodora Hill, Ethel Hutchings*, Edith Holma, Bessie Hope, Freda Hunton, Francie and Florence Hyde.

I—Nellie Irving, Alice Ingberg, Daisy Iredell.

J—Emily Jones, Kate Johns*, Marjorie Jones, Emily Jeynes, Lizzie Johnstone, Betty Jacobs.

K—Lily Kinvig, Grace*, Dorothy* and Philippa* Karr, Eva*, Max and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky.

L—Mary Levine, Rosie Langton, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Blanche Lindup*, Sidney, May, Henry, and Edward Law, Guinefred Leigh, Hannah Lovell, Arthur Llewellyn*, Georgina and Cecilia* Lichtenstein*, Annie Lipschitz, Annie Levine, C. Learmouth.

M—Kathleen Mountfure, Ada Macnutt*, Dorothy McMullin, Leslie Morris, Sydney* and Dorothy* Morgan, Marie Meek, Dorothy and Margaret Morris, Winifred Marshall, Dora Muir, Margie Marston, W. C. Mallinson*, Hedley Meader*, Valerie and Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Olive and Lois Mewburn, Arthur Moir, Hylda Medill, Bella and Abraham Mack, Gwendoline, Evelyn Moir and Howard* Moir, Mildred Morgan, L. R. McGregor, Mabelle Mounstephen*, John MacMurray, Inda McFarland.

N—Amy and Maud Nottage, George Nash, Leah and Dora Niels.

O Maude and Eva Oakes.

P—Louie and W. Penny, Walter, Katie, and Leonard Picknell, Ruth Pledger*, Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Mary Plumb*, Walter Perryman, Laura Pratt, Lilian Pearson*, Dorothy Patten*, M. and Melbourne Perry, Ethel Palmer, Daisy Pym, Kathleen Pincott, Muriel Palmer, Jessie, Winnie, and Ada Palmer, Laura Porey, Ernest Pearce, Daisy, May, and Vera Petrides, Daisy Phillips, Ruth Patient, Hattie*, Evelyn and Mildred Peters, Edith Purkiss, Alice Palmer, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Margherita Perlmann.

R—Lorimer and Rita Romanes, Maud Rosenberg, Aileen and Marjorie Roberts, Marion Richards, Alice Reid, Elmina, Isabel, and Jessie Roe, Nora Read, Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Fanny Stileman, Gwendoline*, Gladys, and Undine Shaw, Douglas Stevens, Eveline Steed*, Mary Sowden, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Kathleen and Elsie Slark, Helen and Dorothy Stalker, Binford Selwood, Bertha Stocker, Constance Scott*, Ivy, Muriel, and Rosetta Sherwin, Philip Southam, Flora Simmons*, Ronald Studd, Evelyn Shaw*, Marie Stuart, Emma* and Frank* Sutton, Violet Salvesen, Herbert Stuart, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Flora Shadbolt, Minnie, Bessie, and Edith Shepherd, Betty Stocks*, John Smith, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Amy Stileman*, Nannie Sturrock, Solomon Stockfish, Lizzie Simons, Bessie Symes*.

T—Olive Taylor*, Frank Tomkins, Rachel Tuskinsky, Naomi Torff, Olive Tritton, Frank Thompson, Marjorie Tracey.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Kenneth Vining, May Vickers.

W—Leonard Wild, Connie Wood*, Queenie, Ernest, and Kenrick Wakeford, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Sarah and Georgina Wilson, Fred and Helen Webb, Pringle Wilson, Annie and Sarah Wood, Lucy Willis, Dorothy White, Florence Wild, Leonard Wall, William Wheeler*, F. Wilson, Mary Ware, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Charles Wingrave, Ronald Watson, Louisa Walker*, Joanna and Louise Wolnitzer, Ellie and Nora Wyatt, Madge Wilson.

Z—Sophia Zascitsky.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 181.—Cuckoo and Minnie Lister, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 183.—Frank* and Vera Sjöström (U.S.A.), Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada). No. 184.—Vera* and Frank* Sjöström. No. 186.—Daisy and Alice Pullen (Italy).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received this week. Also for a box of lavender.

Mary Sowden.—I am glad to know that you enjoyed the Acrostic Searcher, but you must give chapter and verse for the names.

Brada Kinvig, Thomas Wood, Edith Hill.—It is a pleasure to welcome you as new "Searchers." I hope the study will be interesting and a blessing to you.

Mary Ware.—Many happy returns of your birthday. It was kind of you to call your friend's attention to what you are enjoying yourself so much. I hope she will be a diligent "Searcher."

Ragged School Union Holiday Homes... ... ... 0 3 6

Uncle Tom.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending August 26.

Sun., August 20	Mark vii. 24-37		Thurs., Aug. 24	Mark ix.	1-13
Mon., „ 21	„ viii. 1-13		Fri., „ 25	„ ix.	14-32
Tues., „ 22	„ viii. 14-26		Sat., „ 26	„ ix.	33-50
Wed., „ 23	„ viii. 27-38

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. F. A. Glover and Mr. Macfarlane, with caravan and tent, Thorn St. Margaret, near Wellington, Som., to Aug. 21; Over Stowey, near Bridgwater, from Aug. 23; also at Wellington, to Sept. 5, caravan at Framlingham; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Partridge Green, West Grinstead, to Aug. 25; Mr. F. P. Rowe, with caravan, Black Notley, near Braintree, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Hasband Crawley, Bedfordshire; Messrs. Drake and Charante, with caravan, Marsh Green, near Edenbridge.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith Bournemouth. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, to Aug. 31, Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Lt.-Col. Drn Drury, Bude, N. Cornwall. Rev. W. H. Brealey, Cleveden. Mr. J. R.

Naylor, Colwyn Bay, to Aug. 29. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal, to Aug. 31. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe, to Sept. 3. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Mr. Phillips Welch, Folkestone, to Aug. 21. Mr. G. O. Taylor, Gorleston. Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton, to Sept. 1. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Russell J. Hill, Llanfairfechan, to Aug. 20. Mr. Edward Barlow, Lowestoft (Sunday afternoons only). Rev. E. E. Nicklson, Margate. Mr. Wm. Sloss, Nairn, to Aug. 25. Rev. L. C. Carr, Overstrand, to Sept. 1. Mr. V. C. Brown, Paignton. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Mr. Wigram, Portrush, Ireland. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards, to Sept. 6. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., Mr. G. Foster-Carter and Mr. P. J. Fear, Sandown. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Seacord. Mr. William McCall, Sesion, Devon (Sunday afternoons only). Dr. Harry Guinness and others, Sherringham. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. Jno. Mitchell, Weston-super-Mare. Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho, to Aug. 28. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes. Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley, to Aug. 31. Mr. G. Watson, Withernsea, Yorks. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

A Church in a Railway Carriage.

IN the little agricultural village of Portbury, in Somerset, there may be seen to-day an old railway carriage standing in a small orchard. Though it is long since it last followed a locomotive, it has not on that account ceased to be useful; for within its frail walls a devout congregation of villagers have worshipped during the past ten years. Here a goodly number of men, women, and children have been led to Christ; and, having become his disciples, have regularly kept the Remembrance Feast. Here, also, a Sunday school of twenty-five children is taught, and on Sunday and week-day the old Gospel is proclaimed. The closest of Christian fellowship is also enjoyed in this modest sanctuary, for a Wesleyan Methodist class meeting is held from week to week.

There is much joy in that place at present, for these village brethren have immediate prospect of raising a little brick chapel. The total cost will be £300, and it is hoped that the building will be opened free of debt. Upwards of £50 is still required to enable this to be done, so it is proposed to lay fifty memorial bricks on Wednesday, August 30; and if the average offering laid on each brick should amount to a guinea, the much-desired object will be attained. Rev. R. Simpson, The Manse, Clevedon, will be happy to supply further information concerning the work.

Personalia.

Mr. Monro Collings, who has been to Egypt for the benefit of his health, has now returned to resume his evangelistic engagements.

Mr. George R. Cairns has arrived in England from America, and commences on October 1 a six months' mission in Nottingham, under the auspices of the P.S.A. Northern Counties Federation.

Rev. W. Remfry-Hunt (Foreign Christian Missionary Society) and family are returning to China, sailing by the s.s. Himalaya, August 25. They desire to express thanks to some friend who has for several years sent them The Christian, which has been very helpful and encouraging in their home and mission station.

To Evangelists and other Christian Workers.—It is proposed to hold a Conference of Evangelists, &c., in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, on Monday, Sept. 25, 1899, at 10.30, 3, and 6.30. Further particulars next week.

Sabbath Desecration.—The executive committee of the Evangelical Alliance, Dublin, has had its attention called to the following sentence in an advertisement of the Great Northern Railway Company:—"Howth. Grand special engagement of the full band of her Majesty's 1st Life Guards, by kind permission of Colonel Miles. (First time in Ireland), for Sunday afternoon, August 20, at 3.30 p.m., when a special programme of sacred music will be performed." According to a paragraph in the Daily Express, "Mr. Costello, the proprietor of the St. Lawrence Hotel, is to be congratulated on having secured such a valuable attraction for Howth. The Great Northern Ry. Co. are making arrangements to have a special service of trains to and from Howth." It thus appears that the band of her Majesty's Life Guards is used for the purpose of bringing gain to the railway company and to a licensed establishment. The committee protest most strongly against any such public use of the band, as wholly inconsistent with the dignity of such a regiment, and as a gross violation of the sanctity of the Day of Rest. They also deplore the action of the railway company, and trust that the military authorities and the directors of the company will withdraw from these arrangements."

Obituary.

REV. WILLIAM MURRAY.

ONCE again death has invaded the well-known family of the Murrays, in South Africa. Rev. William Murray, of Worcester, passed from the labours of earth to the rest of heaven on Sunday, July 25. He had only been ill a few days with pneumonia, but he rapidly weakened. On the previous Sabbath his brother, Rev. Andrew Murray, occupied his pulpit. The son of the deceased pastor, also named William, a missionary working in Nyassaland, who was home at the time on furlough, had the sorrow of being present at his father's decease.

MR. JAMES RICKETTS, DOWLAIS.

Many friends in South Wales will regret to hear of the death of the above-named highly esteemed gentleman, which recently took place at Pant Hospital. Mr. Ricketts will be greatly missed. He had been for years an ardent supporter of the temperance cause, and was a member of many local temperance lodges; but his loss will be realized most acutely by the Christian Mission, for Mr. Ricketts had, from the inception of the mission in Dowlais, been an enthusiastic supporter and worker, and had won the affection and esteem of all connected with that mission.

REV. HENRY HUGH BOURN.

After twenty-four years of suffering this good man entered into rest on August 8, the thunderstorms and intense heat acting upon a weak heart and hastening the end. From 1849 to 1875 he laboured as an evangelist in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and for some time as pastor of the Baptist Chapel, Victoria Street, Windsor. While at the latter place an attack of diphtheria deprived him of voice power, and made it impossible to continue preaching. In his retreat, however, he was not idle—indeed, his pen was ever busy. "The Father Revealed and Christ Glorified," "Fatherly Chastisements," and a number of other valuable and scholarly works, were written by him, but are now out of print.

MRS. M'LEOD WYLIE.

After a protracted illness, Mrs. McLeod Wylie passed away on Friday last at the age of eighty-one. Since the departure of her husband, whose praise is still in fresh remembrance with all who knew him, Mrs. Wylie spent her life in doing good, whilst waiting for the call to come up higher. Her sweet influence was felt to be a power for good to many. She had been with her husband in India, where he held the post of a judge, and she had shared with him in a warm and active interest in all missionary work. He was known as the "Gaius of India."

One of Mrs. Wylie's favourite hymns was, "The sands of time are sinking," and often when in her great suffering the first line was quoted she would quickly add, "The dawn of heaven breaks." The circle of friends who will mourn over her departure is very large, but they will not mourn as those who have no hope; but they will, together with the dear departed, look for the Blessed Hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Her children and children's children will bless her.—Yours sincerely, F. W. Baedeker.

Wart-Eck, Weston-super-Mare.

"The Secret History of the Oxford Movement."—The Church Association has completed arrangements for a cheap edition of Mr. Walter Walsh's well-known work, to be ready in September next. It is proposed to print 100,000 copies in two editions, one at 1s. in paper cover, and one at 1s. 6d. bound in cloth. The cheap edition is a verbatim reprint of the more costly work, and it is impossible to offer further inducement to purchasers than the present very low price; but in order to get the book widely circulated, the Association will supply parcels of 100 copies of the 1s. edition at 9d. per copy—i.e., £3 15s., the carriage to be paid by the purchaser. The address of the Association is 14, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C., Mr. Henry Miller, secretary.

Temperance Notes.

The Birmingham brewers, it is said, are preparing to make another surrender of licensed houses, in conformity with the wishes of the licensing bench. At the forthcoming sessions twenty-five more public-houses will be given up.

* * * * * *

Mr. Joshua Rowntree writes in The Friend:—"We may all agree that the coming century will still require licensing schemes, and that present methods are capable of vast improvement; but let it not be disguised that warfare against the enslavement of the individual to intoxicants will be needed so long as intoxicants are regularly resorted to. A shipwreck chart might well show more ugly marks against it than against many an inn kept for private gain."

* * * * * *

One of the means employed by the Liverpool Diocesan Branch of the C.O.E. Temperance Society is the visitation of agricultural shows, preparing drinks on the ground suitable for use on the farm and in other laborious work, and distributing them free with recipes and useful literature. During the four days of the agricultural show at Liverpool, glasses totalling to 740 gallons of the drinks—which are named stokos, hopkos, and cokos—were given away to visitors.

* * * * * *

During the summer months the Temperance Mission Waggon and its band of earnest advocates, with their diagrams and literature, have been doing a good work in front of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, and in other open spaces in the city. About fifty evening meetings have been held, also a series of 36 noon meetings, along the line of docks. Everywhere the addresses have been well received by large and enthusiastic audiences. Upwards of 600 persons have signed the total abstinence pledge, and these people have been, and are being, visited at their homes.

* * * * * *

A correspondent calls attention to the statement recently made by the Bishop of Ely, when addressing a number of brickyard labourers at Peterborough, that "Beer is God's gift to make glad the heart of man" (?) Our correspondent adds, "Such an assertion is surely unscriptural, misleading and dangerous, especially to the young people of our land." In connection with the Bishop's utterance, the Temperance Record quotes from a published letter which refers to a town in his lordship's diocese. It runs: "The drunken rows around this part have been disgraceful of late, and the language abominable. I hope our good and worthy Mayor will order inquiries into this."

* * * * * *

In the Canadian province, Prince Edward Island, an act, passed during May last, forbids all liquor retailing, save under licence; limits the tenure of a licence to six months; fixes a licence fee of 100dols; closes drinkshops on Tuesdays and Fridays, and any other market days, at 7 p.m.; closes them from 6 p.m. on Saturdays till 8 a.m. on Mondays; forbids opening on any day appointed for a civic or provincial election, or on any Provincial or Dominion holiday; forbids treating, employment of barmaids, or serving persons under eighteen years of age; and adds to the Local Veto powers given by the Canada Temperance Act (which gives Local Veto powers only to a county or city as a whole), by enacting that on a requisition signed by a majority of the electors in any section ("block") of the city calling for it, in that block shall be notified to cease such traffic within thirty days, and such traffic shall cease.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Henry Thompson, of Leigh, Essex. For fifty-six years he held the position of organist of the parish church, often attending three and sometimes four services on Sundays alone to preside at the organ, and declining any remuneration for his help.—Rev. F. B. Walters, Principal of King William's College, Isle of Man, in his forty-eighth year. He was driving from the Railway Station, Douglas, when he died suddenly in the carriage.—Mr. William Smith, of Torwood, Helensburgh. He took a great interest in U.P. Church affairs.—Rev. J. Atkinson, of York, who was the Primitive Methodist Missionary Secretary for five years; he also filled the Presidential Chair; and at the time of his death, though superannuated, was the Secretary of the Chapel Aid Association.—Shipley Wesleyan Circuit has suffered the loss of Mr. Walter Sykes. He was a local preacher, Society Steward, Sunday School Superintendent, Circuit Secretary, Band of Hope Worker, Trustee of the Circuit Chapel, and Trust Secretary.—Mr. John Thorp, of Boothtown, Halifax, has died in his eighty-sixth year. He occupied for many years the post of superintendent and class-leader among the Free Methodists. He was a life abstainer and a non-smoker.—Mr. Joseph Shackleton, a member of the choir of Great Harwood Congregational Church for over twenty years.—Mr. T. B. Westcombe, brother of three Wesleyan Ministers, has died at Clevedon. He was a local preacher and a class-leader.—Rev. W. A. Cathcart, formerly minister of the Presbyterian congregation at Ramsey, Isle of Man. Mr. Cathcart had been living in retirement for three or four years past.—At Belfast, aged eighty-eight, Rev. S. Houston, an old adherent of the U.P. Church of Scotland.—Mr. Henry Boal, of Belfast, a member of session at Westbourne Presbyterian Church. For nearly fifteen years he acted as superintendent of the large and flourishing Sabbath-school.

Evangelistic.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.

REV. J. Q. A. HENRY, D.D., late of Chicago, and now superintendent of the New York State Anti-Saloon League, is the preacher for August at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, and is drawing large congregations. This is Dr. Henry's third visit to the Castle, where no preacher is more acceptable than he. It is most refreshing to meet such a unique combination of fiery eloquence and uncompromising soundness of doctrine as are found in this eminent American preacher. N.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

THE East End of London is a wonderful section of our great globe. What it would be if all the religious agencies were removed from it, it is impossible to imagine. To visit it in the height of summer, when the thermometer registers 83 in the shade, is to witness sights that no other nation under the sun can produce on such a gigantic scale. The sea of human beings that empty themselves on a summer evening from the fetid courts and alleys into the wide thoroughfare of the Mile End Road is a sight that must be seen for its vastness to be realized. The mighty crowd moves backwards and forwards upon the wide foot-walk, and from e ght to ten o'clock it is a great whirl of life which never stops its unrest and noise.

To undertake a Gospel mission at such a time of the year, and in the midst of all this hubbub, with any idea of it being successful, needs some faith. Yet it is a fact that Mr. Charrington and his workers carry on their labours for Christ amid all this din every night all the year round. The great tent erected last month has been the means of attracting hundreds upon hundreds who would never have darkened the doors of the Great Assembly Hall. The canvas church has been crowded to overflowing every night, and the Weaver Brothers have had a most successful mission. Their earnest preaching and singing have been the means in God's hands of bringing light and liberty into many a benighted heart.

Some heartrending stories of rescue have been related. Homes which once bore the stamp of misery and wretchedness are now pictures of light and happiness. The power of the Gospel, when it reaches the heart, penetrates the whole being, and transforms the lives and homes of these poor devil-chained victims of strong drink and gambling—two of the greatest curses with which the East End is weighed down. But for the Gospel it would be irremediable. The Sunday gatherings, of course, have been too large for the tent, and therefore were held, as usual, in the Great Assembly Hall. The meetings have been above the average for the season of the year, and God has honoured his servants by using them to the conversion of many precious souls. After five weeks of labour, the Weaver Brothers are now taking a well-earned rest, and the prayers of thousands follow them.

Tent Work in London.

THAT a flood of revival blessing is sweeping over south-west London in connection with tent work, is wonderfully apparent. For the past fortnight the large tent at Clapham Junction has been filled with people who have listened with rapt attention to the earnest pleading of Messrs. Chas. Inglis, Leonard Weaver, and other friends, and to the singing entreaties of Madame Annie Ryall, Miss Hallie Q. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, (the blind singers of Philadelphia), and Mr. Jas. Gracie. The power of God has been mightily present to save and restore, some hundreds of persons having professed to accept Jesus as Saviour. Numerous temperance pledges have been taken. On the Sunday prior to Bank Holiday, Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke to large gatherings at the evening service: the tent was crowded to its utmost limit, and outside the structure seats were placed eight deep to accommodate the people. At the after meeting numbers were dealt with in the inquiry room. On August Bank Holiday there was a rally of tent-workers from Peckham, Tooting, Clapham Junction, and elsewhere.

Mr. A. Garstin, hon. treasurer of the London Tent Evangelization Committee, presided. On the platform during the three meetings were many well-known evangelists, in addition to a number of the leading ministers of the district. Numerous instances of conversion were reported. On the previous day six young men had come forward together, five of them being brothers, two belonging to the navy. An aged drunkard had been induced to sign the pledge, and ultimately he surrendered to Christ. Another case was that of a gambler and card-sharper, whose home was in a den of iniquity, and who was planning to ruin some young men. He had been dealt with until a late hour, and had ultimately decided to walk the streets rather than return to his old haunts, whereupon one of the workers took him to his own home. Next day, this repentant gambler left London for his brother's home in Cornwall.

Stirring addresses were delivered during the afternoon; and the evening meeting was one that will live in the memories of those present for many years. Almost the last to say a word was Mr. Nobbs, of Hereford, who had been saved and had been serving Christ for forty-six years, and was the instrument, in God's hand, of starting Mr. Weaver to preach at fourteen years of age, by placing him on a soap-box in the open-air. The cheering sight of sinners coming forward in numbers was witnessed, and nearly eleven o'clock came before the lights were turned down and the day's work closed. Our hearts are filled with loving gratitude to our Father in heaven for the mighty blessing that has come to us.

F. W. Cannon, Local Hon. Sec.

The meetings held in the committee's tents on Saturday afternoons are largely attended. On Saturday last, Mr. Van de Venter gave an interesting and helpful talk at the Upper Tooting tent to some hundreds of little ones, illustrating his remarks by blackboard sketches. The children, who were representative of many grades of society, participated heartily, answering with readiness the questions put to them.

UNDER CANVAS AT PECKHAM.

A visit to the Peckham Rye tent is an interesting experience. A monster announcement, which juts from a house in the busy thoroughfare that skirts the Rye, points the way up a narrow lane, "To the Victory Tent."

The route is somewhat circuitous, but there is no difficulty in locating the erection, for it seems to be the chief topic of conversation, while the little "tots" who are playing in the gutter, and "making believe" that the gravelly walk is Margate beach, are merrily chanting their especial favourite hymn,

"Sunlight, sunlight in my soul to-day."

A dozen voices chime in reply to a query, "That's the way to the tent. Up there." And then the voices murmur, with the pitying condescension of superior knowledge, "'E never knowed where the tent wos!"

The exterior of the canvas tabernacle is graceful and attractive; and the interior, although but plainly furnished with folding seats and a rough deal platform, is yet bright and comfortable; while there is a happy absence of that distressing quality of draughtiness which is not uncommon accompaniment of a tent.

It is a week night, but the place is almost full. Here are sturdy mechanics, smart shop assistants, and women carrying baskets laden with eatables. The bronzed and muscular coster sits next to the neatly-attired church member; both hoary age and budding youth are represented on one seat, and the prosperous tradesman and the down-at-heel lounger on another; while a corner is occupied by a phalanx of rough and active lads, such stuff as Hooligans are made of. These slightly restive but intelligent individuals sit through the entire service, occasionally whispering caustic criticism, but being quite conquered by the happy anecdotal style of the speaking.

The homeliness, and freedom from the ordinary restraints of places of worship, evidently charm such characters into a spirit of unwonted attention. In this particular the tent work points a moral of adaptive effort which may be pondered by those who have to lament a gulf between the people and the sanctuary. There is reverence with heartiness, sincerity with unconventionality. Each night of the week the chief address is given by a different speaker, and to-night one descries on the platform the familiar figure of Mr. Charles Cook, who, after some solos and bright congregational singing, portrays Jesus Christ as the only Saviour, illustrating the point by the story of a Roman Catholic lady's conversion, and with apt scriptural quotations.

Mr. Cook speaks with an effective method, as though he were addressing the individual members of the audience, anticipating and meeting objections, and at the same time exposing the degrading and damning nature of sin, ever insisting on abandonment of known wrong, for "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy." The dangers of delay were pictured in an instance from life. A friend of the speaker, leaving for a few days' holiday, had a friendly farewell word with a prosperous but wicked tradesman, and warned him, in the name of the Lord, of the inevitable consequences of persistence in evil. Returning from his rest, he called again at the house, but was met with the news that the tradesman was dead and buried. He had been thrown from a trap, and death was instantaneous. Mr. Cook went on to describe the fulness of grace with which a repentant sinner is received, and concluded with an illustration of a room in an old hospice in which prophets and apostles are represented pointing to the central figure of Christ. In the prayer-meeting which followed, several asked for prayer, and were dealt with by the workers.

Children's services, conducted by evangelists of long experience in this department of work, have proved helpful, and are to be held for the future on Mondays and Thursdays, at 3.30 p.m.

Mr. Thomas Payne has been labouring for several weeks in Richmond, Va. "His teaching and preaching," writes Rev. P. R. Nugent, "have been much blessed."

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has just concluded an evangelistic tour in the North-Western States of America, in which he has accomplished most successful work.

Stafford Free Church Council is holding united open-air Sunday evening evangelistic services. Addresses are given by the Free Church ministers and laymen of the town.

Mr. Josiah Nix is at Fraserburgh, on the East Coast of Scotland. This is the largest herring-curing centre in the world. The chief hall in the town has been taken, and Mr. Nix is getting crowded congregations. In the hall, in the streets, and on the links, they come in crowds to listen to the simple straight Gospel talks. Some have professed conversion.

A second Gospel tent (the gift of Mr. Alexander Crawford, J.P.), has been opened in connection with the Belfast City Mission, at Spier's Place, Shankill Road. A large meeting gathered in the afternoon, when Rev. Henry Montgomery gave a stirring address, several other friends taking part in the exercises. The evening meeting, which was very large, was addressed by Rev. John Thompson. Services were announced for every evening during the week.

"We are thankful," writes Mr. Gerald Coultas, "for the favour shown us by the authorities at Barry Dock. They have granted us the use of their ground in the centre of the district, upon which we have erected a Gospel tent. We have had good gatherings nightly; but, best of all, souls have sought salvation. Messrs. Paul Redwood, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews; and Ben Alberto, a converted tipster; and others, have been helping us in the summer campaign. The work is also going forward at Brynmawr and district."

Mr. Ransome Wallis writes, with reference to Gospel services at Ramsgate: "The Cavendish Street Baptist Chapel friends, under the leadership of Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, conducted some blessed meetings on the sands during the Bank-holiday week-end. Large numbers had the Gospel preached to them. Mr. Fegan spoke with power and freshness, and was supported by several members of the Open-Air Mission. The last meeting, of three hours' unbroken testimony, continued till 10 p.m., many listening with rapt attention till the close. Mr. Fegan also held two services in the chapel on the Sunday, the Word being ministered in great solemnity. Thank God for such a testimony in the midst of appalling scenes of drunkenness and frivolity!

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—During August, Great Assembly Hall, E.

Mr. Newton Jones.—During August, Margate Sands (Nayland Rock).

Mr. Leonard Weaver, Tents, South London, until further notice.

Rev. Thos. Cook.—Aug. 20, Colwyn Bay; Sept. 3, Blackpool.

Mr. James Sprunt.—Kilburn Hall, N.W., every Sun. and Thurs. during August; Mayes Hall, Wood Green, N., each Wed.; Enfield, Sept.; Chester, Oct.

Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Sept. 1-8, Downton.

Mr. John Elliott.—East Finchley (Tent Meetings), till Sun., Aug. 20. Week nights at 8; Sun., 3 and 7.

Mr. Walter Notman (of the Edinburgh Castle), Aug. 20, Trinity Baptist Church, St. John Street, Edgware Road; Aug. 13, Salters' Hall, Baptist Church, Canonbury, N.; Aug. 27, Chatsworth Road Baptist Church, West Norwood (Rev. Archibald G. Brown's).

Messrs. Algernon and Claud Coffin.—Tent Mission at Havant, Hants, till Aug. 20.

Mr. S. J. Alexander.—At Skegness, on the sands, through August.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Aug., the Tent, East Greenwich.

Evangelization Society.—The following missions, among others, will be in progress on Sunday next:—Great Assembly Hall, W. D. Dunn; Middlesbrough, R. D. Edwards; Keynsham, C. Lazenby; Aldeburgh, A. E. Knight; Rearsby, F. Holmes; Stour Provost, H. S. Smith; Halesworth, J. Clark; Great Finborough, J. Harris; Dunmow, J. Whiting; Thirsk, M. Peden; Shillington, E. Bailey; Robertsbridge, N. Taylor; Bromham, C. B. Jolliffe; Feering, J. Simmonds; Blunham, J. Wharton; Hillmorton, C. Noakes; Tonbridge, J. H. Cooke; Bury St. Edmunds, J. Stanger; Hagworthingham, C. F. Goode; Pleck, S. Vivian; Waltham (Leics.), G. Pell; Moordown, J. Brown; Kington Langley, W. F. Davies; Egremont, T. W. Canning; Ringwood, H. Bray; Ongar, T. Goudie; Preston (Herts), G. Attwood; Long Stratton, A. Heath; Loddiswell, H. C. Barton; Willesden, H. Collins; Birmingham, G. Tuffin; Woodside, C. G. Roger; Rothesay, J. W. Moodie; Glasgow, H. Young; Glasgow, R. McLean; Glenluce, H. Laughland; Tain, D. Pittendrigh; Johnstone, J. Z. Hodge; Burntisland, J. W. Galletly; Grangemouth, C. Galletly; Hawick, R. Hill.

Other Lands.

A Terrible Evil.

AMONG the States of the Brazilian Union Maranham was formerly by no means the meanest. It was once the principal slave State, and was then the chief agricultural State. This was a time of temporal prosperity at the expense of morality and of the spiritual welfare of the people. Seed was being sown, the results of which we are reaping to-day.

In our work we meet peculiarly perplexing questions — not of bigamy, polygamy or polyandry, nor even of concubinage, but rather resulting from licentiousness. In general visitation there is no formal introduction, and it is safer not to make inquiries on the occasion concerning the family. Of course there are exceptions to this, but they are rare.

We are told that because of custom, it is not safe for a woman to go on the street alone. The fact is true, but it is not due to custom. I could give instances to prove this statement, but will only say that vice has put on a brazen face, and stalks the streets day and night. The priest sets the example, the prominent men follow, and all classes fall in line.

This paper was suggested in the following manner:—Mrs. Womeldorf and I were out walking a few nights ago, and on a corner a woman with her child called us. The little child began crying as the mother, with tears in her eyes,

ASKED IF WE COULD HELP THEM.

On inquiry we found that a new judge of orphans had been appointed, and new measures had been inaugurated by which every waif and foundling, and orphan and half orphan, had to be presented before him, that he might constitute some person responsible for the conduct, training and future welfare of each.

I went to see the judge, and he told me that the plan he had instituted would be executed in a thorough but kindly manner. He is making a complete list of all the children, and his office is open to receive and consult on all cases presented voluntarily, in order to effect a proper arrangement. After voluntary means have failed to reach, force will be used until every case is cared for. A list of 800 cases was enrolled for examination.

The judge placed before me two children, one a girl of probably nine years, and a boy of about six. The girl, he said, was found at some distance from the city, fleeing from cruel treatment; the boy was picked up sleeping on the sea beach, almost starved, and unable to give any satisfactory explanation as to who he was or where he belonged.

According to statistics for 1898, the number of births for this city was 708; of these 414 were legitimate and 294 illegitimate.

These children are not only always without a father, but many of them never know her whom they would be compelled to call mother. Seldom do they know what mother, home, and affection mean; they are unappreciated, unkempt, unclothed, often becoming outcasts, street wanderers or vagabonds. The early death-rate among them is exceedingly high. They are often disposed of in various inhuman ways: sometimes at night they are that turns them into a nunnery. There they go into unknown hands—unknown children from unknown mothers.

PLACED IN A REVOLVING WHEEL

In my conference with the judge, he asked, "How many of these little ones do you wish?" Well, I began to think. The idea of little human beings in a measure placed at my disposal! I had never before heard such words or faced such realities.

The judge continued: "I will entrust to you as many as you will take. If you will open a school here, I will place the children under your care." I came home, and with my wife talked over this sudden and singular experience.

In a little while a hundred might be gathered into such an institution, or even as many more. We could commence with half that number. The age might be fixed between five and ten years. These waifs must be sheltered, CLOTHED, FED, AND TRAINED.

For a building sufficient for one hundred, for furniture and apparatus, food and clothing, at the rate of ten per cent. interest, which we get here, there would be required an endowment of 50,000dols. If we add 4,000dols. a year for tutors, an additional endowment of 40,000dols. will be needed, making for the purchase, equipment, and maintenance of such an institution 100,000dols. The executive committee of our Southern Presbyterian Church, U.S., will certainly approve and assume all responsibility of such a movement. The appeal is made first to that body, but the privilege is open to any one of the South or North, in Canada or England.

These children become ours, they are delivered without reserve into our care. We need not stop to ask why Brazilians do not undertake this work. We do not ask why the priests do not preach the Gospel and exemplify it by their lives; nor why the lepers are uncared for; nor why the blind, the lame, the aged throng the streets and beg from door to door. Roman Catholicism, unrestrained and well developed, can hardly be called a travesty on Christianity. Mohammedanism, or any other ism with a little morality, is far superior. Christianity alone can establish such an institution.

Communications should be made directly to our treasurer of Foreign Missions for the Southern Presbyterian Church, Mr. Erskine Reed, Nashville, Tennessee, U.S., P.O. Drawer 457. C. R. Womeldorf.

Maranham, Brazil.

South Arcot Mission.

THE work of the South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission continues to produce trophies of Divine grace and power. The following is a letter from a convert anxious to give himself to the work:—

"I want to become a servant of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. When God calls me to become his servant, then I will go in the strength of the Lord. Up to that time I shall be reading in the school, and waiting on Him to know his will. I have entered the third year of my Christian life. God has been good to me for the last two years, and I must say that He has kept me from all evil. He keeps me, and He will keep me. To Him be the glory for ever and ever. To know that He keeps me day by day, He gave the precious promise out of his Word: 'The Lord bless thee and keep thee.' 'He will keep the feet of his saints.' 'He that keepeth thee will not slumber nor sleep.' 'I the Lord do keep it.' 'Faithful is He that has promised.' 'All the promises of God in Him are Yea, and in Him Amen.' I am now translating an English pamphlet into Tamil; for that I need your prayers, that I may be guided by the Lord when I translate, and that it may be a blessing to many. Let the loins be girded and the feet well shod, and with staff in hand, let us hasten on to meet the bridegroom."

Miss Reade writes concerning this young man:—"He is a most earnest, true-hearted young Christian, and desires to be a preacher of the Gospel; but, as I think very rightly, he wants to go on further with his education so as to be better fitted for it. There is no doubt that this is most advisable; but, of course, it requires money. School fees and everything included would require about 12ks. a month; i.e., about £10 a year. I think he would develop into an original Spirit-taught, Spirit-led, and Spirit-sent worker. He evidently has a strong feeling that his life is not to be marked out in a man-made groove, but by the Spirit of God."

Communications regarding Miss Reade's Mission may be addressed to Miss Lowe, 8, Childebert Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

New York Notes.

THE Bible is most distinctly "up" before the American people at the present moment, and will be much more so between now and Christmas. The conflict within the Presbyterian denomination, created by Dr. Briggs, and by the way he was dealt with, is to be repeated now in the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which Bishop Potter, of New York, ordained him a clergyman a few weeks ago, in spite of many violent protests.

It may be confidently anticipated that the secular journals all through the country will carry the discussion of and the momentous issues that hinge upon it, far and wide throughout the land—in the majority of cases trying to state fairly both sides of the question.

THE VALUE OF THE BIBLE,

Another factor in the public interest in the Bible arises out of the death of Colonel Ingersoll, and the avowed despair, hopelessness, and desolation of the wife and family in their grief at his passing away. The comments by ministers and religious organs have mostly been extremely moderate and kindly in tone, and have acknowledged the excellent personal character of the talented lawyer, who so bitterly assailed much that they held dear.

MR. MOODY'S VIEW.

A day or two ago Mr. D. L. Moody was in town, and preached to an audience of 6,000 people in the "Glad Tidings" tent, up town. The next morning he was interviewed by a representative of one of the Conservative papers here—the Mail and Express—and made a pronouncement on the subject of the Bible that will be read with great interest in England as well as here. In view of the strong hold that he possesses upon thousands of ministers all through the country, as well as laymen, it may be doubted if any other single religious teacher possesses anything like the influence that Mr. Moody does. When, therefore, he makes such a plain, definite statement as the following one on the burning question of the hour, the incident is to be noted as very important indeed, because of its probable effects. Mr. Moody is reported as saying:

I am an orthodox Christian. I believe that the fish swallowed Jonah; I believe in one Isaiah; I do not believe in Evolution. And while I have not sought occasion to discuss the Higher Criticism, so called, I do not mind saying that in my opinion the man who is engaged in picking the Bible to pieces is doing the Devil's work. The central idea of the Northfield Conferences is Christian unity, and their invitation is to all denominations and all wings of denominations; but it is understood that along with the idea of Christian unity goes the Bible as it stands. We seek at these meetings to find points of common belief. Too frequently when Christians get together they seek for the points in which they disagree, and then they go at it.

For a quarter of a century, here and elsewhere, clergymen have been discussing whether there were two Isaiahs. I say there are too many persons who never heard of Isaiah at all. We must unite against sin in this country, and not bicker over Isaiah. The Christian denominations present the spectacle of a political party split into factions, and unable to make an effective fight. Do you know that every twenty-four hours 300 persons die a drunkard's death in this country? In the last four years there were 38,512 murders in this country. Here are things to unite on and to combat.

PRESBYTERIANS AND PEACE.

Two practical evidences of the reality of Mr. Moody's influence and its wide sphere are to be found in the fact that some hundreds of clergymen are expected at Northfield, Mass., to attend the conferences which begin there this week; also that, out of the sixty-five ministers who form the New York Presbytery, fifty-four are going to the same place to form a kind of peace congress there, in the hope that the controversies that have been carried on so long in the local body may be adjusted, and that a more harmonious spirit may be introduced. A lay member of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church sustains the expense of the visiting party. The idea did not originate with Mr. Moody, but among the pastors themselves.

Roger Martin.

New York, August 1.

Soldiers in India.

WRITING from Bandikui, R. M. Railway, Mhow, India, Mr. H. H. Smith says:—"During my stay in India I have watched with special interest the working of different institutions for the welfare of our soldiers, and have never yet seen one worked so successfully, and on so spiritual a basis, nor with such blessed results, as the Myrtle Cottage 'Home,' Mhow. Mr. James Taylor, generally known in South Africa as the 'Soldiers' Evangelist,' has left his work in that country to labour among our soldiers in India.

"His 'Home' is thrown open to Christian lads on furlough for a very small sum per diem, and is also used much by the troops stationed locally. The 'boys' are made very comfortable, and everything is done to remind them of 'home.' The 'Home' is to the churches, and may God keep it so. Not even a cup of tea is sold, and when asked the reason why, Mr. Taylor replied, 'Well, lad, they don't sell tea at home.' Mr. Taylor has commenced this work against much opposition and with many tears; but he has determined not to bow to the world, and to rely entirely upon God for support. The working expenses of the 'Home' are about £6 per month. Tracts and books are always needed. God has provided for Mr. Taylor's personal needs, and he does not require anything for himself."

A KIND OF NURSERY

Ina Frater, Dilkustia, Lucknow, writes concerning similar work in that historic city:—"When we returned to India, a year and a half ago, from furlough in England, we were stationed in Lucknow, which has a large garrison of about 3,000 British soldiers. We found there was no 'Soldiers' Home,' no social influence to uplift, refine, or ennoble the men; on the other hand, many influences to drag them down to a life of intemperance, degradation, and impurity. The great need of the young soldier was laid upon our hearts. We decided to give up half our house, and converted it into a bright, cheerful home, to which any men might have a warm welcome. We were greatly encouraged by seeing the rooms crowded. In one small room, set apart, we have often heard voices raised in prayer and supplication. Many opportunities were afforded for earnest talk with men one could not have reached in any other way. Last November, however, our accommodation was much too small and limited. We were very fortunate in securing a small house, and transferring the 'Home' to it. In this 'Home' we have been doing good work on a much bigger scale. It is CROWDED NIGHT AFTER NIGHT.

"One room is set apart for meetings. We have religious meetings three nights a week, temperance meetings on two nights, one pleasant social evening, and on Sunday evening's, after the church service, the room is packed with men; we have a very bright song service, with a quarter of an hour's address during the two hours we spend together.

"We have had many conversions in this 'Home,' but the house we have is altogether too small for the extended requirements of the work. We have, therefore, decided to build a Soldiers' Home suitable for such a large garrison. The general commanding the troops is in full sympathy, and has visited the present 'Home' on more than one occasion. He has given us a beautiful site and a substantial donation towards the building. The cost will be about £2,000, towards which the Army and Navy Committee has granted us a loan of £400. The balance must be raised by us.

"We need, besides donations, a loan of £1,000 or £1,500 free of interest, repayable in yearly instalments; and are very anxious to secure the services of two ladies (honorary workers) to take charge of the 'Soldiers' Home.' Ladies who have had experience in similar Christian work would, of course, render the most efficient service. May God touch some hearts to offer for work in this far vine-

(1.30)

Progress in Japan.—I.

ONE important result of the revision of the treaties, and the opening of all Japan to foreign residents, is the general desire on the part of merchants, teachers, and officers to learn the English language. Classes in English are being formed all over the country, and the missionaries are constantly besieged to teach both in public and private. It has been found by experience that the instruction given by Japanese teachers is very deficient, and the conviction is quite general that only a foreigner can furnish the training needed in order to speak or read the languages intelligently and properly.

The effect of this condition of affairs is certain to be very helpful to Christian work. It will first of all bring the business men, students, teachers, and officers into closer and more friendly relation with the missionaries. This will increase the number of attendants at the places of worship, and help to remove prejudice from many minds.

Another important result will be the diminished interest in the study of the Chinese language, and a gradual decrease in the circulation and influence of the Chinese literature. Thus far the Chinese classics have been the admiration of Japanese scholars, and the precepts of Confucius have been the basis of a large part of the ethical culture of Japan.

The general introduction or study of English will cause the substitution of a literature that is Christian in tone and destructive of the old superstitions.

In nearly all cases where missionaries consent to give instruction in English, it is with the agreement that the Bible is to be one of the text books to be used. In this way a large number of Japanese are brought under direct Christian instruction. Converts are already reported in various places, and the time is yet too short to estimate the far-reaching influence of this department of religious work.

This has produced a very large increase in the sale of Bibles. During the six months ending June 30, 1899, the sales by other than the colporteurs have been more than double what they were during the same period last year.

A few years ago the book stores in Japan could not be used for the circulation of Scriptures, because it would injure their business if it was known that they were engaged in the circulation of Christian literature. But now there is no hesitation about the sale of Bibles in such places, and arrangements are being rapidly made to have them on sale in all the principal cities.

An effort has recently been made on the part of some of the Buddhists to have their religion proclaimed as the State religion of the country. But the men who control the Government are too enlightened to endorse any such scheme. It is plain that the propagandists of Buddhism are not satisfied with the present outlook, and would be glad, if it was possible, to secure the interference of the secular power in their behalf.

H. Loomis, Agent,
American Bible Society, Yokohama, Japan.

Sailors and Soldiers at Wei-Hai-Wei.

I SHALL be glad if you will kindly let me ask your readers to send copies of The Christian and other papers and literature, of any sound kind, to the Sailors and Soldiers' Institute at Wei-Hai-Wei. It is doing, by God's blessing, a splendid work for our Lord Jesus Christ, and is the only place of its kind at Wei-Hai-Wei. It is very much appreciated by the men, who go there in large numbers, and who liberally subscribed to start it by their labours and means.

The meetings are undenominational, and the tea-room is generally crowded when men are on leave. Mr. and Mrs. Mudditt, who gratuitously look after the place, are devoted to the work, and in return the men are devoted to them. Any subscriptions can be sent to me, or to Mr. Mudditt, Sailors and Soldiers' Institute, Wei-Hai-Wei, to whom, also, literature can be posted.—Yours truly,

G. King Hall, Captain R.N.
Winfield Lodge, Margate.

Evangelization in Italy.

IN the midst of innumerable difficulties and oppositions, another year has brought to the Evangelical Church new proofs of the Divine favour, in the progress which the organization has made for the extension of God's kingdom in Italy. New fields of evangelization have opened, and four new churches have been constituted. The Italian Evangelical Church, which at the Assembly in 1895 numbered twenty-nine churches, has made an increase of seven churches, after three years' steady labour, the number of communicants being 1831, with 500 catechumens—nearly 2,400 members in all. This represents an encouraging forward movement, and a true triumph for Christ.

In giving some news from the evangelization field, which is divided into ten districts, the secretary says: "This year (1899) we have providentially been led into the province of Lucca, and particularly, a district called Santa Maria del Giudice. Owing to the activity and zeal of the colporteur, Signor Giovanni Mazzetti, more than sixty heads of families requested us in the month of March to preach the Gospel here. We have now a having opened a school, which, for its first year, offers much encouragement. If we receive help, we hope that this work, rising amidst the fiercest persecutions, here in the Sacristy of Rome (as Lucca is called), will yield blessed results to the glory of God.

PROMISING WORK OF EVANGELIZATION,

Other new fields were opened last year in Arena, near Pontasserchio; at Zambra and Uliveto, near Pisa; and at Palagiano, near Mottola, an encouraging and promising movement has shown itself. In the latter place, upon the evening of the feast of the "Madonna della Lenna," the so-called ministers of God sent a large crowd of fanatics and rogues, with a band of music, to make an uproar, shouting as loudly as possible: "Viva Maria Santissima! Down with the Protestants." Thanks to the Lord, and thanks to a Christian brigadier and his men, no disaster occurred; but, the tumult ceasing, friends sang, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and the preacher had the pleasure of announcing the good tidings to more than five hundred hearers.

The larger number of citizens show themselves willing to hear Evangelical doctrine, and—what is very worthy of notice in this southern district—a large number of women, who are afraid, and still prejudiced against coming to church, go in the evening to the houses of members, or invite them to their own dwellings, to hear the Word with devotion and interest.

Evangelical schools are also bravely and successfully maintained by the Italian Evangelical Church, in the face of extraordinary energy on the part of Roman Catholicism to keep in its own hands the instruction of youth.

With an intimation that the address of the secretary, Rev. Cav. Saverio Fera, is 7, Via dei Benci, Florence, we close by quoting his statement, that "we are confronted with a work of the Lord, which offers progress and encouragement in all its large field of action—from the Alps to Sicily—but we are without adequate means of supporting it, and of responding to the needs and to the cries which come to us from all parts of Italy."

"Northfield Echoes."

THIS serial is devoted to addresses delivered at the various conferences at Northfield. The second issue of the current volume contains papers and other reports connected with the Students' Conference. Much of the matter is of permanent interest, and all is stimulating reading. The portraits that accompany the addresses are an attractive feature. Among the contributors to this part are—Messrs. D. L. Moody, J. R. Mott, and R. E. Speer, Revs. R. A. Torrey, R. P. Wilder, and Harlan P. Beach, and Drs. W. W. White, J. Wilbur Chapman, A. F. Schauffler, and W. H. P. Faunce. Northfield Echoes may be ordered through Messrs. Morgan and Scott, the subscription price of the series (four parts) being 5s., post free.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

"THE blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow." Earthly blessings often bring more sorrow than joy with them. Wealth, fame, knowledge, social distinction, public "rewards," often prove bitterly disappointing because of the "sorrows" that come in their train. It is only when they are enjoyed in the fear of the Lord that they become real and unadulterated blessings.

But there are spiritual blessings, coming direct from the hand of God, which have no admixture of sorrow in them. They transform sorrows into joys, storm into calm, struggle into peace. Forgiveness, grace, truth, love—these are gifts that have no drawbacks; they lift the soul into a region where the air is always clear and the sky is blue. Just as there is a centre of quiet in every cyclone, so there is a "secret place"—a "pavilion" of the Most High, where He giveth perfect rest to his own.

There seems to us to be a good deal of truth and force in the contention of an American writer that the home, as a great social institution, has received from pastors "little care compared with that which has been bestowed on congregational forms of religious work." Some have perhaps sinned against the home in trying to do good to the children, by taking from parents a responsibility which is theirs first and chiefly, and from which they ought never to be liberated. Parents can do for their children what no one else can do, if their hearts are under right influence.

And they should be pressed with this responsibility. They should not be comforted with the thought that their children are at Sunday School, or at the religious service, while they themselves are absent. This is their condemnation. If they would not like anyone to feed and clothe their families, so they ought not to delegate their more serious work to others. A tract on these lines might, if widely circulated, quicken in many parents a new sense of duty. We want the home for Christ, not merely individuals out of it.

A Christian man of some experience says that he looks back gratefully upon his early religious training for the impressions it made upon his imagination and feelings, by the presentation of the great truths of the Gospel in forms above his intellectual comprehension. Indeed, may not the attempt to simplify everything religious to children become a doubtful blessing? The mind is not most advantaged by being spared exertion and work; and if only such things are brought before children as they are supposed to be able to understand, where is the impression which is gained by contact with the greatest and most mysterious truths? It is a suggestive fact that our Lord never gave any special addresses to children, never singled them out from their fathers and mothers, nor dealt with them, as we should say, "according to their capacity." We know but little of their capacity; it is deeper than our measure. Especially is the young mind the most open to those great truths which old men are as unable as "babes" to explain.

There is some satisfaction in the support that several of the bishops are giving to the Archbishops' decision on ceremonial questions. A circular letter has been sent by the Bishop of Llandaff to all the clergy in his diocese, urging them to set an example of loyalty to the church and obedience to the lawful authority. The appeal is based upon their ordination vows of obedience. The Bishop of Worcester lays special stress upon the ceremonial use of incense. It remains, however, to be seen how far those committed to the practices forbidden will yield to this gentle pressure. Of all men, those who profess to be called of God to be teachers of the people in morals and religion should be the first to keep their vows.

The "Pastoral" to the Wesleyan Methodist Church this year is one of the most powerful and most timely that we remember; it is especially effective in deprecating haziness of religious thought, and in insisting upon the firmest adherence to Christian morality. It calls upon Methodists to emphasize anew "the old virtues of truthfulness, justice, honesty, industry, temperance." It properly reminds them that worse symptoms of a church's decay than deserted sanctuaries and empty treasuries, are the softening of the moral fibre, the blurring of the moral vision. Its solemn pledge to the Protestant section of the Anglican Church, that in the present "crisis" no party considerations of any kind whatsoever shall avail against the solemn league and covenant which, before God, the Methodists make with them to save England from the power of Rome, must convey hope and confidence to those who greatly need them. The breadth of sympathy and view of the "Pastoral," will commend it to all the churches.

In view of the poverty of the services at many village churches, it has been advocated that where there are no settled ministers the Free Church Federation should organize a system of "national sermons" written by leading preachers, these to be read to village congregations by a competent person on the Lord's day. It is doubtful, however, if such a plan is likely to succeed except as a novelty. The idea of preaching is too personal to chime in with such a plan; it is the utterance of the personal convictions of the speaker that tells rather than the repetition of the convictions of another, however wise and good. A "poor" sermon may gain force and persuasiveness because it is the fruit of individual thought and life, when a masterpiece of eloquence falls flat because it lacks the note of individual intensity. The most rooted objection felt against the reading of another man's sermon is not the notion of plagiarism, but the feeling that it is not the outcome of the speaker's own thought and life.

No bench of judges was ever in a more difficult position than those of the court-martial at Rennes. If ever men needed faith in God and the future, to give them victory over the fear of men and the present, they need it now. Far more comment has been made by the Press, both French and foreign, upon the trial from day to day than is fair to the judges or to the accused. Very earnest and constant prayer should surely be made for both, as well as for the confounding of false witnesses and "the reptile Press."

The attempt to assassinate M. Labori, Dreyfus' able and devoted counsel, sent a shock of moral disgust throughout the civilized world, which has been deepened by the easy escape of the murderer, who was seen later on by several people, who refrained from informing the authorities. There is clearly a serious and widespread blunting of conscience in France over this affair. The heads of the army are using all the force of their prestige and personal advocacy to ensure a reversal of the verdict of the Court of Cassation in favour of Dreyfus, and the police and populace are equally prejudiced against him. His conviction, should it occur, would be the beginning of unknown and still more terrible troubles to come. It will be well for France if she, unlike Jerusalem, recognises the "day of her visitation."

The troubles of France indeed multiply. The news, just to hand, of mutiny and murder on the part of officers in the Soudan is altogether unprecedented in these later times. After the adjustment of boundaries, accomplished some time ago by France and this country, a "mission" was ordered to march from the Niger to Lake Chad, and explore the country en route. The party was in charge of Captains Voulet and Chanoine. Reports of misconduct with the natives having reached the Government, Lieut.-Col. Klobb, stationed at Kayes, was ordered to go after the mission, and take command, and, if necessary, bring the wrongdoers to a court-martial. When he approached the party, he sent forward a messenger announcing his purpose, and he received as reply an intimation that if he came nearer he would be shot. As a brave man, he was not to be deterred, and he and his lieutenant, with nine others, were shot down. The mutineers are now in control, and we suppose they hope to set up a military dictatorship in the Dark Continent. It really seems that the army is determined to do its own will; but surely this incident will help the people of France to realize the corruption which exists in the organization which desires to rule the destinies of the Republic.

Whatever may be the merits of the case between our Government and that of the Transvaal, few things tend less to the maintenance of peace than ex parte statements on either side. It is supposed that the first warlike movement (if any) would emanate from this country, and we are receiving urgent letters which assume that President Kruger is absolutely right and the British Government absolutely wrong. Nothing, it seems to us, is more likely to irritate the war party, and to add to their number from those who are as yet non-partisan, than such an assumption. We earnestly protest against our either rushing or drifting into war. Patience and an endeavour to put ourselves into the other man's place, and to do as we would be done by, is the only position which each Government, and every individual who considers the subject, ought to take. Very specially is this required of all who profess to fear God.

It must not be forgotten that the equality of white men was of the essence of the Convention. Neither must it be ignored that God, who is no respecter of persons, requires equal human rights for coloured as well as white, and the native races have a claim to righteous and considerate treatment anterior to that of Dutch or English. The God of the Zulu, the Kaffir, and the Hottentot, will be against Boers and Uitlanders, against republics and colonies, against the paramount and all other powers, which forget that they are ordained of God for good. The coming King "will break in pieces the oppressor." He will "judge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more oppress."

It is sometimes affirmed, by those out of sympathy with the ordinary usages and customs of worship, that they need no forms and ceremonies and creeds, as aids to worship God, and no place of prayer other than the great "temple of nature." This is not only in the teeth of all the testimony of history to the need of special aids to spiritual devotion, but an ignoring of other vital facts. As a matter of fact, God's revelation of his character and disposition in Nature is "veiled;" it can be interpreted in opposite senses by equally sincere minds. It is, therefore, not possible to enter into the Holy of Holies of his presence by any door of Natural Theology. It is still as true as ever that "man, by searching, cannot find out God;" and that "no man hath seen God at any time." "The only-begotten of the Father hath 'alone' revealed Him." He who would go "through Nature to God" is, therefore, embarked on a wild and uncertain voyage of discovery, and a needless one. The way to the Father is through the Son.

This is a truth it would be as well to bear in mind during these summer weeks of holiday-making and rest, when we seek, and find, much spiritual as well as physical refreshment in the contemplation of natural beauty. Let not those who find the scenes on which they gaze with such gladness, leading them into the presence of the Creator, forget who it is that has placed the key of the religious interpretation of Nature in their hands. Apart from the revelation of God in Christ, the loveliest scenes on earth would tell us nothing authoritative about the Divine goodness and love; it would all be a dim guess, a "grand perhaps." But, having known the Father through the Son, we are henceforth able to penetrate the surface contradictions of natural theology into the underlying truth; and Nature, which, by herself, could never suffice as the foundation of our faith, becomes a "flying buttress" of the truth, and carries home with power the deeper principles of the Gospel revelation.

Colonel H. Elsdale's paper in the Nineteenth Century on the brain deterioration of these times has been called "amusing." It strikes us rather as serious. True, he does not prove, or attempt to prove, the deterioration; he assumes it, and then points out causes of it. And there can be no doubt that some of the things he names are grave reasons for anxiety, whether regarded from the Christian and spiritual, or from the intellectual standpoint. The impatience of quiet, steady thought, so characteristic of our times, tends to shallow, mistaken views of truth; and what is lightly obtained is easily parted with. The old habits of hard-thinking on religious themes gave us mental giants and steadfast believers, who could do great things, and dare great ventures, for the kingdom of God. If meditation and prayer had their proper place among the habits of Christians, they would prove one of the most effectual counteractives to mental deterioration. In the process of making the best kind of Christian you always make the best style of man—physical and mental.

Few problems of modern times are fraught with more important issues than that of the pastoral work of the Christian ministry. Especially in the larger churches the difficulty is how to know and reach the MEN of the congregation. Yet the needs of the age demand that the minister should be a good deal more than a gifted preacher. The women and young people can be seen or visited with much greater facility than the men. The imperious demands of business make it increasingly hard to have any religious intercourse with the heads of households. Moreover, the diligent minister is hampered by manifold claims. It is admitted again and again that nothing assists the pastor more in pulpit preparation than the knowledge of his peoples' needs gained by personal acquaintances. But how to reach the men, and talk to them upon other than temporal interests, is a problem that clamours for solution.

What forms the favourite reading of children nowadays? The question is an important one in view of the immense output of children's literature just now, some of which is bad, some good, and much indifferent in quality. A magazine which circulates among very young people has recently had a prize competition for the most popular works for a young folk's library. An analysis of the prize list reveals—(1) that twenty out of the twenty-five books which received the highest number of votes are works of fiction; (2) that these are, for the most part, of the higher order of literature, the favourite authors being Scott, Kingsley, Thackeray, Dickens, Kipling, Stevenson; and (3) that Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," which a generation ago was far and away the most popular of all books, has in this list fallen to the seventeenth place, while "Ivanhoe" has stepped into the front rank of all.

But the most significant feature in the list of books referred to above is that the Bible is conspicuous by its absence. Is this an accident, or the result of a misunderstanding? In either case the omission is symptomatic of a widespread tendency in modern life. The Bible is being "crowded out" of other than young people's libraries by the pressure of ephemeral literature on the attention and time of this generation. It would be well for those who have their children's highest welfare at heart to pay more attention to this item in their own as well as their young people's reading. Example is better than precept, and companionship in the perusal of the Book of Books between parents and children is better than either. The "Sunday reading" of to-day contrasts sadly with what it was even ten years ago, as a consequence of the rapid production of popular magazines of a distinctly secular type. Not without careful training, and wise insistence on the paramount claims of the Scriptures as the Book which must ever stand first, will a fatal lowering of tone in the national life be prevented.

Memories of Keswick.

By Dr. NEWMAN HALL.

I LISTENED with devout enjoyment to the addresses of some of those specially selected, such as Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Evan Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, Charles Fox, and others, and without specifying individual opinions, I copy from rough notes the following:—

In the Old Testament God was deprived of his honour; in the New it is restored to Him by the righteousness of Christ and his sacrifice. The O.T. says, "Obey and live." The New says, "Die and obey." Die with Christ to the old nature, live with Christ and become new creatures. Absolute perfection in glory must be distinguished from the possible perfection of those who share the life of Christ. They pray, "Make us perfect, working in us that which is well-pleasing in thy sight."

Christ dispossesses man of his shame, and restores to God the Father his honour. God Himself "worketh in you to will and to do"—not only to purpose, but to perform. By "identification" with Christ we pass into the eternal life. God's will now reigns rather than self-will. The Holy Spirit possesses man by dispossessing self.

Identification of man with Christ, as of Christ with man, means a new life to be lived by believers. Let the entire nature, body, soul, and spirit, be consecrated. The Fall substituted the flesh for God; Redemption substitutes God for the flesh. "He taketh away the first that He may establish the second." They who are united to Christ in the likeness of his death are so also in his resurrection: new creatures in Christ Jesus; and therefore we are to "walk in newness of life."

The "Higher Life," regarded as characteristic of Keswick, seemed to me the old doctrine taught me at conversion—but, alas! too little realized, though prayed and laboured for and proclaimed—secured by Christ's atonement and the gift of the Holy Spirit, a duty to be performed, a privilege to be enjoyed, an inheritance to be claimed, a hope to be cherished; each ascent leading to one higher till we come to the general assembly of the "spirits of just men made perfect."

It must not be supposed that every visitor attended every meeting. Excursions into the charming neighbourhood fitted for greater profit from conference and sermon. In our own house party, two clergymen and several ladies started at two o'clock to see the sunrise from the summit of Skiddaw, but before they reached it dense clouds concealed all view. One day, under a clear sky, I walked round the lake, about twelve miles, taking a cup of coffee at the Falls of Lodore, near which, at the bridge across the river rushing forth from Borrowdale, I was interested in tracing, on an immense rock, the evident marks of glacier scraping.

My long walk did not altogether cut me off from the Mission, for I beguiled my way by distribution of evangelical tractates and here and there a word of greeting. I shall not forget an old man seated on a heap of stones which he was breaking. Looking at the title of my tract he said, "If you give me this, I suppose you've gone to Him yourself? So did I, twenty years ago." I said "Hallelujah!" to which he echoed back, "Amen."

The chief impression remaining with me is the illustration Keswick gives of the true unity of the Church of Christ. Here were assembled ministers and members of all portions of the Church, Established and Free, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist, in loving sympathy; not a word of denominational difference was spoken — all spoke one language, joined in one worship, rejoiced in "One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all." Why do we pray that God would make his Church one, when it has been one ever since Christ prayed "that they may be one," and the Holy Ghost was given? We all need rather to pray that the unity already existing may be more emphatically demonstrated by mutual brotherhood and co-operation.

"These Forty Years."

THE commemoration of the fortieth birthday of The Christian, reported in our last, which came to pass, not by our own suggestion, but through the letter of an unnamed reader, and the proposal of our friend, Mr. Henry Varley, overwhelmed us by its spontaneity, its enthusiastic heartiness, and the warm affection which it manifested. Dr. Barnardo and others came from their business, or holiday in country places, to be present. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon wrote to Mr. Varley:—"I am altogether with you in this matter; but I cannot be at the meeting, as I am leaving London on Monday. But for this I would have endeavoured to respond to your call."

Forty years form a significant period of human life and in the mind of God. It is often mentioned in Scripture. Moses' life was divided into three periods of forty years each. Eight times the forty years in the Wilderness are mentioned in Numbers, Deuteronomy, and Joshua, and are often referred to by the prophets. Joshua was forty years old when Moses sent him to spy out the land. Three times in Judges the land had rest (or quietness) forty years. They did evil again, and the Lord delivered them into the hand of the Philistines forty years. Saul, David, and Solomon each reigned forty years. It was a full time of proving to God what was in man, and to man what was in God. "Your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years." "He brought them out; after that He had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red Sea, and in the Wilderness, forty years."

For forty years, since He put it into our heart to commence this record of the wonderful works of God, He has suffered our manners (fed us as a nurse feedeth her child, Acts xiii. 18, marg.), and proved Himself a faithful God.

It is our earnest desire that the present may be not simply a time for reflection, but also a point of departure. Needless to say, we do not mean a doctrinal departure; our testimony is grounded on the Word of God, and relates to truths that are settled, and things that cannot be shaken. We mean a departure in the direction of greater efficiency and enlarged usefulness. It is our constant aim to make these pages worthy of their name and mission. Prayer and work on our part are seconded by loving devotion and co-operation on the part of friends in many lands; and as the times have changed, and conditions of life undergone modification, we have endeavoured to be true to our object as well as sympathetic in our views of the varied needs of men.

We rejoice to know that many readers in different parts of the earth find continual help and refreshment in the perusal of our paper. For all that they receive in blessing and comfort, we praise the God of all comfort and blessing. And we trust that such consolation and profit will in the future be "still more abundant." It is in view of these facts and anticipations that we urge our readers to assist us in still further advancing the circulation of The Christian. "To him that hath shall be given;" share a blessing, and you are in no sense a loser. Many could send specimen copies of the paper to friends, possibly with the result of gaining new subscribers or regular readers. The example of those who send copies to ministers or missionaries might be widely followed. All through the year we are receiving communications, in which such kindness on the part of readers at home is warmly acknowledged by workers in far-off lands.

In conversation, and otherwise, friends of The Christian may bring our pages under the attention of acquaintances, and we earnestly request them to do so. Not least among the results will be the promotion of the interests of the many works and missions, whose claims and cause we are enabled to advocate, and in the support of which we have been privileged, in the goodness of God and through the generosity of readers, to have a part, in many cases "these forty years," to the extent of over £10,000 a year.

Dear Sir,—For twenty years The Christian has been a regular visitor of my Spanish home. Full of good news from many places and people, accurate and interesting, and on the right side of all questions discussed, it would be hard to exaggerate the comfort, stimulus, and help that it has constantly brought, not only to myself, but to many others in this missionary circle, both Spanish and English-speaking. It may well be counted among those "leaves" that are "for the healing of the nations."—Gratefully yours, William H. Gulick.

16, Ave. du Bois de Boulogne, Biarritz.

Dear Friend,—In The Christian of July 27 I read that it is forty years since the first publication. This brings to my remembrance that soon after that time thou wast attending the Friends' meeting at Street, Somerset, introduced by the manager of the paper mill at Wookey, and afterwards dining with him at my house. From that time I have taken in regularly and read The Christian with much profit. I sincerely hope that it may be for a long time continued, and prove a rich blessing to an ever-increasing circle of readers. I could write more, but feel that in my eighty-ninth year brevity is most desirable, and am, with love and best wishes, thy assured friend,

James Clark.

Allonby, near Maryport.

Dear Mr. Morgan,—Having been in Norway the last three weeks beyond the reach of letters and papers, I have only just seen the references to the fortieth year of your labours as Editor of The Christian. I cannot refrain from adding my little quota of congratulation, and of earnest prayerful desire that you may yet be spared to see the Lord's rich and increasing blessing on the further mission of your valued paper. Never has there been a greater need for a weekly devoted to the maintenance of apostolic truth, and free from the corrupting influence of modern thought and of present-day apostasy.

The Christian has been an honoured witness for God in the past of its history; God grant that it may be made a yet more abundant blessing in the days to come. With the heartiest greeting, and joining in the note of praise so many aspire to uplift on your behalf,—Yours very truly, Wm. Fuller Gooch.

Oulton, Suffolk.

My Beloved Brother,—Having a few minutes at liberty this morning, I took up the last number of The Christian, which, through pressure of work, I had not been able to read earlier

I was much interested in the announcement of the Praise Meeting at the Aldersgate Street room. I could not, of course, be present in person; but there and then, in my study, I joined with the assembled brethren in giving thanks to God for having continued your standard-bearing paper, and yourself also, "unto this day," and in asking for increased blessing on your great work for God in the future.

For very many years I have been a sympathetic reader of The Christian week by week, and regard your paper as one of the most valuable of all to the cause of Christ, both at home and abroad. Its unflinching faithfulness to Divine truth, as well as its uncompromising resistance of erroneous teaching and practice, commend it to my heartiest approval. Many a time I have been thankful to God for its outspoken fidelity, and have appreciated the great value of its testimony.

In these days of advancing Romanism, when the enemy is coming in like a flood, one cannot be too thankful to God for a paper such as yours, or pray too earnestly that its future work may be as strong for God and his truth as it has been all along "these forty years."—Believe me, your affectionate fellow-servant,

Newport, Mon. J. T. Wrenford.

Dear Sir,—I am sure I am one amongst many thousands of Christian readers of The Christian, who do join in thanksgiving to God for its widespread usefulness.

"These forty years" have been marked by progress in evangelization, in a large measure due to truthful records of work done in this and other countries, affording stimulus to other warm hearts and hands.

The sounds of warning against the Romanizing tendencies have been, and are now, too often given in its pages.

The general information as to the work of the Evangelical Churches is to me always welcome; the journeys of evangelists, and especially the sketches of the life and departure to be with the Lord of God's true witnesses. To glance back forty years, and to call up in memory the men and women whose words of weight and wisdom have been heard through The Christian, is in itself solemn. Let us be thankful to God that it continues to be a "weekly record of Christian life and testimony, evangelistic effort, and missionary enterprise." I look upon The Christian, as I have looked upon the Editor, as a personal friend, and praise God for its existence, as well as his; as the hand that writes this is the hand that was stretched out to save him from drowning (through mercy) more than thirty years ago.

Herbert R. Francis.

My Dear Friend,—I would gladly associate my warm congratulations with many other friends on the completion of the forty years of editorship of The Revival and The Christian. May the Lord spare you still to us, dear Editor!

The memory of those pleasant moments in your bureau on Ludgate Hill I can never forget. What days were those! What lively expectations which the Lord has so graciously fulfilled, and even more than fulfilled! It humbles us whilst it fills us with gratitude. What common fellowships with hosts of beloved saints who have gone before!

The sight of the paper, as it comes weekly, awakens untold thoughts of good things to be uttered, and of good service rendered to the beloved Master and recorded, and the fight for truth, holiness, and righteousness.

I cannot help expressing my most decided thankfulness for the uplifting of the drapeau of evangelical truth, which has been maintained from the very beginning, and without acerbity and bitterness.

The truth of God, as revealed by the teaching of the Holy Ghost, has rallied so many, and has made The Christian a witness for God and his Christ, and has spoken to many a believer in out-of-the-way places, and given many a cheer to discouraged ones in the high places of the field. Long may it continue to be so. And with hearty congratulations and love.—Yours ever affectionately, Geo. Pearse.

140, Boulevard Péreire, Paris.

Bible Flower Mission.—This ministry continues to be productive of much good, and the monthly leaflet gives interesting incidents of its beneficent work. The prolonged drought has tended to lessen the number of flowers sent, while opportunities for their distribution multiply. The circular says: "We are again on the eve of the hop-picking season, and, as usual, have already received most urgent requests for lavender bags and ornamental text-cards from some of the workers about to leave for the various districts. We shall therefore be glad to have a bountiful supply as soon as possible. For many of these poor hoppers it may be the only opportunity of receiving a message from the Lord, and past experience has proved the truth of bread cast upon the waters being found after many days."—Secretary, 110, Cannon Street, E.C.

(1077)

A Place among the Children.*

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

"But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? And I said, Thou shalt call Me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from Me."—Jer. iii. 19.

THE meditations of the mighty are not generally revealed. It lies with the monarch, as we are distinctly told by the "wise man," to hide his purposes and his power; and it is rare indeed for common men to be admitted into the soliloquies of kings. One of the most gracious acts of our Queen was the opening of her diaries to her people, so that they may study, not only the events of her life, but the thoughts of her heart. A rarer privilege is it for a worm of the earth to be allowed to enter into

THE MEDITATIONS OF GOD.

There are few instances, even in his own Holy Word, in which the Most High has permitted us to hear Him speaking to Himself; but here it is, as if He pauses in action to ask if there is anyone in heaven or upon earth who can tell how apparently insurmountable barriers to his gracious purposes may be removed. Thank God, He made answer for Himself, saying, "This is the way in which it shall be done: Thou shalt call Me, My Father, and shalt not turn away from Me."

We have been, for the last four days, considering man's depravity; also God's great purposes of wisdom, power and love. The question has arisen, What part is it possible for me to have in the glorious provision of grace which God has made in Christ Jesus? I know that, to some, the barriers have seemed entirely insuperable. The sins of the past and the dangers of the future have come before the eye of the soul, until they have altogether blocked the vision of God's power and grace. Men and women have been saying to themselves, "This life of peace, power, privilege, progress, and, hereafter, this life of great perfection, might be possible for some, but it cannot be for me."

Pause for a moment to consider the condescension of God, as revealed in this passage. No great man asks his subordinates what they think he ought to do. He commands, they obey; and he holds himself entirely superior to all who are under him. But here the Great High God appears to plead with his creatures, that they may name any possibility by which the power of Deity may bless the whole earth. God waits for you to tell Him how the blessing may be given. Beyond his marvellous condescension, however, He seeks means to confer the grandest possible blessing that man can conceive, namely—to be numbered among the children of God; to be taken into a pleasant land, so that the life that is lived for the future shall be filled with delight, joy, peace, comfort, and pleasure; and, further, that there shall be a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations.

That last expression may refer to Israel's heritage taken from the heathen round about them; to a heritage which the nations themselves shall feel to be goodly; or to a heritage to be given to the hosts of nations by those who are privileged to possess it. Whatever it may mean, it implies to us, first, a condition, then a position, and then a privilege and a power that are altogether beyond natural expectation and apprehension.

GOD WAITS FOR AN ANSWER

to his question. If your humble soul feels that it cannot answer God, so that you may take for yourself the special blessing which He desires, yet, as you pause and listen, God speaks a second time, saying to each one here to-night, "Thou shalt call Me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from after me," as it is in the margin. Thou shalt be ready to be after thy God, wheresoever He shall go before thee to make thy pathway clear.

The passage is simple, as are all God's marvellous dealings with the children of man; but it is also profound, as is all simplicity. While it will take us all eternity to understand the power and love of God, and the grandeur of his provision for those who are willing in the day of his power, yet I would ask each one of you to simply take the passage and apply it to your own individual case. I have been saddened by the words of those who have stopped me to say that, though they would share in the Divine blessing, yet they cannot and dare not do so. That is why, in simple terms, I ask, Who will take the children's portion, the milk of the Word, in order to go on unto full and final perfection?

To whom are the words of this verse applied? We should imagine that such a position of privilege would be reserved for the most virtuous and holy among men; but we find that to treacherous adulterers and adulteresses God is content to call Himself Father and Husband (verse 14). The picture in verses 2 and 3 is an awful one; and, as God traces it line by line, even the natural heart must shrink from such by the Holy One; people (and some of them are here to-night) who have received abundant tokens of God's favour from their infancy, and who are conscious, if they bare their souls for a moment, that they have played the adulteress from God and, like the prodigal, have gone into licentiousness or carnality. We are here, not as outsiders, but as those who have been blessed with the position of God's children; and yet to many God has occasion to speak as to those who have deliberately set up idols, and have given themselves to the meanest treachery, showing lack of love, of obedience, of truthfulness, and of faithfulness.

A DELINEATION OF HIS PEOPLE

We speak to-day as if the only idols were heathen ones, of wood and stone; but it is the thought of the heart, the intention of the mind, and the sway of the will, by which God decides whether men are faithful or faithless to Him. He searches the heart, and knows what it is that hinders so many from speaking with joy of their spiritual privileges and possibilities. We are not dealing with the question of actual sonship, for it is by faith in Christ Jesus that we become God's children. But if the truth were uttered aloud before God and man, we should find that, for the most part, God's people have deliberately passed out into the world, have yielded themselves, as Israel and Judah did, to the things which belong to the heathen, and have never enjoyed their privilege of holy fellowship with God.

To the anxious, troubled souls who ought to say "Abba Father," but who hardly dare breathe the name, to these the loving Father opens out his soul and says, "Oh tell Me—after thy wickedness has been open to every one—how shall I put thee among the children?" God is yearning over this assembly as if his being were WRAPPED UP IN ONE DESIRE.

He is like the man who looked out over the fields and wondered when his prodigal would come back. Have you ever had a child that left you and deliberately sold himself to wickedness? Do you know what it is to say, day after day, "Shall I ever see the writing that tells of penitence and longing for home?" God can do what we cannot—go after the one for whom his heart yearns. Against your very soul's door the hand of God is outstretched to touch you. To each soul here, that knows its own leprous condition, God is saying, "Tell Me, how shall I put thee among the children?"

While God waits to be gracious, He seems to ask, What would any soul, in this tent to-night, desire, if choice were permitted? I think the answer would be, "I have seen the children of the living God, looking so bright in the midst of the sorrows that weighed upon them, that my soul has longed to be of their number. Oh, that I might look into God's face and say, Abba, Father!" Then another hope rises, and you say, "I am yearning for my life to be spent in a pleasant land or place of blessing. I have hoped, too, that I might have something to show among the nations of the earth, as the result of my existence here." My brethren, the living God is asking, "How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of glory and beauty?"

I think St. Paul had in his mind

THIS GOODLY HERITAGE

(Eph. i. 18, 19). Thanking God for the love and faith of the Ephesians, he prays to the Father that they may know certain things. Now, as far as I have observed, God never honours the attitude of soul which waits for feeling. The purpose of God is that we may have knowledge. There are three things which St. Paul would have us know: (1) What is the hope of God's calling; (2) What are the riches of his inheritance in the saints; and (3) What is the exceeding greatness of his power toward them that believe. The whole position of God's children, coupled with the enjoyment of the pleasant land and the possession of the goodly heritage, lies, first, in a recognition of what is the hope of God's calling. In Phil. iii. 14 it is described as the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Why, then, should our thoughts grovel upon the earth? In 2 Tim. i. 9 it is a holy calling. In Heb iii. 1 we are said to be partakers of the heavenly calling. St. Peter tells us, in his second Epistle i. 10, to make our calling and election sure.

It is yours at once to apprehend, by faith, this gift of God's calling. It is God calling you. Did you not hear Him when you were upon the neighbouring hills, all alone, feeling that, while others were bright in the possession of blessing, there was no hope for you? Brethren, that voice was coming from heaven all the time! In honest truth, I thought I heard it as I walked the hills just now to get my message; and it seemed to me that the calling of God was upon this assembly. God bids you take the hope of the calling. The more I studied my Bible, and thought upon the expression the more I saw what the pleasant land and the goodly heritage is to be for them that trust the Lord.

"THE HOPE OF HIS CALLING,"

This "hope of his calling," is a hope of glory (Rom. v. 2). In Gal. v. 5 it is a hope of righteousness by faith. Then in 1 Tim. i. 1 it is Christ Himself. To go no further, in 1 John iii. 2 "We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." We see glory, righteousness, conformity, Christ Himself—that is the hope of the calling of God. The voice of God has come with this call, to give you hope. As you looked within there was no hope; but looking up, you find the hope of glory, the hope of the redemption of the body (Rom. viii.), and the hope of conformity to your Lord. It is all here, not there; and, taking Him, not it, you shall find that you begin to apprehend the pleasant land and the goodly heritage.

Next, think of "the riches of his inheritance in the saints." You have thought so much of your inheritance; but you are his inheritance. Like the priests and Levites of old, believers have no portion save the Lord, and they are his possession. Then, consider "the exceeding greatness of his power" to them that believe. The word exceeding comes over and over again in this Epistle, as applied to the riches of God's grace, the greatness of his power, the magnificence of his glory, and his doing abundantly above all that we can ask or think. The power referred to is that by which He raised Christ from the dead, and you with Him, that the whole of your life might be lived in of the heavenlies, with the goodly heritage of the host of heathen nations for you to take possession of in the name of the Lord.

THE PLEASANT LAND

How shall this be? There is no hesitation on God's part. The only question is, whether we are willing in the day of his power to take this word into our hearts, and to say, "My Father!" God will speak peace unto his people, but let them not turn again to folly.

I leave you with this last word. There is a life to be had, to which, by the mercy of God, there can be no interruption, except as a willingly accepted obstacle is put between the soul's eye and God. It is a life of peace, of power, of perpetual privilege and enjoyment, always progressing toward full and final perfection.

* Notes of an address at Keswick Convention.

Studies in Zechariah:

The Man with the Measuring Line.

Zech. ii.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

A THIRD vision was granted to Zechariah. I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem to see what is the breadth thereof, and the length thereof. It was as though he were defining the limits of the future city, indicating the direction the walls should take, and where they should stay. "Thus far," he kept saying to himself. "The city will never get beyond this boundary line. Grow as it may, it will never exceed this." How apt we are to do this. We are all given to forecasting the future, and place limits, which God has never designed, on the growth of the City of God.

The Sacramentarian comes with his measuring line, and insists that Baptism, however administered, and by whomsoever, is the limit; and that all the baptized, Protestants, Roman Catholics, or of the Greek Church, are included in God's City; but he refuses to include the member of the Society of Friends, or the adherent of the Salvation Army. Slightly modifying the ancient challenge, he says, "Except ye be baptized, ye cannot be saved."

The Pessimist comes with his measuring line, and draws the plan of the City within the narrowest possible boundaries. He justifies his forecast by quoting such a text as "Fear not, little flock," or "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Sometimes he fears that he will not enter; at other times he doubts all others but himself. It may be that depression of spirit, or long removal from contact with the manifold activities of God in the world, as with Elijah, who thought that he only was left.

INDUCE THESE MORBID VIEWS,

The Bigot comes with his measuring line and insists that the City walls must coincide with his shibboleth, and follow the tracings of his creed. We have known men much given to splitting hairs, and making minute and often imaginary distinctions, who have excommunicated all who did not exactly agree with them. Very narrow is the enclosure they mark out for future populations, and very scant their acreage of the Holy City.

The Experimentalist is apt to refuse to consider as Christians those who have not experienced exactly the same doubts, fears, ecstacies, deliverances, and cleansings which he himself has felt. Before a man may be included in his city, he must have gone through a series of defined and successive steps or chambers in the Divine life.

The Universalist goes to the other extreme, and practically builds his walls around the entire race of man, including within their circumference every member of the human family.

It is not for us to fix the boundaries, or insist on our conceptions. These are secret things which belong to the Lord our God. On the one hand, He only knows if those who call themselves and are considered Christians are really so; and He only can detect the 7,000 who have not bowed the knee to Baal or kissed his image. "Lord," said the Apostles on one occasion, "are there few that be saved?" And the Master made answer, as though to turn away their inquiry, "Strive ye to enter in." It is not for us to measure the city, but to be sure that we have entered in.

Run, said another angel to the prophet's angel-guide, speak to this young man (i.e., who had the measuring line) saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as villages without walls, by reason of the multitude of men and cattle therein. It was useless to mark out boundaries, because the city was destined to exceed all ordinary dimensions, and become so great that no walls would be capable of containing or keeping pace with it. It is hard to imagine the time when our own metropolis was contained between London Wall and the Thames.

So shall it be with the saved. We have no right to include in their ranks any who know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus, who have loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. But apart from these, there will be a multitude which no man can number, out of every nation and of all tribes, and peoples, and tongues; as stars in the midnight sky, or the sand grains on the seashore; enough to compensate for the travail of the Redeemer's soul and to satisfy the yearning love of God. But here an OBJECTION MIGHT BE RAISED.

If the Holy City was to be without walls, would it not be open to every assailant? No sooner is the suggestion made than it is met. I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be the glory in the midst of her. The image is probably borrowed from the camp-fires with which hunters surround themselves at night to scare off the beasts of prey. Imagine what that means! Just as no pestilence, and certainly no intruder, could break through a cordon of flame, so the unseen but almighty presence of God would be a bulwark on which all the powers of earth and hell would break to their own undoing.

This is what every congregation of believers may perpetually enjoy. They may be situated in the midst of the ancient civilization of China, or the rude heathenism of West Africa; no walls of wealth, or worldly influence, or prestige may engird them; but they will be absolutely safe, because that cordon of Divine and inviolable protection will help them on every side. God will be to them all that walls can be, and more. Indeed, it is better to dwell in an undefended, unwalled city, because we are made more conscious of, and more dependent upon, the environing presence of the Eternal.

Are you like an unwalled town, with nothing between you and the attacks of poverty, misfortune, godless fellow-workmen, and false brethren? Do not lose heart; you may yet dwell within the devouring and be surrounded by the everlasting burnings of his protection (Isa. xxxiii. 14). He hath declared: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee, thou shall condemn." Remember to realize God as between you and everything. Some put circumstances between them and God; it is far wiser to put God between oneself and circumstances. We never discover how much He can be to the soul until we have no other resource.

FIRE OF GOD'S PRESENCE,

Three appeals follow:—One to the exiles (7, 8). There were still vast numbers of Jews in Babylon, and to these an earnest invitation was addressed; Ho, ho, flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord; for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven, saith the Lord! Ho, Zion, escape thou that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon! And this invitation was backed by two considerations. On the one hand, safety is assured to them if they return. God would be as quick to protect them as a man to raise his arm when injury is threatened to his eye. On the other hand, they are warned of the certain danger they incur by lingering in Babylon. God was already shaking his hand over that guilty city, as a signal to the nations she had oppressed to gather to her overthrow, and to share her spoils.

A PRACTICAL WARNING.

Ah, Christian soul, art thou still sojourning in Babylon, conforming to the conventions of the world, moulded by the spirit of the age? Heed the Divine summons to arise and depart. This cannot be thy rest. And flatter not thyself that thou canst do as the world does, and yet enjoy immunity from its destruction. The conquering troops would make no nice distinctions between Jews and Babylonians, and would slay indiscriminately; and the recoil of natural law, violated by the professing Christian, will be as sharp and inevitable as on those who do not assume to be other than men of the world. Thou mayest be a child of God, but if this do not prevent thee from behaving as a child of this world, it will not prevent thee from suffering as the children of this world suffer when inevitable retribution befalls.

How comforting it is to know that our souls are as safe and dear to God as the apple of the eye! for there is no part of the body so safely guarded as the eye. The strong frontal bones, the brow or eyelash to intercept the dust, the lid to protect from scorching glare, the sensitive tear-glands incessantly pouring their crystal tides over its surface—what a wealth of delicate machinery for its safety and health! We have all these in God.

Ah, how much do they lose who linger in Babylon, exposed to all the shocks and throes of its agony, when they might dwell in this secret place!

An Appeal to Zion (10). The daughter of Zion might be a scattered remnant, settled amid but she might well sing and rejoice, since God declared his willingness to come and share her humble lot, helping her children in their toils, and attracting many nations to Himself. Lo, I come, and will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. Sometimes the Christian gets a vision of this. He realizes that since God has come into the midst of his work, it is no longer his, but God's; he is only the agent and errand-lad. God comforts and teaches the people; God restores the ruins; God builds the walls of Jerusalem; God does good in his good pleasure to Zion; God attracts the people, who join themselves not to a congregation, a church, or a minister, but to the Lord, and become his. He is not only a wall of fire round about, but the glory in the midst.

THE BLACKENED RUINS OF THE CITY;

An Appeal to All Flesh (13). In the bold imagery of Scripture, God is sometimes represented as sleeping (not that there is any weariness or indifference in the Divine nature, for He that keeps us neither slumbers nor sleeps, but) to account for his apparent apathy. Such times are always those in which Zion herself slumbers in Sleepy Hollow. There never can be any change in his power or tenderness; but the exertion of his energy is often arrested through the indifference and unbelief of his people.

When the Church awakes to repentance, humiliation and prayer,

GOD IS SAID TO AWAKE.

The stir among the restored exiles, in consequence of the preaching of Zechariah and Haggai, is here described as his awakening—not, however, that He had ever slept.

When God arouses Himself, let all flesh be silent before Him. Let there be the silence of reverence, of eager expectancy, of humble obedience, of wistful desire. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord, for He is raised up out of his holy habitation. "My soul, be silent unto God, for my expectation is from Him."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 27. 1 Kings xvii.

WHAT a fire of patriotism burned in Elijah's heart! He would rather that Israel should be parched with all the horrors of drought—"neither dew nor rain for three years"—than that it should set at nought the God of the Covenant. Therefore, as James tells us, he set himself to pray that there should be neither rain nor dew for three years and six months, that Israel might be led to repentance. And it was granted him. In these softer days we should not dare to ask that physical calamity should befall our native land to bring her back to God. Ah! we are of softer mould, and can stand by unconcerned, while men set at nought God's law.

How careful God is of his servants! He hides them, feeds, and nourishes their life. Do not be fearful, child of God. Thy Father can do as much for thee as He did for Elijah. He can still send ravens with the bread and flesh, contrary to the nature which would prompt them to bear provision to the young ravens that cry; and He can still bid widow-women to sustain, multiplying the meal and oil of their slender stores. The one thing that God requires of thee is that thou shouldest do his will—be absorbed in his glory, passionate for his Well-done. All else He will see to. Yea, even though thou mayest have incurred the wrath of Ahab, He can shield thee. There is a place by Him where thou canst hide.

And learn what a blessing the man of God carries with him. What a blessed life is within our reach, dwelling in God, and blessing men! But we must be able to say, Elijah, i.e., Jehovah is my strength.

MONDAY, August 28. 1 Kings xviii.

Ahab, the tyrant; Obadiah, the courtier, trying to serve two masters; Elijah, the man of God! Who would not rather be Elijah than Obadiah? Obadiah had the companionship of the idolatrous tyrant, Elijah of God Himself. Obadiah lived in daily dread lest Ahab should slay him; Elijah dared to confront his utmost hate. Obadiah sheltered the prophets by stealth, generously and kindly, no doubt; but Elijah destroyed the prophets of Baal and the Groves, and rooted up the upas tree, which shed its baleful influence upon Israel. God give us grace to come out with Elijah, without the camp, not touching the unclean thing!

God's gift of fire, in answer to Elijah's prayer, and in co-operation with his deeds on Carmel, recalls the inspired words: "God also bearing witness with them, both by signs and wonders, and by gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will." God still answers by fire and abundance of rain. He works with his faithful servants, if only they are emptied of self-confidence, and cast themselves on the ground before Him, their face between their knees. Jesus has taught us that the path of humiliation and self-abasement alone leads to the place of power. They who obey most absolutely, rule most completely. If we would command fire and rain, we must have no desire to be anything other than God's servants, and to do all things according to his word.

There is no quarter for the priests of Baal, when God visits the hearts of his people. They are brought down to the Kishon stream and mercilessly slain. This is a parable for the heart. When Jesus is in his right place, our horrid lusts die the death. Yes, and when a revival passes over the church, she will bid false priestlings pack and march!

TUESDAY, August 29. 1 Kings xix.

What, man of God, has brought thee here, to lie beneath the scant shadow of the juniper bush, and sigh for death? Not that thou shalt die; thy God loves thee too well for that, and, indeed, has prepared another, and a transcendent apotheosis for thee. But what brought thee to this? Thine exertions have been too much for thee! The strain of Carmel, the lone standing in the breach, the evening rush in front of Ahab's chariot, and amid the pelt of the storm—these were too much for even thy iron frame, and predisposed thee to cringe before Jezebel's threat. And then that hurried rush from Jezreel to Beer-sheba, traversing the stretch of a kingdom in a single night! What wonder that thou art there, on the sand, spent and dispirited! If we might diagnose thy disease, we should attribute it to nervous collapse, on which an unworthy unbelief has settled like a parasite.

But God knew how to treat thee. He steeped thy nature in balmy sleep, fed thee with bread and water, prepared by angels' hands; and finally conducted thee across the desert to that sacred mountain, where Moses, in the old time, had been permitted to have audience. There nature spoke to thy various moods; in her fire and earthquake and tempest thou heardest the voices of thine own soul, and didst find relief in their complete expression. Then the accents of the still small voice of God fell upon thy spirit like a sweet symphony, calming, quieting, soothing. Nay, more, the Divine voice commissioned thee again—"Go, return." Was not this best of all? That the post thou hadst vacated was open still; and, that thou mightest resume the work thou hadst too suddenly abandoned—was not this life from the dead?

WEDNESDAY, August 30. 1 Kings xx.

Ahab had done more to provoke the Lord, the God of Israel, to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him; and yet, when he is in straits before the arrogance of Ben-hadad, behold, a prophet comes from Jehovah unasked, unsought, with the promise that all the great multitude of Syria should be delivered into his hand, that he might know that God was the Lord. So does God woo us, sometimes by a three years' famine, sometimes by a merciful interposition. There is no end to the methods of his loving-kindness. If one way will not succeed, He will try another; but He longs to win the wayward heart.

A second time victory was given, to vindicate God's nature, that He was not a local god, but the great God, to whom the accidents which are of such account with men are nought. We seem to hear Him saying, "I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, lest it should be profaned among the heathen." What a mighty plea this is with God—Do it for thine own holy name's sake.

The desperate evil of Ahab's heart was manifested in his readiness to fraternize with Ben-hadad, and to enter into a covenant of peace with him. What business had he to make a covenant with him and let him go? This indifference to right and wrong, this easy slurring over of great moral distinctions, is what arouses God's deep displeasure. Oh! let us see to it, that we be not so busy with trifles, with doing this and that, going here and there, that we miss God's great meaning and purpose in our life. I fear me, lest our only excuse at the judgment-bar, to the charge of having missed the opportunities God gave us, may be—Whilst I was busy here and there, my life was gone.

THURSDAY, August 31. 1 Kings xxi.

Naboth was perfectly justified in his resolve not to alienate the inheritance of his fathers. It was an express provision of the ancient law that each family should hold its ancestral possession. If it were pawned temporarily, it must come back in the year of jubilee.

Ahab had plenty, all that heart could wish; yet this one denial cast a gloom over his face, and made him loathe the dainties of his royal fare. We are reminded of the words of the Imitation: "Who hindereth and troubleth thee more than the unsanctified affections of thine own heart? A good and devout man disposeth within himself beforehand those things which he is to do before the world. Neither do they draw him according to the desires of a sinful inclination, but he himself ordereth them according to the decision of right reason. Who hath a harder struggle than he that laboureth to overcome himself? This ought to be our endeavour, to conquer ourselves, and daily to wax stronger than ourselves, and to make a further growth in holiness."

Wherever there is an unsatisfied passion, coveting an unlawful object, there will be a Jezebel not far away, prepared to help it to unnatural and unhallowed gratification; and wherever there is a murder, like that which Jezebel perpetrated, and Ahab connived at by his guilty silence and ready appropriation of the spoils, there will surely be an Elijah, like an incarnate conscience, waiting at the gate of the vineyard to upbraid. The sinner counts the man of God his enemy; but, if he knew how things really stand, he would fall at his feet, confess his sin, and entreat his prayers. God will surely avenge his murdered Naboths. From under the altar their blood cries to Him, the Holy and True!

FRIDAY, September 1. 1 Kings xxii.

A saintly man was Micaiah. He too, knew the living God, and had learnt to speak only as he was bidden. "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak." Probably he was held in durance vile because he had dared to speak his mind; for Ahab bade them carry him back to Amon, the governor of the city, and evidently he was absolutely at the tyrant's bidding to go or come. How noble his refusal to purchase his liberty by prophesying soft things! Well might Ahab hate him! How could he do other than find in this man of God a constant menace and rebuke? The thief may well detest the watch-dog whose baying testifies against him, and startles the slumbering household! And then that final appeal from the king to the people was in the manner of all the greatest prophets.

It seemed strange that he should, at first, bid the kings go up and prosper. But his tone was so ironical that there was no doubt as to his meaning, and this made Ahab adjure him again to speak only the truth. Whether his vision of what had transpired before God is to be taken in its plainest literality is not perfectly clear; but, on the whole, it is easiest to believe that it was a bold and striking way of saying that God had withdrawn his protection from Ahab, and had abandoned him to the worst machinations of his foes. Perpetually, in Hebrew speech, God is said to do what He permits, and we know that even the devil needed to ask his permission before he tempted Job. God cannot be tempted of evil, neither does He tempt any man; but when a man has definitely chosen evil rather than good, He leaves him to reap as he has sown, and to drift before the power of the dark spirit, to whom he has sold himself.

SATURDAY, September 2. 2 Kings i.

Centuries after, near this spot, the disciples asked the Master if they should repeat these terrible scenes, because a village of the Samaritans would not receive them, nor offer hospitality. He at once turned, and rebuked them, saying, "Ye know not what spirit ye are of:" as though He desired them to understand that what might befit the dispensation of the Old Covenant would be altogether incongruous in the New. We need not, therefore, enter into a discussion about these terrible inflictions of vengeance: it is enough to indicate that Ahaziah was ignoring God with cool effrontery, and that his captains were executing his orders with brutal insolence.

Christ did send fire from heaven on those villages of the Samaritans, and used Peter and John as the mediums of its transmission. "When the Apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the Word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost . . . then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." This was Christ's answer by fire. Thus He heaped coals of fire on their heads, and blessed those who had despitefully used and persecuted Him.

How well does the guilty conscience divine its adversaries! Ahaziah guessed in a moment that this man of hair, whose flowing locks may have indicated the Nazarite's unshorn might, was he of whom his parents had stood in such awesome dread. Would that a similar consciousness might, as by a second instinct, lead men to Him who alone can save!

Letter from Rev. F. B. Meyer.

WE spent the first Sunday of August in New York, where I had the pleasure of preaching to great audiences in Dr. Hall's church, and of speaking in a large tent, which was crowded with people. Certainly the conditions of the Fifth Avenue, New York, are easier than those of Christ Church, Lambeth, but the post of difficulty is the post of honour.

Early on Monday we joined a party of friends on their way to Northfield, and had four hours of very pleasant converse en route. It was, indeed, delightful to take up the threads of intercourse with Dr. Pentecost, Mr. and Mrs. Briggs (of Messrs. Revell), and others. At last, Mount Hermon and Northfield came in sight, and the familiar platform, where Mr. Paul Moody awaited us, whilst Mr. Moody met us in the village. He looks better than I have lately seen him, and is as brimming as ever in sanctified wit, common-sense, and tactfulness. The more intimately one knows him, the more profoundly one respects him for his humility, his thoughtfulness of others, and his abundance of resource.

To be with Mr. Moody is a rare treat. There are so many surprises. For instance, the other day we were walking through his garden and hen-run engaged in rather a deep conversation, which was absorbing my own attention; but on our coming within reach of one of the servants, to my amusement he called out: "Those chickens have no water; don't forget to give them some. If they don't have water, you'll get no eggs."

On another occasion he described a minister as resembling a cow which gives a good pail of milk, and then kicks over the boy, the stool, and the pail.

His remarks are so full of mother-wit, and sparkle so with salt, that I could only wish that someone could record his table-talk. And yet, how earnest he is for a revival of God's work in this country, how he deplores anything that might seem to militate against it, and how strenuously he strives to bring it about! Every evening, in the great auditorium, he asks that one prayer at least should be offered for this result.

There are more people at the Convention than ever before, and the galleries have to be put in requisition, as well as the vast area. One feature is the great attendance of ministers, especially from New York and from the Southern States. Every corner of the great school buildings is crowded with guests; and it is perfectly marvellous to think that all are being catered for and served beneath the guidance and superintendence of this one organizing brain, though it must not be forgotten that the general-in-chief has some splendid lieutenants. The machine moves so easily that one hardly realizes all that is involved by this provision for 2,000 guests.

Mr. Sankey is in good voice; Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins bright and well; Major Whittle very poorly, and confined to his house; Dr. Pierson as vigorous as ever, and, as usual, intent on writing and correcting proofs. We are all rather anxious at the reports which come to hand about the health of the little surviving daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Moody, a sweet lassie, who is threatened with pulmonary disease.

The power and blessing of the gatherings are far beyond anything I remember. The tide has been rising year by year, and during the two years of interval since I was here, God has greatly honoured my dear brethren, Macgregor and Campbell Morgan. The latter is here now, and I feel we all owe Mr. Moody a deep debt of gratitude for bringing him into prominence as a teacher of the Spiritual Life. He is so deeply taught, so eloquent, so scriptural. Rev. S. A. Selwyn is also doing good service.

Next week we dedicate the new chapel at Mount Hermon, for which the readers of The Christian entrusted me with £2,500 to bring to Mr. Moody on his sixtieth birthday. Please pray for me still.—Yours in truth and love,

F. B. Meyer.

Northfield, August 11, 1899.

Non-conformity to the World.

IN a sermon on "Nonconformity to the World," Rev. Nicholas Kelynack, of Manchester, urges the duty upon all Christian Churches:

1. Because the spirit of the world is alien to the spirit of the Church. That they are contrary powers, working by contrary laws, and that one might as well expect fire and water to unite, as the spirit of the world and Christ.

2. Because worldliness is a hindrance and not a help to the Christian Church. That one might as well attempt to light a fire with a lump of ice as to think of putting strength into the Church by the spirit of the world. That as no sensible business-man would hazard success by unsuitable means, so no Christian should ever think he can introduce an alien force into the Church without imperilling its use. Make the Church, said he, as attractive as you can. Make it, not a halting-place, but a home. Let it be as warm as the summer sunshine, but never with the warmth of unhallowed fire. Let it be as bright as a midsummer day, but never with the gaudy glitter of the ballroom or the theatre. And let not the rake, the gambler, or the drunkard think that for him there is a shelter and a home within its pale, unless he repent.

3. Because of the unique and premier position of the Church. That she is without a rival in the realm of religion; and for her to subject herself to the unhallowed influences of the world is to repeat the blunder of a Samson, who threw his head upon the lap of Delilah, and rose to register the fact in the face of the Philistines that he was deprived both of beauty and strength. The Church should be the mightiest moral power upon earth.

And then, he asserts, as the stars of night melt in the mellow light of the morning and are lost, so the cry for attractions, for amusements, for conformity to the world, shall be hushed into everlasting silence; and the Church, endowed with power from on high, filled with the Holy Ghost, shall vindicate her right to be regarded as the centre of an influence that shall save the world.

The London Cabmen's Mission.

ONE of the many efforts put forth in London for the evangelization of particular classes of toilers, the Cabmen's Mission, meets a great want.

The centre of work at King's Cross is well situated amongst the "cabbies," who are to be found in such large numbers in the vicinity of the neighbouring railway termini; and, judging by the interesting accounts afforded by the annual report, it continues to prosper on its familiar evangelistic lines.

At the close of the Sunday preaching service, the cabmen hold a Gospel Temperance Meeting in the school-room during the winter months, while, in the summer time, the meetings are held at our stand outside the Metropolitan Railway Station, where hundreds gather round to listen to Cabby's singing and speaking, and many a pledge has been taken in the open air. This meeting is conducted entirely by the men themselves; they work unitedly in a brotherly spirit, and God has blessed their labours during the year. Prayer meetings, Bible-classes, and a Sunday School are also conducted with success, while the cab-ranks are regularly visited. The superintendent is Mr. John Dupee, 165. Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

International S.S. Lessons.

September 3, 1899.

Rebuilding the Temple.

Ezra iii. 10 to iv. 5.

Golden Text.—1 Cor. iii. 17.

Introductory.

IT would take the Israelites (about 50,000) four months at least to travel the journey, of from 500 to 700 miles, from Babylon to Judea. (Trace the journey on the map.) The first thing on arriving would be to make homes for themselves. They settled themselves in groups or villages all round the ruined Jerusalem, from Bethel in the north to Bethlehem in the south. All around dwelt hordes of heathen people whom they feared very much (Ezra iii. 3). About two or three months after their arrival, the time came for the "Feast of Tabernacles," and this was a nice opportunity for beginning again the public worship of God. So the priests rebuilt the altar on its old foundation, clearing away the rubbish; and all the people assembled and built their booths on the ruined city and brought their offerings for the rebuilding of the temple. There is now a great rock in the centre of one of the Mosques on Mount Moriah which has the remains of steps up the side, and channels cut in the surface, and it is believed to be the original foundation of the "altar." The altar means worship. We can only pray and worship because of the Saviour's sacrifice. Jesus Christ is the one to which the sacrifices pointed.

Explanatory.

The wood and materials for rebuilding the Temple had been collected (v. 7), and the builders and workmen appointed (v. 9), and now, the second year after the return, the foundation stones were to be laid. An important ceremony. (Ask who has seen a stone-laying.) By this time all the beautiful clothes for the priests had been made (described in Ex. xxxix.), and they were all dressed in them.

Verse 10. David first formed a choir for God's service, and Asaph was his first choir-master (1 Chron. xvi. 4); he also composed the psalms for them to sing. You will find the name of "Asaph" and "the chief musician" at the top of many Psalms. The trumpets were like our church bells, to call the people together.

Verse 11. The choir sang in parts and the people joined in a great burst of chorus. Ps. cvi., cvii., cxviii., were most likely what they sang.

Verses 12, 13. The old men who remembered Solomon's wonderful temple wept; some, because this one could never be as good; some, tears of joy because they were going to have a new temple. The young people can sing the loudest. God looks at the heart to see who is really praising and truly worshipping.

Chap. iv. 1. Whenever we begin a good work, enemies come against us. If a child tries to do something for Jesus, some of his companions will laugh or tease.

Verse 2. These men were Samaritans, and had a mixed religion. God and other gods as well (2 Kings xvii. 24, 33). The Jews had "no dealings with" them (John iv.)

Verse 3. God does not want anyone to do his work who does not love Him and serve Him with all their heart and mind and strength.

Verses 4, 5. If they must not help they would hinder, so they tried in every way to stop the work and even wrote false and wicked things to the king in Babylon about the Jews, and got him to make them leave off building, and many of the people were disheartened. Satan often tempts boys and girls to act so.

The Golden Text.

The beautiful temple was a picture of a "Christian" and of Christ's Church on earth, which is composed of true Christians, little children as well as others. Each one of us is building up our temple, forming our characters. Children are beginning with the foundation stones, such as Obedience, Love, Prayer, Truth, Temperance. All must build on the Rock which is Christ. Recall our Lord's story of the houses built on the rock or on the sand. Jesus is the chief Corner Stone in our building, the All-important, we can do nothing good without Him. The Holy Spirit will dwell in our temple; so we must be very careful to keep it pure (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17).

The Jews were in real earnest about building their temple; they gave willingly, they were full of joy. We must be the same, and let our temples resound with God's praises, and our lives be so beautiful and lovely that others will learn to serve our God with us.

The Great Awakening of 1740.

GILBERT TENNENT.

SOME twenty miles from Philadelphia, at a place named Neshamini, lived Mr. Tennent, an aged Presbyterian minister, who had four sons of Christian reputation and influence, three of them being ministers—Gilbert, John, and William.

The first meeting between George Whitefield and Gilbert Tennent was at New Brunswick, where Gilbert lived and laboured. He imitated in his dress at this time John the Baptist, and was a preacher of tremendous power.

Whitefield first heard him preach at New York, and declares that never before had he heard such a searching sermon. He says, "He went to the bottom indeed, and did not daub with untempered mortar. He convinced me more and more that we can preach the Gospel of Christ no further than we have experienced the power of it in our own heart. Being deeply convicted of sin, and driven from time to time off his false bottoms and dependencies, by God's Holy Spirit at his first conversion, he has learned experimentally to dissect the heart of the natural man. Hypocrites must either soon be converted or enraged at his preaching. He is a son of thunder, and I find doth not fear the faces of men."

His sermon on "The Danger of an Unconverted Ministry," preached at Nottingham, in Pennsylvania (a copy of which, printed by Benjamin Franklin, lies before me), abundantly bears out this description of his ministry. It is based on Mark vi. 34—"And Jesus, when He came out, saw much people; and was moved with compassion towards them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd." A few sentences may show how pointed was his style, and how objectionable according to modern standards of taste:—"Although some of the old Pharisee-shepherds had a very fair and strict outside, yet they were ignorant of the new birth; witness Rabbi Nicodemus, who talked like a fool about it. Hear how our Lord cursed those plastered hypocrites—'Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!' and the old Pharisees who, for all their long prayers and other pious pretences, had their eyes, with Judas, fixed upon the bag. Why, they came into the priest's office for a piece of bread; they took it up as a trade, and therefore endeavoured to make the best market of it they could. Oh shame!" This sermon created an immense impression, and was talked about for years afterwards. Tennent lived long enough to admit that he had been somewhat hasty and harsh in his judgment about the spiritual condition of some of his brother ministers; nevertheless there was indifference and worldliness enough at this time to move the heart of any true Christian pastor. His distress was that the sheep were "scattered abroad, having no shepherd." "It's only when the wise virgins sleep that they can bear with those dead dogs that can't bark; but when the Lord revives his people, they can't but abhor them! Oh, it is ready to break their hearts with grief to see how lukewarm those Pharisee-teachers are in their public discourses, while sinners are sinking into damnation in multitudes!"

Gilbert Tennent's labours among his own people were not very successful; for half a year or more after he first came among them he did not hear of any conversions, although several persons were at times affected transiently. Then a time of sickness came to him, and eternal things were deeply impressed upon his heart. He grieved that he had done so little for God, and longed to be spared one half year more so that he might plead more faithfully for Him, and take more earnest pains for the conversion of souls. The secure state of the world appeared to him in a very affecting light, and he was sorely troubled by remembering that he had spent much time in conversing about trifles, rather than in persuading men to repent and believe. He pleaded to be spared another six months; God granted him many months, even years, and enabled him to keep his resolution.

When he became associated with Whitefield, something of the extent and earnestness of his labours may be gathered from a notice in a Philadelphia newspaper of that time. "On Sunday last, Rev. Mr. Gilbert Tennent preached four times; at seven in the morning at Society Hill, at ten in the Presbyterian meeting-house, at three in the afternoon at the Baptist meeting house, and at seven in the evening on Society Hill again, at which last sermon it is thought there were near 8,000 people." Rev. Thomas Prince, junior pastor of the Old South Church, Boston, to which city Tennent came in company with Whitefield, testifies that Tennent's hearers were most deeply affected, not so much by the terror as by the searching nature of his ministry. He laid open their many vain and secret shifts and refuges, counterfeit resemblances of grace, false hopes, their utter impotence and impending danger of destruction. One Boston minister testified that more came to him in one week in deep concern about their souls than in the whole twenty-four years of his preceding ministry. Some 600 different persons came to him in three months time, and as many as a thousand came to another minister in the same space.

Tennent's ministry had a very marked effect upon the spirit and teaching of ministers themselves. They were led to treat more largely of the workings of the Spirit of Grace as a spirit of conviction and conversion, consolation, and edification in the souls of men. They were diligent in their labours, preaching in public or private in one house or another every evening, except Saturday, for a week together, and the more they prayed and preached the more were their hearts enlarged, and the more delightful their employment became. Scarce a sermon seemed to be preached without some good impressions. The Nottingham sermon, of which I have spoken, is said to have wrought an almost universal and permanent change in the Presbyterian ministry.

The effect of this movement upon society generally is thus spoken of by Mr. Prince: "In this year (1741) the very face of the town seemed to be strangely altered. Some who had not been here since the fall before have told me their great surprise at the change in the general look and carriage of the people as soon as they landed. Even the Negroes and boys in the street surprisingly left their usual rudeness. I knew many of these had been greatly affected, and now were formed into religious societies. And one of our worthy gentlemen expressing his wonder at the remarkable change, informed me that whereas he used with others on Saturday evenings to visit the taverns, in order to clear them of town inhabitants, and was wont to find many there, and meet with trouble to get them away, he now, having gone at those seasons again, found them empty of all but lodgers."

Tennent's ministry in New England was remarkable for disturbing consciences, which lasted until a revival of religion came to pass. In many cases he prepared the way of the Lord and made his paths straight. He broke up the fallow ground, and prepared it for the seed-sowing of men of more genial nature. But his was a great and an honourable part. If he was the terror of unworthy ministers, he was the joy of the faithful but unsuccessful. Mr. Thacher, of Middleborough, had seen only one convert in two years, and had begun to think that God needed some other instrument for his work. His purpose to resign was frustrated by Tennent's arrival, to whom he freely laid bare his case, and expressed his apprehension that God was "about to break up his house with us." Tennent replied: "No, but to revive his work." He was "glad to see the devil so vexed. It was a good sign." Although the assembly was small, and no visible effect was produced, yet, from that day, Mr. Thacher's people were more inclined to hear. A great revival of religion followed, in the midst of which the faithful pastor entered into his heavenly rest.

Another characteristic of Tennent's preaching was that there was no crying out, or falling down, or faintings, or physical illusions; while some ministers were rather taken with such manifestations, and regarded them as evidences of a Divine work, Tennent looked for more satisfactory signs. At one place, where people were fainting under the preaching of a Mr. Rowland, Tennent was present, and suggested that Rowland should change the style of his discourse. He did so, and the faintings ceased.

The total number of converts in the Great Awakening of 1740 has been estimated at 50,000, the population of the colonies at that time being 2,000,000; thus a fortieth of the population became, so far as man could judge, consistent followers of Jesus Christ. We should imagine that there is as great a need for a similar work of grace in the United States to-day, and were it to take place it would mean the conversion of a million and three quarters of persons! The work appears to have been extensive because it was so intensive. Its effect in New England, in the middle colonies, and in those of the South may perhaps be best estimated by one or two facts: 1. One hundred and fifty Congregational churches were regularly formed in less than twenty years, including the years in which the country was distracted and its growth impeded by the old French wars. 2. The number of Presbyterian ministers was increased from forty-five to more than one hundred. 3. At the time of Whitefield's third visit to America, from 1744 to 1748, there were not less than twenty ministers in the vicinity of Boston who considered him as the means of their conversion. Besides all this, it should be remembered that Princeton College was begun in a log hut by the father of Gilbert Tennent, a handful of students coming to him for instruction. The revival also gave rise to Dartmouth College, and this college again, as soon as it was founded, became the means of commencing a series of revivals in several towns near to it, which continued for some years. In fact, the stream of blessing still flows through the American churches and through American life.

J. P. Gledstone.

Protestantism in India.—Efforts are being made to form a Protestant Association for India and Ceylon. Protestants in those lands are earnestly invited to communicate with Colonel Porcelli, Agra N.W.P., India

THE LATE

Mr. William Hawke.

WHAT the Church of Christ owes to men of single purpose can never be told. Scholars may give direction to thought, orators may move assemblies, and organizers may develop great plans and schemes; but men utterly unprepared to attempt any of these tasks, acting on the resolution of "this one thing I do," have an equally important place in the Church of God. The lamented founder of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand combined singleness of purpose with power with God in prayer, and his name is fragrant of blessing to all who knew him.

Like many other earnest workers during the past generation, Mr. William Hawke was "born from above" during the revival of 1859. He was then about thirty-six years of age, and had lived a life of sin and folly. There was no doubt whatever as to the reality of his conversion; he became changed in every sense and faculty of his being, and it was given him to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. He soon became a man of strong faith, implicitly relying upon God to answer prayer offered in the name of his Son.

Returning from Ireland in 1859, where he had seen much of the salvation of God, Mr. Hawke set about establishing a daily prayer meeting in London. There was already something in that line in the city; but the aim was to concentrate attention upon aggressive Gospel work, and to prove the heavenly Father by definite petitions for the salvation of men and women. The historic Crosby Hall, in Bishopsgate Street, associated in Puritan times with the name of Stephen Charnock, was secured, and daily meetings, rich in blessing, were the result. In a booklet issued shortly after the inauguration of the meeting, Mr. Hawke gave particulars of many cases in which prayer offered at Crosby Hall had been answered by God in a marvellous manner.

This was not, however, our lamented friend's life-work. The Scriptures were the veritable Word of God to Mr. Hawke, and he esteemed them more than his "necessary food." He desired that all men should come under the regenerating influence of the words of grace and truth found in the Gospel; and, therefore, he devoted himself to plans and efforts for the wide-spread circulation of the Scriptures. The outcome of his labours in this direction is the Crystal Palace Bible Stand, which for thirty-seven years has been engaged in a broadcast dissemination of the truth of God.

Needless to say, there were stages in this very interesting development. One evening, in 1861, returning from a meeting of Christian men, called together by the Open-Air Mission, Mr. Hawke was impressed with the urgency of placing the Gospel in the hands of foreigners visiting London. The great International Exhibition, to be held in the following year, offered a grand opportunity for just such work as was weighing upon Mr. Hawke's mind. The thing proposed was translated into action. In all, during 1862, two millions and a quarter of Scripture cards, leaflets, and New Testament portions, in eighteen different languages, were distributed. Ever since then the Bible Stand has been a witness for Gospel light and truth in the world-renowned Crystal Palace.

As the years have gone by, the Stand has been the objective centre of a large work, and upwards of fourteen millions of Bibles, Testaments, and portions, in various languages, have been put into circulation. People of all classes and many nationalities have there received Gospel portions from kindly hands. Mr. Hawke was permitted to hear of many cases in which God had signally owned this work. The work began at an Exhibition, but Mr. Hawke was not content to limit its operations to the Crystal Palace. Accordingly, distributions were conducted at subsequent exhibitions, also on the battle fields during the Franco-German war. During the Paris Exhibition in 1867, millions of Scripture portions were put into circulation. In the actual work Mr. Hawke had the assistance of devoted friends; while, in making provision for his great enterprise, he had the co-operation of some 6,000 persons, whose subscriptions for the Exhibition year reached a total of £13,000. In a word, whenever and wherever opportunities presented themselves of circulating the Scriptures, Mr. Hawke availed himself of them. Accordingly, the post was made a vehicle of much work, and everything was done in a prayerful spirit.

It would be a joy to hear of other persons of leisure emulating the worthy example set by this good brother. He made long journeys in the interest of the Bible Stand, collecting money and in other ways promoting the work. He carried through a large correspondence, and was ever available for spiritual counsel and advice. According as God blessed him with private means, so he contributed with ever-increasing generosity to the funds of the Stand, until for several years past the gifts of himself and his like-minded sister Bessie, exceeded the total of £800 per annum. With this sister he lived at Sydenham; they were lovingly united in Christian labour during life, and in their death they were not divided. In other words, he had survived her but a few weeks, when, in April last, he peacefully passed to his rest and reward.

It is just two years ago that Mr. Hawke's health failed, and he was obliged to relinquish active labour in connection with the Stand. The work was then, greatly to his joy, incorporated with the Scripture Gift Mission. The combination was most happy, and steady advancement all round is confidently anticipated. There is a wide-open door for work on the lines so long followed by the Bible Stand; and the Paris Exhibition of 1900 promises to be an opportunity of supreme interest. For some time past efforts have been in progress to meet prospective demands. Some millions of Gospel and other portions will be required, and already many friends are seeking a share in the undertaking. The secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission and Bible Stand, Mr. W. Walters, is making arrangements on a large scale, and many are praying that a powerful testimony for God may be made while the Exhibition lasts. Full particulars may be had from Mr. Walters, at 15, Strand, W.C.

Smiting the Fellow-servant.

WHY was he smiting his fellow-servant? Of course he was sure that the fellow-servant was wrong; wrong in practice or wrong as to doctrine, and that he himself was not only right on all points, but was in a position to set right the other, and that the best way to do it was by smiting him.

But all the while he forgot he had a Master, without whose orders he should not dare to put forward himself and his views. He forgot, too, that his Lord was not delaying his coming; and so, while holding the theory of his Lord's return, he was acting in presumptuous independence, forgetting that his Lord had said that He would bless those who "gave a portion of meat in due season," but would order that he who "smote his fellow-servant," though he thought he "did God service," should be cast into the outer darkness."

But is this not going on at the present time among us? Alas! alas! it is possible even to preach the doctrine of Christ in such a way as to

EXALT SELF BY CONDEMNING OTHERS.

At a recent conference I heard a well-known teacher speak of Atonement in such a way as not to draw the hearers nearer to God in adoration and humility, but to make them think of others—"Stand apart, for I am holier than thou." People in that state of mind do not even ask, "Art thou for us or for our adversary?" and therefore fail to hear those wondrous words, "Nay, but as Captain of the Lord's host am I now come." Have we forgotten that "though we speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not love," it is "sounding brass"? that the leader of a church who "could not bear them that are evil," but "laboured and had not fainted," yet because he had "left his first love" . . . his candlestick should be taken away? Is not this the reason that tens of thousands of sheep, who ought to have been tenderly sought for and fed, are being by shepherds, "who feed themselves, but not the flock;" who forbid "one that casteth out devils in thy name, because he followeth not us?"

DRIVEN FARTHER AND FARTHER AWAY

Surely in this time, when the power of the world and of sin is so great, instead of self-affection and self-papacy, the whole Church should be prostrate at the feet of the Lord asking, "Why could not we cast him out?" and that while condemning instead of having compassion on them that are ignorant and out of the way, there is in our midst habitual sin in disobedience to the commands—"Judge not that ye be not judged;" "Love the brethren."

Is not the state of any who "break one of these least commandments" far more solemn than of those of whom it will be said, "I wot that through ignorance ye did it"? "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth." R

Home Missions.

"The Dawn of Hope."

MANY and helpful are the institutions and departments of philanthropic effort which have arisen in connection with the St. Giles' Christian Mission. The latest annual report, entitled "The Dawn of Hope," gives an interesting panoramic view of the whole.

Conducted in the true spirit of Christianity, with industry and devotion that have earned the praise of the highest authorities, the undertakings which relate especially to the reclamation of the criminal classes have a particular claim upon public sympathy. Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY, who has superintended the work for so long, is able to give cheering news of excellent results. With reference to the

"PRISON GATE FISHING,"

as the endeavours put forth to reach newly-discharged prisoners has been called, Mr. Wheatley remarks:—

We net about 20,000 ex-prisoners annually, and bring them, immediately after their liberation, under the sound of the Gospel—the Gospel of pardon for the vilest and hope for the most dejected.

As we warn our hearers and plead with them, the attentive silence is eloquent. The subdued "click" of the cups against the saucers and the voice of the speaker are the only sounds heard.

Then follows a common-sense effort to deal with urgent needs:—

Breakfast being ended, we deal with those who remain behind to seek our advice and aid. Although the tales we listen to vary from each other in their details, they all have one characteristic, which is always the same—the offence committed has left the offender characterless, and unable to find employment. If we administer temporary assistance, it is comparatively of little value. What the applicants need, and what so many beg for with desperate earnestness, is work—work rather than anything else—the chance to commence life afresh, if only at the bottom of the ladder and by arduous effort.

The letters of thanks received by men who have taken advantage of the proffered aid to return to paths of honesty and truth are many, but best of all are those which allude to a change of heart as well as of circumstance. As illustrating, too, the confidence of ex-prisoners, an interesting letter says:—

B—— F—— will, I understand from the Governor, be released from B—— to-morrow. I beg to enclose £2, which I shall be greatly obliged of your applying for his benefit as you think best. I am inclined to think an overcoat might be useful to him.

While serving three years for forgery, I worked side by side with him for many months. I believe that if he gets a little help at starting (I mean by work being found for him) he will do well.

I heard much of your kindness and real sympathy with those who have failed to keep the "narrow path," and I venture to hope you will succeed in showing B—— F—— a "more excellent way" for the future.

Viewing the matter merely from the standpoint of the economist, the work among lads is of high value to the nation. The Homes in Brooke Street combine the functions of reformatory and Christian training home. Many who have slipped by the way, as well as many who have been trained into habits of vice and crime from their early infancy, are sent to Mr. Wheatley's useful institution as an alternative to prison, and are thereby saved from the moral stigma that attaches to the name of "gaol-bird," and instructed in the principles of religion. The official commendations which appear in the report bear witness to the thoroughness of the work. It was with reference to the efforts made on behalf of the relatives of prisoners that the Public Prosecutor remarked, "No blow of justice falls that does not touch the innocent as well as the guilty, and I think there is no human being in the world who can say that men who go and visit the temporarily widowed wives and temporarily fatherless children are doing anything but the very best of kindness." Doubtless the knowledge of the timely aid afforded in this direction helps to deepen the impression on "hard cases" made at the prison gate breakfasts.

The records of the Women's Home in Drury Lane are as pathetic reading as ever; here are a couple of terse paragraphs:—

M—— M——, charged with sleeping under hedge whilst out working in a potato-field. Remanded one week, and then handed over to Mr. Wheatley. Sent to Home, Drury Lane. After being there three months, sent to a situation. Been in situation twelve months; never in service before.

A—— E—— walked from —— with another girl to London. When they got here the other girl left A——. After walking about some time, brought to the Home by a constable. Stayed in Home three months, then sent to a situation, where she has been eleven months, and giving every satisfaction.

The evangelistic and samaritan work among the poor of St. Giles conducted at the hall in Great Wild Street includes all the usual branches of mission work; while, in these hot August days, the extensive Holiday Homes recently opened at Maldon afford a healthful rest to many a one of the weary denizens of our city slums. Communications respecting the work may be addressed to Mr. W. Wheatley, 4, Ampton Street, Regent's Square, W.C.

The Summer Campaign

OF THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

IT would greatly cheer the hearts of your readers could they know how abundantly prayer has been answered and blessing bestowed upon the multiplied labours of our mission throughout this glorious summer—labours which are still proceeding day by day in town and country, on the sea-beach, and in the villages of our land.

Surely there is a movement of God's Spirit upon the people! How else can we account for the magnificent audiences which gather at the seaside and elsewhere, and listen as if spellbound to the proclamation of God's message of love? How else can we account for the quivering lip, the moistened eye, the anxious look, the sobered and thoughtful countenance? How else account for souls kneeling on the beach, for floods of tears, for fervent prayers of penitence? These we have seen again and again. To God be the glory!

GREAT YARMOUTH

has been one such centre of fruitful work. Since July 16 a protracted Seaside Mission has been daily in progress there under the auspices of our Society. Among the evangelists who have laboured there are Lieut.-Colonel F. Roberts, Major Mackinlay, Mr. Chas. Cook, Mr. George Heath, Mr. G. H. Lord, and Mr. W. J. A. Rowe, while Madame Annie Ryall has assisted by her sweet singing at the Sunday service, and the local clergy and ministers have rendered splendid help. These Sunday services have been held, by special permission of the Corporation, in the great "Singers' Ring"—an open-air concert arena on the beach, which, with its 1,500 seats, its platform for singers and preachers, and its close proximity to the vast crowds on the Parade, forms an admirable vantage-ground for our work. Here an average number of 2,500 people have attended every Sunday, and here, best of all, many precious souls have already been saved. We earnestly ask prayer that Sunday, August 27, the closing day of the mission there, may be the brightest and best of all!

The week-day services on the beach have also been memorable seasons. God has been mightily present, and a determined effort by the enemy to sweep us from the place has been gloriously frustrated by the power of God, constraining the Beach Committee of the Corporation to give a unanimous decision in our favour, thus utterly overthrowing the objectors, and establishing us more securely than ever before.

It would be impossible to tell of all the blessing here. An estimated number of 80,000 excursionists crowded into the town on Bank Holiday, and some thousands of these heard the Gospel. Many who have come for rest and recreation have gone home rejoicing in Christ.

DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN, is another cause of thankfulness. Here we have worked hand in hand with the Manx Free Church Council, our Mission being represented by Mr. B. Barry Wake, Mr. W. A. Kingscote (late R.N.), Sergeant Pullinger, Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, and Mr. J. C. Gray. Vast audiences, sometimes 2,000 in number, have flocked round on the beach, and here again instances of conversion have come under the notice of the evangelists, while many of God's people, as at Yarmouth, have received stimulus and spiritual enlargement.

Time and space fail to tell of Skegness, of New Brighton, of North Wales, of Cornwall, of Montgomery, of Essex, of Shropshire, of Ramsgate, of Goodwood Races, and of many other places, where evangelists from our Mission have pursued their holy toil.

And now we beg the help of our friends in respect of from September 3 to 8, where we are hoping to employ about twenty-five evangelists, if funds be forthcoming, in the endeavour to "rescue the perishing." What an opportunity is that! The St. Leger Race alone brings a vast concourse, not far short of 500,000 strong, and the number increases yearly. Only the Gospel can work the miracle of regenerating the guilty and careless ones found at such a scene. The "God of this world" is their deity, and, sad to relate, in many cases the betting book is their only bible.

DONCASTER RACES,

We have no funds whatever in hand for the vast quantities of literature needed, for travelling expenses, or for board and lodging. In this emergency we look for a renewal of your readers' former generous help, and for instant and prevailing prayer on our behalf.

FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

The Racecourse Mission.

DURING the past month the Racecourse Mission has been at work with vigour, missions having been held at Alexandra Park, Maze (Belfast), and Newton Abbot. It was as a result of the gatherings at Epsom that an earnest friend at Belfast got together a band of workers and invited us to lead the campaign during the Maze races. The Saturday and Sunday were spent at the well-known Shankill Mission (Rev. H. Montgomery), where, both at the open-air and indoor gatherings, sinners sought the Saviour.

At the races we were provided with a furniture van, which served as a store for literature and a prayer-room to which we could retire while the races were run. We were encouraged by the eagerness with which the copies of the Gospels were accepted, especially by a large number of Roman Catholics. At intervals we held meetings on the course, and were listened to with marked attention. At Newton Abbot, whither we were invited by the Y.M.C.A., we made the Association premises our headquarters. We began operations on Sunday evening on the fair field, where crowds had gathered to witness the erection of the shows. A glorious meeting was experienced. Mr. H. Leng helped greatly with his flutina and Gospel solos, deeply interesting the people. Later, we adjourned to the Market Place, where the meeting was continued. On successive evenings evangelistic services were held in the same place with good results, especially at the concluding gathering, where the Holy Spirit was powerfully in our midst. A goodly number of persons followed us to the Y.M.C.A., and were there pointed to the Saviour.

On the course we had great liberty, and the reception of the Gospels was encouraging. The local friends, both at Belfast and Newton Abbot, have formed branches of the Racecourse Mission, affiliated to our headquarters. Friends will be interested to know that we have distributed, since the Epsom meeting, over 30,000 Gospels. Our treasurer is Mr. W. Hodson, North Tadworth, Epsom.

O. L. HEATLEY, Sec.

Lavender Bag Mission.—Miss Puckle desires to thank the kind friends who have so kindly sent lavender and texts for this work, and wishes to let "A. E., a reader of THE CHRISTIAN," know that more of her text cards will be very acceptable. More lavender, too, is greatly needed (only the heads, not stalks, are used), as there are many more hospitals and missionaries to send to, if only the supply of lavender were greater. God continues to use these little things to do his great work, and the texts are often blessed. Address: The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells.

Mission Hall, Callander, N.B.

SOME two years ago we gave an account of blessed work carried on for several years in the above hall, and so real an interest was created in the hearts of many who read it, that, ever since, some have journeyed up to this lovely Highland village on purpose to have fellowship with the workers, and at the same time to enjoy the pure air, beautiful climate, and lovely scenery.

For the glory of God, and the encouragement of his faithful witnesses everywhere, it is right to say the work continues to be signally blessed, and "signs following" the Word preached are always being vouchsafed. The resident workers give an invitation to all who read these lines to come and see for themselves how graciously God continues to own the ministry of his children in this favoured spot.

Mrs. Robertson and her co-worker, Miss Chenevix-Trench are still spared to direct the work, helped by Mr. Fairbairn, their missionary. Thrilling incidents might be told of sinners saved, backsliders restored, and the Lord's own people strengthened, helped and comforted; but the record is above, and there, for reasons which are obvious, it must remain till the Lord Himself comes, and makes manifest the work of all his children.

Meetings are held every day in the week, except Friday. The Misses Hurditch, from London, spoke, the first Sunday in August, to a large and most appreciative congregation, and told how one was expecting to go to India shortly, and the other to Uganda. The people were deeply stirred with the natural and most earnest words of the speakers, and several exclaimed afterwards how much they would like to go to the foreign field too. Miss Gabb, from Swaziland, is to address a similar gathering, and thus the work is made world-wide in its sympathies.

In fellowship with the proposed "Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign," beginning on Oct. 1, a fortnight's Special Mission will be held in the Hall. Mr. C. G. Roger, of the Evangelization Society, is the mission preacher, and the readers of The Christian are asked to join with the local workers in earnest prayer for a mighty revival. There is still much land to be possessed. Many are lamenting everywhere the lack of conversions, and that spiritual interest is waning. Suffer a word, in all love: "This sort cometh not but by prayer and fasting." The Callander workers have this truth so forced on them by the Holy Spirit, that they must pass it on to their brethren and sisters in the Lord's work. A Helper.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association.

OF the many works started by the late C. H Spurgeon for scattering the Word of God among the people, and gleaning in souls, perhaps none can be found more worthy of support and sympathy than the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Society, the earnest labourers of which go from house to house, bearing the heat and burden of the day, carrying the message of salvation to thousands who never enter a place of worship. By the sick bed of the dying, at the doors of homes closed to the parson and the Scripture-reader, these men seek and obtain a hearing where others fail. Among the more respectable they also accomplish a great work by introducing pure literature, and so driving the wedge into, if not entirely breaking down, the walls of that strong Jericho of Satan, impure publications.

Any district which can guarantee £45 a year may be supplied with a worker. This amount has to be assured to the Society, as a colporteur can never be entirely self-supporting. The cost of each colporteur is about £80, and the difference between the £45 guaranteed and the £80 paid is made up from the profits of the sales, and, when these are insufficient, from the General Fund. The committee will welcome the help of more subscribers.

During the past year the Society has increased its districts, and the spiritual results have been very encouraging. Fifty-eight districts were occupied in 1898, and the year's sales amounted to £6,061. In addition to 610,612 publications sold, 59,677 tracts were freely distributed. The thirty-second Annual Report, which can be obtained from Pastor's College, Temple Street, St. George's Road, London, S.E., contains many instances of the soul-saving results.

Miss Hallie Q. Brown.

SOME years ago a traveller passing by a country farmhouse, near Chatham, Canada, might have seen a little girl of eight or nine summers mounted upon a colt, without girth or bridle, dashing up a lane to pasture. Here she would dismount and address cows, sheep, and birds, having separate speeches for the larger animals, and special addresses for the lambs and ducklings. This girl was Miss Hallie Q. Brown, the well-known coloured lecturer and reciter, who, for two years past, has been lecturing in Great Britain. She was born at Pittsburg, Pa. When quite young her parents removed to Canada. She was then sent to the Wilberforce College, Ohio, where she completed her education and took the degree of B.S.

After many years of devoted labour as a successful teacher among her own people in the Southern States, and also in the North, ill-health compelled her to give up teaching, and she devoted her talents and accomplishments to the good of her Alma Mater, an unsectarian institution for the training and education of the Negro.

Miss Brown first lectured in the United States. After taking a course of elocution, she resumed her tours with great and greater success, delivering lectures to children and adults, temperance and literary societies, P.S.A.'s, athenæums, &c.; and raising sums for different objects in connection with the Wilberforce College. She is now in England, her object being to raise funds for a library building, the Douglas Memorial Hall, which is urgently needed for the coloured students. She has met with many kind friends, and we hope that she will meet with many more.

Her répertoire is large, varied and interesting. We heard her "Songs and Sorrows of the Negro Race," a subject which, on account of its pathethic nature, is not in favour with the bulk of people wishing simply to be entertained. We also heard her sing and recite some quaint, humorous pieces, and we find that she has the whole scale of emotions at her command.

Elocution as an art is treated by Miss Brown, in lectures and in classes, as well as in private lessons, by arrangement. Communications may be addressed to 4, Elmsleigh Road, East Hill, Wandsworth, S.W. Wilma Morgan.

St. Bartholomew, 1899.

Oh for a hand to sweep the strings
Of David's harp divine,
And melt the hardness of a heart,
Unhappy France, like thine!

Inconstant Land, still victim to Thy self-elected fate;
The priest enslaves thy conscience dark,
The sword disturbs thy State.

Once drunken with the blood of saints
On dread Bartholomew,
Now thirsting all thy rage to slake
In slaughter of the Jew.

Has Heaven's offended grace denied
The power to read aright
The scroll of thine unhappy past
In penitence and light?

Hast thou not mercy in thy soul
To spare one guiltless Jew?
Or dost thou plot for Israel's sons
A fresh Bartholomew?

Yet Christian prayers shall rise for thee,
And human tears shall fall;
For He, whom thou hast still denied,
Reigns—Jesus, Lord of All.

H. J. R. Marston,
Incumbent of Belgrave Chapel.

The Y.M.C.A. in Canada.—For twenty-five years the Toronto and other Associations in Canada have maintained work in the summer military camps. This year the work at Niagara was in charge of Mr. Thos. A. Rodger, of Toronto, and was an unqualified success. All the methods in use during the recent war with Spain have been used by the Canadian associations for many years. During the four weeks of the camp this year over 7,000 letters were written. Nightly meetings were held, with Gospel talks illustrated by limelight views.

Oxford Letter.

(By Our Own Correspondent.)

OXFORD University Extension Students have just finished the third session of their summer gathering. The subjects chosen have tended not only to expand and improve the mind, but also to raise the moral tone; and at every point the earnest student has found stimulus, not only for thought, but for life. Who shall estimate the influence of the 'varsities in thus moulding the thought and life of thousands? Verily there is a call here to the churches to find a regular place for them in their prayers.

The regatta held this week has brought crowds into the city, and open-air preachers have had interesting meetings. On Thursday we noticed a large gathering in St. Aldate Street, and found a crowd deeply moved by the stirring addresses of the members of Canon Christopher's Mission Band. The burden of their message was: "Jesus Christ is alive. He has raised me from the dead. You know what I was. You see what I am. Can you account for the change in any other way?" It was the argument from experience, stated, we believe, in the power of the Holy Ghost.

We notice with pleasure that a "Rambling Club" has been started in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and it is doing much to provide healthy and profitable recreation for the young men. Saturday afternoon is spent in visiting some place of interest. The party is frequently accompanied by some college professor, and one hears glowing accounts of the happy and instructive walks. Consecrated recreation is a part of the provision which must be made for our young men. How to take rest as well as how to work, how to spend leisure hours as well as how to use our working moments, must be a part of the Christian programme.

Medical Mission to Hop-pickers.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to my letter in The Christian of the 3rd inst., I am thankful to say God is graciously making our way very clear as to Medical Mission Aid to some of the tens of thousands of very poor people who will soon be engaged in hop-picking in Kent for four or five weeks.

Our base will be at Paddock Wood, where the vicar, Rev. A. Havergal Shaw, has given us a very hearty welcome. In this parish alone there will be gathered from 7,000 to 8,000 hop-pickers.

I hope (if sufficient help is forthcoming) we may have five stations, each provided with a mission tent, where, in addition to Medical Mission work, evangelistic services will be held nightly.

I hope it is not necessary for me to say that our desire is to do real home-missionary work—spiritual, evangelical, and undenominational—in brotherly love with all who are seeking to serve the Lord amongst these multitudes of home-heathen.

I shall be glad to hear from any Christian doctors, medical students, ladies with nursing experience, or others willing to help in preaching, singing, visitation, &c., who can spend part or the whole of September with us.

To make the fullest possible use of the services of our helpers in all weathers, we shall need an omnibus or pair-horse covered brake. Perhaps some kind friend will help by providing this, or lending the vehicle or a useful horse or two.

Then we need the services of two cooks, and two or three domestics, who will work heartily, "as unto the Lord," in the houses where our rather large staff of workers will be lodged. If any Christian friends can lend us such help, or if any Christian servants can come to us for the whole or part of September, such help will be most valuable.—Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark Street, S.E.

(1035)

"Uncle" Groom's Homes.

THEY all call him "Uncle," the whole family of them, numbering some 120 girls, in the Homes at Clacton, and about forty in the Cripples Home in Clerkenwell. Mr. John A. Groom is not an ordinary man. Somewhat fragile and delicate of physique, intensely fervent in spirit and large of heart, he is, as everybody knows, or ought to know, founder and secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission, and Pastor at Woodbridge Street Chapel.

In the Home at Clerkenwell crippled and deformed girls are trained in the art of artificial flower-making, until, from being a burden upon their poor parents or upon the community, they are able to earn a comfortable livelihood. But we want you to have a look with us at the Orphan Homes at Clacton. We emphasize the name Homes, for they are not barracks, neither are they mere institutions numbered one, two, three, and so on. It would be difficult to conceive of an orphanage more home-like. There are five houses; each has its "mother," with her two or three big girl helps. No, the houses are not numbered, but each has a name sweet to its little inmates, such as "Snowdrop," "Forget-me-not," "Buttercup," "Daisy," and "Bluebell." Of most pleasing elevation externally, each house, standing in its own garden, is built with an eye to beauty in design. The red bricks are almost covered with roses on this warm June day, while the white window frames and open windows are just an indication of the spotless cleanliness and order within. We enter, and receive a warm welcome from Mr. James Groom, the manager of the Homes; and we wish him many happy returns, for it is his birthday. The interior is as pleasing to the eye as the exterior.

The walls of the ground-floor apartments are covered with varnished sanitary paper of pretty design, while upstairs and in the kitchens the walls are merely coloured. Happy faces welcome us everywhere, for this is a fête day; and as we enter the dining hall we see the motto stretching right across the end, "Happy hearts make happy homes." What a change for some of these poor girls from their former surroundings! We go upstairs and enter a dormitory; what a lot of little beds! some are very small, for the little dots. The apartment is lofty and pleasant; there is simplicity here and no unnecessary furniture.

In another dormitory we see a novel and practical memorial of a good wife erected by the husband, with the careful savings of a lifetime, who, instead of erecting a costly tomb over the grave, chose to perpetuate her memory by the gift of £40 to endow a cot. The fact is quaintly recorded in the husband's own words in a neat tablet over the bed. On the opposite side of the road is the meadow, with a large shed, roofed with corrugated iron, for rainy weather; but to-day is fine and the children are all having tea in the meadow, as they have just trooped in from school. Beyond the meadow is the well-stocked kitchen and fruit garden.

The best of all the good things we could say of this work is that the spiritual atmosphere of the whole is of the best, and the results in definite conversions amongst the older girls are most encouraging. Quite a revival has been granted, until scores have professed personal faith in Christ, and have given unmistakable evidence of a work of grace in their hearts. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. Groom, 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C. W. S.

Keswick Convention.

IT will interest many who have kindly contributed to the Special Fund for enabling missionaries to attend the Keswick Convention, to know that £170 was sent in for this purpose, and that about 170 missionaries from various parts of the world, and belonging to many different societies, were thus assisted, most of them being grouped in sixteen houses. Many letters have since been received, telling of abundant blessing, and expressing grateful thanks to those who have helped to make it possible for so many to attend the Convention. Albert A. Head.

(1038)

Aldersgate Street Prayer Meeting.

A BRISK and breezy meeting was the midday meeting on Monday last. After the special requests had been remembered in prayer, Mr. Julius Rohrbach, of Charlottenburg, Berlin, gave an interesting account of Gospel work in the German Empire. After mentioning that the Kaiser favoured all evangelistic work in the Fatherland, he spoke of the Bible classes held in all the thirteen universities, and told of real aggressive work that was being done in many parts, and of the help afforded by such men as Count Bernstorff and others.

The meeting being thrown open, Mr. Charles Cook spoke of the great blessing he had seen at Yarmouth. One hundred thousand visitors arrived in one week, and the Open-Air Mission of London had sustained gatherings in the open air three times daily, and in the Singers' Ring (seating 1,500) three services had been held every Sunday. Some most interesting cases of conversion were related. Mr. W. R. Lane asked prayer for the services for children at Felixstowe, and told of much blessing among the soldiers encamped at the same place. Mr. Leonard Weaver bore testimony to great blessing at the closing meetings of the great tent services at Tooting.

Fresh interest was added to the meeting by the quaint singing of Miss Hallie Q. Brown, The chairman asked prayer for the coloured races, and for the two great subjects which were before the public, viz., the Dreyfus affair, and the Transvaal question. Of the first, he trenchantly said: "All the world is convinced of the innocence of Dreyfus," and of the latter he remarked, "Most of us think there is no reason why we should go to war." It was a good meeting, and in August, when most people should be away from London, it was surprising that so many were present. C. C.

Missions to Hop-Pickers.

WRITING on behalf of the Mission to Hop-Pickers in the Weald of Kent, Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Kent, writes:—"For over thirty years we have been labouring among the poor hop-pickers in various parts of Kent, and the Lord has set his seal in blessing upon our labours.

"Last year we sent seventeen missionaries into the various districts. The gardens were visited daily throughout the season; camp meetings were held, and open-air services conducted in every hamlet or camp to which the pickers resort. Gospel literature was distributed, and the sick were visited, medical aid being provided where needed. The temporal wants of the many pickers were also attended to.

"This mission is among the oldest. Our one aim is to preach 'Jesus only.' We are glad to know there are other tried and good missions in the field, and would rejoice if every hop-picker could be reached. When the Lord's children are thinking and caring for the poor of the flock, we trust they may remember the Hop-pickers' Mission."

Protestant Children in Catholic Schools.—A teacher writing to Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., concerning the presence of Protestant children in Catholic schools, explains the fact thus: A poor working man's child presents himself or herself for admission to a Board School. The signs of the parents' hard lot are visible on the child. Though clean, his or her clothes are not so good, they are most likely patched, and not cut in the latest fashion, as the poor hard-worked mother has been the tailor. The superior head-teacher looks at the child, sees at a glance the class it belongs to, and does not consider it fit companion for the well-clad children of the clerks and tradesmen, whose children are getting a superior education for nothing at that school. This poor little waif will never be any good in the frequent shows that are held, as its parents are evidently not able to get it ordinary clothes, let alone the extra ones for shows. So the superior head teacher shakes his or her head, and, under one pretence or other, illegally refuses to admit the child. The visitor then comes round and finds the child not in attendance. The mother reports the refusal. The visitor then, instead of reporting the refusal to headquarters as he is bound to do, for his own ease, or to please the teacher, suggests the Romish school. The poor parent, harried by the School Board, is driven, for the sake of peace, to send the children to the last place they would otherwise wish them to go.

National Waifs' Association
(Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES).

ON Thursday, last week, the first general meeting (statutory) of this Incorporated Association was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Strand, when the following twenty-five gentlemen were elected to serve on the Council for the ensuing year:—William Baker, Esq., M.A., LL.B.; Rev. Prebendary Barker, M.A.; Percival Bonwick Beddow, Esq.; Wyndham Anstis Bewes, Esq.; John Bilbie, Esq.; Captain James Cundy; Rev. John Thain Davidson, D.D.; Samuel John Daw, Esq.; Colonel Edward Dru Drury; Colonel Martin Frobisher; Hamilton Arnold Hancock, Esq.; William Wilson Hind Smith, Esq.; Douglas McGarel Hogg, Esq.; Eliot Howard, Esq., D.L., J.P.; Rev. Donald MacLeod, D.D.; James Ewing Mathieson, Esq., J.P.; William McCall, Esq.; Rev. Frederick Brotherton Meyer, B.A.; George Ernest Morgan, Esq., M.A.; Harry Bruce Nisbet, Esq.; The Hon. and Rev. William Talbot Rice, M.A.; Robert Scott, Esq.; William Heathcote Seagram, Esq.; Edward Trotter, Esq.; and Howard Williams, Esq.

In addition to the above elected members of the Council, the following are also ex-officio members of the Council:—The President, all the Vice-Presidents, the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq., and the Founder and Director, Dr. T. J. Barnardo. At the same meeting, Messrs. Carter, Clay, and Lintott, and Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, Bishop, and Clarke were elected auditors for the ensuing year. All communications should be addressed, as heretofore, to Dr. Barnardo, at the Head Offices, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

The Late Rev. W. Murray.

CONCERNING the late Rev. William Murray, whose death was announced in our last issue, a South African correspondent writes: "His illness (pneumonia) lasted only one week. During that time he was scarcely able to speak from excessive weakness. But shortly before the close, he had strength given him to utter a most fervent and touching prayer for his people, pleading with God for a revival. He was a man of prayer. Humble, faithful, and eminently spiritually-minded, he was beloved, not only by his own people, but by the whole church. He had filled his present pastorate for thirty-four years, and besides attending to all the duties belonging to a very extensive parish, he founded and collected the means for maintaining two flourishing institutions for the deaf and dumb and for the blind. These are the enduring monuments of his tender sympathy with suffering. As convener of the Home Missions of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa, he will be greatly missed. He was the third son of the late Rev. A. Murray, of Graaff Reinet. Three of his own sons have entered the ministry: Andrew, minister of Wienen, in Natal; John, who was his father's assistant; and William, who is a missionary of the D.R. Church in Nyassaland. He rests from his labours, and his works do follow him.

Conference of Evangelists.
AN INVITATION.

ON a former occasion we had the pleasure of convening a meeting of evangelists for an all-day conference, for fellowship and the consideration of the best methods for prosecuting the work of evangelization.

We are glad that the time has arrived to invite you to a similar gathering, which will be held (God willing) in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate Street, London, E.C., on Monday, September 25, 1899.

We cordially hope you will be able to attend, and ask an interest in your prayers on behalf of the gathering.—Yours sincerely,

R. C. Morgan.
F. W. Lawrence.
M. H. Hodder.

Other Lands.

Progress in Japan.—II.

THE number of Protestant Christians in Japan is only about one to every 1,000 of the population. And yet this small proportion is making itself felt everywhere to a very remarkable degree. The first and the last President of the Lower House of the Diet were Christians. It is reported that there are more than forty papers or periodicals issued in Japan that are published in the interests of Christianity, or are controlled by Christian men. There are 153 Christian officers in the Japanese Army, and there were recently seventy members of the Japanese Christian Medical Association.

There are forty members of the Y.M.C.A. in the Tokyo University; and the president of the Y.M.C.A. in Tokyo is Capt. Serata, who is the private secretary of the Minister of the Navy.

The Tokyo pastor, who was appointed chaplain in the prison, has since been given the position of instructor in a school that has just been established for training prison and other officials.

The chief of Forestry in Western Shikoku, the head of the military prison at Marugame, and one of the chief officials in the Observatory at Nagano and at Tokushima, are Christians.

A missionary from Japan recently made a visit to the city of Hankow, in Central China. When he first reached the city he did not understand the language of the people around him, and he was at a loss to know what best to do. Presently he saw on the street a gentleman and lady dressed in European costume, whom he soon discovered to be the resident Japanese Consul and his wife. To his great surprise he found that they were both Christians, and he received from them a most cordial welcome. A Japanese Christian has recently been employed in the Customs service at Amoy, China.

In the banks, railway service, and other business enterprises, Christian young men are apparently in demand.

Some time last year an epidemic broke out in a small village in the province of Joshu. A Christian nurse was sent from Tokyo to assist in the care of the sick. She took the disease and died. Her peaceful, happy death made such a deep impression upon the attendant physician and others, that they sent for a Christian preacher to come and tell them of a faith that could thus sustain its votaries in the last and trying hour. The doctor opened his own house for preaching, and already seven entire families have professed their faith in a crucified Redeemer.

Some eighteen years ago a colporteur went to the province of Chiba, and told one of the people there about the religion of the Bible. The man was not especially impressed at the time; but since then he has gradually lost his faith in the Shinto and Buddhist worship, and the truth and value of what he then heard have grown upon him.

A few months ago he came to Yokohama, and searched out the colporteur in order to hear more of the new doctrine. Then he procured a copy of the Scriptures and returned to his home rejoicing.

H. Loomis,
Agent, American Bible Society, Yokohama.

Jewish Migration.—Last year about 20,000 Jews, of Russian nationality, left the port of Hamburg. Of these, 6,530 went to England, and 13,230 to North America. The total emigration is an increase of 5,000 upon the year. The German authorities subject Jews from Russia to a strict examination, and those that are poor are not allowed to remain in Germany.

A Cheering Letter.

WRITING to a friend at Margate, Rev. A. B. Fisher, C.M.S. missionary, gives an account of his return to Central Africa:—I am all alone in this great country of Bunyoro, and having times of great blessing. The Bishop baptized the young King Josiya and his sister before he returned, together with three others; I have since baptized five, making in all ten converts since we commenced work in February last. I have preached to hundreds for the first time, sold 700 Watika reading sheets, and forty-three have learned to read a New Testament. We have at this moment three churches, and by the time this reaches you there will be six throughout the country. The king is about twelve years old; he has built me a tutorial palace, one side of which is much tilted, so that the rain must fall inside. A few nights ago I tried to save my things by constructing a raft!

We look down on the great Lake Albert and up the Nile, and as I look at this great volume of water tumbling down (the salvation of Egypt) how I long to take the water of life to the millions who line its banks! We are fighting here daily the power of darkness, and

GOD IS GIVING US VICTORY.

Human sacrifice is now a thing of the past, although three months ago common. Close to our church at Kawolo may still be seen the holes into which the victims were thrown. At Kabarega's old capital, burning (that the smoke from the human flesh may propitiate the devil) and extracting the teeth in the lower jaw, are very common; but little King Josiah and the Christian converts have joined me against these and all other horrible customs.

A few days ago I caught a woman who had just fired an arrow with a blunt iron shaft at her little girl's forehead, that she might bleed her and drive out the devil. I am now treating the little creature for skull fracture. How hard the devil comes down on these little mites! But their cry has gone up.

The young king has spent all his taxes on buying New Testaments for his people, who have learned to read very quickly. I feel, on putting one of these silent missionaries into their hands, that direct to their dark souls. A young prince last Sunday publicly burnt his gods and charms opposite the church and five others have followed his noble example.

GOD IS GOING TO SPEAK

In December, 1895, when I visited Kawolo, itinerating, I told a young fellow, called Fatalsi ("gun-cap" on account of his fire and energy), about Jesus, and gave him a reading sheet. God spoke to that boy's soul. I never saw him again until I met him here last month. He is now my right hand. With his burnt face and toothless lower jaw, he stands out before his dark countrymen, and lets them have the Gospel straight from the heart, while the tears come down my face with joy. There is another little fellow, named Maruleta, whom I will baptize next Sunday, who heard the message about the same time. I am sending him, at his own request, out to a distant garden to testify of Jesus.

When I was with you at Margate, I told you truly about the triumph of the Gospel in its regeneration of Toro. There are now forty churches there, manned by forty-five teachers, supported by 400 converts; and I hope soon to be able to tell you the same glorious fact in connection with this dark country of Bunyoro. There are four new tribes close to us—waiting for the men with the message to come to them. Alas! where are they? Where are all those whose hearts are illuminated by the blessed Gospel light? Why don't they let it shine out here amidst the thick darkness?

WAITING TO HEAR THE GOSPEL,

Where are all the strong young men who pray, "Lord, where lies my life-work"? In God's name, and from a heart full of joy, I unhesitatingly answer, "Here." I believe this country is the key to the Soudan.

The Union Jack, emblazoned with the ancient symbol of Christianity, now floats on the Nile breezes, at Fashoda from the Egyptian side, and at Dufile from the Uganda side; the Uganda railway is advancing quickly towards the Victoria Lake; Mr. Albert Lloyd has just walked across the Congo Free State without an escort; France and Belgium have thrown a chain of forts across the countries, N. and N.E. of Bunyoro, and Col. Kitchener is completing the conquest of Kordofan; and last, but not least, Col. Evatt has just captured Kabarega, King of Bunyoro, and Mwanga, King of Buganda, and completely smashed up the remnant of the Nubian rebels who have kept this country so unsettled. I say, let all these facts be a and the Christian manhood of England, Ireland, and Scotland, including that fine material that I met last year at the Children's Special Service Missions, under my esteemed friend and brother Mr. Bishop, to come to the help of darkest Africa and give them the Word of Life, even before the bale of cloth.

LOUD CALL TO OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE,

I met a man at Broadstairs last year with a wonderful gift for languages. I am praying that he may be sent out here to reduce these languages to writing. I shall be with you in spirit as you gather the children on the Margate sands this year; may you have much blessing. Give my love to all who remember me. The loveballs or footballs which the children gave us are a source of great delight to all the boys here. They play almost every day; in fact, they are all "keen footers," hampered in no way with boots or much clothing. They all send their love to your children, and a great big "thank you" for the footballs.

"Salvation Under the Tricolor."

THERE are some interesting descriptions of work in the Annual Report of Salvation Army work in France, recently issued by Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Hellberg, under the title of "Salvation under the Tricolor." Among other stories recounted is one of an absinthe drinker:—

One Sunday afternoon a drunken man entered one of our halls, led by his little girl. In his button-hole could be seen the ribbon of a medal won in an African campaign. He was a Catholic by faith, but an incorrigible drunkard. While with his regiment, he used to drink undiluted absinthe. In his family he had been a cruel tyrant. He abused his wife and children, who fled to hide themselves when he came home. Once, in a mad frenzy, he flung himself from a fourth-floor window; but, marvellously enough, without injuring himself. In our meeting, he came to realize that there was a God, who was able to thoroughly change him; and he knelt at the penitent form. His greatest pleasure is now to carry through the streets the board announcing the meetings.

The first men's shelter opened in Paris has proved a success in every way, and, in some of the darkest districts of the city, the "Sisters of Hope," as the slum workers are named, have accomplished much good. The work in the six evangelistic centres in the city is encouraging, and the Commissioner and his wife earnestly desire to double the number of corps before the opening of the great Exhibition next year.

There is also a pressing need for a food depôt and shelter for young women. Communications may be addressed to them at 3, Rue Auber, Paris.

Railway Men in Russia.—At the invitation of Prince Hilkoff, Russian Imperial Minister of Railways, Mr. Clarence J. Hicks, senior secretary of the American Y.M.C.A. Railroad Department, has recently made a three months' tour in Russia, studying the life conditions of the railway men in that Empire with a view to submitting recommendations towards the organization there of some work similar to that of the American Railroad Associations. It was a constant surprise and satisfaction to Mr Hicks to learn how much has already been done by the Russian railways to minister to the comfort of their employés, and to better the condition of the men and their families on the private as well as on the Government lines. He has presented a report which has received the hearty approval of both Prince Hilkoff and the Emperor.

Persecuted Christians.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE ACTION.

A MONTH ago (July 20) we drew attention to the fines and imprisonments inflicted in Saxony upon our Baptist brethren, who had offended by holding treats for children, and speaking to them of Christ. This, according to the present law in Saxony, is a criminal offence if any children of Lutheran parents are present. Prayer and effort are needed now on the part of all Christians in order to obtain some amelioration of the condition of our brethren in Dresden and the surrounding towns. The Evangelical Alliance has this matter in hand at the present time, and the secretary is now on a visit to Dresden to organize and make arrangements.

The condition of the Armenians in the villages seems recently to have improved, and the last letter received from the correspondent of the Alliance at Van, dated July 17, in acknowledging money sent for relief, reads as follows: "We hope that the men in the villages will be able to pull through now till the harvest; but in the cities, where there is no harvest to be expected, there is still a large number of refugees, and the price of bread continues very high. Your money, therefore, is now used to continue the distribution of free bread. Please convey to the donors our heartiest thanks for this timely relief."

With regard to the Stundists, since last month an important meeting has been held, and steps have been decided upon of a nature that cannot be published; but it will be an encouragement to friends of the Evangelical Alliance to know that a very distinct effort is now on foot from which excellent results, under God's blessing, are expected.

The persecutions in Madeira have been brought before the courts of law in that country. The ringleaders have been fined and imprisoned, and the Roman Catholic vicar of San Antonio, who incited the attack on the missionary, has been removed to another district. The Protestant publication in Madeira gives verbatim the question asked in the House of Commons by Admiral Field on behalf of the Evangelical Alliance, and the answer given by the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and attributes the happy result, under God's blessing, to the fact that the whole matter was brought prominently before the House of Commons, so that the influence of the British Government was brought to bear upon the Portuguese authorities. The Roman Catholics are, however, extremely bitter, and STILL MORE REMAINS TO BE DONE.

From Peru no further recent tidings have been received, but the following extract from The Times puts the facts succinctly:—

Admiral Field asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether there were six British missionaries resident in Cuzco, the capital of the ancient Inca Empire of Peru, and whether these persons, who have committed no breach of Peruvian law, have, nevertheless, been refused Governmental protection in the event of their lives being endangered through religious fanaticism.

Whether the Peruvian Government had communicated this decision to the British attaché at Lima, who, without expostulation, forwarded the correspondence to the Foreign Office; and whether, under these circumstances, the Foreign Office will at once instruct the British attaché at Lima to secure that constitutional protection to which these British subjects have every right under international law.

The answer of the Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs was as follows:—

"Her Majesty's Government are aware that there are some members of a missionary society resident at Cuzco, and that they were desirous of establishing a school there. It was alleged that their object was to give religious instruction. The Peruvian Government intimated that this could not be permitted, and that persistence would lead to their removal from Cuzco.

"It is not the case that this communication was received without expostulation, as H.M.'s Chargé d'Affaires, in acknowledging it, pointed out that while the opening of a school was a matter within the discretion of the local authorities, who were at liberty to grant or withhold the necessary licence, the right of British subjects to reside in Peru on the same footing as native citizens was a matter of treaty right.

"No further complaints have been received, and H.M.'s Minister may be confidently trusted to do all that is necessary for the protection of British subjects."

The above is a short summary of the last month's work of the Evangelical Alliance on behalf of the persecuted. This Alliance is in itself the Intelligence Department and the Foreign Office of the whole Christian Church, and asks believers in all parts of the world to communicate with it promptly in any case where there is infringement of religious liberty. Those who wish to join in membership or help in the work may write to the care of The Christian.

The Northfield Conference.

A PROMISING BEGINNING.

ON Tuesday, August 1, the great event of the Northfield programme began. Crowds of people came by every train, until every hotel, boarding-house, and dormitory was full. Indeed, it became necessary to open the dormitories of the Mount Hermon Seminary several miles away; and Mr. Moody, with his usual thoughtfulness, announced that he had arranged for conveyances to take the people, compelled to stay there, to and from the meetings.

One of the most interesting features of the present Conference is the assignment of Weston Hall to the pastors of the New York Presbytery. Last year Rev. Dr. John Balcom Shaw and Rev. Dr. Wilton Merle Smith were at Northfield; and so deeply impressed were they by the addresses heard that, on their return, they took steps looking to a larger delegation of New York Presbyterian pastors this year.

Mr. Moody heartily approved of the scheme, and every pastor of a church or chapel was invited to be the guest of some unknown friend who had placed in the hands of Drs. Smith and Shaw a sum sufficient to meet all the bills of travel and board. Several clergymen, not pastors, are also in the party which occupies Weston Hall, one of the largest and best appointed buildings in the seminary grounds.

In speaking of this assembly, Rev. Dr. Wilton Merle Smith said: "The hard-worked clergyman needs the spiritual refreshment of some such place as Northfield. He will fill up for the entire year if he attends one of these conferences.

MANY A CHURCH IS BETTER, and more spiritual to-day because its pastor had attended a conference at Northfield. It would be a happy thing, indeed, if every Presbytery, if every Methodist Conference, if every Baptist and Congregational Assembly—in short, if the clergymen of all denominations—might know the spiritual quickening of a Northfield Conference. These words are spoken in the hope that other Presbyterians and clergymen of all denominations may be led to attend this summer's Conference. The 500 ministers present last August were unanimous in their judgment that never wiser or more helpful preaching to ministers was heard than that which came with such inspiration from the lips of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. He is preeminently a preacher for preachers. As he is to be at this year's Conference, August 1 to 20, it will be a rare opportunity for every hungry clergyman to have a feast indeed. There will be at least forty or fifty of the New York Presbytery in attendance. Let all others come who can, that this year's Conference may be especially a great blessing to the clergymen of our land."

Rev. J. Balcom Shaw, D.D., preached the first sermon of the Conference, in the introduction of which he paid an eloquent tribute to the work of last year's meetings. He said: "In the providence of God, two or three members of the Presbytery found themselves at the Conference a year ago. Some of you will remember the day that Mr. McGregor spoke upon 'Peter in Prison' and how he got out, and how we also were in prison and how we might get out. Then the same morning came Mr. Morgan's no less wonderful sermon on 'The Man with a Withered Hand.' You recall his picture—the offer of help, the spirit of the man crying out, 'I cannot!' Again the command, 'Stretch forth thy hand.' The man looks up and catches the face of Christ, and he says instantly, 'That man wouldn't torment me;' and his helplessness was matched by the helpfulness of the Master. You recall also the experience of the day when those sermons were given. We met at the close of that remarkable service; but we said, 'We cannot talk now.' We wanted to be alone. Speaking for myself, I can say that one of the greatest battles of my life was fought out here in Northfield that afternoon. We went back to our churches with new spirits, and determined to carry the spirit received here into our churches."

At Mr. Moody's request, the speaker then described the remarkable work of grace which had been wrought in New York during the past, resulting in the gathering of so many ministers on this occasion. On Wednesday morning Mr. Moody conducted a CONFERENCE ON "REVIVALS."

His address was simple, practical, and earnest, incident, experience, and exhortation following each other in rapid succession. At night Dr. A. T. Pierson preached on "The Christian's Relation to the World."

One of the secrets of Mr. Moody's influence was manifested in this meeting, while making the announcements. He said: "I want fifty cents out of each person here. Now, don't look glum when I ask for this small amount. The New York Tribune is printing two columns a day about this Conference, and the paper to-day contains the magnificent address delivered last night by Dr. Shaw, of New York. It is a great thing to have a great daily paper report a meeting like this. You may send a tract to a friend, but he won't read it. He will read the Tribune. It costs some people fifty or a hundred dollars to come to Northfield. For fifty cents we will send a copy of the Tribune every day during the Conference to any friend whose name you give; and then, of course, you will want a paper yourself. That speech of Dr. Shaw's was just what this country needs. Send it to your minister."

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan was the speaker on Thursday morning, his text being Is. lii. 2: "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." In subsequent meetings of the week he delivered a series of addresses on "The Will of God," and is expected to speak almost daily throughout the Conference.

Dr. Torrey, during the week, also spoke daily on "Prayer," very many people attending his eminently helpful and practical meetings. On Monday Revs. F. B. Meyer and S. A. Selwyn arrived. Mr. Meyer had spent the Sabbath in New York, preaching in the historic sanctuary of Dr. John Hall. He had very little rest after his long journey to Northfield, for he spoke in the evening on John vii. 37, in which he said, "Christ contemplates Himself as the river at which we drink, and then He into rivers of which other people drink."

TRANSFORMS OUR LIVES

The musical service is under the direction of Mr. Sankey, assisted by Mr. Stebbins. The Mount Hermon Quartet is in great favour both with Mr. Moody and the people. A large choir occupies the platform behind the speakers during the first part of the service; but seats are reserved for them in the body of the hall, and before the preacher begins to deliver his message the platform is cleared, even Mr. Moody himself taking a chair on the floor in front of the speaker. Thus all hearers can see the speaker's face, and on the other hand there is nothing to distract or take away the attention of the congregation.

Italian Church Reform Association.—Count Campello, in his quarterly report, says: "The reform movement began in Rome in 1882. Unfortunately, we could not then maintain our position there. Yet good seed was sown; our congregation was very numerous, and full of promise. After fifteen years, we are seriously thinking of resuming the work in the capital of united Italy. We are encouraged by a guarantee of help from England, and commend to all who love the Gospel the claims of a city once the cradle of civilization, now groaning under the yoke of the Papacy, the enemy of all progress." Copies of the report may be had (3d. each) from the office of the Association, Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

Mr. Moody on Summer Work.

I BELIEVE, deep down in my heart, that the large American cities are never going to be evangelized until just such methods of work as Gospel tents are multiplied. I am convinced that we must do some right hard work in New York and other great cities during the summer months. For some years past, the work of evangelization in large cities has lost in the summer about all the ground that has been gained in the winter.

The talk about everybody going out of town during the hot weather is nonsense. Just because a few brown-stone mansions in the neighbourhood of Fifth Avenue are all boarded up in the summer, it must not be imagined that New York leaves New York and goes into the country. Really the summer is the for there are fewer topics to absorb public attention in hot weather than in cold weather.

BEST TIME FOR EVANGELIZATION,

There are four main topics that usually engage the attention of the newspapers and the people. These are religion, politics, business, and education. In the summer, business is more or less light, politics are partly dormant, and the schools are closed; so religion has a chance to come to the front.

Again, I say that summer is the very best time to reach the people. You do not have to go into the houses to do it. You can find them outside, whole families sitting on the stoops. In the winter you have to go inside to rout them out.

I believe I can suggest a way in which people can be reached in the summer: A large number of ministers leave New York during the summer months for the country. I would suggest that the ministers who go to the country should be replaced, for a few weeks at a time, by country ministers. I would also suggest an interchange of pulpits by ministers on either side of the Atlantic.

I do not wish to convey the impression that the Christian outlook is anything but bright. What I wish to insist upon strongly is that a great mistake has been made in the past in leaving the millions of people massed together in the great cities without Christian guidance during the summer.

Every church in New York should have a roof-garden. The thing is perfectly practical, and there is no reason why we should not convert as many sinners in a roof-garden as in a church. I would make the as attractive as the theatre roof-gardens. The services would be the same as in the stuffy churches, and there should be plenty of good singing and good preaching.

CHURCH ROOF-GARDENS

I would sell lemonade and all kinds of temperance drinks. Over in Liverpool we have little coffee places where a man can go and treat his friends. There is no reason why we should not do the same thing here, and do it in popular and well-arranged roof-gardens.

Christians and sinners both like fresh air, and when Christianity and fresh air can be found together, the people, as a whole, are apt to take advantage of the fact.

One objection may be made, that we shall have to remodel our churches. Well, let us remodel them. The theatres were remodelled to suit the popular taste, why should not the churches be altered also? Because churches in the past have been built with arched roofs is no reason for continuing to build them like that. They would be better now with flat roofs.

Temperance Reform.—Mr. William Tallack, of the Howard Association, in a letter to The Times, urges the friends of Temperance to close their ranks and unite upon reforms that are at present feasible. He says: "The friends of Temperance, in the wide sense of the word, have now a most practicable and hopeful basis to go upon, if they will concentrate their efforts upon the least line of resistance of those who differ from them, as indicated by the majority report of the recent Royal Commission on Liquor Licences, or on those recommendations in regard to which the Commissioners are unanimously agreed. By confining present efforts to these points, or even to a few of them, immense social benefits may be obtained."

Rabbi Lichtenstein.

THE sixth annual statement of the Council for Rabbi Lichtenstein has just been published. This aged servant of God, although suffering from the infirmities consequent upon his years, is still proclaiming the Gospel among his brethren of Israel, and that with considerable success. The story of his conversion to Christianity is pathetically told in the report in his own words. After recounting his early experiences of Jews being persecuted by Christians, he says:—

"As impressions of early life take a deep hold, and as in my riper years I still had no cause to modify these impressions, it is no wonder that I came to think that Christ Himself was the plague and curse of the Jews, the origin and promoter of our sorrows and persecutions. In this conviction I grew to years of manhood; and still cherishing it, I became old. I knew no difference between true and merely nominal Christianity; of the Fountain-head of Christianity itself I knew nothing.

"Strangely enough, it was the horrible Tisza-Eszlar blood accusation which first drew me to read the New Testament. This trial brought from their lurking places all the enemies of the Jews, and once again, as in olden times, the cry re-echoed, 'Death to the Jew!' The frenzy was excessive, and among the ringleaders were many who used the name of Christ and his doctrine as a cloak to cover their abominable doings. These wicked practices of men, wearing the name of Christ only to further their evil designs, aroused the indignation of the true Christians, who, with pen on fire and warning voices, denounced the lying rage of the Anti-Semites. In articles written by the latter in defence of the Jews, I often met with passages where Christ was spoken of as the one who brings joy to man, the Prince of Peace, and the Redeemer; and his Gospel was extolled as a message of love and life to all people. I was surprised, and, scarcely trusting my eyes, I took a New Testament out of its hidden corner—a book which some forty years ago I had in vexation taken from a Jewish teacher, and I began to turn over its leaves and to read.

"All seemed so new to me, and yet it did me good, like the sight of an old friend, who has laid aside his dusty, travel-worn garments, and appears in festal attire, 'like a bridegroom in priestly robes, or a bride adorned with her jewels.' 'How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth' (Isaiah lii. 7). This was the light that shone upon me from the New Testament; and now I understood that, as the God of our fathers, in bygone days, went before them in a pillar of cloud to show them the right way, so in this, our long and dreary night of suffering, all unknown to us, Christ Himself has gone before us, to prepare the way of Redemption."

The hon. secretary of the Council is Rev. David Baron, 23, Boscastle Road, Highgate Road, London, N.W.

Among the Yahgans.

OUR work in Tierra del Fuego has been for years altogether uphill. The people (Yahgans) are very low in the human scale, and have no sort of religious idea at all. No word for God is found in the language, nor is a future state believed in. Still, faithful labourers in the past have given talents, and in some cases life itself, for their spiritual uplifting, and to-day we are reaping the seed patiently sown.

During the past week several have publicly stood up to confess Christ as Saviour, and the Holy Spirit is in our midst visibly. We are full of praise to God. We expect great things, and rely on the Holy Spirit to bring them to pass. I ask your prayers, that the hearts of my dear wife and myself, the only two at this station, may be cheered and strengthened.—Yours, in the love of Jesus, PETER PRINGLE.

Y.M.C.A. Work in Calcutta.

THIS Association is launching out upon a building scheme which will materially help to extend the usefulness of its work. Mr. J. Campbell White writes:—"We have taken a most important step forward in the purchase of a splendid site for the Central Branch building. For nearly six years we have got along as best we could in rented quarters, but have all the time felt that they were utterly unsuited to the work. As long ago as March, 1895, a fund was started for this building. Promises to the extent of Rs.40,000 were then made, of which Rs.15,000 has been paid in. Though we have been searching for a site ever since then, the one we have now bought is the only one we have had an opportunity to secure. I think you understand that the Central Branch is composed almost entirely of young Englishmen, there being about 300 members at present. It is most important that the Association be in a position to do the most effective work possible among them, both for their own sakes, and because of their great influence either for good or bad in this country.

"The site has cost Rs.66,000. Its frontage is 80ft., and its depth 134ft. It is proposed to erect a four-story building, fully adapted to the needs of the work, and equipped with electric lights, fans, an elevator, and other modern conveniences. The third and fourth stories are to be devoted entirely to living rooms for young men. About forty can be accommodated.

"The building and furniture will cost at least Rs.135,000, so the property will be worth Rs.200,000 (about £13,300). It is certain that the rental from the shops on the ground floor will pay the interest on half this amount, so we propose to begin building operations as soon as half the entire amount needed is secured. The College Association property has been correctly described as

'BOUGHT BY THE POWER OF PRAYER.'

May we not count on your 'helping together by prayer' until the amount needed is secured?

"Here at the College branch the work was never so prosperous as it is now. The daily Bible classes for non-Christians are very well attended, sometimes as many as twenty coming in. The three weekly Gospel meetings in Overtoun Hall have been increased to four. The new meeting is specially to give an opportunity to all Christian young men to speak, appealing to their non-Christian brothers. The other regular meetings are each addressed by one speaker, arranged for well in advance. Every Sabbath evening we have a prayer meeting directly after the Gospel meeting. Last week nearly fifty men remained to this service. It has been noticed by outside speakers, who have come occasionally for two or three years, that the audience is growing much more attentive and reverent. We are most firmly convinced that the spiritual evolution of a great empire is steadily going on; one day, perhaps suddenly, the climax must come. 'The little one shall become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in its time.'"

The present headquarters is in College Street, Calcutta.

The Gospel at Rennes.

THE little town in Brittany, in which the stirring scenes in the Dreyfus tragedy are being enacted, has, of course, been filled with visitors during the past week or so. Where the people are, the Gospel should be carried. Hence, the organizing secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, Mr. Vernon Harcourt, has left for Rennes for the purpose of distributing copies of the illustrated portions among the soldiers and gendarmes, and the contending factions of the general public.

Mr. Vernon Harcourt will be quite at home in this work. He served in the French Army during the Prussian War, and speaks the language with grace and energy. He will address meetings, and preach as opportunities may offer. There is an audacity about this piece of work which should commend it to the prayerful support of Christian people.

Fresh Efforts for France.

IT is with both painful and agreeable interest that one looks abroad on the fair fields of France to observe the impediments and encouragements given to the progress of the religion of Christ. Can it be believed that to a considerable extent an organized and Jesuitical conspiracy opposes such progress, characterized by envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness? The mot d'ordre is there given, emanating from a professedly Christian Church; and it actually has for its enemy the blessed and inspired Bible and its disseminators and expounders.

The humble colporteurs and evangelists oppose the general ignorance, fanaticism, and unbelief, in patience and with other weapons—viz., love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. This is their aim, at least.

Generous, intelligent, and observant French people are not slow to compare these different tactics; and, as sure as light is different from darkness, they will at length draw their own conclusions.

But it is not only the people who thus discriminate, there are not a few élite of the clergy who do so, who read the Scriptures and encourage their circulation, whose minds are formed by their contents, and are glad to see their parishioners also influenced by them.

One remarked to a colporteur, "Sell many, and seek to put

A LITTLE RELIGION INTO THE HEART

of my parishioners, for they need it." Another said he sincerely wished I would place at V———, and everywhere where I could, "as many as possible of the sacred writings." And again, another congratulated me on my work of "placing the Gospel in the hands of his parishioners." These cases might be multiplied, thank God.

It may be interesting to your readers if I narrate the intercourse I had with one like-minded—as I occupied, for a time, the bureau of the Depôt Central. I was one morning called down into the shop to speak to a curé of one of the principal churches in Paris, a great linguist, who was buying New Testaments in various languages, to compare them as he took his promenade in the Tuilerie gardens. I invited him upstairs into my bureau, and found him a sympathetic believer, and we discoursed for a time on the truths we held in common. He informed me he had been for a time a missionary among the North American Indians; and, travelling once in the United States, he came to a town where preaching was going on. He entered the hall, and a hymn they were singing greatly struck him. It was about a lost sheep. He could not forget the impression it made upon him, and he longed ever since to find it. I immediately turned to McAll's hymn book, with music, and showed him—

There were ninety and nine that safely lay.

He took it into his hand and sang it through very sweetly, and was so pleased to recover it.

Before leaving, we knelt in prayer. As he had never been in the habit of extemporaneous prayer, he did not open his lips, but thanked me for my kind desires for him. We that day formed a firm friendship, which lasted for a few years. His subsequent history was very interesting; and this little notice may indicate that there are not a few in the Roman Catholic Church who are living in the life of Christ, and under the power of the Holy Spirit's teaching. The Gospel, by whomsoever proclaimed, is the great hope of France. The Roman Catholic Abbé Gayraud, indeed, says: "It is the Word of God that people expect to hear when we address the great crowds from our pulpits."

But an appeal has been issued by one of the most earnest and spiritual pastors for a novel effort—a new élan to promote the work of God in France. It is entitled "L'Eglise et l'Evangélization, par S. Delattre, Clermont-Ferrand." He calls upon pastors of churches to break through the monotony of their weekly routine, often leaving the people surfeited with such constant repetition, and to go forth with one or two assistants and break up fresh ground in towns and villages entirely destitute of the Gospel. He proposes that services should be held every night, for a month or more, in a lively and interesting manner; and, should there be conversions, to appoint some as elders to watch over the inquirers, and then return home to the flock and report to them of the Lord's doings, which would act as a powerful means of quickening them. The pastor would see what a benefit it had been to cast them on their own resources for prayer, cantiques, reading and studying the Word of God, &c., &c. For this is the great need in such congregations—a felt sense of responsibility. As Laboulaye says: "The most fatal thing one could do for a man is to diminish his feeling of responsibility." The report of such aggressive work would encourage the people to send him forth again, and perhaps some even to join him, and thus emulate the proceedings of the Apostles in Acts xiii.-xvii.

The pamphlet is well worth reading and study, and the great spiritual need in this dear country warrants every likely effort for its evangelization. Write to him for it!

Paris. George Pearse.

Working Girls in Christiania.

A HOME for business girls in connection with the Y.W.C.A. was started in the Norwegian capital about four years ago. It is situated amidst healthy surroundings and has a charming view, which make it a most attractive place. It accommodates twenty girls in its comfortable and homelike rooms.

The girls' ages range from eighteen to twenty-five, just an age when many of them are thrown for the first time on their own resources, and when a Home such as this is most beneficial to them.

The Home is struggling hard for its existence, and last winter was a very trying one, prices rising 20 per cent. It has no foundation fund to fall back upon, and the income is not sufficient to cover expenses, the girls being unable to pay much out of their slender earnings. The annual deficit is about £25.

In spite of these discouragements, there is much to be thankful for, many testimonies having been received from the parents and the girls themselves as to the benefits derived. If any of our readers should ever visit Christiania, the matron at No. 7, Victoria Terrace, will be delighted to see them.

Sickness in a Children's Home.

THE friends of little children (British or American) born on foreign soil will grieve to hear of the outbreak of measles, with complications, at our Children's Home, 35, Bd. Bineau, Neuilly-sur-Seine. The lady in charge writes that thirteen out of a household of forty to fifty have been stricken. "Paris," she adds, "is full of disease. The streets are being taken up for the Paris Exhibition, drains exposed, and the various smells are too horrible. Typhoid, diphtheria, measles, scarlatina are everywhere; the weather is oppressively hot, without any breeze, and no signs of rain.

Another lady writes: "Bacilli have appeared in the Source Miroir, which feeds the Eau de Vannes from which our homes are supplied, so that we fear to drink water."

Our children are naturally of delicate mould, chiefly the offspring of mixed marriages (British and American upon one side), and often, alas! born in sorrow.

Now, this unforeseen calamity has overtaken us, whilst our friends are wandering in the health resorts of Europe for holiday amusement; and we are stricken with a sickness, not only within, but without our walls—pestilential air and surroundings.

If our children are to have fair play, the entire household needs to be removed to a purer atmosphere, and the building entirely cleansed and renovated. But we have no means.

Who will help in this real time of need? Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Ada M. Lewis, 45, Eastbourne Terrace, London, W.

European Children in India.

THE Wynberg Christian Training School, Orphanage, and Infants' Home is located at Mussooree, in the N.W. Provinces of India, in a charming hill climate, about 6,500 feet above the sea. Its aim is to provide a thorough Christian education, apart from sect or denomination, for the children of European and Eurasian parents (without respect to creed or occupation) who are too poor to avail themselves of the ordinary schools of India. Many children have been, through its instrumentality, rescued from utter destitution. The want of such an institution has been much felt, for children such as those taken in at Wynberg, unless they have the means of obtaining a decent education, rapidly degenerate in India, and almost inevitably end in the wretched condition of an European loafer in the bazaars, an outcast despised by both races, and crushed down by a fate perhaps even worse than is known in the slums of London.

The charges for education and board vary according to the incomes of parents and guardians. In many case (at present about one-fifth of the whole number) the children are taken in, educated, and clothed entirely without charge; the maximum fee for those few who can afford it is only Rs.20 per mensem. The staff is composed, as far as possible, of true, earnest Christian workers on very small salaries, and the first and chief aim of the education provided is to train the children, whose ages at the present time range between six months and nineteen years, in the true tenets and practice of Christianity, to fit the boys to fill posts in in India, and to teach the girls something of domestic service. In the higher classes the Bible exclusively is used in religious training, and amongst the very young children "Line upon Line" and "Peep of Day" are also in use.

THE VARIOUS GOVERNMENT OFFICES

The institution has gradually grown up from very small beginnings made in the year 1888. It was originally promoted by a few earnest Christian men and women, called "the Christian Brotherhood for fellowship and good works," who, for the first two years, successfully maintained a school of twelve or fifteen children, aided by devoted women who laboured there for their board and lodging only. The institution was greatly enlarged, and removed to its present site at Wynberg in 1894, in consequence of a munificent gift of a large house and some ground surrounding it by the late Mr. G. H. Meakin, of Poona, a gift which was supplimented in 1896 by a donation of Rs.9,177 from Mr. Meakin's widow, for the payment in part of the cost of a new dormitory for boys. The whole building required considerable alteration to adapt it to the purposes of a school, and it was also considered advisable to purchase two other adjoining houses to meet the ever-increasing wants of the institution.

The Government of India give a yearly grant-in-aid to all educational establishments of this kind, if they fulfil certain conditions with regard to space, number, and quality of teachers, &c. These conditions have been fulfilled at Wynberg, and consequently the Government grant is now received annually, and this has helped us much. But we are still hampered by the payment of interest on the money borrowed to effect the necessary changes in the building, and to purchase the two houses already mentioned. The total building debt now amounts to Rs.8,500 inclusive of interest (about £560 at the present rate of exchange), and if by the liberality of Christian friends in England this debt could be wholly, or in part, removed, we should be in a position to carry on the work more efficiently, and probably also to extend it materially.

We have had an average of 103 children in the school for the last three years: but this year they only number eighty-five, with five or six more expected, for we have been obliged, much against our wishes, to refuse nearly twenty, simply for want of funds.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the vice-chairman of the committee, Colonel G. Strahan, R.E., Derha Doon, India.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

AMONG the many notes of congratulation received from readers in token of our fortieth birthday, we would not overlook a special class of our friends. In the words of one of these:

I never go to church or chapel for I cannot hear a word. I stop at home and read to my sisters, and we enjoy the paper very much.

Our invalid readers have a tender place in our hearts, and we pray that these pages may be more and more blessed to them. The weak and deficient of the flock of Christ have compensations in the present life, as well as hope of joys in the world to come. Yet a little while, and "the eyes of the blind shall see, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped." As for the inhabitant of that land, he shall not say "I am sick;" "the Lord shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." (Isa. xxxiii. 24; xxxv. 5; Rev. xxi. 4.)

"The memory of thy great goodness." This is a season when many of us have time and opportunity and inducement to go back in memory to the days that are past; and when God, as a living God and Saviour, who has fed us all our life long, ought to be very real to us. We are looking once more on places that are endeared by tender memories, on childhood's home, on the first school, on the town where we used to visit a valued friend, on some mountain or lake or shore that is pictured in our minds in eternal loveliness—and all these declare that "the mercy of God endureth for ever." The way in which we have walked may sometimes have been very rough and dark, but it has brought us to this "quiet resting-place," and here we can give thanks. Even our holidays might have more joy and refreshment if we always committed them to our Father, and allowed Him to choose for us.

In all directions throughout the country the splendid summer weather has hastened the ingathering of the fruits of the earth. God's benediction upon man's activity will ere long fill our barns with plenty, and afford all manner of store for the winter. What abundant spiritual teaching the recurring harvests always suggest. How real Divine and human co-operation is! What gracious ministries come to the thoughtful soul as the reapers thrust in the sickle. How loud is the call to abundant fruit-bearing. Instinctively the earnest heart sets about its own examination, lest there should be any lack of personal fruit-bearing. The fields so white unto harvest have been open to heaven's gracious influences all through the year—hence, harvest joy. So, too, the silent Spirit of God has been ministering to faith's activities, and love's service, that in due season the Christian worker may celebrate harvest home in the eternal city of the King.

It is our impression that the present younger generation of Christians is not so well taught in elementary and objective truth as their predecessors in the years following the Revival of 1859. There is a building from the top; or, at any rate, a building upon the surface of the rock, without a deeply dug foundation. We are glad, therefore, to ask attention to the article by Mr. Varley in our present issue, on the vital truth of the Resurrection, reminding our readers that the briefest summary of the Gospel is "Jesus and the Resurrection." Important as is the subjective side, and necessary, as it is, to have a living and vigorous experience, these can only be known as the fruition of objective truth.

In reply to various inquiries as to the Bible Lessons of Professor Newell, we take occasion to state that the professor has returned to America, and therefore his course of lectures is at an end.

We trust that the Evangelistic Campaign about to be inaugurated in Glasgow, and to extend from October to March, will partake of the remarkable signs of Divine power which are characterizing the great tent work in progress in London at the present time. At the Noon Prayer Meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last, a brother stated that he had long been praying to see cases of persons stricken down under the power of the Word of God, and that he had seen numerous such instances at the tent at Peckham on the previous evening.

There is a wide-spread conviction that we are on the eve of a work of God as important as that of 1859. We earnestly hope that Scotland may, during the coming winter, reap blessing to the full. We purpose giving weekly reports of the campaign as it proceeds. Meantime, we are assured that all lovers of the Gospel will make this undertaking a special subject of daily prayer.

At the time of going to press, grave news comes to hand from South Africa, all indications being in the direction of war between Britain and the Transvaal. While as yet the sword is unsheathed, let us pray that God may intervene and bloodshed may be averted.

Dr. John Harris, a former president of Cheshunt College, the author of an admirable prize essay on "Mammon," and of another on missions, entitled "The Great Commission," was in the latter essay fifty years ahead of his time. It is thoroughly up-to-date reading for the present day, with one exception, which will be found in the following extract:—

That which we strenuously oppose is the practical inference too generally drawn from the pre-millennial creed, and which operates, as we think, both to the dishonour of the prophetic Scriptures and to the discouragement of Christian activity—namely, that because a mighty conflict may await the Christian Church, and because the marked interposition of Christ may be necessary to terminate the struggle, and to take actual and entire possession of the earth, therefore but little real good is to be expected from the most devoted endeavours of the Church at present.

It was never, we think, the tendency of pre-millennial views to discourage missions. It is a remarkable commentary on this able and good man's apprehension, that so many of the most ardent missionaries in the foreign field to-day are not less ardent in their belief and expectation that nothing but the Lord's return can ring in the thousand years of peace.

The Stundists, it seems, are not anxious that their persecutions should cease, for they feel that persecution is the surest way of evangelizing Russia. This is the right spirit, and springs from a strong faith in the living God. The important thing in life is not that Christians should be spared this or that pain and trouble, but that they should be used of God to glorify his name.

Is it true that our missionary societies are giving an undue proportion of their means and men to the evangelization of weak and dying nations, and neglecting the strong and numerous nations which will probably have a dominating influence in the future? It may seem so, but we doubt if it is so in reality. The weak nations were in most cases accessible; the strong were shut off by the arm of military power, by immemorial customs, and by religious prejudices. Access to the weak was easy; to the strong it was impossible for decades after missionary work began. The East India Company, which was so bitterly opposed to the spread of the Gospel in India, was not superseded by Imperial power until forty years ago. India has not been neglected. China was entered as soon as ever the smallest opening was forced in her stout walls of pride and prejudice, and proportionately to their strength the churches have continued to work for her. Mongolia would have been Christianized ere now but for the Russian Government. Japan has been greatly aided. All the same, the churches need a quickened sense of responsibility to these coming nations.

In the second of a series of articles in the Methodist Times, on Hints on Public Worship, some suggestive remarks are made on the importance of a careful and sympathetic reading of the Scripture lessons. This is a duty that is often done in a most slovenly manner, not only in the services of the Church of England but in many a Nonconformist chapel. When this is so, an insult is offered not only to the intelligence of the congregation but to the sacred Word itself; and a great opportunity of carrying home the truths of the Gospel is lost. The writer of the article referred to, makes reference to a happy remark of the late George Hillier:

He used to remind his students that they would all sometimes have, in preaching, what we call "a poor time," but he urged them so to announce the hymns, and especially so to read the appointed lessons, that, when they were most painfully conscious of humiliating failure in the pulpit, they might, at least, be consoled by the thought that they had given out the hymns and prayed and read the lessons to the best of their ability; and so the congregation might have been, and, indeed, would have been, instructed and edified in spite of their failure in the pulpit on that particular occasion.

The further question whether a preacher should accompany his reading of the Scriptures with a "running commentary," is not to be hastily answered in either the affirmative or the negative. There are certain passages which are so complete in themselves and carry home their own message so perfectly to the simplest understanding, that to interpolate the happiest remark is to lessen its appeal; there are others so closely bound up with the circumstances under which they are written that without some amount of explanation, its meaning will fail to be recognized by many hearers. At the best, it is few preachers who have the gift of dignified and suitable commentary; conspicuous among them being Charles Haddon Spurgeon. No one, at any rate, should attempt to enlighten the course of a lesson without previous careful and prayerful study of the passage. Only the Holy Spirit can truly guide in this matter.

The High Church party have evidently been trusting to "usage" to establish those customs on which their hearts are set. They had hoped to give them permanence by persisting long enough in their observance; but now, as the Church Times says,

> The Church is restrained by the civil power from introducing the slightest embellishment of worship. Sir William Harcourt and the Record are right in their triumph. It is the condemnation of everything that has been gained these fifty years or more.

Our contemporary urges submission to the ruling of the archbishops in case a bishop desires it for the good of the Church and of souls; but, if he insists on it as the law of the Church, he must be strenuously withstood. Also in acquiescing he, as a clergyman, must clearly state why he does so, and he must do it under protest.

In the important controversy on Ecclesiastical matters, now so acute, it is imperative that the general public should be accurately informed on every debated question. The prevalent opinion seems to have been that comparatively few churches were accustomed to use lights and incense ceremonially. It now appears that in no fewer than 289 churches in England and Wales incense is habitually used. The tabulated statement given in the Record shows that in every diocese except Carlisle the practice is observed. London heads the list of dioceses with 46 churches, where incense is regarded as a part of the worship; while in the Isle of Man its use is confined to the private chapel of a nunnery. The supreme necessity is that the clergy themselves should set the example of obedience to the law. Some, however, are determined to be defiant. There are only nine churches at present where they have yielded.

The Church Times must find itself sore put to it for argument, in asserting "points of strong likeness" between "Anarchism and Protestant Fanaticism" in the action of the mob in Paris who sacked the Church of St. Joseph. It further asserts that "these outbreaks of violence are the most convincing disproof of the wisdom of the argument, now so frequently heard, that it is for the man in the street to decide what shall be the form of belief and practice in the Church." As a matter of fact, there is no more fellowship between Protestantism as such and the atheistical forces of Anarchism, than there is between light and darkness. And it is significant that these outrages almost always occur in Catholic countries. They are the fruit of a tyrannical priestcraft, and an unprincipled sacerdotalism, whose pretentious claims breed the exaggerated revulsion of a blatant atheism.

The defeat of the deputation to the Glasgow Town Council in favour of opening on Sundays the Art Galleries in the People's Palace in that city, is most pronounced. More than one prominent Christian minister supported the deputation; but the force of religious conviction arrayed against the proposed desecration of the Lord's Day was overwhelming. In opposition to the innovation were the presbyteries of the Scotch Churches, and such religious associations as the Scottish Protestant Alliance, the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., the Christian Endeavour Union, the Scottish Sabbath Protection Society, the Glasgow City Mission, and others. It is reassuring that the proposal was rejected by a large majority. This should make it impossible for any further measures to be suggested for making the Scotch Sabbath a day of amusement for a long time to come. Since the Sabbath was made for man, its sanctity must be preserved, at all costs.

No perceptible impression seems to have been made as yet upon the women of fashion who wear birds' feathers, and are the means of robbing the world of some of its most beautiful creatures. We read with indignation that among three consignments to this country from Venezuela were no less than 10,000 birds of paradise and 800 packages of osprey feathers; beetles and butterflies are not too insignificant to be captured and killed; any and every bright living thing is destroyed for these heartless women. The world is being stripped of much of its enduring loveliness, and once lost, it can never be recovered.

The Select Committee on the Cottage Homes Bill has just published its report. Various recommendations appear which are calculated to provide more fitting accommodation for the respectable poor, that they may not be forced to mix with those whose characters or habits are bad. Children are to be properly classified and provided for, apart from workhouse premises. Separate institutions are suggested for imbeciles and epileptics. The deserving poor are to receive adequate out-door relief, while the guardians are recommended to provide cottage homes for married couples and others, whose poverty is their misfortune and not their crime. Such reforms as these should have been made long ago. The principles of the Gospel of Christ make it imperative that the children of poverty, where no stigma of crime is attached, should be treated as generously as circumstances permit, being regarded as God's poor, for whom Christian benevolence should care, for Christ's sake.

The excellent custom of boarding out the children of our great towns in country places is not without its dangers. They may be committed to the care of persons who are more anxious to obtain money than to do good; they may go from an overcrowded court in town to an overcrowded cottage in a village. And in all probability they will be unable to defend themselves against the injury that is done them. A case occurred recently in which a cottage containing three small bedrooms was occupied by fourteen persons, two of whom were boarded out children from London. Should many cases of abuse arise, there will be an outcry against a good thing which all lovers of children will deplore. To avoid this, care must be taken in choosing the cottage-homes.

The action of Lord Heneage on the licensing question is open to legitimate criticism. So far, he has set his face, like a flint, against the granting of a single licence, on any pretext, on his estate at Grimsby, which comprises 10,000 inhabitants. There is a clause in every lease to that effect. Recently, however, he has given permission to a local brewer to erect a hotel, and himself, at the same time, has written to the licensing justices supplying them with reasons why the application should be granted. This seems to be a violation of an understanding with the whole of the other lessees on the property, that no licences for the sale of intoxicants should be allowed. Naturally considerable feeling has been aroused in the matter. The action is certainly not just to those who have taken leases on the word of the landowner that no licences should at any time be permitted.

In addition to the destruction and death caused in a group of islands in the West Indies by the recent storms, it is stated that "all the churches and chapels have been destroyed." The Mansion House Fund will make some provision for the general distress, but it cannot be devoted to meet the effects of this sad blow to missions and missionaries, whose work is largely at a standstill. The decline of the sugar industry had previously reduced these islands to a piteous condition—this visitation has completed their temporary ruin. The situation constitutes a strong appeal to Christians at home to come to the rescue of these much-tried people.

There has been so much written about the religious, or rather irreligious, condition of Johannesburg, that it will be cheering to those who have young relatives out in the Rand to hear the last report, which proves that in the mining capital of South Africa the outlook in spiritual matters is improving. This is what Rev. Thos. Gray, a Welsh Calvinistic minister, who spent some months recently doing duty as substitute to one of the pastors home on a holiday, gives as the result of careful observation:—

> It is not true that young people there abandon their old habits and become callous towards religion. What struck me beyond measure was the great depth and intensity of religious feeling manifested on all sides. This was the more astonishing to me, as I went with preconceptions entirely different from the true facts. I found the churches crowded morning and evening with men of all nationalities, drawn together by a common worship. I had believed before that religion was a Boer possession only.

Mr. Gray was specially struck with the great crowd of young men who regularly attend public worship. It was his impression that they contrast favourably with the young men at home in this and other directions. This is, indeed, "good news from the Transvaal."

In a certain class of novel, it is customary to have one or two characters of undoubted goodness built on the old doctrines; they are simple, wise, lovely; and the secret of it all is their faith, which may be greatly ridiculed as very ancient and very incredible, but indirectly praised as very efficient in the making of the best men and women. Now, without questioning that different minds come at the truth by different roads, and that our modes of apprehending and stating truth vary greatly, it is well to remember, and constantly affirm, that the highest type of character, the Christian type, is realized in only one way, viz., by repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. We are glad to see this style of man reverently recognized; but let there be no mistake as to its origin, and the power that upholds it. The unworldly men and women are those who turn from sin, and rest in the Saviour for eternal life.

Black and White.—The Governor of Georgia has been advised that 1,000 Negroes are believed to be under arms in Macintosh County, and that they positively refuse to give up the murderers. Besides the First Militia Regiment, other armed whites are en route for Darien. The Negroes outnumber the whites in the Darien section by five to one. The sheriffs' posse has forced the Darien Negroes to surrender one of the Negro murderers.—Reuter.

Understanding the Bible.

By the late Dean VAUGHAN.

No man really understands the Bible until he finds Christ in it. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." It is not only in one chapter in the Prophet Isaiah, it is all through the Old Testament Scriptures, that God is testifying of his Son. The law testified of Him—the moral law, by revealing to man his sinfulness, and making him cry out for forgiveness to One who is all holy; the ceremonial law, as the Epistle to the Hebrews teaches us, by prefiguring an open way into the Divine presence, through the atoning and sanctifying blood of Jesus. How much more has the revealing light cleared and brightened, till it became in the prophetical Scriptures almost a gospel, disclosing more and more of the work and of the glory of Him that should come, of man's utter need, and of God's boundless mercy; that so there might be no lack of signs by which men, when He came, might recognise their Saviour, and no dimness or dulness of hope for those who must go to their graves before his appearing!

IT IS FULL OF CHRIST.

And perhaps we think that there can be no doubt, in Gospel times, as to our thus understanding the Scriptures. We know that they are full of Christ. The very first use made of them for us in our childhood was to teach us out of them the advent and the ministry, the life and the death, of Jesus. And the chief object of our ever opening the Bible for ourselves has been this: that, in some cloudy or dark days of anxiety or of bereavement, we might find something about Him to calm our fears, and to say to the tempest of our souls, "Peace, be still." And yet there is no doubt that the understanding of Scripture with the heart is even more rare (if it be possible) than the understanding of it with the mind. We see Christ, it may be, in the Scriptures; but do we go on to seek Him, by their help, as the light of life, and the anchor of the soul, and the propitiation for personal sin, and the source and inspirer of individual holiness? "Ye search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of Me"; yet "ye will not come to Me that ye might have life." Ah! it is here that we come short. We see that Christ is in the Bible; but we do not go to Him, we do not call Him in, we do not for ourselves seek, nor search, nor see Him there!

A FIRST HINDRANCE.

First of all, I do not hesitate to say positively that, in this, as in every instance, we have not because we ask not. If, not as a form, but with deep earnest truth, we always prayed our Church's collect before we read the Bible, asking God to give us grace so to read as that we might embrace and hold fast Christ, that would be a safe and sure step towards the "understanding" spoken of. How much more, if we made it a matter of daily prayer, would God be pleased to open our understandings and prepare our hearts to receive Christ into them as our own Divine rest and peace and joy! But, as it is, we read the Bible, when we do read it, as if it could of itself do for us the thing which we want; as if the printed page could enter the soul and work there by matter what is, from first to last, a work of Spirit; as if the mere passing of the eye over the lifeless book could do by magic that office of enlightenment and salvation which the Holy Spirit of God deputes to nothing and to no one. If we would understand, when we read in God's presence what God has revealed, an earnest and solemn act of self-presentation to Him for instruction must precede every reading; and the thought, "I am here before God as his child and his disciple" must go along with the reading; and the prayer for the implanting of what has been taught, and for its carrying out with us into life, must close the reading, or we shall have been guilty (little as we may suspect it) of forgetting God in his gifts, of dispensing with his inward teaching, even when seeking and occupied in the outward.

A SECOND HINDRANCE.

Next to this, and scarcely even second to this, in importance I would place the consideration that no one can love and no one can profit by the Bible unless he is sincerely desirous to live the life which God approves. It is one practical proof—worth many laborious arguments—of the inspiration of Holy Scripture, that sinners feel towards it just as they feel towards God. When Adam had sinned he straightway hid himself (it is written) from the presence of the Lord God among the trees of the garden; and so, if a man is cherishing any known sin, you will always find him hiding himself from his Bible. Not only because the Bible is a religious book. He will take up a Christian biography, he will take up the narrative of a Christian's death-bed, he will take up a volume of sermons, and read without repugnance that which yet reproves and condemns him. He will not take up his Bible. He can more easily pray than do that. The one may be the cry of a miserably-divided heart in the ear of a distant God: the other is like God coming to him and speaking aloud in his ear the words of confutation and judgment. The man who is not sincerely desiring to make his heart clean and his life pure will never understand—if he can help it, he will never read—his Bible. See then, on the other hand, one of the ways towards that understanding: "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded."

A THIRD HINDRANCE.

A third chief hindrance to understanding the Scriptures is the infrequency, the intermittence, of their study. We shall never understand so long as we grudge and stint the use of them. A common average Christian thinks it his duty to read a Psalm or to read a chapter daily. That is the maximum. Often it is cut short, often it is forgotten, often it is jostled out of his day by some call of business or pleasure, some accident of late rising or evening drowsiness. But the rule is this: It is done, when done, as a duty—as something for the omission of which he will be punished—by the doing of which he will have given satisfaction to his conscience and to his God. Alas! so long as this is our spirit, we may do the duty, but we shall never "understand" the Bible.

The man who is to do this—who is to find Christ, to know God by his Bible—must begin by determining to have it for his friend. "Oh, how I love thy Word! It is my meditation all the day." "His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." You may say that is an advanced stage of the study. It is so. But it has its beginning too. Much depends—I had almost said everything depends—upon the way in which you view the Bible. Regard it as a dull book, fit only for sickness and sorrow, and you will soon make it so. It will retire before you, sad, as it were, and reproachful, yet obedient too, unto those dark and dismal chambers, to which you bid it to confine itself. And then when you seek it there, perchance you will not find it. When you open it, it will not speak: when you call upon it, it will not answer. This is the punishment of those who, in days of health, have counted God's Word their enemy. But the converse is true also. Determine that, God helping you, you will love your Bible; read it, read it again; read whole books of it at a sitting, and when next you sit down with it, read them again. That which was dark before will ofttimes be light now; what ye know not now, ye shall know hereafter. Have the book itself always about, keep it near you, on your desk, and on your pillow. It will talk to you, it will begin to answer you; it will begin to resolve your doubt, and to stimulate your curiosity; it will accommodate itself to your mood; it will be grave when you are grave, and will smile when you smile; till at last you shall say, with the Psalmist, "The law of thy mouth is dearer unto me than thousands of gold and silver."

Then, at last, when the question is put to you, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" you shall be able to answer, with a joyful heart and a good conscience, "Thou, Lord, hast given me understanding."

Sabbath Observance.

By Rev. A. S. COOK, M.A.

I.—ITS OBJECT.

WHY was the Lord's Day commanded to be observed? The various reasons have not passed away, but remain as urgent as ever. We find from the Old Testament that there are four principal reasons, and any one of them, singly, furnishes us with a sufficient ground for continued obedience to the command.

(a) Commemoration of Creation (Gen. ii. 3, Exod. xx. 11). God has never removed either the blessing He pronounced upon the day, nor the injunction to keep it holy on that account. It serves to remind us that "it is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves" (Psalm c. 3).

(b) The humanitarian motive (Deut. v. 14). A merciful and all-loving Father has concerned Himself with the bodily interests of the creatures of his creation, and has designed that one day in seven shall be a period of rest for man and beast. What a breach of his law of love is the infringement of this command, and what a cruel injustice is inflicted on those who are required to perform duties which might well be performed beforehand, or postponed until the Sabbath has passed!

(c) In remembrance of deliverance (Deut. v. 15). The Israelites were to remember the great redemption wrought by the hand of Moses. Is not this reason greatly emphasized for the Christian? A greater freedom has been procured by Christ. The former was temporal; the latter eternal. Redemption from the guilt and dominion of sin, redemption from the conquered Satan, redemption from death and the grave has been wrought by the Vanquisher of sin and death; and therefore, for observing the fourth commandment is vastly stronger than even that of the Jew.

THE CHRISTIAN'S REASON,

(d) A sign between God and man (Ezek. xx. 12). God's witness of the great spiritual work He would fain accomplish in the human soul. And, whilst it is a sign from God to man, may we not remark it should also be a sign on the part of man to God—a sign of obedience, the motive power of which is love, which seeks to fulfil the known will of his Heavenly Father?

In the New Testament appears an inference why the Sabbath should be observed—an inference, and not a command; yet none the less carrying weight, and furnishing the Christian with a reason for a profitable use of the day of rest (Heb. iv. 9). In view of that eternal "keeping of a Sabbath," how well for him to acquire a foretaste of the heavenly rest by using aright the fast fleeting hours of the earthly type! For those who cannot spiritually employ the one day in seven, the future Sabbath in heaven offers no vision of happiness for their earth-bound souls.

Whilst noticing the binding character of the command, as it relates to our duty to God, we cannot fail to observe that it is love which will prompt its due fulfilment. For no penalties of man threaten its breach as in the case of the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th laws of the Decalogue. Man often keeps them only for fear of incurring the punishment, displeasure, or scorn attached to their non-observance; but in the matter of the 4th he is free, and it is a

TEST OF HIS LOVE TO GOD

if he keep it in the spirit in which it is designed to be kept.

The objection raised by some, that it was only given to the Israelites, falls to the ground when it is remembered that God's blessing rested on the day long before the Law was given through Moses. And if, to strengthen this thought, because the Jewish Dispensation is over, this law is no longer binding, why not any or all of the other nine? Surely the Ten Commandments stand or fall together. The Apostles recognized its character in the New Dispensation, and their worship, though carried on on the first instead of the seventh day of the week, is a testimony to the spiritual character of one day in the seven.

(To be continued.)

"These Forty Years."

WE give this week another instalment of the singularly cheering correspondence that has reached us during the past few days. It is gratifying to learn that so many have derived help and encouragement from The Christian—that those who "tarry by the stuff," no less than such as go forth to battle for the Lord, have read with profit and pleasure the words of counsel and records of work and testimony that make up our pages from week to week.

It is a privilege to acknowledge the hearty co-operation of many readers during past years, in efforts to extend our circulation and influence. Again we appeal for prayerful interest in this same direction. By recommendation and other forms of introduction, our friends might succeed in securing for us many new readers. We ask them to use their exertions to this end, and thus to promote the principles which we uphold, and advance the aggressive evangelistic work, which is one of our constant objects of solicitude.

Evangelists and busy workers need not to be assured of our earnest sympathy with them and regard for their work. We do what we can to assist them, and shall be glad of their help in return. To young workers and new converts they may reasonably mention this paper, which, under God, has proved so serviceable to many. On this very practical subject of widened influence, a correspondent, who was present at the recent commemoration meetings at 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C., writes to us :—

"The Christian deserves a much larger circulation than even it has. Though we rejoice in its great value, and its world-wide knowledge and distribution, there is still ample room for the doubling of its weekly issue. This birthday should be made the occasion for energetic and determined effort in order to this result.

"I noticed with deep interest Mr. Sutton's letter. He tells of the fact that he sends a number of copies to friends and missionaries, and of the interest felt, and the thanks he has received. May I suggest to some of the stewards of substance what a valuable service might be rendered if, say, £20 or £50 was expended in sending in all directions copies of your valuable journal? The coming autumn months, during which many are on the outlook for special times of revival and spiritual power, furnishes just the occasion which is in my mind.

"We need to remember that the value of The Christian to the whole Church of God is not recognized as a commendation to the men and women of the world. Steady, zealous, and aggressive effort to this end, should be the determination of your friends and readers. God grant that it may be so! You know me too well to think that any other motive than the advocacy, defence, and exhibition of 'the glorious Gospel of the blessed God' prompts me to write thus. As a suggestion to hundreds who were present at the meeting, let us determine, from this date to the end of the year, to send from three to six or twelve copies of The Christian every week into fresh centres and to fresh individuals. It would be a very gracious and grateful way of showing our love for the truth, and for you also."

A pile of letters lies before us, for which we heartily thank our readers, the writers. They represent missions at home and abroad, Christians of all denominations, personal friends, and others unknown to us by face; but all bound together by the common tie of life in Christ and fellowship in his service. We can but quote from a few of them :—

"I suppose no paper has been such a link between the countries far and near in the interest of evangelical religion. Personally it has been to me a great blessing in my life for many years—as you know—and a great joy that the gracious Lord has given me the joy of sending forth for so many years his precious messages—the daily texts for 'His own,' the readers of The Christian—in The Christian Almanack."

"M. L. B."

"It has often seemed to me that your journal is a kind of continuation of the Acts of the Apostles. I thank you most heartily for the prominence you have always given to records of evangelistic work among seamen both at home and abroad, and I pray God to continue mightily to use and bless you in all your journalistic and other work for Him."—I am, faithfully yours, "Geo. Jno. Hill.

"255, Burdett Road, Limehouse, E."

"I pray that The Christian, so greatly valued by us all, may become more and more used of God for blessing to his people, for the furtherance of the Gospel, and for the defence of the truth. On behalf of the North Africa Mission, Mr. Fegan's Homes, and other institutions with which I am connected, I desire heartily to thank you for all the great help afforded through the columns of The Christian.—Yours affectionately in Christ, "W. Soltau Eccles.

"Upper Norwood, S.E., August 14, 1899."

"Were I within easy distance of London, I would make a point of attending the meeting to celebrate 'these forty years' since The Revival was commenced, simultaneous with the wonderful awakening with which God favoured our land, the results of which are manifest in a multitude of Christian activities and an army of Christian workers. Such an era of lay preaching has never been known probably since the apostolic age, when all the believers were witnesses.—Yours sincerely, "James E. Mathieson.

"Widdicombe Vicarage, Ashburton, Devon."

"Beloved Brother,—I have on my desk before me No. 1 of The Revival, dated July 30, 1859, also The Christian, dated August 10, 1899. As I look back—bridging over the interval—what hath God wrought springs up in my mind. Praise be to his Holy Name! How much I have to praise the Lord for! Your forty years' labour of love is beyond telling. My indebtedness is indeed great. May greater spiritual success be yet vouchsafed.—I am, by his grace, yours faithfully,

"William Joseph Lewis,
"Formerly of the Spitalfields Gospel Mission.

"Ryde, Isle of Wight."

"I have experienced times of refreshing in reading from its pages while doing service in her Majesty's coastguard in Kerry even as far back as thirty-five years ago, and each year only tends to intensify my interest in its circulation.

"Neither can I forget that owing to its insertion of the claims of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, from time to time, large and at times liberal subscriptions have been sent to this Society, and which the patrons and committee have not been slow to appreciate.—Yours faithfully,

"Dublin." "J. Kearney White.

"Your paper was much prized by my beloved husband, George Macfarlane, now 'fallen asleep,' for many years a president of our Glasgow 'Y.M.C.A.,' and also a director of our Evangelistic Association; and who, as a young man, took part in the revival of 1859, when residing in Philadelphia. He felt very thankful, latterly, for the notices taken of public matters from our daily newspapers, and helpful words in connection with these.

"Whatever paper I have to give up in the future, it will never be The Christian.

"God bless and prosper you on your way, is the prayer of your grateful and regular reader,

"Mary Anne E. Macfarlane."

Another writer, the originator and superintendent of a very important and successful piece of home mission work, writes :—"Converted by God's grace, in 1874, I have ever since been a diligent and appreciative reader of The Christian. My testimony, given from a full heart, is that innumerable blessings and untold help have been received, through all these years, by a perusal of this most admirable paper; and my prayer is, that the Editor may be long spared to carry on his noble work of giving the Christian public such all-round Scriptural, sound teaching with such a faithful adherence to evangelical truth and doctrine. Specially stimulating, too, have been the beautiful expositions of Scripture by Mr. Meyer and others. Truly great is the responsibility for such privileges, "'To whom much is given, of the same shall much be required.'"

"Beloved Mr. Morgan,—I cannot let the opportunity of to-morrow's special meeting for thanksgiving to God pass by without sending you a hearty word of greeting. I just remember the great revival which the little paper was started to record. My own dear father used to take me to some of the meetings in London, and more than once have I, after such meetings, lain awake or started from sleep during the night, wet with perspiration, under the terrors of the Judgment Day. Though it was not until years afterwards (at the death of my father) that I was quickened, those early convictions of that heavenly movement doubtless were the beginning of the Holy Spirit's work within me. I am here, with half-a-dozen other brethren, doing a little work for the Lord, in these dark, dead, Staffordshire villages. Pray with us for 'the increase.' We move in camp to-morrow.—Ever affectionately, yours, "Samuel Chase.

"Gospel Camp, near Burton-on-Trent."

Dear Mr. Editor.—I have read with very much pleasure indeed the letters you have published on this theme and think I can endorse every word therein. You have not an older reader than I am—for, I too, have read The Christian and The Revival from the very beginning.

Amongst all the things that have been written, there is one phrase that seems to me best to describe the path of The Christian during all these forty years, and that is, that its writings have been evenly balanced. I do not mean that it has ever, to use an Americanism, "sat on the fence;" but there has seemed to me to be a singular wisdom displayed in its writings.

During all the forty years I have read The Christian, there was only one thing that I differed with you about. I have always found it a safe paper to go by, and I think there is nothing human which has had more to do with giving me settled convictions on spiritual matters than The Christian.—Yours very sincerely, E. D. Nicol.

Grove House, Sunderland.

On the occasion of the birthday commemoration, a telegram came from our comrade in travel, Mr. T. M. Wintle, of Pontymoile Christian Mission, and his fellow-helpers. He intended coming to the meeting in London, but his workers asked him to have a meeting at home for thanksgiving for blessing received through The Christian, which accordingly was held simultaneously. Mr. Wintle writes :—

"I was astonished at the number that came together, and there was much power in prayer. I am certain real good will be the outcome, and a general interest awakened in The Christian. I enclose a brief report :—

"'Mr. John Pickering, who laboured in Ballymena in 1859, and saw much of the marvellous work of God in the north of Ireland at that time, gave an inspiring address, and said that some unknown friend sent him a copy of The Revival all the time he was at Ballymena. Mr. J. Ridler, an engine-driver on the Great Western Railway, spoke in high terms of The Christian; he owed much to its teaching, and, wherever he went on his railway journeys, he had a good word for it.

"'Mr. T. M. Wintle said that, as he sat and listened to others speak of an intimate acquaintanceship with The Revival and The Christian for forty years, he felt like one born out of due time; for, though his love for its Editor and admiration for the journal was second to none, his knowledge of either only went back a quarter of a century. A few days after his conversion he bought the "Life of Fiddler Joss," at the end of which he saw advertised the life of "Richard Weaver, the Converted Collier." This he read through three times before he went to bed. It contained a photograph of the evangelist with a copy of The Revival in his hand. The interest created by reading the wonderful story of Richard's life led him to desire to know more of this great revival. So he got The Revival from the bookseller's. Ever since then he has been a regular reader, and, under God, owes much of his success in evangelistic work to the inspiration received from its pages.'"

The National Temperance League.

THE annual report of the work of the League is full of interest, and bristles with accounts of the Society's well-sustained and vigorous efforts, not only to suppress drunkenness, but to educate the people in the principles of total abstinence. The Society's educational lecturer has given over 120 demonstrations and addresses in schools, institutions, and meetings in and near London. Lectures have been delivered to the children and teachers in the day schools throughout the country, and to the graduates and students in colleges and universities.

Work among sailors has been systematically pushed ahead, and has been most successful. Good has been done upon the Thames training ships—the Greenwich Hospital School Band of Hope is said to be without a rival, most of the 1,000 lads being on the pledge-roll of the League. No opportunity has been neglected to keep the medical, scientific, and social aspects of the total abstinence question continually before people of all classes.

The offices of the League are at 34, Paternoster Row. Mr. R. Rae is the secretary.

Resurrection Triumphs.—1.

Matthew xxviii. 9.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

ALL HAIL! Triumphant greeting by the Prince of Life! 'Tis the clarion note of victory from the lips of Him "who was dead and is alive again; and, behold, He is alive for evermore. Amen." All hail! his own inspiring word to the stricken and sorrowing band who "had trusted that it was He that should redeem Israel." His glad acclaim on the resurrection morning, whose risen glory should henceforth flood the world. All hail! the brief, full note of completed conquest over sin, death, "and him that hath the power of death, that is the devil." Proof beyond dispute that "once in the end of the world He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

Had the Lord of glory failed adequately to represent the grace and love of God, or meet the claims of eternal justice, the grave had continued to hold Him captive. By his life poured out unto death, the guilt of human sins was expiated, atonement made, and sin put away. The judgment due to all believers centred in his voluntary sacrifice, and was borne by Him, and has passed for ever. "He was made sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." His resurrection yields "the morning without clouds," whose brilliant shining revealed Sinai hidden behind the dazzling heights of Zion. The dirge and requiem of sin, the anthem and song of salvation is here. "Delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification," is our glad response to the risen Conqueror's note of triumph.

All hail! Thou "Firstborn from the dead." It was not possible that sin's citadel (death) should retain the Captain of our salvation. There were no bands in his death. His strength was firm, and adequate to

THE DESTRUCTION OF DEATH.

The magnificent prophecy, "He that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die," must know its first fulfilment in Himself. The "Firstborn of many brethren" could not fail to exhibit the conclusive proof of his completed victory, by taking again the life He had for us laid down.

The forces which would have prevented resurrection were sin, death, the grave, and hell. These the Lord, "mighty in battle," overthrew. Had He failed to overcome all these spiritual enemies, his resurrection had not been. His life from the dead is the conclusive proof that sin and death have been destroyed; and that all the questions which belong to redemption, forgiveness, acceptance, and eternal life have been vindicated and settled for ever by the Prince of Life. "O death, where is thy sting," now that sin and death lie destroyed in the dark valley away down beneath his cross? His sepulchre holds these broken and exhausted forces.

Mark it well! The risen Christ fills the whole sphere on the morning of his resurrection. On this golden daybreak, wherein the eternal counsel and purpose of God is made known, no trace of the past darkness can be found. Neither sin, death, nor the devil has, or could have, place in his resurrection. The destroyer of souls has never died unto sin. How, then, could he know, or have part in, Christ's resurrection? Into that new, separate, and sanctified condition he cannot come, neither any who, through unbelief and love of sin, decline to die unto sin with Jesus the Lord.

There is no access into his resurrection save through death. Death with Him unto sin must precede partnership in Him who is "the Eternal Life." He is "the new and living way into the holiest of all." It was Christ the Lord, "the Firstborn from the dead," who, in resurrection, became "the Forerunner, who has entered into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Verily, in the faith of his glorious resurrection and ascension, "He has opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."

Blessed is the testimony, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thy heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. x. 9). How entirely and completely men are saved by grace, and not by human merit or works, this passage makes known. Salvation from the human side is made to depend upon believing two great facts, both of which refer to, and belong to, God. To believe and confess that God gave up his beloved Son to and then raised Him from the dead, is to be saved. This is not being saved by works in the future. It is being saved now and for ever by reason of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ and the exercise of faith in God concerning these great facts.

DIE FOR OUR SINS,

By every instructed believer the following fundamental truth is understood and held fast: "In that He (Christ) died, He died unto sin once; in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, in Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 10-11). This, let it be distinctly understood, is the doctrine of the Word of God, and is not to be confounded with ethics, morals, human experience, religious ceremony or service.

This is God's own testimony as to the actual condition which pertains to the believer by virtue of his union with Christ in resurrection. This condition and position must be carefully distinguished from any possible human attainment. This is participation in the divine nature of Christ risen from the dead. The fellowship that we who believe have with "the Father and his Son Jesus Christ" is with Him in resurrection. Our union with Christ is not in his incarnation, but in his resurrection, where sin and death have no place, and where the devil cannot come.

How little understood is the supreme importance of the vital truth of the Lord's resurrection! In that greatest fact of history, the positive realities of the Gospel of Christ are for ever established to all believers. Well may the Holy Ghost testify: "If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. . . . But now is Christ risen from the dead to become the firstfruits of them that slept." Identified with his resurrection, the inherent life of every member of "the Church of the firstborn" is seen and secured.

Of every believer in Him it is written, "Ye have died, and your life is hid with Christ in God." "When Christ our Life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." We therefore re-echo this magnificent acclaim, "All hail!"

MORE THAN CONQUERORS

through Him who loved us, called, justified, and glorified in and through Him, we also cry, "All hail! Thou art He that livest and wast dead, and behold Thou art alive for evermore, and hast the keys of hades and of death." All hail! by every member of thy redeemed Church. All hail! Victorious Chieftain, Captain of salvation, King of glory. All hail! Deity and humanity combined are thine. Thou art "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the Spirit of Holiness by the resurrection from the dead." Once more, All hail!

Unanswerable Questions.—Infidelity plumes itself incessantly on its wonderful capacity for suggesting hard and difficult questions. The men who benefit their kind are those who solve problems, rather than those who manufacture them. In the family circle how often does the bright intelligence of childhood ask for information which the parent sees cannot yet be safely imparted; and how often again, when the questions are such as may be answered, do they open up a vista in which the parent, seeing that the child is getting out of his depth, must needs shut off the supply! Apply this to the many unanswered questions relating to God and infinity, but, as you do so, take due note that the difference between the child mind, and the mind of maturity, is only as the difference between an ounce or two and a pound, whilst between the creature and the Creator it is as a grain of sand to the loftiest mountain.

An Ante-Bellum Sermon.

We is gathahed hyeah, my brothahs,
In dis howlin' wildaness,
Fo' to speak some words o' comf'ot
To each othah in distress.
An' we chooses fo' ouah subjec'
Dis—we'll 'splain it by-an'-by;
"An' de Lawd said, 'Moses, Moses,'
An' de man said, 'Hyeah am I.'"

Now ole Pher'oh, down in Egypt,
Was de wuss man evah bo'n,
An' he had de Hebrew chillun
Down dah wukin' in his co'n;
Twell de Lawd got tiahed o' his foolin',
An', sez he, "I'll let him know—
Look hyeah, Moses, go tell Pher'oh
Fo' to let dem chillun go.

"An' ef he refuse to do it,
I will make him rue de houah,
Fo' I'll empty down on Egypt
All de vials of my powah."
Yes, he did—an' Pher'oh's ahmy
Wasn't wuth a ha'f a dime;
Fo' de Lawd will he'p his chillun,
You kin trust Him evah time.

An' yo' enemies may 'sail you
In de back an' in de front!
But de Lawd is all aroun' you,
Fo' to ba' de battle's brunt.
Dey kin fo'ge yo' chains an' shackles
F'om de mountains to de sea;
But de Lawd will sen' some Moses
Fo' to set his chillun free.

An' de lan' shall hyeah his thundah,
Lak a blas' from Gab'el's ho'n,
Fo' de Lawd of hosts is mighty
When he girds his ahmor on.
But fo' feah some one mistakes me,
I will pause right hyeah to say,
Dat I'm still a-preachin' ancient,
I ain't talkin' 'bout to-day.

But I tell you, fellah Christuns,
Things'll happen mighty strange,
Now, de Lawd done dis fo' Isrul,
An' his ways don't nevah change,
An' de love he showed to Isrul
Wasen't all on Isrul spent;
Now don't run an tell yo' mastahs
Dat I's preachin' discontent—

'Cause I isn't! I'se a-judgin'
Bible people by their ac's;
I'se a-givin' you de Scriptuah,
I'se a-handin' you de fac's.
'Cose ole Pher'oh b'lieved in slav'ry,
But de Lawd He let him see,
Dat de people He put bref in,
Evah mothah's son was free.

An' dah's othahs thinks lik' Pher'oh
But dey calls the Scriptuah liar,
Fo' de Bible says "A servant
Is a-worthy of his hire."
An' you cain't git roun' nor throo dat,
An' you cain't git ovah it,
Fo' whatevah place you git in,
Dis hyeah Bible too will fit.

So you see de Lawd's intention,
Evah sence de worl' began,
Was dat his almighty freedom
Should belong to evah man;
But I think it would be better,
Ef I'd pause agin to say,
Dat I'm talkin' 'bout ouah freedom
In a Bibleistic way.

But de Moses is a-comin';
An' he's comin', suah and fas'.
We kin hyeah his feet a-trompin',
We kin hyeah his trumpit blas'.
But I want to wa'n you people,
Don't you get too brigity;
An' don't you get to braggin'
'Bout dese things; you wait an' see.

But when Moses wif his powah
Comes an' sets us chillun free,
We will praise de gracious Mastah
Dat has gin us liberty;
An' we'll shout ouah halleluyahs
On dat mighty reck'nin' day,
When we'se reco'nised ez citiz'—
Huh uh! chillun, let us pray!

From "Lyrics of Lowly Life," by Paul L. Dunbar.
(1111)

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 3. 2 Kings ii.

BEFORE some great revelation of the Unseen and Eternal, before some great communication of spiritual power, the heart of the recipient is carefully tested. Is it humble enough, faithful enough, tenacious enough? Does it follow hard after God? Will it be satisfied with something less than the best? Is not this the lesson of this chapter? For when again and again the suggestion came, Tarry here, I pray thee, it was constantly met by the response, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. O soul, intent on the highest quest of all, yearning for the enduement of power, do not be startled at the Lord's silence, or apparent desire to put thee off; this is too great a gift to entrust to any slight applicant; He is testing thee. Only persevere with a pertinacity that will take no denial, and He will turn to thee, saying, "Great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

The ultimate test, if thou see Me when I am taken from thee, was not an unreasonable or arbitrary one. It was a test of Elisha's spiritual aptitudes. The eye that could pierce the veil which hides the spiritual and unseen, denoted the heart that could receive God's greatest gift, and become the heir of the spirit and power of Elijah. Are the eyes of thine heart enlightened that thou shouldest see, not the things which are seen, but those which are not seen? Then thou shalt experience the enduement of the Paraclete. And when thou receivest it, do not stint in its use; begin at once to smite the rushing waters, and to act in faith that the Lord God of Elijah is beside thee. Men will soon discover that thou hast learnt the Divine secret, and accept thy lead. When thou blessest there shall be healing for the waters; and those that curse thee will be stricken.

MONDAY, September 4. 2 Kings iii.

The child of God has no right to say to the great ones of this world, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses. Jehoshaphat had said that before to Ahab, and had narrowly escaped with his life, and it was too bad to repeat the alliance with Ahab's son. This time, it seemed as though kings and hosts must perish on the bare desert. How ready men are to lay on the Lord the blame of disasters which they have brought on themselves (v. 10)!

Then, because Jehoshaphat was God's child, though misguided and erring, deliverance came. How much God will do for his own. Neither the heights of their senseless folly, nor the depths of their sinfulness, can sever them from his love. No weapon that is formed against them prospers, and every tongue that rises against them in judgment is condemned. And God's favour to them secures favour for those who are associated with them. This, however, is not inconsistent with the divine chastisement that they must suffer from their Father's hand.

Notice the ease with which God satisfies thirst, whether of body or soul. With man there is the black smoke of the furnace, and the thud of the engine; but with God there need be neither wind nor rain, yet the valley is filled with water. Is not this the secret of your failure and despondency? You have been led out in earnest prayer for blessing, and then have set yourself to watch the clouds; but there has been no sign of answer in the whole expanse of heaven. Now, if from scanning the heavens, you would turn to digging ditches on earth—if you would prepare to receive the coming blessing, if you would begin your mission, open your classes, start on your campaign to which you have been clearly led—you would find the blessing brimming up in the desert sands.

TUESDAY, September 5. 2 Kings iv.

Each of the four miracles of this chapter betrays the gentle and beneficent aspects of Elisha's ministry. Widows applied to him for help against their creditors, mothers appealed for life on behalf of their children, poison was stayed in its deadly career, loaves were multiplied. None of these possessed the startling power evinced on Carmel's height, when fire fell from heaven, and a nation was led back to God; but how beneficent they were, what thanks they evoked, how noble their testimony for God.

Do not try to do great and startling things in your life. The dew excites less attention than the thunder-shower, but is more refreshing and beneficent. A life perpetually full of gentler ministries will weigh as heavily in the scale as one with terrific outbursts of power followed by reaction and depression. Twelve hours of sunshine, year in and year out, are preferable to the summer daylight of the Arctic circle, which lasts day and night to be followed by months of midnight. These notes are written as we are crossing the gulf-stream, so noiseless, so indistinguishable from the other waters of the ocean, and yet so indispensable to the fertility of our English shores. It is a meet type of Elisha's influence, and of others who, like him, do not set their hearts on great things, but are always performing little acts of beneficence, which finally accumulate and make a great career.

The late Bishop Brooks, of Boston, will be remembered less by his splendid sacred oratory, than by the innumerable acts of unselfish kindness that filled his days. Snowflakes are flimsy and tiny morsels of frozen water, but they make avalanches.

WEDNESDAY, September 6. 2 Kings v.

For dramatic effect, there are few chapters in the Bible to be compared with this. Naaman in contrast with Gehazi, the little maid with her mistress, Elisha with the King of Israel. The story is told so concisely, yet the vivid colouring stands, like those vermillions of the pyramids.

How many little maids, servant girls in domestic service, to which they have been carried captive by the exigencies of their homes, have read this narrative, and learnt that God has a purpose in a girl's life, and can make use of a very simple word to bring about a marvellous miracle of healing. A lucifer-match may ignite a big bonfire. We must get to heaven before we can compute the countless blessings which godly servants have brought to godless homes.

How many leprous souls, deeply convinced of their need of cleansing, have read these words, and have seen that there was cleansing for them in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness! Encouraged by the story of Naaman, they have washed seven times in the cleansing blood, and their flesh has come to them like that of a little child. Is there anything more beautiful in this world than the combination of a man's strength with a child's humility and purity?

How many Gehazis have read this chapter, and been startled with the thought of those eyes, which are as a flame of fire, from which no secrets are hid? Returning their ill-gotten gains, making restitution to those they had wronged, how happy they have been for their arrest ere it was too late, and then deliverance from the clinging doom of the soul's leprosy!

THURSDAY, Sept. 7. 2 Kings vi.

This chapter brims with characteristics of the "man of God," a designation frequently applied to Elisha. See what such a man can do. Against nature, souls heavy as iron begin to rise from the depths to which they had sunk. Premonitions of danger enable him to warn his friends and secure his own safety. Angel hosts watch around him, giving him immunity from his foes. Kindly deeds conciliate his enemies, as when Elisha suggested that the army of the king of Syria should be supplied with a great provision. It is as though such a man is provided with keen soul-sense, in virtue of which he is aware of more things that this world wots of. Do not think that there was any deception in his assertion that the Syrian soldiers had mistaken the city, for it is clear that the main end of the war was the person of the King of Israel, as appears in vv. 9, 10, and it was into his presence that Elisha led them. In 19, last clause, for "But" read "And," as in R.V.

The one great lesson of this whole narrative is the proximity of God's angel-hosts. They are a cordon of protection to his children. Whether seen or not, it makes no difference, they are ever at hand, in their harnessed hosts. The mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire round about the prophet. Elisha saw one come to sweep Elijah home, he never expected that his own life was encompassed by them. But perhaps from that moment he became aware of their presence. Ah, friends, we do not need to ask for more Divine assistance and blessing than are already ours, but to ask for the Holy Spirit to reveal to us the things which are freely given to us of God. The mountain is full of angels, but our eyes are holden.

FRIDAY, September 8. 2 Kings vii.

The Lord is able to open windows in heaven, and give us such an abundance of grace that we shall forget the awful straitness of the famine years. We are prone to go back to the revival of 1859, or those wonderful scenes which we witnessed in 1873, 1874. But God can out-do those great days if only we will trust Him.

How remarkable it was that the discovery of the plentiful abundance, with which God was meeting his people's need, was not made by the great and noble, the strong and wise, but by the outcasts, the lepers, the pariahs of the community. God is constantly giving to unsophisticated and simple souls visions of his grace and fulness which are hidden from the wise and prudent. It is that no flesh should glory in his presence, and because, in the nature of the case, the pride which human greatness ever generates, is hostile to the receptiveness of the contrite and believing soul.

The fate of the unbelieving lord is full of grave warning to us all. We may be in the midst of a revival, but unblessed: in the midst of plenty, but starved; in the midst of heaven, but dark and sad! Against our windows, the whole wealth of a summer morning may be beating, but what avails it, if we keep them curtained in indulgence and unbelief! The two qualities we all need are submission and faith—the submission of our own thoughts and expectations to the Word of God, and the faith which dares to believe that there are no limits to God. Send out your scouts, if you will, north, south, east, or west, and you will find all the roads strewn with the plentiful provision of your need. Know the love of God that passeth knowledge, and then go forth to appropriate and claim it; and be sure to pass on the tidings to others, lest evil overtake you.

SATURDAY, September 9. 2 Kings viii.

Nothing happens in our life or the world by chance. Behind every event there is a Divine Providence, either appointing or permitting. It would be impossible for God to govern the world if there were events or acts which were beyond the circle of Divine superintendence. Even the devil cannot act beyond permission, as in the case of Job. And where evil is permitted, God is at hand to compel it to work out His schemes; so that at the last, and in spite of all that shall have been wrought to antagonise His projects, His perfect plan will be realised.

It was no chance that led the King of Israel to speak with Gehazi about the great deeds of Elisha at the very moment when the woman of Shunem came to plead for the restitution of her property. It was no chance that Elisha happened to be at Damascus when King Benhadad was sick. It was no chance that Hazael took his life and reigned in his stead, thereby realizing one item of the revelation of Horeb (1 Kings xix. 15).

The story of murder and sin which fills these pages is sad enough reading; but amid it all we see trace of the eternal truth of God, who keeps covenant with his chosen, as appears in v. 19. And, just as the water-lily grows from a very muddy bottom, so the pure flower of our Saviour's life and character was to originate out of these very depths of sin. Let us not be discouraged with the evils of our times. God's purpose is marching on, and will finally emerge in the revelation of the Son of Man in peerless glory.

> Thus bad and good their several warnings give
> Of his approach, whom none can see and live;
> Faith's ear, with awful still delight,
> Counts them as minute guns at night. . . .

Studies in Zechariah:

Joshua the Priest.

Zech. iii.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

WE learn from the Book of Ezra (i. 36-38) that among the exiles who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon, were Joshua or Jeshua, and 3,070 priests. But they were in a sorry plight, their character is described by the prophet Malachi, and it was in sad contrast, as he suggests, to the original type of the priesthood represented in Phinehas.

They despised God's name. Without scruple they offered on his altar the lame, the blind, and the sick. They said that the table of the Lord was polluted, and the fruit thereof, even his meat, contemptible. They did not hesitate to affirm that the routine of Levitical service was a weariness, and they snuffed at it, and brought that which was taken by violence, or the lame and the sick. They had turned aside out of the way themselves, and had caused many to stumble in the law. From these disgraceful characteristics the prophet turned to paint, with a few bold touches, the noble priest whose burning zeal for the honour of God averted his wrath from the people, and secured for himself and his seed after him the covenant of an everlasting priesthood (Num. xxv. 10-13).

"My covenant with him," the Spirit of God declares, "was of life and peace, and I gave them unto him, that he might fear, and he feared me, and stood in awe of my Name. The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity" (Mal. ii. 5-6).

As a judgment on the priesthood, the whole body had fallen under great reproach: "Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways" (Mal. ii. 9).

There is every reason to believe, also, that the regulations for the maintenance of the priesthood by the people had fallen into disuse; so that they had neither robes, nor vessels, nor the proper equipment required for the stately ceremonial of the House of God. Under such conditions there was great propriety in Zechariah's vision of Joshua, the high priest, and his fellows that sat before him: And He showed me Joshua, the high priest, standing before the Angel of the Lord. . . . Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments and stood before the Angel. There was no mitre on his head, on his person; whilst his dishevelled robes told the sad story of neglect. The description at least reflected the general conception entertained of them; and the question may even have been raised as to whether there was any use in rebuilding the temple whilst the officiating ministers were so unworthy of their high calling.

NO INSIGNIA OF EXALTED OFFICE

There have been times in the past when the leaders of various branches of the professing Church might have been described in similar terms; when the services of God's House have been performed in a slovenly and perfunctory manner; when the religious instincts of the people have been subordinated to the sport, pleasure, and material advantages, of their religious teachers; when services have been without decorum, prayers without reverence, music without taste, buildings in such repair as would not for a moment be tolerated in our homes—everywhere dirt, cobwebs, neglect. Such a condition of things may still be described as the robing of the priestly caste in filthy garments.

But is there not another and deeper meaning in these words? Recall the Angel's words: Hear now, O Joshua, the high priest, thou and thy fellows that sit with thee, for they are men which are a sign. May not this mean that they represent all who have been made priests unto God, called to offer up spiritual sacrifices by Jesus Christ? (1 Peter ii. 5). Are there not times in our lives when we feel unfit to render that sacred service? It may be at the hour of evening prayer, when the household is assembling; but we hesitate to open the Sacred Word, or engage in prayer, because something has gone amiss during the preceding hours, which has soiled the heart and ruffled the inward peace. It may be, as we take our wonted seat in the House of God on the morning of God's day, and there flashes across us the memory of habits indulged, practices sanctioned, methods of making money pursued, which are unworthy of our Christian profession; and again our hearts condemn us. Or, as we ascend the pulpit, take our class, mingle with our fellow-workers, we remember proud and vainglorious thoughts, words and deeds of senseless folly, and we feel the incongruity of standing up as God's messengers between the living and the dead. At all such times we are, like Joshua, clothed in filthy garments.

OUTBURSTS OF IRRITABILITY,

The sense of shame becomes more acute when we stand before the Angel of the Lord. He showed me Joshua, the high priest, standing before the Angel of the Lord. In the world's twilight much may pass muster which, in the light of that sweet, pure face, must be utterly condemned. Garments which served us well enough in the short, dark winter days are laid aside when spring arrives; they will not bear the searching scrutiny of the light. In the ordinary life of our homes, we are less particular of our attire than when, on some special occasion, we have to undergo the inspection of stranger eyes. Thus we are prone to compare ourselves with ourselves, or with others, and to argue that the habit of our soul is not specially defiled. Alas!

WE REASON THUS IN THE DARK.

But when the white light of the throne of God breaks on us, we cry with Job: "If I wash myself with snow-water, and make my hands never so clean, yet wilt Thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me."

Joshua must have felt much as Isaiah did, when he was passing through the supreme crisis of his life. Prophet though he were, admired and beloved by the good, hated by the bad, when he beheld the Lord sitting on his high and exalted throne, the cry of soul-anguish was extorted from him: "Woe is me, for I am undone." He was probably the last man in Israel who would have been deemed capable of such a confession; yet he was the first to make it. The greatest saints are they who, like Augustine, write confessions. The larger the sphere of light, the wider the circumference of darkness. The more we know of God, the more we loathe ourselves and repent.

What is to be done under such circumstances? Renounce our priesthood? Disclaim its God-given functions? No, remain standing before the Angel. He knows all, we need not shrink from his searching eyes, but He loves infinitely. He has power to make our iniquity pass from us, and clothe us with change of raiment, that white linen which is the righteousness of saints.

The Love of Christ.

[The following poem, by the late Mr. Joseph Tritton, has sometimes by mistake been attributed to Dr. Rutherford.]

The love of Christ—what is it?
A sunbeam's genial glow,
That smiles upon the weary path
The pilgrim treads below;
Guides him along the desert,
Where midnight shades have sway,
And cheers his spirit with the hope
Of calm unclouded day.

The love of Christ—what is it?
An ocean's flowing tide,
Whose source is where the eternal hills
In towering strength abide;
Whose brow no tempest furrows,
So stormless is the sea;
Sweet fulness of a Saviour's heart,
Our all is launched on Thee!

The love of Christ—what is it?
A pearl of price Divine,
That hath no counterpart as pure,
On nature's wealthiest shrine;
The prize of our high calling,
The treasure of renown,
The Christian's excellence on earth,
In heaven the Christian's crown.

The love of Christ—what is it?
No faithless shifting sand,
But an eternal living rock,
Where all who will may stand:
Whose clefts the soul shall shelter,
When storms are sweeping past,
"A shadow from the tempest's wrath,
A covert from the blast."

The love of Christ—what is it?
A mystery sublime,
With depths the wisest fail to pierce,
And heights they cannot climb;
Yet clear as daylight's rising,
Or golden noon, to those
Who in that mystery rejoice,
And on its truth repose.

The love of Christ—what is it?
'Tis that which wakes the call
Of freedom to her fettered sons,
In dark oppression's hall;
That plumes the wings of mercy
To speed her angel flight,
The harbinger of heavenly day
To children of the night.

The love of Christ—what is it?
Ye martyred brethren own;
Whom, from the scaffold and the stake,
It carried to the throne!
Its soft sweet smile hath brightened
The hour of life's eclipse;
Shone through the fading farewell glance,
And wreathed your closing lips.

The love of Christ—what is it?
The theme of loftiest song;
"To Him that loved us" is the shout
Of heaven's triumphant throng.
Oh! for a heart to waken
Some kindred strain below,
Till at thy feet, Thou source of Love,
More of Thyself we know.

The Y.W.C.A. in Rome.

WE have a small branch Y.W.C.A. at Rome, which cannot go forward for want of suitable accommodation. The work is among the Italian women and girls; but French, German, and Swiss also come to us. We have about twenty-four members and twelve associates. Friends in England have been very kind in partly guaranteeing the rent and taxes for five years and onwards—£100 a year is needed, and the furnishing will cost £500 or £600.

A home is needed with the initial letters clearly displayed, so that all who are seeking to learn a better way than they have hitherto known may learn where to come. We need still £60 for rent and taxes for five years (when we hope the Home will be self-supporting) and £300 for the furnishing.

We try to benefit these women and girls both socially and physically, but our chief desire and aim is to win them for Christ.

The Sunday Bible Classes are the best attended, and all orders mix freely. Friends visiting Rome are assured of a hearty welcome at 37, Via Panisperna.

A. Laurie, Deaconess.

Letter from Rev. F. B. Meyer.

S.S. Umbria, Mid-Atlantic,
August 21, 1899.

IT seems like a dream—the Sunday at New York, the twelve intense and blessed days at Northfield, the two closing services at New York again—and now the ocean! One feels that there is nothing like the joy of helping the Lord's people to realize somewhat more fully their possibilities in Christ, and the power that waits on our surrender.

For the most part the weather has been delightful, days of brilliant sunshine followed by cool nights. Northfield has looked its loveliest; and the traffic-manager avows that he has carried one-third more people than to any previous convention. It is a marvel, indeed, how and where the people have been accommodated. Mr. Moody and his staff have catered for 1,200 at a time, and some hundreds of others have slept in the tents, or found lodgings among the farmers and others in the neighbourhood. One of the great schools has been filled with ministers of the New York Presbytery, who have felt the necessity of preparing themselves in this way for the strenuous duties of their position. From every part of the States, and specially from the South, have been present, and to have the opportunity of speaking to them has more than compensated the effort of crossing and recrossing the Atlantic.

MINISTERS OF EVERY NAME AND CHURCH

I have spoken every morning for about an hour on a consecutive line of teaching, besides taking three evening, and four afternoon addresses, to say nothing of more informal meetings. But Mr. Moody has been most thoughtful with us all, and none of us will allow a word to be said of his over-tasking those who have the pleasure of helping him. For how can a man be still, with such a chance!

A great shadow has been over us all in the dangerous illness of little Irene, his dearly-loved grand-daughter, the surviving child of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Moody. It will be remembered that we sing the mother's composition in "M m nt by Moment." The precious life was despaired of by the doctors, and the little one, four years old, was brought home to die.* It was pathetic in the extreme to see slipping out of the convention and down to his house to hear how the child was, acting as nurse to another little grandchild, that others might be free to give their services in the sick-room, keeping the lawn and road clear and still of noise. These are the traits which make him dear to all who know him. One of the strongest—one of the tenderest of men.

MR. MOODY IN THIS SORROW,

It is astonishing to find the hold this teaching is taking on the United States. The ministers of churches have gone further than we have in the directions of higher criticism and sensationalism; and have discovered the waste and horrid Sahara to which these lead. They are, therefore, more than eager to learn what there is in the Word of God; what lines of truth, what sources of power, that may induce a reaction of vital godliness for their land. There are many signs, also, that it is coming. Mr. Moody is arranging a tour for our dear friend, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, in several of the larger cities; and also wants me to give him two months in the South. To this I am strongly inclined, for there never was a larger opportunity within the reach of any man. To strike now will be to affect the religious life of that great country for two or three generations, but my heart yearns over my working-men, my street-arabs, and the awful needs of Lambeth. But God is not dependent on any of us. He will get all his work done, somehow, somewhere.

There were many pleasant incidents in that Northfield sojourn. A long, happy talk about India with Dr. Mabie, of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Board, followed by a meal in his lovely home, which Mrs. Meyer and I much enjoyed. Delightful intercourse with Dr. Pierson and his family, who have a pretty summer home there. It is quite likely that we may have the pleasure of welcoming him to England this autumn for a few months. My old friend Mr. Payson Hammond also came in for a talk, still sprightly, his heart set on a mission to India, if only the Lord shall open his way, with money and opportunities of service. And it would be impossible to ennumerate all the American friends besides, honoured and beloved, from whom one could not wish to part, save for the ties of the homeland.

The crowning day was the opening of the new chapel for the boys' school at Mount Hermon, for which, it will be remembered, a public appeal was made in these pages, about a year ago, by Lord Kinnaird, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and myself. We raised £2,500, which I took to America on my last visit, and presented Mr. Moody on his sixtieth birthday. The whole Convention went over there on Thursday afternoon, August 17, with the exception of Mr. Moody, who didn't wish to leave the child. At first I feared that his absence would spoil the proceedings; but afterwards it proved better, as we were more free to say what was in our hearts about him.

It is a noble building, standing on the highest point of Mount Hermon, built of white stone, with seating capacity for about 1,000, a fine audience chamber. Two ladies have given a finely-toned organ, and other friends are presenting a clock and a bell which will be heard far up the valley of the Connecticut. The inscription, which we prepared, is fixed in the vestibule to testify for all coming time that the building was erected to the glory of God, and as an expression of the oneness of Christians on either side of the Atlantic. Alas, the clause about our common affection for Mr. Moody has been relentlessly struck out. But I suppose that God is making the honour of his servant his own business, and on the grave of Horeb, where angels buried him.

MOSES NEEDED NO INSCRIPTION

We had an uncommonly fine meeting, which seemed to touch high-water mark. Mr. Moore, of the Band of Trustees, presided; Dr. Weston prayed; Mr. Stebbins and Mr. Jacobs sang; Mr. Morgan, Dr. Pierson, and I spoke; the two flags embraced; we sang "All Hail the Power of Jesu's Name;" and Heaven was near.

So we came away, and now, for the twelfth time, I was crossing the Atlantic—the sea smooth, the sun bright, the air invigorating to a tired man, the Cunard Liner as comfortable and luxurious as possible. Then a hurried run across from Queenstown to Blankenburg to meet the German Christians gathering, as I hear, in great numbers and eager expectancy. There Dr. Baedeker, Pastor Stockmayer, and Rev. C. G. Moore, and possibly Count Bernstorff, with others, are assembling to meet them. Then home to begin my ministry on the first Thursday in September at noon and the following Sunday. Then Lambeth, and the Christian Endeavourers' Conventions in all parts of England. Please pray for me.—In the bonds of Christ,

F. B. Meyer.

* The little one has since passed away.—[Ed.]

In French Villages.

THE Master is giving me a little "working holiday" from Arab work in Tunisia to a small English colony in France. We are already reaping where two beloved English ladies have been sowing, and several have stepped over the line to Jesus. Besides ministering to the spiritual needs of the little colony, I am also visiting the English boats, and we get not a few. Then, all around us are hundreds of utterly unevangelized French villages, which I am longing to visit. If some friend interested in France could supply the extra help needed for itineration, and send me 200 English and 5,000 French Gospels, we would gladly seek, by prayer and judicious distribution, to place them in the hands of those who, until now, have never had a chance to know the Gospel. The Scripture Gift Mission and Crystal Palace Bible Stand recently kindly gave me a good start by sending me 500 Gospels, but these are almost gone.

W. G. Pope, N.A. Mission, Susa.
La Basse Indre, Loire Inférieure, France.

International S.S. Lessons.

September 10, 1899.

ENCOURAGING THE BUILDERS.

Hag. ii. 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Hag. ii. 4.

INTRODUCTORY.

FIFTEEN years have passed since our last lesson, and we find that though there was such rejoicing at laying the foundations of the new temple at Jerusalem, there is scarcely any building done. Why was this? The people got discouraged, because the work was very hard, and they were most of them very poor, and the enemies were troublesome. The good King Cyrus died, and then the opposers of the good work got the new king to forbid the Jews to go on with it. (The teacher should study Ezra v. and vi., which contain the history.) The nobles and richer men had built grand houses and laid out fields and gardens, and were living in ease, though with all their efforts they could not get very much to grow, because God did not bless them (Hag. i.). They should have built God's house first. Then God sent a message to his people by two men, Haggai and Zechariah. To-day we have the message sent by

HAGGAI.

His name means "Festal." No doubt he was born on some great Jewish feast day. We know nothing about him, except what we read in this book and in Ezra. He is supposed to have been an old man when he delivered God's message, because he speaks as if he had seen the first temple. This book, with only two chapters, contains four distinct prophecies, all delivered in the autumn af 520 B.C. The prophet began with rebuke, and then spoke words of encouragement and stimulus to the governor, the priest, and the people. In three weeks they began again to build, and in about four years the temple was finished. Another king now reigned, named Darius, and God put it into his heart to help the Jews and forbid anyone to hinder them.

EXPLANATORY.

Verse 1. Just about a month after the Jews had begun again to build. It was at the time of the Feast of Tabernacles, and the people would all be assembled in the unfinished temple to this festival of praise; but they had had a very bad harvest, and did not feel very joyful, and greatly needed encouragement.

Verse 3. It was sixty-six years since Solomon's Temple was destroyed; but some could remember all its glory—the marble and gold and jewels, and the ark and cherubim and its contents—now all gone.

Verse 4. God's message to all was: "Be strong and work," because "I am with you." Just the same message given to God's workers in all times; e.g., to Joshua (Jos. i. 7), to Solomon (1 Chron. xxviii. 10), to Christians (1 Cor. xvi. 13, Eph. vi. 10, 1 Tim. ii. 1), "One, with God, is a majority."

Verse 5. Ex. xix. 5, 6, xxix. 45, 46; Neh. ix. 20; Isa. lxiii. 11. There is nothing to fear if God's holy Spirit is with us. The people looked back and wept, saying, "The former days were better than these" (Eccles. vii. 10); but God told them to look back at his promises and their fulfilment.

Verse 6, 7. God can overturn and overrule all nations for his glory. He had done so, as in Egypt and Assyria, and did in the terrible conflict between the Persian and Grecian Empires, &c. So with our tempers, habits, &c. The same promises are found in Is. lx. The final meaning is Jesus Christ, who would be the greatest blessing and bring the highest glory.

Verse 8. God made it, God gave it, God controls it, God claims it.

Verse 9. The temples are always spoken of as one and the same. "The latter glory of this house," &c. The greatest glory would be when Jesus, the "Prince of Peace," stood within her gates. Note the Name of God.

SEVEN LESSONS.

1. God does not like his children to be weak and fearful.

2. When Jesus says "Be strong," He is waiting to give the strength.

3. There are two ways of looking at most things.

4. "God is with us." IMMANUEL—a precious name for the Saviour?

5. The Lord expects even little children to do their part in his work.

6. Is it our greatest desire to have Jesus for our own Saviour.

7. Jesus says to us "Peace, be still," though the world is all in commotion. "I will trust, and not be afraid."

Madame de Ramsay:

A REMARKABLE DREAM.

IT was in the month of May, 1894. Madame de Ramsay sat on the verandah of her Swedish home, musing over the past. She saw herself a little child, loved and petted, glancing pitifully at the distorted figure of a crippled passer-by; she saw herself a growing maiden, fair and happy, yet her heart yearning for the parentless, the neglected, those handicapped by disease and the partial use of their limbs. Oh, how to alleviate their sufferings! She reached womanhood, making vain efforts to establish an orphanage. No such institutions existed at that time. The only refuge for old and young was the poor-house. In her desire to do something for the Lord, she gathered around her twenty sickly and crippled children, most of them picked out from the workhouse, and all unable to attend the day-school. To them she made known the love of Jesus, little thinking that her Sunday lessons were to be the starting-point for a large Sunday-school work at Jütenbörg. So, too, with her mothers' meetings. She was then twenty years of age.

In due course came the duties of wifehood, joys of motherhood, the bitter sorrows of parting with loved ones—all these fell to her lot. She had known the merry laugh and the sobbing cry in her own experience, and still she had to learn that Moses was forty years in the land of the Midianites before the Lord thought him fit to deliver Israel. It needed twenty-five years of varied experience and limited activity in the work that lay so close to Madame de Ramsay's heart, before she could launch out into a more active public life, and plead on behalf of the children of suffering.

Her first desire was being realized, when her family bought the present residence and removed to Jönköping, where, with the assistance of two kind friends, she soon succeeded in opening a home for twelve little cripples. Wilhelmsro has remained to this day a private undertaking, being chiefly supported by the two friends mentioned. It shelters forty children, and claims to be the first institution of its kind in the northern countries, England not excepted.

As time went on, and the necessity of other homes became more and more evident, Madame de Ramsay secured the interest of Princess Eugenia, sister of King Oscar of Sweden, who became the president of a "Society for Cripples." The result of these united efforts is the "Eugenia Home," at Stockholm, to which the more promising class of children was removed; while the sadder cases, such as the epileptics and the scrofulous, remained at Wilhelmsro. Here, however, it was found necessary to give separate homes to the different degrees of disease; six of such homes are now in existence.

When their need was first laid upon the hearts of sympathizing friends, it was decided that only children able to receive some education should be admitted.

The limit thus drawn shut out the most desperate, and, therefore, the most needy cases. Madame de Ramsay thought of them as she sat in the cooling breeze of the evening trying to read, but in vain. Their fate weighed on her conscience. Her tender heart went out with the same eagerness towards rejected humanity as it had done years ago, and yet! Was she not an old lady, or getting old at any rate? How could she, after twenty years of daily, hourly contact with afflicted children, think of starting afresh, of engaging in a work of such a repulsive nature? Were not some of those products of sinful lives not only paralyzed and idiots, but also deaf, dumb, and blind epileptics?

Could anything be more hopeless than trying to teach them—anything more thankless than the work and care they required—anything more depressing and sad than the sight of the innocent victims of a debauched past? Her heart shrank from the task. She felt that she had spent all her energies upon the work that prospered so much. She could not possibly do any more, and her daughter's hands were full also.

No, she had borne the heat of the day—she had struggled with doubts, fears, misunderstandings, financial and other difficulties, till the evening of her life. Should she not have deserved a little quiet and more cheerful surroundings? Yes, cheerful surroundings—surroundings free from care. The book fell from her hands, her eye-lids closed—and she dropped to sleep.

Suddenly she heard a clear voice calling her name. She rose, and on walking to the door saw a man of noble appearance standing at the entrance, who addressed her thus: "You have decided to give up the unfortunate children because you think yourself too old and too worn out to give their lives a gleam of light. You wish for brighter companions, for intelligent children likely to give you more satisfaction. Is it so?"

"Yes," she replied.

"Come and walk with me through the garden," said he, in a low, melodious voice, which had an instant and soothing effect upon her trembling heart. They walked along the pathway which led to a little cottage, the same she had in mind when thinking of taking in the worst class of epileptics. On entering the first room, they heard the pitiful wail of a little child that lay in a cot by the wall, and which was so disfigured by sickness, eczema, and, as it seemed, bad treatment, that the sight made the visitor shudder. She turned away with the desire to escape; but already her companion had taken up the little dot, and, putting it gently into her arms, he said, with a look full of tender pity and love:

"Here I give you a joy, greater than you can imagine. Take this child and nurse it for me."

She looked at the gift in her arms and then at the giver. He was gone, and she awoke.

Without hesitation she set to work, and found that age is no hindrance to success. Owing to her efforts, another Epileptic Home was opened not long ago at Stockholm, under the auspices of a society of which Karl, Duke of Western-göthland, is the president.

Madame de Ramsay deplores the fact that in Christian countries like ours so little is being done for epileptics. It is not an easy work, and cannot be measured by results. Those used to seeing the fruit of their labours would feel disheartened if, after many months of hard work and teaching among twenty afflicted children, only six were able to speak a few words and to apply them sensibly, as was the case with the first effort at Wilhelmsro. On the other hand, the very fact that, at the present Industrial Exhibition in Sweden, Madame de Ramsay's little industrial school has been granted the first prize, proves that the work is not a hopeless one. Very sad cases are capable of improvement, if taken in hand early. Private efforts could do much in this direction.

And the dream-child—does it exist? Yes. On Madame de Ramsay's seventieth birthday, in October last, a little being, resembling in every feature the child in the dream, was brought to her and put into her arms. This time she did not shrink from its touch, but welcomed, in the graceless shape—so unlovable and yet so needy of love—a jubilee gift from her Lord. Her heart is knit to little suffering ones by a deep, strong affection, such as only a mother-heart can feel for a child. It is a love capable of making the simplest child beautiful. After fifty years' experience, she is anxious as ever to promote such work in other lands as well as in her own.

W.M.

"Not Accepting Deliverance."

IN the great fire of November 4, 1898, at Hankow, some ten thousand families were made homeless. Amongst them was a Methodist tinsmith, who, like most others, lost all his worldly possessions, except just what he himself could carry. A week or fortnight after, he had borrowed a small capital to recommence business in a mat hut, erected on the ruined site. His neighbour entrusted him with a job, asking him to refine a molten mass of metal, supposed to be zinc. In the "refuse" (which, according to Hankow custom, belongs to the smith), two ounces of gold and a quantity of silver were found. The Christian tinsmith at once returned these precious metals to their rightful owner, notwithstanding the fact that their value was two or three times more than the small capital he had been able to borrow. "There isn't another man in Hankow who would have done this," was the exclamation of the neighbour. The rejoinder was, "No, nor would I two years ago; but I am a Christian now."

This incident is worth thinking over. Note: 1. Their rock is not as our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges. 2. The value of the gold and silver that might have been obtained would be small compensation for the loss of this opportunity of witnessing. 3. When a way of escape from poverty, or other difficulties, is shown us, let us think whether it is the way that God would have us take. If not, let us be with those mentioned in the Hebrews, as "not accepting deliverance."

Home Missions.

With Irish Street Preachers.

"IT'S all true, Jim, what he's saying—its all true—but God forgive us for listening to him!"

This remark of a man to his companion at a recent street meeting illustrates apart from its comicality, how sacerdotalism distorts and enslaves the mind.

The fact, however, that large and small audiences now listen attentively to the preachers in the streets of no fewer than thirty-eight towns in the south and west of Ireland shows that light is beginning to penetrate the moral and religious darkness that has reigned for so many centuries in that land.

A correspondent writes:—"Last Sunday week I attended the open-air preaching in Galway. It was an interesting sight. A small choir of ladies and gentlemen stood around the baby organ and sang sacred part-songs very pleasingly. Three clergymen, a Congregationalist, an Episcopalian, and a Methodist, assisted at the meeting, and an orderly and attentive audience of upwards of 100 persons listened with evident interest to the Gospel message.

"Leaving Galway next morning at 6 o'clock, I reached Monasterevan, co. Kildare, in time to meet the preachers there. It was a small fair, owing partly to the intense heat; but yet a group of about eighty persons listened throughout to the addresses that were delivered. It was an unexpected sight to see a company of Gospel preachers standing in the middle of an Irish fair, speaking and singing, and though not even one policeman was in sight, yet there was neither disorder, shouting, nor violence.

"A long run that same day brought me to Waterford, where, at 8 p.m.,

I FOUND ABOUT 500

people gathered around the evangelists. All, excepting a small group of youths, were very attentive to the preaching, and evidently wanted to hear what the speakers had to say. Later on, at my hotel, a Scottish gentleman expressed to me his gratification at witnessing such a street service, and stated he had seen similar successful and orderly meetings in the streets of Cork, Galway, and Sligo.

"The 8.30 express next morning reached Mallow sufficiently early to permit me to assist at the preaching there. It was a fair day, and the heat was tropical. The preachers took their stand in the market-place, and soon gathered a small but very attentive audience around them. There was no violence whatsoever; the presence of some local Christian gentlemen no doubt greatly helped to contribute to the success of the meeting. The address given on this occasion by the Rev. William Harpur was a model of how a Gospel preacher ought to approach a crowd in the street of an Irish southern town, and the cultivated singing of the Rev. H. Boyd, of the Baptist Church, showed how effective good vocal music is in gathering and holding an open-air audience.

"Two days later I started off for Roscrea, co. Tipperary, and joined the open-air workers there in the market-place. The best spot for the meeting was occupied by a herd of calves, but after a little time they were sold and driven away. Praising the Lord, we instantly stepped on to the vacated space and commenced to sing. Immediately a goodly number drew around and listened to the somewhat lengthy addresses which were given. Two or three persons to attack the preachers, but were restrained by the others. It was a satisfactory meeting, and at its close the preachers walked about the market and the town without meeting with any manifestation of hostility whatsoever.

TRIED TO EXCITE THE CROWD

"The succeeding three days I spent in Athlone. Two open-air services were held here, one on the Saturday in the market, and the other on the Sunday evening at 8.30. The Saturday preaching was discouraging. There was no hostility or opposition of any kind, but very few appeared to listen to the earnest words of the preachers. Sunday, however, was a marked contrast. A large and most attentive crowd attended the meeting; and although it was continued into the dusk, yet there was not the faintest symptom of opposition. Only five years ago 250 police were too few in this town to protect the messengers of the Gospel from death or injury.

"My little tour closed next day in the Fair of Portarlington. It was a small fair, and very few paid any attention to the Gospel story. Very different was the scene at the previous fair. On that occasion some hundreds closed in around the preachers and listened reverently to the wonderful words of life.

"Surely, many prophets and righteous men have desired to see these days, and have not seen them.

"My enjoyment in this primitive and apostolic work was the greater, because all the various preachers I met with were volunteers, and received nothing whatsoever from the funds of the Open-Air Mission, other than their rail fares."

Our readers will rejoice at such cheering facts, and will wish to help these energetic, skilful, and brave volunteers. Help can be given in either of two ways. Young men, who can sing and speak well, and who can defray all their own expenses, and who are willing to volunteer for any period, long or short, should communicate with Mr. George Williams, Bessbrook, co. Armagh; and all others can send donations to the Hon. Treasurer, Captain R. W. Thompson, J.P., Clonskeagh Castle, Dublin, who requires £150 for current expenditure.

The Peace Society.

THE Annual Report of this Society gives a most encouraging account of the work done during the past year. Immediately the Emperor of Russia's message to the Powers was announced on August 28, 1898, a telegram was sent to His Majesty, in the name of the Society, congratulating him on his humane initiative. A circular was issued by the secretary urging the members to take advantage of the opportunity, and to push forward their propaganda with great zeal.

The "Peace Crusade" was inaugurated through the exertions of the secretary, and so numerous were the meetings held, and such the volume of public opinion expressed in the cause of peace, that they claimed the attention of the Premier, who mentioned them in his reply to the Emperor's circular. Over 1,202 copies of resolutions expressing approval of His Majesty's rescript were received by the Society.

The progress of the peace movement, in securing the settlement of national disputes by arbitration, has been remarkable, a very important incident being the general, permanent Treaty of Arbitration between Italy and the Argentine Republic.

The friends of peace in Lisbon not being able to arrange for the annual Congress in that city, it was intermitted; but meetings were held at Turin, and to these thirty-nine Peace Societies sent representatives. M. Vasseur has been indefatigable in spreading the principles of the Peace Society in France. In Hamburg the work has made good progress, and in Sweden and Denmark fresh efforts are being made to obtain a permanent and acknowledged neutrality in times of war.

The office of the Society is 47, New Broad Street E.C., Dr. Evans Darby, secretary.

The British Chautauqua,

THE first week's stay at Saltburn was one continued round of lectures and excursions, varied by quiet times for meditation and prayer. Prayer at the service each morning before breakfast, which has been regularly attended by three-fourths of the Chautauquans in residence, and meditation when, with a kindred soul in some secluded nook on moor or in woodland, we have withdrawn for a space from the bustle of the larger party. Dr. Clifford, who originally proposed to spend only a couple of days with us, but prolonged his stay into the second week, has been the very life of the party. His youthfulness and wit, and the energy and brightness which he imparts to everything he touches, have been a constant source of wonder and delight to those who have come into contact with him.

Among the notable events of the week should be mentioned the lecture delivered by Rev. Chas. Brown, the popular minister of Ferme Park, Hornsey, on "John Knox." Mr. Brown specially noticed the four interviews at which Knox came face to face with the ill-fated Queen. Helpful lectures were delivered by Professor J. Vernon Bartlet, M.A., of Oxford, on "Some Thoughts on the Middle Ages," and on "The Free Church Catechism," emphasizing in the latter that it is a "Catechism" and not a "Creed." A lecture by Dr. J. Agar Beet on "The Story of Abraham and its Spiritual Significance," brought together one of the largest audiences that has yet gathered. On Monday, a special train was chartered, and the whole party journeyed to Whitby, where a delightful day was spent. The ruins of the famous Abbey, and the most interesting church, with its ancient inscriptions and curious old pews, came in for great attention. Saturday evening (Aug. 19) brought some relaxation from the educational engagements of the week, and a social gathering was held, when songs and music delighted the listeners.

On the Sunday, the Chautauquan Sermon was preached by Rev. Alex. Ramsey, B.D., of Highgate. On Monday, Dr. and Mrs. Lorimer joined us, and the doctor took the chair at the annual meeting in the evening, supported by Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D. The chief events at this meeting were the introduction of the new secretary, Mr. Laurence M. Gibson, M.A., and the election of Rev. R. F. Horton, D.D., of Hampstead, to the presidency of the society for 1900, in succession to Dr. Clifford.

A Visitor.

From Factory to Forest.

IF there is any place we dislike in hot summer weather it is the City; and if there is any place in the City we more dislike than another it is some of the close workrooms, not a few of them underground, where thousands of young people have to spend the buoyant days of youth, earning from 7s. to 10s. a week.

Seventeen years ago lady friends opened two rooms in a cottage near the Forest, where such toilers could rest for a week or two with the benefit of fresh air and good food. This unassuming work was of God, and has grown until now a good-sized villa is the home of eight girls at a time. Altogether, from the start, 4,200 girls have shared the benefits of a sojourn under this friendly roof.

Some are able to pay part of their board; but the majority cannot even do this, and in behalf of these we write, seeking the help and sympathy of new friends to take the place of those gone to the Home of Rest above. Those unable to help with cash may be able to send cast-off clothing or household linen.

The work of such young women is trying, the surroundings often depressing, the home poor and cheerless; but while health holds good, they battle on; then, directly the powers flag or fail, they collapse. At such times a week at the "Forest" is of untold value, and the modest sum of 8s. is all that is asked. Surely to know of such a work will lead not a few to help. Communications should be addressed to Miss Mary Reynolds, Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex.

William Luff.

Soldiers on Salisbury Plain.

A FEW weeks ago, a brief but interesting notice appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, giving a glimpse of the work now being carried on among the soldiers attending the manœuvres. Miss Perks, with her devoted sister and Mr. Edwards, the editor of The Bugle Call, with a large contingent of earnest workers from the Soldiers' Home at Winchester, have been here since early in June; and the "great day" alone will declare the trophies of Divine grace which have been won for the Saviour from among the soldiers in the camp. It has been my privilege to see and take part in this blessed work during the past three weeks, and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been so graciously and abundantly manifested amongst us, that a further brief note of what has been done may encourage and stimulate other workers who are seeking the salvation of souls.

Miss Perks has two tents erected this summer, one of which is used by the soldiers for writing home letters, refreshments, &c.; while the other is used exclusively for the Gospel work. Both are connected by means of a short corridor, so that the soldiers in the refreshment tent can see and hear what is going on in the "Canvas Cathedral," as Miss Perks playfully calls the Gospel tent. Meetings are held in this tent every evening, from about six till nine o'clock. The first hour is devotional, and many of the Christian soldiers take part. At seven o'clock the Gospel service begins, which is bright and brief, and is confined to a simple and clear exposition of God's way of pardon. You might hear a pin fall, so intently devout is the demeanour of the soldiers who throng the tent

Three weeks ago, on several occasions, the power of the Holy Spirit was so felt that the solemn stillness became almost oppressive. After prayer by several of the Christian soldiers, the men were invited to decide for Christ without further delay. Numbers of them at once stepped forward and desired prayer to be offered for them, as they were anxious to give themselves to Christ, and a good many of them accepted salvation through faith in Christ on their knees. An hour or two was spent in explaining the way of salvation to others, and one and another gave themselves to the Lord. Ten days ago, several of the battalions, having completed their term of service here, returned to their homes, and before leaving the camp, at a farewell gathering in the tent, a number of the militiamen as well as the regulars gave their

SIMPLE BUT HEARTFELT TESTIMONY

to the goodness of God in saving them in the tent, and urged their comrades to give themselves to the Lord.

Letters received from many of these men since their return home clearly evidence that they are true children of God, thus proving the work here to be a genuine work of the Holy Spirit. During Bank Holiday week the staff was reinforced by the presence of Madame Annie Ryall, whose singing of the Gospel proved a great attraction and power in the services. The volunteers and regulars came in great numbers, and the blessing continued to fall. Night after night souls were gathered in, and the work grows in intensity. Our hearts are filled with joy and thanksgiving to our God for the wonderful showers of blessing which He is vouchsafing to our soldiers.

DAVID YOUNG, M.D.

The Old Vicarage, Bulford.

Malmesbury Park, Bournemouth.—During recent weeks a very fruitful tent mission has been in progress in the Malmesbury Park district of Bournemouth. From the first blessing attended the work, and many professed to find Christ as their Saviour. The conditions of life in the neighbourhood have impressed upon the friends of the work the urgency of provision being made on the spot for a continuance of the work of evangelization, and a permanent hall has been resolved upon. There are obstacles in the way of raising on the spot all the money needed, so it is hoped that outside sympathizers will lend a hand. Communications may be addressed to Miss Campbell, Kingsholme, Drummond Road, Bournemouth.

Obituary.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER GEDDES.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER GEDDES died at his residence at Mount Tabor Cottage, Perth, a few days ago. He was born at Grantown, Strathspey, in 1808. At the age of eighteen he entered the army, and served in various commands with distinction for fifty years, being finally retired in 1878. Since then he led a quiet life, with gardening as his main hobby. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and had been an elder since 1857. He is survived by three sons, one of whom is Professor Patrick Geddes, of University College, Dundee. The funeral was largely attended, the members of the Kirk-Session of the Free Middle Church being present, as well as a large number of prominent citizens.

REV. JAMES DUNCAN.

The Rev. James Duncan, M.A., Baptist minister, of Darlington, died a few days ago. He was at one time pastor of the church at Madeira Street, Leith. Subsequently he laboured at Grantown-on-Spey, and went from there to Darlington. His ministry was singularly fruitful, and his memory is fragrant in the hearts of all who knew him as pastor and friend.

MR. WILLIAM DEAN.

Mr. William Dean, the oldest of the eight deed-poll lay members of the Primitive Methodist Conference, has died suddenly at Sandbach, Cheshire, aged ninety-two. He had regularly attended the Conference for over sixty years, the last occasion being at Leeds in 1898. Mr. Dean was a local preacher, and when ninety years of age preached for a special object in every chapel in the Sandbach circuit. He also took a prominent part in local affairs, and had been a poor-law guardian and a member of the local board.

REV. J. G. ADENEY.

Rev. George John Adeney, of Reigate, an old and highly honoured Congregational minister in Surrey, died on Saturday last, at the age of eighty-one. He entered the ministry fifty-seven years ago, and his jubilee was celebrated by more than one interesting gathering. He was pastor of the Congregational Church for forty-two years, having settled there in 1856. As a past chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union, he was much esteemed all over the county. He used to travel a good deal as a deputation for the British and Foreign Bible Society, and had many friends outside his own denomination. His sons are Professor Walter F. Adeney, M.A., of New College, Hampstead, and Dr. Leonard Adeney, of Tunbridge Wells.

REV. JAMES BONNAR, D.D.

The death took place, a few days ago, of Rev. James Bonnar, D.D., for fifty-eight years minister of East Kilbride United Presbyterian Church. Dr. Bonnar was one of the oldest survivors of the Union of the Relief and Secession Church in 1847. He was born in Dunfermline in 1817. At St. Andrews University, which he entered in 1832, he took a distinguished place, and was the best classical scholar of his time. After studying in the Divinity Hall of the Relief Church, he was licensed in 1840, and in the following year accepted a call to East Kilbride. In addition to the pastoral duties, which he faithfully discharged during so long a ministry, he devoted himself earnestly to the study of prophecy. The degree of D.D. was conferred on him by his Alma Mater in 1885. He celebrated the jubilee of his ministry in 1891, the year which also marked the centenary of his congregation. Though somewhat feeble, Dr. Bonnar enjoyed fairly good health till six weeks ago, since which his strength failed. During the past year and a half he had the assistance of Rev. C. M. Masteroy, B.A., as colleague.

MRS. ADA HUXTABLE.

On Sunday, August 13, this earnest Christian worker entered into the "joy of her Lord," after a few weeks' suffering. Reared in a Christian home in the Mumbles, Swansea, she early gave herself to her Saviour, and took up Christian work. Whatever she did was done heartily; she never spared herself, but, with the utmost unselfishness, tried to help all around her. She married and settled in Bristol, where her husband was a deacon, and superintendent of the Sunday school at Cotham Grove Baptist Chapel. Left a widow, with two daughters, Mrs. Huxtable moved to the Mumbles, where she was speedily a centre of Christian usefulness in the Sunday school and in speaking for her Master wherever the opportunity offered. She had a passion for winning souls, and was never weary in trying to rescue the slaves of drink. A year since, Mrs. Huxtable removed to Clifton, Bristol, greatly to the loss of the workers at the Mumbles, and here she took up her Christian work, with all her former energy. She had a large Bible Class of young women, and was busy in other ways, when the Master's summons came. In the very prime of life she was laid aside, and then entered into that higher service for which she had been preparing here below. Her simple faith, and earnest consecrated love have been an inspiration to many.

E. F. E.

REV. THOMAS HILL.

One of the oldest and most highly-esteemed of Congregational ministers passed to his reward on Friday last. Rev. Thomas Hill, who had reached the advanced age of eighty-four years, was until a few years ago pastor of the North Finchley Congregational Church, a position which he filled for thirty-two years. Few ministers in North London were better known, and in the county of Hertford he was looked upon as the natural leader in all Nonconformist circles. Mr. Hill entered the ministry in 1839, his first charge being Bow-lane, Poplar. He afterwards removed to Chigwell-row, Essex, where he remained for seven years. In 1847 he received a very hearty call to the church at Cheshunt, which he accepted, remaining there seventeen years, at the end of which time he removed to Finchley, where a handsome church had just been erected.

When Mr. Hill first went to Finchley the church was the only place of worship in the district, and to his ministry he attracted not only members of other Free Church denominations, but also a large number of members of the Church of England. At Finchley, Mr. Hill's life-work was done, and his influence was felt in every public movement which was started. On more than one occasion he was called to fill the presidency of the Hertfordshire County Union of Churches, and in 1894 he was unanimously elected chairman of the London Congregational Board of Ministers. Owing to failing health, Mr. Hill early in 1896 resigned the oversight of the church at North Finchley, and on his retirement was presented with a public testimonial.

For some time past his eyesight had failed him, and he had depended on others to lead him about. Only a few weeks ago he underwent an operation, which promised, in some measure at least, to restore his vision; but however successful it may have been, he has not tarried long to enjoy its results. Since retiring he has worshipped at the New Court Church, where his influence has been fragrant, and his presence and counsel have been a constant source of joy and inspiration to the fellowship.

Our Countrymen Abroad.—On Sunday night a particularly brutal bull fight took place at Boulogne, and among the 3,000 spectators were a large number of English people, who apparently found great satisfaction in the sickening and brutal spectacle. Four bulls were slaughtered to make this pitiable holiday, one being despatched in spite of a loud demand for mercy. The scene in the arena is described as absolutely sickening, and it is little to be wondered at that a majority of the Boulonais have protested against a recurrence of such an exhibition.

(317)

Other Lands.

West African Fetish.

ALTHOUGH Miss Kingsley's "West African Studies" are by no means written from the missionary point of view, there are few books which should stir the believer in the Lord Jesus Christ to more earnest prayer and effort to spread the knowledge of his name. She has seen, and, as it were, handled, "Fetish," and describes what she has seen and heard so vividly that the very heart of this terrible religion seems laid bare. You long to snatch its victims from the bondage and fear in which they pass life at war with the spirit world around, as the child she tells of was snatched by a white passer-by from the big python hanging over it from the ridge pole of the tent, beneath which the little creature was calmly sleeping. The mother and other women were screaming terribly and wringing their hands in a passion of grief, yet they dared not enter the hut door; not from any physical fear of the snake, but that being Ju Ju, the mother who saved her child from it would be liable to be killed herself, or pay a heavy fine to the Ju Ju priests.

Miss Kingsley analyses the native intellect as being mainly logical, and says "it is the power of being able logically to account for everything by Fetish that is at the back of its TREMENDOUS POWER IN AFRICA."

The embodiment of spirit in matter is at the root of Fetish, matter in itself counting as nothing. "Spirits, the things that cause all motion, all difficulties, dangers, and calamities, must be thought about, for they are the real things." . . . "It may seem a paradox to say of people who are always seeing visions that they are not visionaries, but they are not. . . . The African is not a dreamer or a doubter; everything is horribly real to him." His idea of pleasing these spirits does not contain the idea of rectitude. That is another matter altogether, involving conscience and principle, which his spirits do not possess; being no better than himself, and not caring for such trifles in their worshippers. They have their own affairs to attend to, and are generally indifferent, and only hostile when you get in their way. They are presided over by a great over-god, who absolutely does not care; so the human soul in its mortal tenement has little peace and no hope for present or future.

There are many grades of these spirits—some embodied in matter, either permanently or transiently; others who have no embodiment; and only the Fetish and witch doctors can tell when matter is thus possessed.

It is a startling commentary on nature religion—the Pantheism which some great intellects seem to rank above revelation—to find so deep and far-seeing an observer as Miss Kingsley expressing her conviction that if you take up this religion of nature, "with no higher form of mind in you than a shrewd logical one alone, it will lead you necessarily to paint a white chalk rim round one eye, eat your captive, use Woka incantations for diseases, and dance and howl all night repeatedly, to the awe and scandal of all who have a revealed religion."

Living in familiar intercourse with spirits surrounded by

"TERRIFIC NATURAL PHENOMENA,"

with a warm climate and good food supply, the African has come to regard himself as of little or no importance in the scale of creation except to his own individual self, and to the circle of wives, children, and friends, whose lives are precious to him because of the reciprocal love between them. Miss Kingsley pays tribute to the power of affection in the African heart. "The love between mother and child, man and man, brother and sister, woman and woman, is deep, true and pure." When Christianity comes and tells him of a God-man who does care, connecting him with the great over-God who cares likewise, it appeals directly to him, and lifts him at once "into a position of paramount importance in creation. He is the thing God made the rest for. I have heard Africans say, 'It does a man good to know God loves him; it makes him proud too much.'"

It would seem, reading this, that the message of God's love only needs to be presented to this people capable of keen affection, and consequently of keen hatred, and knowing far more of the latter than of the former, either from gods or men. But the African mind has been "soaked in Fetish;" "and when the African convert is brought face to face with that awful thing we are used to, the problem of an omnipotent God and a suffering world, the voice of Fetish is almost irresistible." He does not worry about the question in the abstract, till grief and misery come home to him personally. "When it does, and he turns and calls upon the God he has been taught will listen, pity, and answer, it is heart-rending to hear his appeals, so terribly real is his prayer to Him;" while, when no answer comes, the temptation to return to those old gods from whom he expected no pity is one to which many succumb.

IT IS THE OLD STORY, human nature repeating itself, and demanding exemption from the mystery of pain and suffering which must go on till He comes who has purchased and redeemed earth from the powers of evil.

Humanly speaking, there are many and great difficulties in the way of the mission effort. Christianity "cuts at the root of the ancient customs," and aims at taking away the living of many who depend on their observance for subsistence. Therefore, the missionary needs sound common-sense, and the power of teaching his converts "any industrial pursuit which may help them in the struggle for life which is daily getting harder for our African brethren as it is here in England." This, if we mistake not, was the view taken by Livingstone.

But no one to whom Christ is a living reality can read this revelation of Fetish and the sorrowful, sinful teachings which spring from it, without feeling the burden of Africa laid upon him, and bearing it day by day to the throne of God, asking that the Spirit may move upon that dark and troubled continent, showing the people the Sin-Bearer, the Christ who wore the crown of suffering for them, and kindling such love to Him in those weary-hearted that, "looking unto Jesus," pain and sorrow will seem but a light affliction, compared to the eternal weight of glory before them.

MARY GORGES.

Colonial and Continental Church Society.

THE following extract from a letter written by the Bishop of Ballarat (Dr. Thornton) shows how valuable the contributions sent by friends of the Colonial and Continental Church Society and others to the "Wrecked Churches Fund" have proved. The Bishop says:

"I have just returned (travelling all night) from consecrating our new church at Nhill, which was the focus of the cyclone havoc in November, 1897. Through English help, on a far better site, we have built, paid for, and consecrated a stone church in place of a wooden one—too massive for any future cyclone to overturn—and though wind blew, and rain poured, the new St. George's Church was crowded three times on St. George's Day. On the Monday evening many could not find entrance. The people have found the site, fences, furniture, &c., themselves, but the fabric I have made a gift from English fellow-Christians only, for whom we offered special intercession and thanksgiving at the services, the generous gift being well understood to be such, and profoundly appreciated.

"On Monday afternoon I planted a memorial tree in front of the porch (a pyramid tree—it grows eighty feet high, evergreen); and at blast of trumpet about twenty-five other trees were simultaneously planted by donors round the church to shield it from cyclonic winds and the summer sun. We have so turned the church as to expose it to a minimum of sunshine. The spirit at the consecration and other services was most enthusiastic."

A Hard Field.

THE conditions under which missionary work is done in the Argentine have been well described by Mr. W. B. Sallans, a member of the South American Evangelical Mission, who has been labouring for some time in the Republic:—

"As the 'whited sepulchre,' which appears beautiful outwardly, but within is full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness, so is the Argentine or 'Silvered Republic.' There is an impression that people of the Argentine, and other South American countries, are breaking away from the fetters of Rome, casting off her superstitions, and taking a stand for independent thought. Only powerful personalities, however, are able to arrest the attention of the world; and South America has had very few who have been able to exercise an influence beyond their local circle. The bulk of the population are never seen or heard of. The few who come into notice are those who may be said to see the corruption of the Church of Rome. They see that the entire system is untrue and EVIL FROM ROOT TO BRANCH.

"It is only when one has resided for some time among the people, has conversed with them and watched their daily life, that one is able to appreciate the true condition of the masses. It is possible to live for years in such a city as Buenos Aires, and yet know almost nothing of the life and mode of thought of the majority of the population. A missionary's feelings after a few months' labours amongst the masses are not easy to describe. He has heard glowing descriptions of the readiness of the people to throw away their idols and receive the Gospel of Jesus Christ; and, jubilant with expectation, he begins to distribute tracts. The people flock about him to get his papers—because they are free. He thinks, of course, in the simplicity of his heart, that this is because they are the Gospel, and writes home that the poor souls are hungering for the Bread of Life. How they flock about him to receive the blessed Word! He believes they are more ready even than he had thought to accept the truth. But alas! it is not hunger for the Word of God, but hunger for a novelty; not interest, but curiosity. What was taken to be a rich harvest waiting for the sickle turns out to be a tangle of thorns and thistles; and the messenger of Christ, instead of shaking down the luscious fruit which he has seen fully ripe, must patiently clear away the brambles, dig up the great roots of bitterness, and, sow the precious seed, hoping in God for the early and the latter rain. Weary are the days and dark the nights, till his eyes fail with watching for the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear.

MID TEARS AND TOILINGS,

"To get the people away from Rome is one thing; to get them to Christ quite another. A man may throw off all religion and declare himself a freethinker, or an unbeliever; and little notice is taken of it, even by the priest. There is no persecution for him. But let that man embrace the Gospel of Christ, let the freethinker become free, and see how quickly Rome will show her fangs!

"South America is lost, and her only hope is in our hands; it is the Word of God. This Gospel must be taken and preached to these careless and hardened heathen. It is our right and privilege to do this glorious work. Would that there were many who would rise to the privilege and claim the right!

"Our prayer must be that God will provide and fit the reapers for their difficult work; and that He will send his fear upon the people, and pour his convicting Spirit into their hearts."

Communications regarding this work may be addressed to the secretaries, Union of British Prayer Circles, 58, Mount Pleasant, Liverpool.

Salvation Army.—About a thousand supporters of the social work visited the Hadleigh Farm Colony on Monday. Reclamation work is to be extended, the intention being to acquire Hadleigh Great House and grounds as a retreat for habitual drunkards.

An Inspiring Record.

AMERICAN MISSION IN EGYPT.

In a recent letter from Dr. Alexander, in charge of this Mission at Assiout, we received some interesting information about his work, which is organized under the direction of the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

There are 210 central and out-stations, extending from Alexandria, Damietta, Port Said, and Ismailia on the Mediterranean Sea and Suez Canal, throughout the Delta and along the Nile to Assoán, in Upper Egypt, and Kosseir on the Red Sea. The majority of the large towns are occupied, and many of the smaller ones. From these centres the work is carried into the villages by means of colporteurs. Last year by this agency 73,939 books were distributed, including 18,828 copies of the Scriptures.

The Synod of the Nile, of the Native Evangelical Church, consists of four Presbyteries, with thirty-one native ordained ministers, nineteen licensed preachers, ten lay workers, and eight theological students. The American Mission works through and with this synod. There are three pastorates entirely self-supporting. All the pastorates and preaching stations increase their contributions from year to year, and effort is made that ultimately all shall become independent.

In the churches and preaching places an average of 11,155 people attend the services on the morning of the Lord's Day. There are 6,200 communicants in the Native Church.

The educational work is very extensive. It includes nearly 200 schools for both sexes located in all parts of Upper and Lower Egypt, many of which are self-supporting. In these schools last year were nearly 12,900 pupils.

The Theological School is located at Cairo, and the Training College at Assiout. There are about 500 pupils in the College, 400 of whom are boarders.

In the harems or zenanas, taught by special teachers, there are 1,743 women learning to read, besides 2,035 others who are taught the truths of the Scripture without learning to read. Over 3,000 women and girls attend the Sabbath morning services. At least 10,000 women and girls in home, church, and school are under the influence of the Gospel.

There is a missionary physician and a hospital at Assiout, and two lady physicians and a hospital at Tanta; 18,329 patients of all religions were treated last year.

The native evangelical community numbers 22,500. Of these 6,020 males and 2,091 females can read. Of the entire population of Egypt, including foreigners, only eighty-eight males and six females in 1,000 can read; while of the evangelical community, 521 males and 200 females in 1,000 are able to read—a splendid testimony to the high intellectual quality of the work of the Mission, and a promise of a hopeful future for the evangelical community.

Our Soldiers in South Africa.

DEAR SIR,—A good opportunity presents itself of helping our soldiers in South Africa, and the large reinforcements on the way there, besides those which, in all probability, will follow.

The greater number will be stationed in the wilds, with little or no spiritual help. Past experience has taught us how readily, under such circumstances, the men will yield to good influences.

We (Mr. Howe and myself) hope to start on September 2 for the Cape, spending about a year in the colony. We would gladly take out and distribute literature suitable for soldiers, if friends who have helped us in former years in this work would help again.

Gospel leaflets and booklets would be best, and also the marked Testament, not reports. Miss F. E. Campbell, Kingsholme, Drummond Road, Bournemouth, will kindly receive parcels which should be sent, carriage paid, as soon as possible. If any should reach her after our departure, they will be forwarded.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn-Howe.

A Soldier's Letter.

The writer of the following letter, brought up in a priest-ridden Corsican village, where the Word of God was unknown, had to come all the way to Madagascar to find his Saviour. After more than a year's witness-bearing in the ranks, he is now on furlough, and writes as follows to the friend whose privilege it was to set him in the Way of Life:

"It is with a heart overflowing with joy that I write to tell you of the answer to my prayers, for up to this day our loving Saviour has continued to hear and protect me. On arriving at Marseilles, I was able to spend a day with my brother (a man-of-war's man on leave), whom God has led into the right path. Here is what he told me, 'I love God, and trust in Him that He can forgive me my sins and do everything for me; and I pray to Him constantly. But I no longer believe in either priests or saints as I used to do in days gone by. I try to keep out of bad company, and to be kind to everyone.' He also told me that he sometimes went to the Sailors' Rest in Marseilles. I also was able to visit the 'Rest,' and found Mdlle. Merz, who reminded me of you. On the Sunday I attended a prayer-meeting and a temperance meeting of the 'Croix bleue' Society. Here I took the pledge for three months, but hope to become a full member of the society before rejoining my regiment after furlough.

"At Ajaccio I visited Mr. and Mrs. R., who were delighted to see me. A missionary from Bastia was also there. They have many difficulties to contend with in their work of evangelization, but some encouragement nevertheless. In one village half the population are converted, and are going to build a place of worship. Some are also devoting themselves to the work of colporteurs. May He who can do all things change the hearts and enlighten them by his Holy Spirit!

"When I reached ——— (his native village), I found that nearly everyone knew I was a Protestant; and this is how it came about. A parcel had arrived for me at the post-office from a bookseller in M———, and, as there were certain formalities to be gone through before it could be taken out, they thought they would see what the packet contained. To their great surprise, it was a Bible—and immediately the news had spread that I was a Protestant! My mother soon came to the conclusion that the Protestant faith must be better than that of Rome from the change she sees in me. She knows that before I joined the regiment I cared very little about religion, and only said my prayers as a duty, and, as it were, by force; and that I used to frequent evil companions, and she sees that now all that is changed. Every evening I read aloud some passages from the Italian Scriptures, and we have family prayer, addressed to God alone.

"My mother has promised me that she will put her whole confidence in our Lord and Master, and look to Him for help. I explained to her that she should not keep images of the Virgin and the Saints, as it was displeasing to God, who alone can save us. With the help of Him who can change hearts, I do not despair of leading her to receive and understand the Word of life. She asked me whether it was you who had taught me to love the Saviour, and we pray constantly for a blessing on you and on your work of spreading abroad the good news of salvation."

Outspoken Ritualism.—In a recent number of the Church Times an advertisement appeared containing an appeal from Canon Warner, of Stoke Rochford, Grantham, on behalf of the parish of Mount Frere, St. John's, Kaffraria. By way of inducement prominence was given to the heading: "Benefactors regularly remembered at the altar." In the appeal the following sentences appear:—"We are genuine Catholics, and not the slightest bit moderate." "Surely you will not let our work perish, when Protestants can get all they want to spread their errors with." "Catholics, please rally to our aid. You have never shone in devotion to missions; but do send us something to enable us to hold up our heads amongst our brethren."

Notes from New York.

A DESPATCH to the World from Toledo, Ohio, gives an account of the conversion in that city of Mr. M. O. Waggoner, who has been, till recently, an "infidel" all his life, and he is seventy-three years old. When he was converted, he decided to burn his infidel books (about 150 in number) in public, but has since decided that their destruction shall take place by the same means in the church that he now attends. He was an active worker against Christianity in his day, but now labours for God with corresponding energy. He says that since conversion he has held services in over ninety churches, and that his work has only just begun.

Rev. Dr. F. R. Morse, associate pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in West Fifty-Seventh Street, occupied the pulpit there. "Is not the devil the greatest worker in Greater New York to-day?" was a question with which he began his sermon. He declared his belief that the world is growing wiser, but has doubt that it is growing better. Since the introduction of electric cars, for instance, he said, Sabbath desecration had increased 50 per cent., and drunkenness 25 per cent. On all sides were proofs of the increased wisdom of the world, but he could find but little proof that it was growing better.

In the course of his sermon, Dr. Morse said:

The biggest thing Satan runs on the American Continent is Tammany Hall. Here he is showing great generalship. Here he is achieving marvellous feats. His organization is complete, and its working is as efficient as it is destructive. Here is a chartered iniquity as black as it is monstrous, as defiant as it is successful. It moves at the dictation of its founder, and does its hellish work according to his plan. Do not say again that Tammany Hall is run by a political boss. It is controlled and inspired by the devil. He owns it. Every agent he employs to further its ends is his own child. . . . In every department of our city government his influence is felt. He controlled the election which put Tammany men into office, and the dishonesty, jobbery, and theft, all the base schemes for personal enrichment, all the protected licentiousness which as dry rot reduces to ashes womanly beauty and manly strength, all the hotbeds which hatch the venomous brood of robbers and rioters, all the chicaneries which play in the realm of political ambition, all the revelry which stultify brain and heart—all these things are from Satanic influence. . . . Under the manipulations of the arch-fiend, even the defenders of justice are transformed into Felixes waiting for bribes. The saloon and the den of infamy alike belong to his majesty, and he exacts vast revenues from them to support his political organization.

From which it will be seen that we do not lack for men who have the courage to tell the truth upon occasion, and to state it too in fairly forcible terms.

Dr. Len E. Broughton, of Atlanta, Ga., who has made a good deal of trouble for himself by his denunciation of lynchings, and those who take part in them, preached in the Hanson Place Baptist Church on "Christian Citizenship, or Common-sense Religion," his text being "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Much of what he said as to politics and politicians, is as true in the North and West as in the South, as for example:—

The politician understands that when a man accepts that command of St. Paul's he is going to be out of a job quick. As far as I know there is not a political boss in this country who would not have to give up his job in such an event, and go to the foot of the ranks. They are nothing but a set of stupendous frauds, and they are going to keep preachers and church people away from this principle as long as they can. But the trouble is that we have allowed all these people to object until they have objected us off our platform. The devil's got the world, and lots of us Christian people and preachers too."

In respect of lynching, the preacher said he had done all he could to suppress it in the South, and that he proposed to do more yet. The best people in that section are not in sympathy with it, and it is only the "low-down, immoral element" that keeps it alive. He said that if he were in the Governor's chair he would stop lynching in short order in his State.

He attributed the evil chiefly to the machinations of "mean, low-lived, white politicians," who array the coloured man against his white brother. He said that—

The one thing needed now in the South, is the elimination of the Negro as a political factor. The coloured men in South Carolina are the happiest and most contented in the South to-day. Not a coloured man votes in that State. There used to be lynching and disorder there, but that ceased when the Negroes were practically disfranchised. After this elimination we should go on training, and when the black man's moral perceptions are awakened he should be given the ballot again.

ROGER MARTIN.

North Africa Mission.

VERY many of the Mohammedans appear to be ready to listen quietly to the Gospel story. Messrs. Kumm and Dickins of this Mission, have been breaking new ground in the course of a tour through the country. The following extract from a letter by the latter is interesting as showing the condition of things on virgin soil: "On Friday, we visited a village named Mahallet Marhoum. A new light railway having only just been opened, we probably were the first who have had the privilege of preaching the Word in it. We found a village of some 9,000 people, containing twelve mosques. In the midst we found a court-house and people assembled therein. We accepted an invitation to drink coffee. An angry discussion going on among themselves was soon diverted into another channel by the quotation of one of the proverbs of Solomon. This led a young Sheikh to say he very often sinned but it did not matter, for God is the merciful one. From this point the justice of God was expounded to him, and he was shown that "justice and mercy" meet together only in the Lord Jesus Christ. He himself became very sullen but the hearers approved the truth.

"After leaving the court house we were passing a mosque, and my friend suggested that we should enter. The sun outside was making the street like a furnace, so we put off our shoes from our feet and entered the shady retreat. Soon others came in, for it was near the time of the noonday prayer, and moreover it was Friday. By twelve o'clock we were surrounded by the Moslems, and decided if not asked to leave we would remain. Here then, I attended Moslem service for the first time. I remembered God is a Spirit, and sought to worship Him in spirit and in truth, praying especially that ere long these men might know the truth which makes God's children free. After the service—which consisted of readings from the Koran, prayers and prostrations after a fixed form, and an address from the pulpit (stereotyped) by the chief sheikh—the attention of all was fixed on us. Then Ayoub asked me for my copy of the Proverbs of Solomon, and asked if they would like him to read therefrom. They gathered all around us. From the maxims of wisdom was inferred the question, 'How to live the life of wisdom,' and they were shown that only one had lived that life perfectly—namely, the Messiah, whom their Koran says is the 'Word of God and Spirit of God,' and that He is the living Saviour for all who believe in Him. At the close an elderly Moslem, whose eye had been upon us from the beginning, as much as to say, Why are you here? to our surprise came to us with his son, and invited us to take a meal with them in their house. There, in conversation, around the large tray of simple native food, we strove to lead them into the truth, as it is in the Messiah. From their house they accompanied us to the middle of the village. As we parted, the young man received a copy of the Gospel, and promised to read it."

American Y.M.C.A. Camps.—In the past fifteen years it is estimated that 8,000 boys have been taken to American Y.M.C.A. holiday camps. The camps have been factors of great spiritual influence, hardly a boy returning, it is said, without having received decided impressions that will follow him through life.

Ludhiana Medical School.

IN a letter dated July 5, Dr. Edith Brown tells me that "through reading your letter in THE CHRISTIAN, a lady in Bristol was led to send us £100 for the outfit and passage of a doctor. We also have the joy of looking forward to receiving more helpers, a nurse, and one or two doctors next autumn, the outfit, passage, and salary of one doctor being provided by one lady." This is such a pleasant result of my letter that I think your readers may fairly know of it.

Dr. Edith Brown goes on to say: "Our great need just now is for the building of a house for the workers. We have built the foundations, for which we had money in hand; and we are now waiting till funds come in for the rest of the house—it will need about £600 more. We have thirty-two students in all, and three or four are making application to enter in October. At present, we have had to enclose pieces of the verandah for the students to sleep in, and therefore the need is peculiarly pressing."

From my own knowledge of this work, I feel able to commend it very heartily to your readers. It is certainly one of the noblest institutions that I met with in India. In connexion with the same cause comes an appeal for a lady, not less than thirty years of age, who has had some experience of work among boys and men, to devote herself, as a voluntary worker, the care of the Soldiers' Institute. She must be a motherly woman, with plenty of sympathy for the soldier lads, who are exposed to so many temptations. She will find plenty of work to fill heart and hands. £60 a year for the rent of a suitable house, servants, cleaning, and lighting, ought to cover expenses, so that anyone with an income of £100 or £150 a year could maintain herself in comfort, including holiday expenses. I should be pleased to consider the applications for this position on my return from America at the end of August.

F. B. MEYER.

South Africa General Mission.

I WAS at Bethany the other day, the oldest mission station we have in Swazieland. We had had a very blessed gathering around the Lord's table, and felt Him very near. The church bell was ringing, and I watched the Swazies going in—some notable trophies of grace, with bright faces, some very young Christians, and some raw heathen. The church was built from funds given by our American friends during the trip my wife and I made in '93 and '94. It is a brick building, to hold fully 150.

During my visit I was able to see our five stations and three churches all in a flourishing condition, and not a few Swazies manifestly saved, and bright witnesses for Christ. I visited Swazieland with Dr. Andrew Murray in 1891 and we were both struck by the awful density of heathenism, with only two stations in the whole country. It was a small beginning, but God has so signally blessed that we feel more than encouraged. We are starting a training home for evangelists at our station at Hebron, and, by the time this reaches you, hope to have five Swazies in training. They will be able to reach so many in their own country.

I hope to leave here directly for a seven weeks' tour in an ox-cart through Zululand. I shall be visiting our two stations on the great Lake St. Lucia, which have been started since we came to Durban, and then on to Amatongaland, to mark out a bit of land for another station, which will (D.V.) be started next year. We are wanting a consecrated medical man, fully qualified, for this station. This district was quite untouched before we went in, and the soil is virgin soil right up to Portuguese Amatongaland. I pray that we may reach all this district very soon, for the Lord's coming seems near.

We are being encouraged at our various stations, and are seeing the blessing of the Lord. In Durban, the Zulu churches fill, and souls are being saved. We have three Zulu evangelists being trained in Durban at present, and hope to be sending them forth soon. Pray for us!

Durban. W. SPENCER WALTON.

Another West Indian Hurricane!

ELEVEN months ago, St. Vincent, Barbadoes and St. Lucia, in the Windward Group, were laid low by hurricane, and have not yet recovered. On the 7th inst., another terrible hurricane spent its fury on Montserrat, St. Kitts, Nevis, and other islands in the Leeward Group, extending its ravages also to the Bahamas, and to Puerto Rico, the island newly acquired by the United States. Official telegraphic despatches show that in all the islands visited great destitution prevails. In Montserrat "all the churches and chapels have been destroyed." Everywhere there has been great loss of life and terrible destruction of property.

The people are our fellow-subjects, and the Lord Mayor has opened a fund which will deal in a general way with the distress. But as an old West Indian missionary, I am led to look upon the disaster in its relation to Christian missions, and to missionary brethren whose position is pitiable in the extreme. These brethren have already suffered much with their people in recent years, owing to the ruined state of the sugar industry. Their difficulties will now be intensified, as the immediate result of the hurricane will be wide-spread poverty among the people, and complete bankruptcy of financial means for carrying on the work of the Churches. My heart goes out to them in pity, and I would like to be used in helping them. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN generously responded to my appeal last year. May I plead for a generous response in the present distress?

Donations sent to me will be gratefully acknowledged. I may say that I am co-operating with the Wesleyan Missionary Committee.

(REV.) SLATER SUNDERLAND.
84, Longbridge Road, Barking, E.

The Crown Agents for the Colonies desire to make it known that contributions of clothing and provisions will be gratefully accepted by the Government of the Leeward Islands for the relief of the sufferers, and that any parcels sent to their packers, Messrs. Hayter amd Hayter, 36, Upper Thames Street, E.C., will be shipped by the first opportunity, free of charge.

Postal Officials in South America.

ABOUT a year ago, in connection with the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (Senior), a Spanish Gospel magazine was started, with the object of reaching the postal officials of South America. Three numbers have been sent out at quarterly intervals, and have been well received. Very encouraging are the numerous letters from postmasters in all parts of Argentina, and from Christian workers in other States.

It was at first desired to send the little paper, El Correo Evangelico, to the Argentine offices only, of which a list was procured through the courtesy of the Argentine Consul in London. Surplus numbers, however, were sent to missionaries in Venezuela, Peru, Chili, Ecuador, and Uruguay. In Venezuela, permission was obtained from the Postmaster-General for sending a copy to every office under his direction.

Two workers in the P.T.C.A. have sailed, August 25, for Buenos Aires, whence El Correo will in future be issued, and where it is hoped definite work may be begun among postal employees. Prayer is asked for God's blessing upon this new departure in work for South America, a continent that has so long been neglected. Further information may be had from Mrs. C. L. Smith, 35, Eltham Road, Lee, London, S.E.

Villa Helvetia, Mentone.

THERE must be very many tired lady workers to whom the thought of a few weeks or months spent in the sunny south in the enjoyment of perfect rest must often present itself. Most of them, however, have to banish the hope of the pleasing dream ever becoming to themselves a reality. For one thing the South of France cannot be visited even for a short time without landing them in expense which very few of them are able to meet.

It is, however, very cheering to know that the dream may now become a reality. For the last twenty-five years there has been at Mentone a much valued asylum for invalid ladies called Villa Helvetia. It has been under the very kind and efficient superintendence of Miss Dudgeon. Requests for admission have been for years so frequently made by many who could not strictly be called invalids, that the home is about to be enlarged, so that ladies who require change of air and rest for a time, but cannot meet the expenses of hotel life in the Riviera, may be received into it.

Villa Helvetia is most pleasantly situated, and in the midst of a beautiful garden. A more comfortable Christian home there could not be. Information as to particulars may be had from Miss Dudgeon, Villa Les Grottes, Mentone. M. M.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Faithful and True.

SHE was only a bit of a girl—there was nothing at all remarkable about her; but in the days of Queen Mary, when the faithful passed through seas of persecution, Rose Allen (for that was her name) proved herself to be a King's daughter indeed, and more than a match for Rome's arguments and tortures. She lived with her mother and father at Colchester, the three forming part of a little group of Bible lovers, who were prepared to follow the Lamb whithersoever He led them. That pathway proved to be one of suffering ("the fellowship of his sufferings"), and it ended in the martyr's fire and the martyr's crown.

Rose's mother was ill in bed when the storm of persecution burst over their heads. One evening loud knocks were heard at the door, and angry voices betokened the arrival of the Queen's officers to hale Rose's parents to prison. No excuse would be taken; sick or well, they must go to gaol, the only delay allowed being time for Rose to get her mother a little drink. Rose took a stone pot in one hand and a candle in the other, and went to draw some drink for her mother, and as she came back through the kitchen, Tyrill (the man in charge of the soldiers) met her, and told her to try and get her parents to recant. But her fearless answer showed of what sort of stuff she was made. She said: "They have a better Instructor than I. For the Holy Ghost doth teach them, and will not suffer them to err."

"Why," said Tyrill, "art thou of that mind, thou naughty house-wife? Marry, it is time to look after such heretics, indeed." But her persecutor's taunts only made her bolder; for said she, "With that you call heresy do I worship my Lord God; I tell you truth."

Then said the tyrant, "I perceive you will burn with the rest for company's sake."

"No, sir;" answered she, "not for company's sake, but for my Lord Christ's sake—if so be I be compelled to; and I hope, in his mercy, He will enable me to bear it."

Then Tyrill, taking the lighted candle out of her hand, and holding her wrist, placed the flame underneath, and burnt it until the sinews cracked, her persecutor meanwhile calling her a lot of bad names, and shouting out, "Wilt thou not cry? Wilt thou not cry?" To which she answered that "she had no cause, she thanked God; but rather she had cause to rejoice. He had," said she, "more cause to weep than she, if he considered the matter well."

At length he thrust her from him, and as he did so she asked him "if he had done what he willed." "Yes," said he, "and if ye think not—well, mend it." "Mend it!" cried she. "May the Lord mend you, and give you repentance, if so be his will! And now, if you think well, begin at the feet and burn to the head also; for he that hath set you to work will give you your wages some day, I warrant you." And with that she took the drink to her mother, but never said a word about the cruel treatment she had received.

In due course Rose was placed before her judges to be tried for heresy, but such wisdom and courage were given her that she was more than a match for them They asked her what she had to say about the mass:

"I say that it stinketh in the face of God, and I dare not have to do therewith for my life."

"Art thou not a member of the Catholic Church?"

"I am no member of yours; for ye be members of anti-Christ, and shall have the reward of anti-Christ."

"What say ye of the See of the Bishop of Rome?"

"I am none of his. As for his See, it is for crows, kites, owls, and ravens to swim in, such as you be; for by the grace of God I will not swim in that sea as long as I live, neither will I have any thing to do therewith."

The judgment was soon given: "She must burn." And so, a few days later, a little procession of ordinary, every-day sort of folks were led out to suffer. Rose was among them, possessed by a peace her enemies could not take from her; they had got to the end of their persecuting power. The crowd standing around was with the martyrs, and many cried out:

"The Lord strengthen them, and comfort them, and pour his mercy upon them." He did, for amidst the flames their songs proved that they were more than conquerors. Death, in its bitterest form, had lost its sting that day to those noble witnesses of the faith.

"Death lost its sting when Jesus bled,
When Jesus entered heaven;
Disarmed, the king of terrors fled—
His mortal wound was given.
And now his office is to wait,
Between the saints and sin,
A porter at the heavenly gate,
To let the pilgrims in!"

W. Stanley Martin.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 191).

Hidden Text.

1. Let this mind be in you (Philippians i.-iii.).
2. For thou art with me (Psalm xxii.-xxv.).
3. The faithful and true witness (Rev. ii.-iv.).
4. The Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers (Isa. xxxi.-xxxiv.).
5. O death, where is thy sting? (1 Cor. xv.).
6. And such trust have we through Christ (2 Cor. ii.-iv.).
7. Lo, I am with you alway (Matt. xxvii.-end).
8. I will not leave you comfortless (John xiii.-xv.).
9. In everything give thanks (1 Thess. iii.-end).
10. My grace is sufficient for thee (2 Cor. x.-xii.).
11. I go to prepare a place (John xiii.-xv.).
12. Ye shall receive a crown of glory (1 Peter iv.-end).
13. The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord (Psa. xxxvi.-xxxviii.)
14. I am the resurrection and the life (John x.-xv.).

Find and complete the above texts, and take one word from each to form a hidden text to be found in Revelation ii.

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen, any seven; under seventeen, any eleven.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 190).

1. Hebrews x. 4.
2. John i. 29.
3. 1 Peter i. 19.
4. Leviticus xvi. 21, 22.
5. 1 Peter ii. 24.
6. 1 Peter i. 8.
7. Galatians iii. 13.
8. Revelation v. 12, 13. Revelation vii. 10-17.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Ralph, E. and Dora Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, Jennie Almond.
B—Phyllis Boyd, Nellie Buck, Gerty Bush, Gordon Bligh, Edith Banks, Esther Bobroff, Esther Blumenthal.
C—Mabel, Charles, and Isabel* Candlin, Susie Cumbers, Gladys Clark, Sophie Cohen, Anna Chanyen, Daisy R. Clarke, Ida and Mabel Cole, May and Ida Cullen, Eleanor Chance, Kitty Cope, K. Carey-Brenton, Mary Coward, Edith Chevalier, Elizabeth Clarence, George Cary.
D—Stanley Drew, Lucy Davidson.
F—Vincent and Mabel Fleet, Kitty Fausset, A. Fewster, Francis Field.
G—Grace Gulston*, Irene and Kathleen Gough, Bertie and Clarice Gale, Alice Goad, Mary Gover, Philip Green, Rose and Esther Goodman.
H—Ruth Hinder, Dorothy Harris, Beatrice Harland, Willie Hooper, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Gerty Hayward, Nellie Hatchett, Eric and Mary Hill.
J—Betty Jacobs, Dora Jay.
K—Stanley, Max and Eva* Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Gertrude Krambach, Nellie Keeley.
L—Georgina and Cecilia* Lichtenstein, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Rosie Langton, Blanche Lindup, Edward, May, Sidney and Henry Law, Margaret Lee, Gertrude Lambert*, Mary and Annie Levine, Annie Lipschitz.
M—Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Margie Marston, Frances Munce, Marie Meek, Lewis, O. and Arthur Morice, Mabel Morris Hedley Meader.
N—Edith Nash, Mary, H., J. and G. Neligan, George Nash, Thomas Neill, Dora Niels.
O—Olive Oxley.
P—Winnie Page, Beatrice Patterson, Kathleen Pincott, Alice and Ethel Palmer, Hattie, Mildred and Evelyn Peters, Daisy Phillips, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry, Ruth Pledger*, W., Leonard and Katie* Picknell, Mary Plumb, Lilian Pearson, Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Margherita Perlmann.
R—Alice Reid, Maud Rosenberg, Ethel Rowe, Marion Richards*, Gordon Remington, Kate Rosenbloom.
S—Solomon Stockfish, Binford Sellwood, Flora Shadbolt, Fanny Stileman, Betty Stocks, Ronald Studd, Mary Seed, Lucy and Kenneth Soltau, Eveline Studd*, Douglas Stevens, Enid Southwell, Marjorie and Cicely Sherbrook, Amy Stileman*, Douglas, Kathleen* and Edith Shepherd*, Flora Simmons, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen*, Lizzie Simons, Muriel and Dorothy Shaw.
T—Frank Thompson, Arthur and Winnie Taylor, Theodora Thorn*, Rachel Tuskinsky.
W—George, Annie and Lucy Willis, Joanna and Louise Wolnitzer, Edward Wheeler, Madge and F. Wilson, William Wheeler, Sydney Wisdom, Cecile, Noel and Phillis, Robert and Thomas Weddell.
Z—Sophia Zaxitsky.

No. 189.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—William Aston, Enderby Anderson, Mabel Adams, Irene Ashdown.*
B—Sylvia, Evelyn, Maud, and Dorothy Barrett, Howard Bailey, Lucienne Brabandes, Eruestine Buhl*, Mabel Birney, Ella Berryman*, Susette* and Mary* Beck, Gordon and S. Boxer, Corbet, Leonard and Lindsay Browne, Esther Bobroff*, Esther Blumenthal, Violet Braun, Edith Banks, Ashley Banks*, Emily Britton, Eva Browne*, Lilian Butler, Robert Brotchie, Godfrey, Gladys, and Dorothy Bates, Frank and Avory Blackie, Dorothy Barry, James Barker, Rachel Blumenthal.
C—Dorothy Clarke, Susie Cumbers, Alice Cady, Alice Crang, Philip, Katie, and Oscar Cross, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Duncan* Campbell, Grace Charik, Rodia Constantinides, Dorothy Cooper, Jessie* Walter* and Maggie* Carter, George Crawford.
D—Blossom Davis*, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson, Kate Da Rusett, Mai Davidson, Kitty, Ivy and Violet Donaldson-Selby, William Dilly*, Gordon Duncan, Esther Dickson*, Dorothy Dyke, Catherine Darke, Vera Dickinson, Harold Davis, Marie Denizot.
E—Maud Eddey, Edwin and Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*.
F—Lewis and Maggie* Fullarton, Hyacinthe FitzSimons, Louise Filhol*, Jeanne Faucon, Helen Forbes, Kitty Fausset, Mabel, Kate, Maggie and Eva Fletcher, Olivia Ferguson, Sarah Finkelstein, Mary and Blanche Freeman, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Agnes and Flossy* Fullarton.
G—Mary Glass, Thos. Groombridge, Daisy, Ethel, and Mary Greensore, Dorothy, Margaret*, Edith*, Jack, and Stuart Gray, Grace Gulston*, Edith Grieve, Constance* and Kenneth Gabbett, Elizabeth Gerechter, Rose and Esther Goodman*, Dorothy Grove, Colin and George Graham Brown, David Gardiner, George Graham.
H—Theodora Hill, Dorothy Hill, Georgette Hoffmann, Winifred* and Edith* Harvey, Gertie Hayward, James Henderson, Ruth Hinder, Rosetta and Lottie K. Hamilton, Harcourt Hunter, Betsy Holik, Willie Hopkins, Freda Hunton, Claude Hutchence*, Edith, Elise*, and Eileen Hill, Ella Hake, Kathleen Hughes, Helen Hunter, Florence and Francie Hoyte, Leslie Halward, Ethel Hutchings*, Muriel Hare.
I—Nellie Irving*, Daisy Iredell, Alice Ingberg, Ami and Isabel Inglis.
J—Emily Jeynes, Kate Johns*, Lizzie Johnstone*.
K—Flossie Key, Philippa* and Grace* Kerr, Gertrude Krambach, Isa.* and Alex.* Kay.
L—Hannah Lovell, Blanche* Lindup, Gordon Luce, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Annie Lipschitz, Annie and Mary Levine, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh.
M—Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Howard Moir*, Daisy*, Annie*, and Nellie* Mackenzie, Emily Maddox, Ada* Macnutt, Charlotte Millar, Dora Marples, Winifred Marshall, J. and Barbara Maconchy, Dorothy and Sydney* Morgan, Frances Munce, Margaret*, Dorothy*, and Daniel Morris, Margaret Macphee, Hedley Meader, John Macmurray, Bella and Abraham Mack, Christina Marshall, Lewis McGregor*, Mildred Morgan, Lois and Olive Newborn, Evelyn Moir.
N—Edith Nash*, Maude and Amy Nottage, Leah and Dora Niels.
O—Maude and Eva Oakes, Kate Oliver.
P—Daisy Phillips, Leonard and Walter Picknell, Walter Perryman, Dorothy Patten*, Ruth Patient, Margherita Perlmann, George Pelly, John Pearce, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Vera, Daisy and May Petrides, Jessie, Eddie and Willie Palmer, Lilian Pearson.
R—Rita and Lorimer Romanes, Elsie Ridewood*, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Winifred, Aileen and Marjorie Roberts, Isabel, Jessie and Elmina Roe, Maud* Rosenberg, Mary Rosenbloom.
S—Bessie* Shepherd, Ivy and Muriel Sherwin, Binford Sellwood, Kenneth and Lucy Saltan, Alan and Mary Symon, Bertha Stocker, Eric, Gladys, Mervyn, Wilfred, Undine and Gwendoline* Shaw, Cicely Sherbrooke, Bessie Symes, John Smith, Lizzie and Dora Simons, Nannie Sturrock, Marie* and Herbert* Stuart, Evelyn Shaw, C. R. and Violet Salvesen.
T—Sarah Tyson, Olive Tritton, Rebecca and Rachel Tuskinsky, Naomi Torff, Louie Tibbits*, Marjorie Tracey
W—Leonard Wall, Georgina, Sarah, M. and F. Wilson, William Wheeler, Connie Wood*, Leonard Wild, Queenie Wakeford, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Bertie Walls, Berkeley Wise, Louisa and Joanna Wolnitzer, Douglas Wilkinson, Helen and F. Webb, Ronald Watson, Ruby Wilkins, Louisa, Violet and Arthur Walker, Ellie and Nora Wyatt, Mary Ware, Fringle Wilson, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Ernest Wakeford.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 179.—Christine Palmer (Tasmania). No. 180.—Graham and Christine Palmer, Janet Garrett* (Kimberley). No. 183.—Minnie and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa), Janet Garrett. No. 185.—Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada). No. 187.—Will, Nettie, Ina and Kate* Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Ina Thomson (Bulgaria).—I am glad to see your answers again, and hope you are quite well after so long an illness.

Dorothy Cooper.—Your answers have been included, being correct. Are you having a holiday in France?

Bessie Shepherd.—Thank you for your little box of flowers. They gave much pleasure to a poor old lady.

Stanley Fewster, Emily Britton.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and hope the study will prove useful and interesting.

Marjorie Sherbrooke, Stanley Drew, Georgette Hoffmann.—Many happy returns of your birthday.

Dora Marples.—I was glad to see your name again after missing it for some time, and hope you have been successful in your examination.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending September 9.

Sun., Sept.	3	Mark	xii. 28-44	Thurs., Sept.	7	Mark	xiv. 1-16
Mon., "	4	"	xiii. 1-10	Fri., "	8	"	xiv. 17-31
Tues., "	5	"	xiii. 11-23	Sat., "	9	"	xiv. 32-45
Wed., "	6	"	xiii. 24-37

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. F. A. Glover and Mr. Macfarlane, with caravan and tent, Over Stowey, near Bridgwater; also at Wellington, to Sept. 5; Mr. W. Tye, caravan at Framlingham; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Copthorne, Crawley Down, to Sept. 11; Mr. F. P. Rowe, Cressing, near Braintree, Essex; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Husband Crawley, Bedfordshire; Mr. Frank McLaine and Mr. W. Drake, with caravan, Dorman's Land, near Lingfield. Mr. Hutchison, Powerscourt, co. Wicklow, Sept. 5-11; King's Cross, Sept. 15.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Rev. A. E. Mansell, Boscombe. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Bournemouth, to Sept. 18. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, to Aug. 31, Mr. H. B. C. English, Broadstairs. Lt.-Col. Dru Drury, Bude, N. Cornwall. Rev. W. H. Brealey, Clevedon. Rev. J. F. Sheldon, M.A., and Mr. A. C. Furse, Cromer. Mr. S. J. Hewlett and Mr. W. Stunt, Deal, to Aug. 31. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, B.A., Eastbourne. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting and Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Felixstowe, to Sept. 3. Mr. H. Hankinson, Filey. Rev. Dr. Barnes, Folkestone. Rev. H. Cook, Frinton-on-Sea. Mr. S. H. James, Herne Bay (Sunday afternoons only). Mr. H. W. Figgis, Howth, Ireland. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton, to Sept. 1. Mr. P. R. Hurditch, Llandudno. Mr. Edward Barlow, Lowestoft, to Sept. 3, Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate. Rev. L. C. Carr, Overstrand, to Sept. 1. Mr. V. C. Brown, Paignton. Mr. A. C. Jewell, Penmaenmawr. Mr. H. Steward and Rev. J. R. Pawley-Smith, Port Erin, Isle of Man. Mr. W. B. Wakefield, Mr. E. J. Spafford, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Jope, Rhyl. Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, B.A., St. Leonards, to Sept. 6. Rev. T. S. Stoney, B.A., Mr. G. Foster-Carter and Mr. P. J. Fear, Sandown. Members of the British Chautauqua, Saltburn. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Seaford. Mr. William McCall, Seaton, Devon (Sunday afternoons only). Dr. Harry Guinness and others, Sherringham. Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend. Rev. S. Mortimer Warner, Southsea. Mr. C. J. Small, Sutton-on-Sea, to Aug. 31. Dr. McAfee and Edinburgh Medical Students, West Kirby and Hoylake. Rev. Jno. Mitchell, Weston-super-Mare. Mr. Ernest Thompson, Weymouth. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby. Mr. E. Collier, Whitley, to Aug. 31. Mr. G. Watson, Withernsea, Yorks. Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing.

Congregational Union Autumnal Meetings.—At the coming session of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, to be held in Bristol, the twin subjects of total abstinence and licensing reform are likely to have ample discussion. The twenty-fifth autumnal celebration of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association will be held in the famous Broadmead Baptist Chapel on Monday evening, October 16, at 8 o'clock. It is hoped that the president, Rev. Dr. Mackennal, will have returned from his engagements in America in time to enable him to preside at this meeting. By invitation of the Union Committee, a paper will be read in the assembly on Thursday morning, October 19, by Rev. Frederick Hastings. Subject: "The Report of the Royal Commission on Licensing," to be followed by discussion.

Letters to the Editor.

"Why I Don't go to the Theatre."

DEAR SIR,—As a young man, I frequently went both to the theatre and to the opera. No one enjoys a good play or appreciates good music more than I do. But, as a young man, I was brought to see myself as a sinner, and to accept the Lord Jesus as my Saviour. I then gave up going to the theatre. Why did I do so?

Firstly.—Because I found, as a follower of Christ, that I was directed to "press toward the mark for the prize of my high calling in Christ Jesus;" also that I was told to "take up the cross daily and to follow Him." Going to the theatre proved a distinct hindrance to growth in grace; so, after careful thought and prayer, I gave up that which had previously been a source of much enjoyment.

Secondly.—Because I knew, both from my own experience, and from what I had seen in others, that the theatre and its surroundings were not morally helpful to young men; indeed, more than one of my friends they have led utterly wrong. I was convinced that by my example, if I continued to go to the theatre, as well as by the payment of my money, which would contribute to support such places of amusement, I should certainly run the risk of causing moral injury to those whom I am bound as a Christian to seek in every way possible to help.

May I earnestly ask your readers carefully and prayerfully to consider Rom. xiv. to xv. 3, and 1 Cor. viii. While not in any sense wishing to judge others, we have surely to judge ourselves, and to seek ever (in the spirit as well as in the letter) to keep "the two great commandments:" "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy strength;" and "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." —I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

ALGERNON C. P. COOTE.

24, Powis Square, W.

The Need of Harmonists.

DEAR SIR,—Many young Christians might render great assistance in the Lord's work, if they would only learn to play well the harmonium or American organ, and give their services to needy missions. I think that the institution of a college of Christian harmonists, in London, for evangelistic work, where young Christians could be trained for that purpose for a moderate fee, would prove to be an invaluable adjunct in the furtherance of the Gospel. My own work (the People's Mission, Townsend Street, S.E.) is in great need of the permanent assistance of a Christian harmonist who will give gratuitous service unto the Lord.—Yours sincerely,

JOHN VERRALL.

4, Gipsy Hill, Norwood, S.E.

Tobacco-Money.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to say a few words about "Smoking" in connection with Mr. Jas. Ricketts, whose death was announced in last week's CHRISTIAN. He used to be a considerable smoker; but some months since a friend spoke to him on the subject, and asked how much he usually spent on tobacco. He said, "Two shillings a week." She said, "Mr. Ricketts, do you know what you might do with that two shillings? You could distribute twenty-four penny Testaments, and thus circulate God's Word; or you might give twelve penny Testaments, and send a shilling every week to foreign missions—that would be £2 12s. a-year at home, and the same abroad." He was quite astonished when he came to think it over.

The arrow had gone home, and he gave up the pipe from that time, and carried out his friend's suggestion of giving the money to his Lord. This account is from his own lips to me, and I am sure he would not object to the fact being made known for the benefit of others. I told him I should use it, and I have done so in a great many cases among young men and ministers, and am thankful to say that the simple statement has brought about the desired result. This is my only apology for these few lines.—Yours very truly,

Cwmbran, Mon. S. PYALL DIPROSE.

(1122)

Pernicious Literature.

SIR,—In recent numbers of THE CHRISTIAN your correspondents have drawn attention to the use of ambiguous language, and to the distribution of demoralizing pictures by means of automatic machines.

An outcry against such abuses will advance us little in paths of cleanness and purity, unless measures be taken to check the supply of a certain class of cheap literature whose language is my no means ambiguous, but frankly pernicious; and whose illustrations rival those about which an inquiry was recently addressed to the Home Secretary. Such publications are not issued secretly and sold by stealth, but appear on every bookstall. The comic papers, published by well-known firms, form a class apart. Whatever may be said of their distracting and enervating effect, to which everyone engaged in education will bear testimony, their weary vulgarity condemns them. Besides these, there are smartly-written and well-printed periodicals, which thrive exclusively on the encouragement which they give to the baser passions of their readers.

While it is perfectly true that there is more pure and useful literature published each year, it is equally evident that this evil literature is increasing. Surely something can be done in the interests particularly of boys and young men of all classes to check its growth.—Yours truly, E. G.

Another correspondent, writing on the exhibition of demoralizing pictures, by means of the penny-in-the-slot machine, says:

"To speak too strongly against the evil is impossible, and not to speak at all should be equally impossible to those who have the best interests of mankind at heart. If, as is apparently and unfortunately the case, no legal pressure can be brought to bear against the offenders, then the united definite opinion of the Christian community as to the evil should be clearly expressed."

St. Bartholomew's Day.

DEAR SIR,—This is St. Bartholomew's day, and one cannot but think of the second St. Bartholomew massacre that is going on in France at the present moment. The inhuman persecution of Dreyfus is, as the world knows, the work of the Jesuits, and the anti-Dreyfusites have at their back the whole influence of that infamous body and of the Vatican. The Pope, alarmed at the too outspoken nature of the clerical organs, has addressed a note to the clergy, in which he says he hopes "that truth and justice will prevail." It all depends on what he means by truth and justice. In all probability, it is not what the civilized world considers these to be in this case. But it is not Dreyfus alone that the persecution is aimed against, but the whole Jewish people. The Jews are always loyal to the kingdoms in which they are; "they seek their peace," but the Papal Church wants to brand them as traitors.

Nor is it only the Jewish people that the Jesuits are seeking to destroy in France. They do not intend to stop with them. They are aiming at the Protestants. Their desire is to exterminate Jews and Protestants, that France, "the eldest daughter of the Church," may be wholly at her service. This has been well expressed by Professor Lombroso, who says that the "affair Dreyfus is a white St. Bartholomew, securing with greater efficacy than the other the same ends, the destruction in public esteem of the Jews, making the name synonymous with rebel, that the Jesuits may go on to excite the same feelings against the Protestants, so as to arrive at unity of faith under the Vatican, or, rather, of credulity, and put people and Government under the power of the black Pope."

Of course, the French army is the Pope's army. All those corrupt soldiers are his soldiers. It would be interesting to know how many of them fought for Pope Pio Nono against King Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi in 1870, and who are now therefore receiving pensions from the Vatican. All who fought against the creation of the Kingdom of Italy under the Pope were pensioned by him. Lately it was said that not one of them had ever died. Then pensions were duly called for without a break! France is an object lesson to us. It shows the depths of degradation to which the Church of Rome can reduce a nation. From being a great European power, France is really now outside the pale of civilization. Her boasted army, rotten to the core, is only fit for that work to which it is now devoted wherever it goes—the thwarting of Christian efforts amongst native races, and the exercise towards them of cowardly oppression. ALEX. ROBERTSON.

Venice, August 24.

Personalia.

REV. W. H. MILBURN, the blind chaplain of the United States Senate, has been afflicted with a severe sunstroke.

Rev. F. B. MEYER has returned from America. He is now visiting Blankenburg for the annual Conference. He hopes to be home in London on September 6, and to resume his Thursday mid-day service on September 7.

MISS BOYD, of Sheffield, has been elected secretary of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, the post being vacant through the death of Miss Holland. Miss Boyd is the daughter of the Rev. Hugh J. Boyd, and has been eight years in the office of the British Temperance League.

MR. W. R. MOODY is in sorrow owing to the death of his daughter Irene. His sorrow is, of course, shared by his father, Mr. D. L. Moody, and his father-in-law, Major Whittle, with their families; and has, in fact, thrown the entire community of Northfield, Mass., into grief. Mr. "Will" is the right hand of the well-known evangelist in all that pertains to the organization of his far-reaching work. He is also editor of The Record of Christian Work. Hence there are many, both in America and England, who will remember the bereaved parents at the Throne of Grace.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

ON Friday evening, the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A. held a meeting to bid farewell and God-speed to one of its members, Mr. J. W. Black, who is leaving next week for the Congo, under the auspices of the Congo Balolo Mission. A presentation of books was made to Mr. Black, as a token of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-members.

Professor Barde, President of the Central International Committee of the Y.M.C.A., at Geneva, has just visited the Wupperthal, at the invitation of the West German Alliance, and has had a most interesting tour. An imposing meeting was held at Elberfeld, where accounts of most successful work were given, particularly among soldiers. The various associations in Barmen were visited and encouraged; also Cologne, where the Y.M.C.A. courageously maintains its position in a strong centre of Catholicism. Large meetings were held likewise at Mulheim-on-Ruhr and Bielefeld.

Harvest Hymn.

"All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee.—Ps. cxlv., 9.

ALL thy works, Thou great Jehovah,
Spread abroad thy fame;
All thy saints, Thou great Jehovah,
Bless thy Holy Name;
With a mighty voice they ever
Swell the undying lays,
Sounding like a mighty river
Earth's glad song of praise.

All thy works, Thou great Jehovah,
Thus thy power confess;
All thy saints, Thou great Jehovah,
Thee divinely bless.
From their hearts, like holy incense,
Thanks and praise arise,
As the song is upward swelling:
Holy, Blest, and Wise.

All thy works, Thou great Jehovah—
Still the glad refrain—
Praise Thee from the verdant meadow,
And the fruitful plain;
Harvest hours, and harvest fulness,
Fill the earth with joy;
And thy saints, in worship blending,
Bless Thee, Lord Most High.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Evangelistic.

Under Canvas.

Westleigh Burlescombe.

We have been visited by Mr. Glover with his Gospel tent. Mr. Macfarlane was at the neighbouring village of Holcombe Rogus. The meetings in the tent, and in the open air at the surrounding hamlets, were well attended, and, we are pleased to state, left good impressions upon the people. Cases of real conversion have taken place, and others have been awakened to their need of a Saviour, having attended most of the meetings both in the tent and in the open air. On Bank Holiday the mission was brought to a close by an all-day conference for believers, which was well attended by Christians of the neighbourhood, and, we trust, greatly benefited them.

Some amount of enmity evidently exists towards the Gospel and those that preach it. At one of the places last visited by Mr. Macfarlane, a local tradesman in the village, who assisted our brother, has discovered his trade going from him, and is not doing anything like the trade he did before. We rejoice to know that "none of these things move him," and hope that he leans on Phil. iv. 19.

I can testify to the zeal and spirituality, the enthusiasm and earnestness, of the missioners. They have a yearning for souls, and they preach the truth. The fellowship with them has aroused in me a deeper sense of the importance of the work entrusted to me by "the Lord of the Harvest."

Frederick J. B. Spray.

Westleigh Congregational Church, Wellington, Somerset.

Friends at Work.

The Friends' Home Mission Committee last year purchased a tent that now comfortably seats about 300 persons. This year it is being well used in evangelistic work. In July, a very successful Gospel mission was held at Princetown, on Dartmoor, when Christ was preached to deeply interested and intelligent audiences. Since then over a fortnight's mission was held in Newport, Mon., in conjunction with the Young Men's Christian Association, and much good, it is believed, has been the result.

Bible readings and children's meetings were held in addition to the Gospel work. At the last meeting of the mission on the 21st inst., the Divine power was gloriously manifest, and it was felt that something more must be done in the district.

Messrs. William Hobson, of London, and John Oyston, of Herts, were the missioners, and among local friends, Mr. W. A. Baker and Mr. William J. Sayce rendered splendid help. The tent is now erected at Woburn Sands.

Battersea.

Mr. Leonard Weaver and his fellow-evangelists from America are having much success in the Mission at Battersea. The great tent at the Felix Institute, Lavender Hill, has been crowded nightly. On Sundays, the multitudes who have thronged to the services have overflowed almost into the street. The tent seats 2,000. It is computed that 3,000 or more sat or stood in the grounds during Sunday evening. The sides of the tent were rolled up, and by the help of a sounding-board, the whole of the vast assembly were able to distinctly hear every word of Mr. Weaver's impassioned address. The professed conversions are very numerous. Men and women belonging to all ranks in local society have come forward confessing their sins and testifying to their determination to amend their lives in future. Everything is being done to secure the permanence of of these results.

In a report of the tent work at Tooting, given last week, it was stated that over 1,000 persons had professed conversion. These figures applied to the converts at the three tents, Battersea, Peckham, and Tooting, not to the last-named only.

Southsea.

It is now twenty-five years since I commenced tent-work in Devonshire, and have every year during that time had the privilege of labouring for the Lord in this way for about three or four months each summer. Nineteen years ago I commenced here, where thousands have heard the glad tidings of salvation each summer, under canvas or in the open air.

We began early in June this summer, and have continued meetings every day for about twelve weeks, sometimes two or three each day. I have stuck to the work the whole of the time, with the help of Mr. Wm. Nobbs, of Hereford, who was with us a month, and who was followed by Mr. John Coates and Mr. Richard Harvey, of Ross, and others, all of whose labours have proved a great blessing. The August Bank-holiday week was a remarkable time, both for numbers and results.

Sanger's Circus was pitched close by our tent for a whole week, to which we gave special attention in visiting their tents, caravans, &c., with gospel tracts and books. An invitation was given to the people to attend a free tea each afternoon, and to all our meetings, some of which were specially arranged for them. A copy of the Scriptures was given to every one who came. We sowed the seed, and were not without encouragement as to fruit resulting. Among others who have confessed Christ is an old man sixty-six years of age, who wept like a child, and is now rejoicing in his newly-found Saviour.

The time will now soon come when we shall be obliged to take our tent down, and return again to our work in different parts of the town, and other places.

Jno. Denning.

Shirley Lodge, St. Ursula Grove, Southsea.

In and Near Dublin.

"Gentlemen," said the chairman at the Y.M.C.A., Rathmines, some years ago, "I hope you have put your denominations in your hats, as you hung them on the pegs just now; we meet here as Christians." This trite remark was remembered by many during the past month at the tent services held in Adelaide Road by this Association, and it would have been impossible to know to what particular denomination any one of the workers belonged. Our brother, Pastor S. A. McCracken, of London, has just finished a month of services—each week-night except Saturday, and on Sunday afternoon and evening—that will long be remembered by not a few. We have had one continuous stream of blessing in answer to prayer; and the closing one, held last Thursday evening, gave some evidence how far-reaching it had been, when over sixty desired that thanks might be given to God for blessing received; and these were from, not only the city and suburbs, but some who had come from the country to visit the Horse Show, and had been brought by their friends, and thus received blessing.

A new method, worth passing on, was observed. Instead of having after-meetings, a covenant card was given to any who had been convinced of sin, showing from the Word of God the provision made for such; and all who could truthfully sign them were asked to do so, and either send or deliver them ere the meetings closed, thus giving them an opportunity, alone with God, to come to a decision. This plan worked so well, that every night cards were returned; and with them in many cases, a short definite statement, saying what portion of the Word had been blessed to their souls; also giving their names and addresses so that they might be written to or visited. Knowing how many of these for years had been church and chapel goers, they were urged at once to go to their ministers and tell them what the Lord had done for them, and seek to make their influence felt by becoming workers both in their homes and in the denomination they had been attending.

J. L. D.

Two or three months ago, some Christians connected with the Open-air Mission began street preaching on Sunday evenings in Rathmines, a well-known suburb of Dublin. This was met with tremendous opposition. Crowds assembled beforehand, with drums and every kind of instrument, making the most hideous noise to drown the speaker's voice. Snapshots were taken by priests, and with "Talking Machines" they occasionally reproduced the ribaldry of the mob, to the amusement and edification of some of their flocks. The Christians engaged in the work thought it well at length to set up a tent, but there was great difficulty in obtaining ground. However, a most desirable spot became available in the grounds of a detached house, at present vacant, and there a large tent has been reared, where we hope many souls may be "born again," even of those who have opposed hitherto.

M.G.

Tents Lying Idle.

Dear Sir,—I have been wondering how many tents there are at this time which have been purchased for Gospel work that are packed away idle for the want of hearts and means to enable servants of God to carry in them the "water of life" to thirsty souls in towns, cities, and villages in this highly favoured land. Was there ever greater need than to-day for the old-fashioned Gospel? The Lord is graciously saving souls under the canvas roofs. The fine weather may soon be over. Who knows but what our Lord may come before another such season as this comes again?

Many of the Lord's people have very little idea of the amount of labour and expense it involves. Hire or purchase of tent, rent of land, oil for lamps, tent-keeper's wages, thousands of bills to make the meetings known, travelling expenses, &c., often run into many pounds; and when left to one or two who have the heart, as well as means, it falls very heavy, and so when they have done what they can, and no one else comes forward to take a share of the responsibility, the tent comes down, and many who looked on, but did nothing, are the first to say, "What a pity to have tents idle this lovely weather!"—Yours in his Blessed Service.

John Elliott.

19, Melville Street, Torquay.

Mr. Henry Varley was privileged to address very large meetings in Worthing Tabernacle and on the beach during his recent visit.

An interesting evangelistic effort has been organized in the county of Somerset. Particulars are given in a circular-letter issued monthly by Captain Morice, 9, Waverley Road, Bristol.

The special mission conducted by Mr. Robert Maclean, of the Evangelization Society, in the Cowcaddens Free Church, closed on Sunday. All through the attendance has been good, and the interest and results manifest. There have been souls won for Christ every night, while not a few victims of drink have been rescued.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith has been holding a Tent Mission at Tisbury during the past month. The services have been interesting and well attended. There has been no uncertain sound, but a pungent, bold, and clear presentation of the blessed Gospel. Hence a deep impression has been made, which cannot fail to result in glory to God.

Mr. P. M. Redwood and friends preach the Gospel in the open-air on Sunday afternoons near George Yard, Whitechapel. They aim at reaching Jews, who throng the thoroughfares at all times. Quite naturally the workers meet with opposition, but through evil and good report, and in spite of abuse and misrepresentation, they continue to preach Christ with boldness.

A Fortnight's Mission on the sands at Blackpool has been held by the Rev. A. Dearden, evangelist, of Manchester Baptist College, and the Rev. H. C. Wagnell, pastor of the Baptist Mission, Opera House, Blackpool. The services have been remarkably well attended. Great good has resulted in the spiritual awakening of believers, and the conversion of a large number of interested listeners. To God be all the praise. Over 20,000 tracts and booklets have been distributed by the workers amongst the people. Mrs. Ball (sister of Gipsy Smith) has been of great help to the mission, and many will bless the day through eternity that they ever came in contact with this fortnight's mission on the sands that closed on Wednesday last week.

Dr. Henry, of New York, concluded a month of blessed ministry at Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, by preaching to three great congregations on Sunday last, while the Lord's people have been mightily helped by his addresses. Many seekers after salvation have declared themselves; among them some of Dr. Barnardo's boys. Not the least impressive were his straight talks to the men and women of the P.S.A. His indictment of strong drink was simply tremendous. We have heard nothing like it since the days of John B. Gough. No preacher has left a more profound impression behind him at the Castle than Dr. Henry. Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelization Society, succeeds him for the next two months.

W. R. N.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. Leonard Weaver, Gospel Tents, South London, until further notice.

Mr. John Coates, with his large Gospel Tent at Cranham, till end of September.

Weaver Brothers.—Sept. 3-15, Glasgow; 17-29, Carlisle; Oct. 1-13, Hartlepool; 15-27, Scarborough; 29-Nov. 10, Woolwich.

Mr. James Sprunt.—Sept. 3, at 7, Kilburn Hall, N.W.; 17 and 24, at 7, 21 and 28, at 8, Shirley Hall, Enfield; Oct. 1-13, Milton Street, Baptist Church, Chester.

Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Sept. 2-8, Downton; 9-18, Belper; 23-Oct. 2, Liverpool; 7-17, Morley; 21-30, Todmorden; Nov. 4-13, Leamington; 18-27, Walsall; Dec. 2-12, Chester.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Sept. 2 to 18, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; Sept. 24, 27, and Oct. 1, Brunswick Chapel, Bristol; Sept. 26, Chippenham; Oct. 7 to 16, Warrington; 21 to 30, Greenheys, Manchester; Nov. 4 to 13, Rothwell, Kettering; 18 to 27, Dartmouth; Dec. 2 to 11, Tiverton; 16 to 24, Westminster.

Rev. Thomas Cook's engagements for the next few weeks are as follow:—Sept. 3, Blackpool; 10, Harrogate; 17, Blyth; 24, Harrogate; Oct. 1, Fleetwood; 8, Halifax; 15, Hoyland; 22, Sheffield; 29, Birmingham; Nov. 5, Oldham; 12, Horsforth; 19, Scarborough; 26, Manningham; Dec. 3, Hull; 10, Gainsborough; 17, Bromley (Farwig Mission); 24, Harrogate.

Mr. J. S. Harrison.—During Sept., Folkestone Road, Walthamstow Sundays and Thursdays; Oct., St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays; Nov., Merrion Hall, Dublin, Sundays and Fridays; Dec., Great Assembly Hall, Sundays and Wednesdays.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Sept., Park Hall, Barking during Oct., Belfast.

Church Notes.

Canon Taylor is in residence at St. Saviour's, Southwark, for the month of September.

Dr. Parker suggests the organization of the Congregational churches into the British Congregational Church.

Rev. W. S. Salmon, rector of Brougham, Westmorland, has resigned his living in consequence of advancing age.

Rev. D. M. Munro, of Dundee, has accepted the call to the pastorate of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Rochdale.

The Record prints a list of 289 churches affected by the Lambeth decision. Forty-six of these are in London.

Dr. Lorimer has concluded his temporary ministry at Regent's Park Chapel. Rev. E. G. Gange, the pastor, has returned from his vacation.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has promised to defray the cost of a building in connection with Fountain Road Church, Liverpool, in which to hold religious services for mariners.

The Wesleyan Reform Union has held its Jubilee Conference at Sheffield. The report shows a slight decrease in membership. Councillor G. Carr, of Sheffield, was elected president.

Memorial stones have been laid in connection with the building of a new Wesleyan chapel at Weston-on-Trent, near Stafford. The site was donated by Earl Ferrers, of Chartley Castle.

From the fifty-sixth annual report of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society, it appears that the amount of money raised, and the reports from the field, all indicate substantial progress.

Rev. F. Lockhart, assistant, Campbelton U.P. Church, has been invited to the pastorate of St. Luke's U.P. Church, Montrose, in succession to Rev. D. B. Croom, who retired last year through ill health.

Rev. H. Herbert Snell, formerly of Richmond Congregational Church, Salford, has resigned the pastorate of Hillhead Congregational Church, Glasgow, and accepted a call to Trinity Congregational Church, Reading.

The late Mr. W. S. Whitehead, of East Ardsley, has left a considerable legacy to be devoted to general or special purposes in connection with the cathedral at Wakefield. The Bishop will be the administrator of the fund.

The fifty-sixth annual report of the Church of England Sunday School Institute has now been issued, and contains much interesting information regarding the progress of the work in Sunday Schools throughout the country.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, of the Metropolitan Temple, New York, is preaching at New Court Congregational Church, Tollington Park, during August and part of September. Large congregations gather for every service and very much enjoy his ministry.

Rev. Charles T. Morgan, of Haverhill, Massachusetts, has been conducting the services, during August, at Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington (Rev. G. P. McKay). Crowded congregations have assembled each Sunday. Mr. Morgan returns to the States to-day (Thursday).

Dr. Monro Gibson, the popular minister of St. John's Wood, London, will preach the anniversary sermon in Shaw Street Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, this evening. The worthy doctor is a native of Whithorn, Scotland, and was one of the leading ministers in Chicago before coming to London.

Rev. Tolefree Parr, who is courageously grappling with the problems of slumdom at the historic Surrey Chapel, South London, has attained his semi-jubilee as a minister. In recognition of the interesting occasion, freewill offerings were asked from the people in support of the work of the mission, and £100 realized.

At St. Mark's, Kennington, a series of limelight views have been given each Saturday evening outside the church for some weeks past, and will be continued for some time to come. Large crowds have gathered, and after a short address explanatory of the scenes upon the canvas, the people are invited to a service inside.

The Rev. John Burr, son of Rev. Dr. Burr, clerk of Dundee Presbytery, has been elected minister of the church and parish of Bowden, Roxburghshire. For the past eighteen months Mr. Burr had been acting as assistant at Hamilton, and previous to that he was assistant to the minister of Oatlands Church, Glasgow.

The first annual meetings of the Welsh Evangelical Convention for young people were held at Llandrindod Wells throughout last week. At the closing meeting it was decided, on the motion of Principal Edwards (Cardiff), to make the Convention an annual gathering, and a representative committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

Despite the intense heat the City Temple was thronged on Sunday last to its utmost capacity. Many of the congregation had been doubtless attracted by the unusual opportunity of hearing Rev J. H. Jowett, M.A., of Birmingham, the successor of the late Dr. R. W. Dale in the historic pulpit of Carr's Lane. The services seemed to give all the congregation great satisfaction. Mr. Jowett's stirring sermons were full of influence and power.

The vicar of St. Michael's Church, Bowes Park, North London, has hit upon a unique method in connection with his Sunday services, during this tropical weather. When the first part of the service was over on Sunday, and the time for the sermon had come, the congregation was led to the vicarage lawn, and there the vicar preached his sermon in the open air. The experiment was a complete success, and will be repeated while the hot weather continues.

The practice of combining the congregations of neighbouring churches for public worship during the holiday season has much to commend it, and it is a growing one. It has (says the Bradford Observer) been observed for several seasons now in Bradford. In this city the Westgate Baptist Church and the neighbouring Presbyterian Church join together, the services being held in each church on alternate Sundays. It may be the means of giving one very hard-worked class of public servants—the caretakers—a much-needed holiday.

Rev. Percy Scott, M.A., of Nottingham, a clergyman of the Church of England, recently preached both morning and evening in the Wesleyan Chapel at Mablethorpe. The congregation on each occasion was influential and overflowing. Mr. Scott is evidently a man of catholic spirit and of one purpose, viz., the saving of men and women from the vanities of the world, and in this he appeared to have the fullest sympathy and cordiality of all classes of religious thought present, who listened with evident interest and wonder to the powerful and yet homely appeals of the preacher.

The Rev. W. Goodman, president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, who was removed from Kettering to Scarborough last week, is making satisfactory progress towards convalescence. He hopes to stay at Scarborough at least a month, and, acting on the doctor's orders, has cancelled all his engagements up to the end of September. His engagements beyond that time are very numerous, and, if the state of his health permits, will keep him very busy for the next twelve months. The Conference has appointed an assistant, who is discharging the president's duties in Kingston-on-Thames circuit.

A numerously-attended meeting of representatives of the various Band of Hope Unions in Manchester was recently held at the Y.M.C.A. to take into account the condition of the Band of Hope Movement in Greater Manchester. Resolutions were adopted to form a Manchester Band of Hope Purposes Committee, and to immediately arrange for missionary and extension Band of Hope work in the neglected districts of the city and suburbs. In the course of the proceedings mention was made of the fact that the National Convention of the Band of Hope Movement is to be held in Manchester in 1900.

In connection with their Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund, the Congregationalists are organising a number of young people's demonstrations, to be held during the coming winter in cities and villages throughout the country. It is also intended to set apart the afternoon of Sunday, November the 5th, in all Congregational Sunday Schools as a time of thanksgiving for the blessings of the century that is now drawing to a close. Picture leaflets, containing illustrations of the leading events in the struggles of the past, have been circulated, and the young people are invited to name the events and give a brief sketch of each. Prizes are to be awarded to successful competitors. In this and other ways young people are to be instructed in the story of the struggle for civil and religious liberty, and inspired with the records of heroism in defence of the Protestant faith.

Request for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission, to be conducted by Mr. P. Bromley, at the Christian Institute, Church Street, Stoke Newington, from September 3 to 7.

Praise.

Praise and thanksgiving desired for blessing upon the work on Blackpool sands.

For blessing received during a month's mission on the sands at New Brighton, conducted by George Back, of Open-Air Mission, London.

Notices.

Applications for Tracts.—Tom R. Fifoot, 5, Houndsgate, Nottingham; Miss M. Child, Dave Hill, Uckfield; G. Gillingham, Chalford, Stroud, Gloucester (for work among hop-pickers); Mr. A. Draper, Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, Newcastle-on-Tyne (papers and booklets for troops and women and children in garrison); Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.; G. B. Taylor (Gospel temperance), 38, Dean Street, Soho, London, W.; Wm. Wilson, Post Office, Stretford, near Manchester.

Communications Received with Thanks—F.C.S. A.D.S. J.L. S.R. L.B. F.J.B.S. G.W. C.M. M.F.B. W.D. E.G. M.W. J.R.B. J.T.W.P. J.A.H. A.M. J.R. R.H. Mrs. McK. W.C.F. J.S. C.H. M.F. J.W.A. G.B. J. de B. G.G. D.E. W.W.S. P.M.F.M. E.M.B. R.T. L.M. S.H.J. J.D. Mrs. T. J. de P. F.K. M.M. A.H. J.M.M. R.D. E.V.K. J.C. S.S. D.S.R. N.K. A.R. J.A.T. G.H. A.M.R. O.M. E.D. J.C. A.H.S. E.E. F.F.B. E.C. A.L. S.S. W.R.N. M.G. E.F.E. J.K. B.S. M.L.J. T.K. J.B.

Notes from Paris.

JUST now it seems as if the eyes of the whole world were centred on France, and as if men held their breath to know what may be the outcome of the "affaire;" for, while, presumably, one man stands on his trial, in reality, the nation is being weighed in the balances. There is electricity in the air, which only waits the touching of a spring to work destruction.

While all these things are so, we would ask Christians to turn to us in our need and anxiety. On Sunday week, while Mons. Faucher, of Nimes, was giving a most beautiful address in our Mission Hall, a church and a convent near to us were sacked by the mob. If anything more serious were to happen, it would be necessary to send the English workers away, which means that salaries must be paid, while those who remain would need extra money to relieve the sufferers and to keep on the work.

I need several hundred pounds at once. Financial anxiety is proving a great strain to one already borne down by long years of service.

While I am thus obliged, by force of circumstances, to plead for temporal help, I would also ask for the prayers of God's people on behalf of his work and workers here. It is impossible for me, as things are, to travel about to collect funds.—Sincerely yours,

3, Rue Clavel, Belleville. J. de Broen.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.—To those who are living in the midst of affluence or comparative comfort, the claims of the "Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society" should appeal with deep sympathy. "Old and poor" is a pathetic advertisement, because in so many thousands of cases it is so true and so pitiful. The A.P.F. Society has for its aims the care of the Lord's aged poor, to whom, as its funds will allow, it awards yearly pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. At the present time the Society has 1,524 recipients, their pensions requiring the sum of £10,600 a year. Of these pensioners, 1,071 are over seventy, 294 are over eighty, and eighteen are over ninety years of age. The operations of the Society, which are far-reaching and numerous, include homes for the most needy, benevolent and coal funds, nurses, and infirmaries for the sick and helpless. The offices are at 33, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

About Books.

A booklet which Bible students will peruse with interest is Prophecy Made Easy: the Fall of the Mohammedan Power: the Return of the Jews to Palestine. By I. S. (1s. Partridge.)

Part VII. of the Hebrew and English Lexicon, which Professor Francis Brown is preparing for the Clarendon Press, carries us as far as Nagadh, and therefore half through the entire work. Among the many editions of Gesenius this will merit a distinguished place. (2s. 6d. each part. Henry Frowde.)

Parts VI. and VII. of Dr. Bullinger's great work, Figures of Speech used in the Bible, are specially rich in contents. Between them they treat of thirty-five figures, and explain and illustrate over 1,800 separate passages of Holy Scripture. (2s. net, post free each part. The Author, 25, Connaught Street, London W.)

Under the title of Songs of Faith, Hope, and Love Rev. W. Blake Atkinson includes the whole of his collected poems. In 1872 Longfellow wrote, concerning the author's initial effort, "I have read your volume with great pleasure. It is written in a pure and simple style, and a gentle spirit pervades it throughout." These words are equally applicable to all Mr. Blake's works. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

The Brain Machine: Its Power and Weakness. By Albert Wilson, M.D. (4s. 6d. J. & A. Churchill.) These pages combine scientific precision with popular explanation; there is light on anatomy, and counsel for life and happiness. Questions of heredity and the treatment of crime are considered, so that the book will have attractions for varied circles of readers. A series of illustrations simplify the subject.

A work that will have many attractions for students of the New Testament is—Destination, Date, and Authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews, by H. H. B. Ayles, B.D. (5s. Cambridge University Press.) As a contribution to a great controversy the pages have deep interest. The view maintained is that "the Epistle was written by St. Barnabas, about A.D. 64, to the Church of Jerusalem, in order to counteract certain specified dangers."

Those who enjoy the perusal of records of bold testimony for Christ will find much to interest them in Leaves from the History of Welsh Nonconformity during the Seventeenth Century; being chiefly the Autobiography of Richard Davies, Welshpool, Quaker, 1636-1708. This work has already run through several editions; but as now brought out, with explanatory notes, by J. E. Southall, it deserves many readers. (Paper, 1s. 3d.; cloth, 2s. Newport, Mon.: J. E. Southall.)

Professor William Newton Clarke whose "Outline of Christian Theology," has been so highly commended, now gives us a handbook entitled What shall We think of Christianity? (2s. 6d. T. & T. Clark). In three lectures Dr. Clarke treats of "The Christian People," "The Christian Doctrine," and "The Christian Power." He writes as one free from the bondage of systems, and, allowing for limitations imposed by object and purpose, his pages are full of interest and suggestion.

Many will be glad to possess a handsome little work entitled John Howard, by Rev. H. H. Scullard, M.A., minister of the Howard Congregational Church, Bedford. The pages present the text of a lecture delivered in connection with the Bedford and District Free Church Council, accompanied by a number of illustrations, at once interesting in character and artistic in execution. (Bedford: Beds. Publishing Company, Mill Street; London: Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 1, Creed Lane.)

The "oldest inhabitant" knows the familiar domestic adviser, Enquire Within Upon Everything; and there is something very interesting in the way in which, by repeated revision, it "renews its youth." We welcome a new edition (the ninety-fifth), considerably enlarged and brought up to date. Alike in matters of work and pleasure, this is a versatile and reliable oracle; and it is not surprising that it should have circulated to the extent of a million and a quarter of copies. (2s. 6d. Houlston & Sons.)

Mr. William Rae (Northern Ensign Office, Wick) has issued a second edition of Memorabilia Domestica; or, Parish Life in the North of Scotland—the work, it will be remembered, of the late Dr. Donald Sage, of Resolis. The book contains—conveyed in an ingenuous and confiding way, if cumbered with detail—a great deal of historical reminiscence, and interesting delineation of Scottish life and character. The most useful feature of the work, perhaps, is the picture it affords of the religious life of Scotland in the early part of the present century. (3s. 6d.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE improvement in the international "atmosphere" is very clearly to be noted in the Hankow "incident," in which Russian and British sailors almost joined battle over some disputed points in the property concessions recently granted by the Chinese Government. Under certain circumstances this little dispute might easily have been the beginning of a war. No sooner, however, had the newspaper accounts of the affair been published than it was announced that the English and Russian Governments had consented to make the conflicting claims the subject of arbitration. Here is the first-fruit ot the Peace Congress already to hand; and though the particular case is trifling, it is enough to give promise for better methods of solving international disputes than by cannon and sword. Let us begin with the Transvaal difficulty.

The Crystal Palace Company has decided to fight the question of Sunday music. Shareholders representing over 70,000 votes desire it, and the directors consider they are doing the right thing in having Sunday concerts, which they mean to continue. As the Daily Chronicle shrewdly says:—

The fact that the shareholders are anxious to have Sunday concerts shows that the Company expects to make profit out of them.

The talk about raising the taste and purifying the habits of the people is mere talk; profit is the substance. No money, no effort. An ardent promoter of the Sunday newspaper admitted to us lately that "there was money in the thing," and intimated that such a newspaper would come sooner or later. The anti-Sabbath movement is not one between a true and a mistaken method of observing the day, but a contest between mammon and God.

Unfortunately the Press to a large extent employs its immense resources in glorifying the merely material side of our national life, thus puffing up our pride, already sufficiently inflated, and leading us into the dangers which pride always creates. Against this influence the Pulpit must use its utmost strength by faithfully doing its own spiritual work.

We so frequently and so radically differ from the Church Times that it is the more gratifying to read its commendation of the work and methods of the late George Müller. It says:

Amongst the principles we most prize in his life are those which made him refuse to accept money for his work that was not given without parade; or that came by means, such as bazaars, which degrade the very name of charity. We are firmly persuaded that money will do no more work than it is enabled to by the spirit and motive of the giver, and one reason why so many good "causes" fail, in spite of the money spent on them, is that the offerings were tainted at their source.

Of course, our contemporary is sorry that Mr. Müller was not led "to truer views of the Catholic Church," but if our memory serves us right it is the so-called "Catholic Church" which, above every church, has sinned in degrading the very name of charity by employing all sorts of worldly means for obtaining money.

Much harm is undoubtedly done to many a good object by the method in which money is solicited for it. Systematic begging even by the authority of a Roman Catholic bishop is not necessarily satisfactory. It is always a mistake for persons of good intention to solicit aid for Christian work in an independent capacity. "Sister Mary Patrick," who has for some time been using the Bishop's letter of commendation for raising money for a specific purpose, has systematically diverted contributions received into other channels. This kind of religious vagrancy ought to be discouraged on principle. The practice is pernicious and demoralizing in itself, and should be fearlessly resisted. Moreover, to grant a begging letter to a comparatively unknown applicant, that could be used under almost any circumstance, was not a wise episcopal action.

An American paper will carry the sympathies of many English people with it, when it advises congregations to discard—

Fashion, progress, ambition, a desire to draw crowds, and to return to congregational singing. Better far, we think, have no choir and no organ, than deprive the people of joining in song worship.

Yet with all our dislike of "high-class music," which means a show and the repression of congregational singing, we are persuaded that music has not obtained its proper place as a mode of worship and a means of grace. Puritanic congregations that objected to solos and to instruments welcomed Mr. Sankey and his instrument because he was in earnest and sang well with all his heart. We want soloists and quartetts of his spirit, and people will be as glad as ever to hear them when congregations, that have ample opportunity to sing, shall take the trouble "to make a joyful noise unto the Lord;" they and the trained singers will help to bring crowds, and bring them to be saved.

There is a rising tide of moral indignation in America against the fast-increasing tyranny of "trusts"—an evil which threatens to throw the whole of the industries and business of the New World into the hands of a few unscrupulous monopolists. Already it has spread its roots and widely-extending branches far and wide into the body politic, and it will be no easy matter to uproot a social evil that has had such a long start of reform. The co-operative movement, which held its annual gatherings recently in the Crystal Palace, is one of the healthy barriers raised in this country against this new enemy of the common well-being. But even here there are not wanting signs and symptoms that we shall soon have to face the same tendency to concentrate the productive and distributive business of the country in the interests of wealthy capitalists, as opposed to those of the community as a whole. The example of America should be a warning to us.

Would it not be well to raise the question, in these days of syndicates and many other arrangements that weaken the sense of responsibility, how far a man is accountable for the management of his property? He may inherit a business of a doubtful kind, not openly immoral, but connected with deadly vices; ought he to continue it? He may be the heir of slum property; ought he to hold it? He may have more to control than his own hand is equal to; ought he to leave the control to subordinates, who, in his name, may be guilty of oppression and fraud? He may have investments in companies that carry on trade by questionable means for questionable ends; ought he to keep them there? Worldly men may have no scruples on such points, but with Christians it ought not so to be. A tender conscience and a firm will are absolutely necessary if we would keep ourselves "unspotted from the world."

As we are nearing the end of the holiday season it may be well to think of the work that has yet to be done by Christ's disciples. Resting-time is really recruiting-time. Each labourer in the Divine vineyard can think of some lowly duty into which the Lord Jesus would have him throw his whole being. For nothing but whole-hearted thoroughness must distinguish the Christian's method of work from all others. Work is Divine. It is not a curse. It is one of heaven's best blessings to the human family. It is a discipline—a rich means of grace—an opportunity for service—a Divine call to embrace present duties, and to discharge them as in the King's radiant presence. With the nerves strengthened, the mind braced and stimulated, the thoughts quickened, the heart kindled anew in love to God and man, "now is the acceptable time" to begin again to reach out both hands earnestly to any work Christ has given us, and so execute it as to make it a means of grace. Work is to be as holy as praise and prayer.

Cardinal Vaughan gave a lurid and highly-coloured picture of the social and moral condition of England in his address at Southport to the Catholic Truth Society. The partial truth of the description is overbalanced, first by its exaggeration, and secondly by the ulterior object for which it was given; for the Cardinal attributes the drunkenness and poverty of a large section of our nation to the evil effects of the Reformation movement! To say nothing of the irrelevancy of the charge, we have but to contrast the condition, social, moral, and religious, of the Protestant with that of the Catholic countries of Europe to-day, to find the tables turned on the Romish Primate of England with a vengeance. In every respect, save perhaps that of drunkenness, the contrast is in favour of the former. As has often been pointed out, there is no Catholic nation of to-day which is progressive, and not one Protestant nation that is decaying. The truth lies in exactly the opposite direction from the Cardinal's contention.

The Cardinal proceeded to grind an ecclesiastical axe on the social stone, and said:

To convince the masses that the Roman Catholic Church was the Church of the people, the educated Catholic laity should be seen united with the clergy in unselfish devotion to bettering the lives of the poor. In addition to prayer and preaching, Christ must be seen moving among the multitude, healing their infirmities in the person not only of priests, but of Catholic men and women bound to the work by no official duty.

We may smile at the Cardinal's reading of history. It is a new idea to attribute the economic evils of to-day to the disruption with Rome in the sixteenth century. Certain it is, however, the social question is the one subject in which the masses are intensely interested; and Protestant voices should be heard with ever-increasing clearness, declaring for social righteousness. To lessen our interest in what promises to be the great issue of the coming years would not only be to belie our history, and prove recreant to the teaching of the Master, but also to give to the Church of Rome the greatest opportunity she has had since Reformation days.

It is a striking commentary on the attitude of the Roman Church towards the Bible as the text-book of religion, that in a newly-published Spanish version it has been found necessary to append foot-notes "explanatory" of all those passages which tend to weaken or destroy the effect of Romish theory and practice. We are told in the preface that the purpose of this version is to arrest the progress of Protestantism. The whole scheme is a confession that the Bible itself is thoroughly Protestant in tone; otherwise why have to resort to these methods of counteracting its teaching? The "pure Word of God" is its own witness to the Evangelical faith in all its force and simplicity. Therefore, the Roman Church has never been a friend to the wide dissemination of the Bible. It is afraid of it.

If Viscount Halifax's advice to the members of the English Church Union truly represents the attitude of the sacerdotal conscience towards the Archbishops' prohibition against the ceremonial use of incense and the carrying of lights in procession, we are likely to find ourselves at the beginning and not the end of the Ritualist controversy. It is summed up in four words, Stand by your priests. He puts it more strongly when he says again,

Whatever course your priests deem it their duty to take, stand by your priests.

This means the subordination of every man's conscience to the judgment of his clergyman. One may oppose the pronouncement, another may yield to it; and the people are unquestioningly to submit to both! If this counsel be followed out, as probably it will, how long shall we retain our independence as a nation? Our condition will be as bad as that of any abject Roman Catholic people.

But we trust that some Englishmen have enough spirit and love of truth to decide that they will use their own judgment and go their own way, no matter what their priests may recommend or do. Lord Halifax practically advises obedience to the letter of the Archbishops' mandate, while disobeying its spirit. This is subversive of all true discipline in the Church, and shows that the extremists are prepared to go to any lengths rather than give up their practices. How far the clergy, as a whole, will abide loyally by their superiors remains to be seen: at present, the number of offenders who have given up their illegal methods of worship is very small, and not a few openly announce their intention of defying the recent judgment. How such men can reconcile this attitude with their solemn ordination vows, is a problem that should not be ignored.

"Unshepherded" is the word employed in the New York Observer to describe the loneliness of the Christian minister's life. His very position—a teacher, a preacher, a pastor, a leader of others—who has he, on a common human level, to be a preacher or pastor to him? Who is there to shepherd him? And he needs shepherding quite as much as any member of his own flock. He requires the hand-grip of sympathy, the warmth of friendliness, the strength of tenderness and love, which belong to the pastor's office since he is himself human.

The common lot is his. Care sits down with him in his study. Temptation meets him on the highway, and sorrow and he have bent together to watch the light go out in the eyes of his dying child.

Where is the pastor to comfort him? Perhaps Christian people have forgotten this aspect of the minister's high and holy calling. The prayers of his flock on this very account will bring a flood of blessing from heaven into his soul.

To declare "the whole counsel of God" is a great task; "who is sufficient for it?" There is a constant danger of all human teaching being limited by our personal preferences for certain aspects of truth, and while truth quickened and realised in individual experience is truth in its most potent form, yet a ministry that does not embrace the whole revelation of God is not sufficient to meet the whole of human needs. It is sectional, and makes lop-sided Christians. There are souls that specially need careful and exact teaching in some imperfectly understood parts of the Scripture, some that need warning, some that need encouraging, some that need comforting, some that need bracing and girding. We want fulness and proportion.

The God-imparted wisdom of the Mosaic legislation regarding the tenure of land and other social regulations has often been pointed out by economists. Sir William Preece, president of the recent Sanitary Congress, in his address at Southampton, made a striking reference to Moses as a sanitary reformer. In the Book of Leviticus the objects of sanitation are expounded in reference to pure air, pure water, pure food, pure soil, pure dwellings and pure bodies. In an age when the Bible has become the happy hunting-ground of theorists, it is almost refreshing to find it appealed to as the highest authority on such modern matters.

It would be still better if its supreme place on yet higher questions were oftener dwelt upon. Nowadays, the purification of the outer conditions of life is often spoken of as the one thing needful. Moses and the Prophets made these subsidiary to the purification of the soul. It was the Pharisees who forgot the cleaning of the heart in that of the outside of the platter.

Sir William describes Leviticus as a "treatise on hygiene." Had Leviticus been no more than a treatise, we do not believe the people would have paid much attention to it. They attributed to it a Divine authority; they believed in its first verse being the key to all the verses that follow. "And the Lord called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying"—— This, too, we believe to be the explanation of Moses' insight and skill as a sanitary engineer thousands of years before the world could appreciate his plans. He was more than a clever man or a genius; he was a man of God, and was God-taught. We decline to exalt the servant and forget his Lord and God.

I verily believe that the only reason why the Christian Church is not overwhelmed by the present storm of unbelief, buried under the landslide of present-day materialism, paralysed by the current luxurious worldliness, and swept out of existence by a combination of all these adverse forces, is because of her connection with the heathen world through her thin line of missionary enterprises. Our missionaries abroad, and their supporters at home, are the saviours, so far forth, of the Church of the nineteenth century.

These are the thrilling words in which Dr. Pentecost alludes to the "categorical imperative" of Jesus: "Go ye into all the world," &c. It is rhetorical, certainly; but not, therefore, necessarily untrue. The Church is the salt of the earth; hence her Great Head will preserve her as a witness to his Cross and Passion till the day breaks and the shadows flee away. But there is no doubt that Christ honours especially those who yield to his "categorical imperative," and count not their lives dear unto them in order to bring the "forces of the Gentiles" to his feet.

The decision in the Dreyfus trial will be announced almost immediately. Nothing short of a new confidence in the integrity and justice of the authorities of France can save the nation from abiding dishonour, and in all probability, disintegration.

The Transvaal Crisis.

In a recent issue we deprecated partisanship on either side of the controversy between our Government and that of the Transvaal, and the assumption by English writers that President Kruger is absolutely right, and the British Government absolutely wrong—as likely to irritate the war party, and to add to their number by a natural revulsion of feeling in those as yet in a judicial attitude of mind. The Spectator (current No.) has an article on "The Violence of the Peace Party," which deprecates "inflammatory appeals for peace, though written by men of ability, position, and, it must be added, of sincerity and good intention, despite their violence." Some flagrant instances are given. But we think "the Peace Party" must not be held responsible for all that is thus written by individuals, however estimable.

The Spectator pays, in our judgment, a well-deserved tribute to the Daily News as having throughout the present controversy, taken up a line which is a credit to English journalism. Its articles have been as temperate in phrase as they have been firm and statesmanlike in tone, and it has never indulged in language which has been in the slightest degree unfair or insulting to its opponents.

This certainly is the spirit in which journals should be conducted; and, if it were so, there would be less exaggeration of statement, less exasperation of feeling, and a better instructed and a more impartial public opinion on every subject treated by the Press.

The lamentable controversy appears to be very near a crisis. All right-minded people, whatever their view of the merits of the case on either side, must ardently desire and fervently pray to God for peace. The outbreak of hostilities would be a calamity infinitely greater than any advantage which could possibly be gained by a war such as this would be. The side which begins it, will get far more blame than would be compensated for by any victory which could be won.

This is a time when we may well give ourselves to earnest, importunate prayer for the promotion of national righteousness. Surely after spending months in the discussion of peace and arbitration at the Hague, it is possible to apply some other arbitrament than the sword in present circumstances. Let us pray much that in these things God will "make the wrath of men to praise Him."

How to Reach the Non-Churchgoing.

By Rev. WILLIAM ROSS, Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow.

THE best way to reach the non-churchgoing is to go to them. But we must go to them in such fashion that they will come to us, and remain with us after they are brought. There can be a personal acquaintance, a personal intimacy and friendship, a personal fellowship between the Christian worker and those that are to be blessed. There must be no substitute for personal loving contact between the saved and the unsaved. Our interest in them, our association with them, is for one end, and with one aim only, and that is, that they may meet with Jesus Christ, and accept Him as their personal Saviour, and crown Him in their hearts and lives as sole king. If we are to do the work—the great work—successfully, we must be filled with the spirit of Christ, and this can only be realized in prayer. There must also be prayer, definite and continuous, for the objects of our interest, as well as for the work of our choice. The work itself is to be done—

1. Territorially.—The district is to be mapped, and every family registered, and their professed connections and leanings known. The non-churchgoing will soon and easily be discovered as untilled soil. The amount and character of the labour to be devoted to the district will speedily be seen. The agency will vary greatly with the character of the people. For some, an occasional visit will be all that is required; for others, the contact must be almost daily. It must certainly, and, at least, be weekly for a time. Remember, the map and register are indispensable. They are the plan and outline of the field or desert that is to become, in the worker's hands,

THE GARDEN OF GOD.

The Christian worker must remember that the providence and Spirit of God are busy at work all the time with his field, whether he is conscious of it or not. Distress, disappointment, sickness, loss, suffering, death, are all busy at work ploughing up the field. Each and all of these will create for him what he desires, opportunity. He must make the most of it for his one purpose. Then the Word, read, spoken, circulated, or preached, is doing its work, in so far as access is obtained, and hearers are found. The Word never fails. Faith is bound to come, and with faith comes life; and with life, power; and with power, mastery; and with mastery, victory. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." But the work should be done—

2. In the church building.—A centre is needed; that centre ought to be the church. "But the people," says one, "will not go into the church." That is not true. They will go if you go before them, and if there are not barriers over which they cannot get. If it be difficult, you must create the fashion, and persevere. Open-air service at the church corner for half-an-hour (on Sabbaths, three-quarters), followed up with a hearty pointed short service inside, will be productive of results of the most permanent and valuable kind. "My Word shall not return unto Me void."

3. It must be continuous.—Spasmodic work is the bane of Christian service. It must be daily. The forces of recovery must be as constant as the destructive agencies at work, and they must as definitely minister life and hope and help, as those minister ruin and death. We cannot afford to lose a single day. "Daily in the church, and from house to house, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ." It is our Father's business. It is the Church's work. It is our business, as living members of Christ. We must not cease, even for a day. The result of a day's work may not appear to be much; but over a space of sixteen years it makes all the difference between failure and success.

4. The work must be capable of adaptation to any and all circumstances, as they arise. The purpose, which is the evangelization of the district, must be fixed, unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. That purpose cannot be changed for anything else, however good. There it stands, in the presence of all, and pervading all, and the outcome of all. Don't modify, don't alter. But the plan, the method, means of realizing the purpose, must be free, absolutely free. If there are those among the workers who take offence at this, then they should go and work elsewhere, where everything is rigid and cold, where trees are iron rods, and grass is brass shavings, and rivers are ice, and sunshine is but moonlight—where men are mummies, and where no children are born, where the prophet's messenger and message are but a man with a stick. But here, everything is living and adaptable, and life creates its own forms. They are native and natural.

PRECONCEIVED IDEAS MUST GO, and holy invention take the place of dead formalism.

5. The work must be social.—Every quickened soul must be introduced into the society—must bear its burdens as well as share its privileges. The society must be a protector, a nurse, and a minister of comfort and strength to the young life growing up within it. Therefore, everything that degrades or destroys must be thrust forth, and everything fitted to purify and strengthen brought in. Strong drink and its congeners must go, and the Church and its work take the place of former alliances. Every member ought to have definite work, and to give time, talents, money, and labour to the service of the Master. The Church and its work are as necessary to the spiritual life as the life is to the existence and prosperity of the Church. Do not forget, every living stone must be built into the wall of the spiritual temple; not for rest only, but to bear its share in the support of the building.

6. Lastly, for this present, the work ought at times to be surprising—fitted to awaken and interest and move the mass. How can this be? By special helpers; special prolonged seasons of effort and prayer; special Bible studies, original and fresh. Mere routine at such times must disappear. People must understand that in conversation, preaching, fellowship, you mean business.

I have taken for granted that the Church is all alive, and anxious to make the most of the district and of its opportunity. The reader may well ask, what would be the result of such work, say in sixteen years? I do not know; only in that time I have been eye-witness to more than 3,000, professing conversion, enter into one congregation; upwards of 30,000 have taken the pledge of total abstinence—all of these have been conversed with in regard to the way of salvation; whole families have been won for Christ, amongst them two murderers, several felons, and others from the criminal classes. Respectable and self-righteous Pharisees have experienced Gospel power. Many who were delivered from the pressure of this wicked age, are now labouring for the salvation of their fellows; and God is blessing them in the work, which they support with free-will offerings, consecrated to God for this end. They say—all of us say—"It is the Lord's doing, and wondrous in our eyes."—U.P. Magazine.

The End of the Century in Australia.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in New South Wales have resolved to celebrate the centenary of Presbyterian worship in the colony and the commencement of the twentieth century (1) by a special mission in each parish during 1900 with the view of reviving and deepening spiritual life; (2) by holding at Sydney, in April 1901, a congress to which the home churches and sister churches in the colonies shall be invited to send delegates, who may also attend the General Assembly of 1901; (3) by the issue of a history of Presbyterianism in the colony, to be prepared by an editorial committee, of which the Rev. Dr. Cameron, of Richmond, has been appointed convener; and (4) by the raising of a fund of a hundred thousand guineas "as an offering of worship and thanksgiving to Almighty God, to be used in the expansion and advancement of the work He has given this church to do in the land."

Sabbath Observance.

(Concluded.)

By Rev. A. S. COOK, M.A.

II.—ITS CHARACTER.

OUR Lord expounded and enlarged and deeply spiritualized the moral law, but He did not destroy it (Matt. v. 17). He did not minimize the importance of the Sabbath. He taught that deeds of mercy and works of necessity were permissible, and in this sense declared that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." It is only necessary to see the connection in which the words of Mark ii. 27 occur, in order to see that that is their true interpretation. The day was ordained for bodily rest—that is, physical and mental. But that is not all. It was to be also a day for spiritual rest and refection, the rest of the weary coming to Jesus (Matt. xi. 28). That is the truest and highest sense in which it can be a day of rest. Holiday-makers forget this when they seek only physical and mental recreation on Sunday.

To "keep holy" has its positive as well as its negative side. Not only not to do evil, but actually to do good. That which is secular is not holy, though it may not be of such a character as to be unholy. When we turn to see how modern England keeps the Sabbath, we find a growing disregard for its sanctity, and we have the strongest warrant of Scripture for saying that our Saviour, in his interpretation of the fourth commandment, never countenanced such a laxity of Sabbath observance as is apparent in the present day. It is nothing more with some than an opportunity for physical and mental enjoyment, and the highest part of human nature is lost sight of—the soul with its pressing needs starving for want of ministration to it of spiritual things. The substitutes can never satisfy. Excursions, picnics, museums, picture-galleries, works of art and things of that kind, can never supply

THE NEEDS OF MAN'S HIGHEST BEING.

Moreover, the provision now made for such amusements entails a vast amount of labour on those who are already hard at work on six days in the week. Are they to have no day of rest?

The calm and restful character of the old English Sunday seems to be fast disappearing, and the lamentable habits of continental nations are gaining ground in every quarter.

CONCLUSION.

What can we, who profess and call ourselves Christians, do to stem the terrible torrent of Sabbath desecration, which, if unchecked, must at length sweep away every vestige of the Divine institution? We ought, if we have any claim to be called Christians, to do something. I am compelled to speak strongly, knowing full well that the breach of others of God's laws can often be traced in the first place to the infringement of the fourth commandment. We can by our example do much. We can make it our endeavour to show by our lives that we regard the Divine command as binding upon us.

We can avoid secularizing the Sabbath in any manner. We can avoid making up our accounts, reading light literature, amusing ourselves, or idling away our time. We can in these several negative ways, and positively in other ways, show to a criticising world that there is a reality in our religion, and that we are prepared to stand by the Bible as our guide, and carry out its precepts so far as, by God's grace helping us, it lies in our power to do so.

And let us above all endeavour in our souls to experience John's blessed realization of the Divine presence, and like him be "in the Spirit" on the Lord's Day. Then shall our Sundays be days of spiritual refreshment, and true foretastes of that eternal Sabbath rest which remaineth for the people of God.

False Estimates of the Sabbath.—Surely they who grudge the spending of one day in seven in holy exercises, think God a Master not worth serving, the soul a jewel not worth saving, eternity a state not worth preparing for. The Lord pity and awaken such! —Matthew Henry.

Resurrection Triumphs.—2.

Matthew xxviii. 9.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

THIS auspicious morning yields clearest light. We understand now the majestic testimony, "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again" (John x. 17-18). All hail! It is ours now to sound out the greatest fact of revelation. Well didst Thou give the text, yea the anthem, for the whole Church of God: "I AM the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." This we know and believe, Lord Jesus! Thou art the subject of our clarion note of completed triumph. All hail!

God hath indeed "begotten us again unto a living hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." From deliverance to judgment with Him in his substitutional death, unto with Him to the glory in the heavens:—His resurrection is the pledge and proof of all. His Lordship also is here proclaimed. God hath "raised Him from the dead and given Him glory, that our faith and hope should be in God." All judgment is committed to the Son. Here we know that Jesus is "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

QUICKENING, RAISING, ACCEPTANCE, AND EXALTATION

Here also, is found the justification of all believers from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. On this ground, having been "justified by his blood," God "is just, and the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Mark, with great care, how the eternal God has emphasized the supreme fact of the resurrection as having direct relation to his judgment in the future. "The times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because He hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance (offered faith) unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead" (Acts xvii. 30).

The strong and painfully-marked tendency to-day is to leave out practically this supreme doctrine of the Word of God. Ethical religion, morals, ritual, priestism and sacraments, are all being emphasized and made to represent the fulness of Christian doctrine. As well might earth affect to represent heaven, or an earthly landscape be mistaken for the glory of the incorruptible sphere. What possible connection is there, or could there be, between morals and Christ's resurrection; between ethics or sacraments, and being "alive unto God in Jesus Christ our Lord"?

Morals and culture may show the advance of civilization and the improvement of the creature from the world's standpoint of thought and judgment; but these must not be confounded with being "born from above," and made a partaker of the Divine nature of the risen Christ. It is impossible to make an improved sinner "a new creature in Christ."

REFORMATION, NOT REGENERATION.

Of all who are regenerated, it is written; "We are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." Reformation must not be mistaken for regeneration. This is where ecclesiasticism, and mere human religiousness, are fundamentally false. They give the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.

"In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but a new creature (creation); and as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 15, 16).

The melancholy fact is, that nearly all the ritual, teaching, and religious service going on in the churches is taken up with the presentation of those phases of our Lord's ministry and life which preceded his resurrection. God forbid that we should minimize his humanity, sympathy, or compassion, or fail to present his example, morals, or sacrifice for sins; but with intelligent reverence, be it said, these are subordinate truths now that we know the great fact of "his glorious resurrection and ascension."

The Holy Child Jesus, his mother, his sufferings, his agony and sweat of blood, and his death are too often regarded as the principal truths of the Gospel. The resurrection of Christ, and the great facts which belong to his risen life, are little understood, and by many scarcely preached or presented.

Is it too much to affirm that for every carefully prepared address which deals with the resurrection, at least fifty are prepared which deal with the life and work of the Lord Jesus prior and up to the time of his death? Should this be so, in the light of the fact that the preaching of Christ and his resurrection was in the Apostolic ministry? Let my readers search the Acts of the Apostles to see whether this was not the case. Here, in my judgment, is one principal cause of the comparative failure of the public ministry at this time. It lacks the power which is inherent in the greatest fact of Divine revelation—viz., Christ's resurrection.

SO PROMINENT AND MIGHTY A THEME

In the main, the preacher's round of thought to-day is found in our Lord's humanity, sympathy, and love; in his ministry, example, teaching, and morality. This sphere, be it said, is, in the light of his resurrection, far too contracted. In truth, the want of this fundamental doctrine in the preaching of our times has resulted in a sadly imperfect presentation of the Gospel of Christ. The resurrection is the chief factor in "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." Precious to us as the great truths of his sacrifice, redemption, and atonement are, they do not represent, though they have prepared the way for, the positive, glorious, and eternal realities which belong to being "alive unto God in Jesus Christ our Lord." Oh, for the Holy Spirit's strengthening might and wisdom, to understand and know "the power of his resurrection!"

Winter Course of Bible Studies.

THE deepened interest in Bible study, and the widespread blessing resulting from the Bible Classes held by Professors White and Newell, of America, in the earlier part of the year, have led to the formation of a small committee for the further prosecution of the work. The members of the committee are Lord Kinnaird, Mr. Herbert Arbuthnot, the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss Morley, Miss A. R. Habershon, and myself acting as treasurer.

Rev. G. Soltau has placed himself at the disposal of the committee for the ensuing six months, for the purpose of conducting these studies in and around London. Arrangements are in progress for ten such studies to be held, and the desire is to reach and help the suburbs of London, as well as the centre. Morley Hall, Stratford Conference Hall, Camden Town Y.M.C.A. Hall, Mildmay Conference Hall, Bayswater Y.M.C.A. Rooms, and Finsbury Square Y.W.C.A. Training Home, are already fixed on, and we shall be glad to be put into communication with friends who can send us suggestions as to possible centres for fresh classes. We need a revival of faith in the Scriptures as the Word of God, and we need a training of our young Christians in the use of the Word of God.

The studies to be undertaken by Mr. Soltau will be helpful in bearing upon the Authority and Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Fulfilment of Prophecy, the Work of the Holy Spirit, the Confirming of Faith in the Revelation of God by his Son, and the Deepening of Spiritual Life. A list of places, dates, and times of meeting, will be furnished as soon as possible. Communications can be addressed to Mr. Soltau, 85, Lordship Park, N., or to myself. The majority of the studies will be commenced the first week in October.

J. Herbert Tritton.

36, Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W.

Blankenburg Conference.

WE have just finished one of the most delightful conferences which has fallen to my lot ever to attend. I have previously described this picturesque little town, situated in the heart of Luther's country, and destined to become as famous in Germany as Keswick in England, not on account of the beauty of its scenery but because of the annual Conference. As yet the English tourist has hardly awakened to the beauty of this neighbourhood, with its glorious pine-clad hills, its interesting associations, its pure and healthy air; it is, therefore, somewhat astonishing to the townsfolk to witness this mighty influx of Christians to accept the hospitable invitation of our beloved hostess, Fräulein von Weling.

The first conferences that gathered at her call were comparatively small, but four years ago the presence of Hudson Taylor attracted a larger number, and since then the gatherings have grown by leaps and bounds. This is the fourteenth Conference, and by far the largest. About 1,000 people have assembled, from all parts of Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, and even from South Russia.

Fräulein von Weling, as most of my readers know, has adopted a number of orphan children, whom she is educating as her own. The work is entirely dependent on the unsolicited gifts of God's children, and, as I visit it year by year, and see the wonderful improvement in this family of dear boys and girls, I cannot speak too highly of the motherly care she exercises, or of its results. The boys are being prepared for useful lives, and two of them are desirous of being missionaries. The girls are trained in household duty, in addition to their lessons. Any gifts would be well bestowed, if sent to Fräulein von Weling, Alliance House, Blankenburg, Thüringia, Germany; but if she knew that I was writing thus, I am not sure she would allow this letter to be posted, as she is very sincere in her dealings with God about money matters.

She insists on catering for all who attend the conference, securing all the rentable rooms in the place, and crowding every corner of her two houses. Large sheds are erected, and the people take their meals together, literally sitting at her board. She makes no charge, and very modest little boxes at the doors have to receive the gifts which are left behind, I trust by all. That these meet all her expense is entirely a matter between God and her. The food is good and plentiful, and the family feeling is very beautiful. Friendships are made at the meals which death will not dissolve.

It is remarkable to notice the large number of persons of high rank who assemble. To give their names would be an impertinence, but if they were mentioned they would include some of the highest families in these countries, other than royal. It is a very healthy sign of the times. Also, my friend, Count Bernstorff, has been giving me a most interesting account of the Gemeinschafts, which are rising up in all parts of Germany. They are fellowship meetings, held at other times than those of church-services, at which the more evangelical and devoted servants of Christ meet around the Bible, and engage in Christian work.

A large number of godly men have taken part in the various meetings of this conference, which have filled the beautiful Hall three times each day. Amongst these we may mention Revs. Dr. Gritton, W. Darlow Serjeant, C. G. Moore, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Pastors Stockmayer and Jellinghaus, Count Bernstorff, Mr. Walter Sloan, Mr. Field (of the Evangelical Alliance), Dr. Baedeker (the beloved and honoured chairman), myself, and many evangelical German pastors, with whose names I am not familiar.

The subjects have included those for the promotion of the Christian life with which we are familiar at Keswick and elsewhere; but there has been a considerable admixture of the missionary element, and Dr. Guinness has given three powerful addresses on the evangelization of the world. F. B. Meyer.

Blankenburg, September 1, 1899.

"These Forty Years."

A CONSTANT reader, now in her seventy-sixth year, "wishes to let you know how very much your periodical has cheered her during almost the last thirty years."

"I cannot refrain from telling you how greatly I (an old subscriber to The Christian) enjoy and appreciate your "Day by Day" columns. I can hardly express my admiration of your splendid stand for Protestant truth.—Yours faithfully,

"Mander John Smyth.

"Hillside, Tettenhall, Wolverhampton."

"For a quarter of a century I have never missed my Christian for one week. It follows me wherever I go, and a Thursday when I did not see The Christian would be a strange one indeed. . . . Your paper is a continual source of help and strength. May you be spared yet many years to hold the helm.—Yours, in Christ's service, "D. J. Findlay.

"The Tabernacle, St. George's Cross, Glasgow."

"Let me fall into line with a thousand others, and congratulate you on the completion of 'These Forty Years.' The Christian has been a distinct means of grace in all parts of Australasia, and will, I think, soon have to chronicle another Great Revival. Your summary of 'mighty men,' in your issue of the 17th, reads like Hebrews xi. "H. B. Macartney, Home Superintendent of the B. and F. Bible Society.

"146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C."

"Accept my warm congratulations on the anniversary of The Christian, which has been my familiar friend these forty years. Long may it flourish as a messenger of God, sent to keep us in the right path, avoiding sacerdotalism on the one hand, and infidelity on the other. I have never ceased to commend it to my friends, and never shall while it continues to hold up faithfully the banner of the cross.

"Robert P. J. Simpson.

"Mayfield Road, Wallasey, Cheshire."

"My acquaintance with The Christian is comparatively recent, but I cannot let the birthday season pass without saying that I have, for several years, found the paper most useful as a record of the state of Christianity in the world at large, and as a teacher of the great truths which were set forth by Christ and his Apostles. It is the only paper that I read throughout, and from which I get such useful information.

"(Captain) Henry Toynbee.

"12, Upper Westbourne Terrace, W."

"I was but a little girl of eight when I first saw the dear old Revival, and among the most treasured remembrances of bygone days lie several of the early numbers, with records of the honoured workers of that period, viz., Denham Smith, Reginald Radcliffe, H. Grattan Guinness, &c. How often since then have we had cause to bless God for raising you up as a defender of his truth and a promoter of that unity which should ever characterize God's people! In later years, as my five sons (all of whom are serving the Lord) have listened to accounts of those wonderful days of 'Revival,' your name has ever held a foremost place. May you be long spared to labour on at God's command, and may The Christian ever maintain its high aim, and be even more blessed in the years that are yet to come. This is the earnest prayer of

"An Unknown Friend."

"Dear Sir,—I should like to add my testimony to those already received by you to the value and usefulness of your paper, both as The Revival and The Christian. I have in my possession the first yearly volume, commencing in July, 1859, and have read it more or less regularly from that year, so memorable in the history of religious awakenings in these islands. On my return from service in China, in November, 1859, I found Christians in England and in Ireland all alive and full of zeal and enthusiasm for the salvation of souls and the extension of Christ's kingdom; and The Revival paper was in everyone's hand because it contained the latest news of what God was doing in England, Scotland, Wales, and in Ireland especially. Those were blessed days, real times of refreshing, when daily united prayer meetings were the order of the day, and when the revival in Ulster was the great topic of conversation and inspiration to service everywhere you went. Many of us journeyed to Belfast to witness it, and to take part in the blessed work, and when we think of it our hearts burn within us, and we long and pray that the Lord of the harvest will send us now "showers of blessing," and stir up his people to more prayer and expectation.—Yours faithfully in Christ, "John B. Rochfort.

"Blackheath."

"How the Tide Turned."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

TRUE, the church stood in a densely-populated part of the town, and every month saw families moving out to the suburbs. Yet that scarcely seemed sufficient reason to account for the coldness and stagnation that were creeping over the congregation.

The Rev. Archibald Herclart had preached there for seven years. Sometimes, by a specially attractive subject, he managed to muster a respectable number of hearers; but, as a rule, pews were only partly filled, and then with latecomers.

One autumn afternoon a stern-looking man might be seen walking up the church steps, followed by Captain and Mrs. Senial, former attendants. "I can understand your wish to see the old place," said Walter Courier; "but things don't improve here. I wonder our minister doesn't see it."

"It is two years since we left the town," said the Captain; "and I am grieved to hear of coldness and apathy among the people. How is it that the tide of earnestness and zeal has run out? Is everyone doing his utmost to help?"

"You see, we get discouraged when the collections are poor and seats not letting well," said the deacon, as he closed the door behind them and led the way up the silent aisle. The walls were dingy; the velvet covering on the pulpit showed signs of decay, and the atmosphere was close and musty.

"What a sight, after our bright church!" said the Captain's wife. "Oh, how I pity the preacher! I met him this morning, and I thought he looked disappointed. Can nothing be done?"

"Nothing without money. Since so many of you left, we have gone back. We want funds—that's it." And Walter Courier, foreman in one of the large manufactories, assumed the appearance of one responsible for the commercial aspect of the church.

"Pardon me if I speak contrary to one in office here; but I am persuaded it is not primarily money you need. Money success in your condition would be disastrous—I am sure of it. My wife and I had it in our hearts to send a gift for renovating this building; but we believe God could not bless it, as things are," said the Captain, with that kindly, anxious look on his face that he had often worn when speaking in that church years before. No one had ever doubted his goodness, not even the calculating man before him.

"Mr. Courier, may I be frank, and say just what I mean?" And the wife moved away, as if to inspect the vestry. "Certainly, I desire the good of this cause as much as anyone? Say what you like, Captain; you can't offend me."

Laying his hand on the deacon's shoulder, he said: "For your own soul's sake, for Christ's sake, and for your minister's sake, take care. I have heard all about the coldness, the want of spiritual life here, and I know the man who stands meekly in that pulpit is suffering a wrong."

"And no one is more concerned about it than I am, sir," interrupted the deacon.

"Stay, I must be faithful. The tide will turn when the cause of the wrong is removed. Has it ever occurred to you that evil may lie at your door? Humiliation and repentance—this is necessary; yes, even in church members and deacons, alas! It is not for me to judge; but I dare to say my Lord would say to you, and several who imagine they are helpers here, 'Thou art the man.'"

The stern face relaxed, and Courier stood unusually calm. Passion, so easily aroused by others, lay quiet under the honest, manly touch of this faithful man of God. "What can I do? How improve matters?" he stammered, while the Captain gently answered: "Not by might, nor by power; but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

. . . . .

It was evening, still and cool, and the minister sat alone on the balcony overlooking the garden. He had been pondering over his message for Sunday; but his spirit fainted within him as he thought of the indifference of his hearers.

"What can I suggest to induce the members to come to the week-night services, wife?" he said, as she took her seat beside him.

"I can't think, Archibald; it's a constant worry. I wish I didn't know how un-Christian so-called Christians are—it hurts my spiritual life; and you are not happy. Ought we to stay and suffer here? Think, there is a large world; you could do good for Christ, unfettered and unwounded." And the grey eyes filled with tears as she saw her husband's troubled face. At that moment Mr. Walter Courier was announced, and she left them together, trembling lest his visit meant a new pang to spoil Sunday's work.

Never had the minister seen the correct-looking deacon so disturbed. He tried to speak of one thing and another, but fairly failed to talk in his old measured tone. "You rarely visit me on Saturday evening, Mr. Courier;" and the minister began to fear some great sorrow had overtaken the man, for his head sank lower, and he rested his arm on the rail of the balcony. Shadows of night were settling around, and all was tranquil, and the two men sat in silence. "Mr. Herclart, God has flashed his searchlight on to my heart, and revealed to me what I was hiding from myself. I have come to make a clean breast of it this night, before another Sabbath dawns."

"What does it mean? I am quite in the dark," said the minister.

"It means I have hindered your work by wounding you. I have prevented God blessing your efforts by resisting his Spirit. I have chilled and checked the spiritual growth of the church. Oh,

THE MISCHIEF ONE SOUL CAN DO!"

said the humbled man.

"I did not think you so much to blame. Perhaps you have been unwise; but——"

"You are too gracious. I only merit your scorn. I, by my office, profess to uphold and cheer you, and succour the Church of God. I want you to announce that the church will be closed to-morrow evening, and that the officers and teachers, and any who care to attend are invited to meet in the school hall for a time of deep humiliation and self-searching. I want you to stay away, and rest assured that God is working."

The minister's heart was beating with thankfulness, and he promised.

Consternation was on all faces assembled on Sunday morning, and foolish conjectures found voice. Yet the spirit of determination stopped criticism.

Heartfelt prayer rose from the study on that solemn evening, while the Captain (who had consented to guide the meeting) led the proceedings in the school-room behind the closed church. In their midst was One who said, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name"—and they knew it. Hearts must be true and pure before they know how to pray such prayers as now went up from heaven-touched souls. Self was dethroned, a sense of deep responsibility to God overspread their consciences, and nothing save the outcry for the Holy Spirit was heard during two sacred hours.

. . . . .

Six months later, Captain Senial and the happy-looking minister stood together admiring the newly-adorned house of God. "I have come to rejoice with you in the wonderful, earnest, inquiring spirit, and the new tone of real Christian activity here. Truly this is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes."

"Yes, Captain; you remember how He said, 'Prove Me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.' This proving our God's faithfulness, by fulfilling his own conditions, has resulted in consecrated worshippers, earnest seekers after salvation, and a church that was cold and worldly becoming the home of Spirit-filled souls. I look back and shudder at the state we were in; and I thank God for sending an arrow to that deacon's heart through you, for that was how the tide turned."

Day by Day.

Sunday, September 10. 2 Kings ix.

FIVE times in this chapter the question is asked, though in varying tones, "Is it peace?" The horsemen ask it of the furious driver; the king asks it of his captain; Jezebel asks it of the murderer of her son. And is not the heart of man for ever asking this same question? and, if there is the slightest unusual tremor in the air, is there not at once the fearful inquiry, "Is this going to mar or make for peace?"

The fact is, the heart of man is ill at ease. Deeply conscious that all is not right between itself and God, anxious that nothing should disturb the desolation which it affects to call peace, dreading what may threaten to rock, as with the throes of earthquake, the cardboard walls of false security in which it lives. There can be no peace between God and man, man and his brother, man and himself, until he has put away the the whoredoms and witchcrafts of Jezebel. But are not these associated with ages for ever passed? How can they hinder our peace to-day?

Let us not forget the solemn words of the Holy Ghost, as He speaks to the Churches:—"I have against thee that thou sufferest the woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, and she teacheth and seduceth my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols. And I gave her time to repent, but she willeth not to repent of her fornications." And He goes on to speak of the deep things of Satan, and of the searching eyes which regard the reins and hearts of his professing people (Rev. ii. 18-29).

There is danger for all of us, lest we be seduced by the soft caresses of worldliness, and yield to specious flattery. Beneath the fairest words may lie the serpent's poison, as he excuses laxity of morals, doubt of Scripture, carelessness in habits of devotion and consecration. Let us beware, and putting these things away, let us seek the peace from God, with God, and of God.

MONDAY, September 11. 2 Kings x.

What an Iconoclast this Jehu was! He was the Mahomet of that idolatrous age. Before his strong hand the whole structure of Baal-worship received its death-blow. And as we meet the recurring name of Elijah in this chapter, connecting him with these events, we turn back to the story of Horeb, with its solemn words: "And it shall come to pass that him that escapeth from the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay; and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay." God has many nets, and if the fish escape one set of meshes, they will be caught by another—none shall finally escape.

It is an awful thought! Because men escape from one judgment, they count themselves secure; but they are greatly mistaken. He that escapeth from Hazael perishes by Jehu. If they do not die in the battle, they are frozen to death in the Arctic snows; or, if they escape these, they are set upon by the peasants and murdered in cold blood. How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, and trifle with such a God, provided with so many emissaries to perform his will?

There is one note of comfort, that those who escaped Jehu would be slain by Elisha. Now we are familiar with Elisha's ministry: he was gentle and beneficent; he would feed a hostile army at a banquet, and send them home to come no more against Israel. For him to slay means slaughter of another kind than Jehu's or Hazael's. It is killing by kindness, wounding with the wounds of a friend, heaping coals of fire on the hostile head, overcoming evil by good. And we gather that if one has passed through the severe discipline of Hazael and Jehu untouched, he may yet be saved by love and gentle kindness. A man must either bend or break; and if he bend under Elisha, he need not break under Jehu.

TUESDAY, September 12. 2 Kings xi.

A great revolution, splendidly planned and executed. Its inception and achievement did great credit to Jehoiada and his wife. There are times when we are justified in opposing constituted authority when it defies the law of God.

It is difficult not to place an allegorical interpretation on the narrative; it lends itself so naturally. In regeneration, the babe Christ enters the inner shrine of the spirit, which may aptly be compared to the house of the Lord. But too often his existence is hardly realized, and his kingly power is hardly felt. Athaliah is supreme, and reigns over the land. Worldliness, will-worship, and besetting sins have sway.

Then, a blessed movement originates deep in the nature. Some high-priestly thought summons the lax soul to new conceptions of responsibility and duty. And at last the king is brought from his obscurity and set on his rightful throne. Then, in that solemn moment, as the powers and faculties of the soul gather round to make obeisance and swear fealty, the old Athaliah crosses the inner temple, crying, Treason, Treason. Of course there is treason to her cursed rule when there is loyal allegiance to the king's son. There is no alternative; she must be slain, and Baal must be broken down, and the blood of Mattan must stain the temple floor. Oh, there are terrible deeds to be wrought in the secret life of some of us ere Jesus comes to his rightful and undisputed place. Well might heart and flesh faint, unless we remembered that He is not a babe, but the Almighty Redeemer, who waits to work in us his Father's good pleasure, making possible what He has taught us to desire.

WEDNESDAY, September 13. 2 Kings xii.

A striking contrast is here between the priests and the workpeople. The priests seem to have appropriated for their own use the free-will offerings brought by the people for the repair of the temple; whilst, after a change was made, and their receipts were limited to the guilt of sin-offerings, the masons, carpenters and builders did their work so honestly, that there was no need to reckon with them.

We can recall many repetitions of this experience from the pages of history and observation. But how can we account for this fact? Is it not because those who are perpetually dealing with sacred things, on behalf of others, become careless of their own religious needs, and account that there is no special reason why they should appropriate for themselves that of which they are the custodians? Besides, the very familiarity with the things of God may take some of the gloss off the silk.

It is often supposed that Christian ministers and workers must be good, because they are removed from the temptations which shadow other lives. But it is forgotten that the germs of temptation are so subtle that they float in on beams of light; and sufficient weight is not given to this further thought, that the very care of the vineyards of others makes us neglectful of our own. (See S. Sol. i. 6; Rom. ii. 21-23.)

THURSDAY, September 14. 2 Kings xiii.

Disaster on disaster! Poor Israel, why so slow in learning the lesson that God could not let them be as other nations, because He had chosen them for the lofty office of being the teachers of the world? Children of God, you cannot, you must not, be as others, because God has selected you to bear his name; and chastisement will follow on the heels of chastisement, till you are willing to put away your sins.

Yet amid these dark days, what gleams of light! The Lord hearkened (v. 4); the Lord gave Israel a Saviour (v. 5); the Lord was gracious to them, and had compassion, because of his covenant, neither cast He them from his presence as yet (v. 23); Jehoash took again the cities (v. 25). Even when the Lord chastens us sore, He does not give us over unto death. There is a Needs-be, but there is also a Thus-far-and-no-farther.

See how much Israel missed through the unbelief of her king: If only he had smitten five or six times, Syria had been consumed; but he was contented with striking three times only. Let us not ask small things of God, or be content with a partial deliverance. Nothing pleases Him more than to be greatly trusted. For those who ask the most, He will always go beyond. Strike on the ground, child of God! Claim absolute deliverance from besetting sin! Claim the absolute overthrow of the monster power which is blighting your work for God! Claim the salvation of your fatherland from the tyranny of drink, gambling, and impurity! Open the windows heavenward, strike within, and shoot without. And remember that unseen hands are resting upon thine, empowering and guiding.

FRIDAY, September 15. 2 Kings xiv.

We sometimes question why God should have allowed so much space in his Holy Word to be consumed by these narratives of war and murder. There are a few gleams of light, certainly, as in vv. 26, 27; but for the most part the leaden sky prevails, and the atmosphere is thick and murky. But we must remember that we are watching the chaos which precedes the cosmos, the foundation-laying which prepares for the edifice, the laying-on of the groundwork of colour, which has afterwards to be elaborated into the perfect picture. You are seeing some of God's world-making; do not be astonished!

> Not first the light, and afterward the dark;
> But first the dark, and afterwards the dawn.

And in your own heart, cannot you find close analogies? Yours has not been a straightforward progression, or a regular increment of good: but too much of this mingling of good and evil, this swaying backwards and forwards.

Take, for instance, the suggestion here offered. Quite often we have been elated with some ray of success. We have smitten Edom, and our heart has been lifted up. Then, in our pride, we have thought ourselves equal to some larger venture. Surely we could stand our ground in more perplexing circumstances, and win the fight under more adverse conditions; so we have sent our challenge to the king of Israel. Alas, we have meddled to our hurt, and our fall has dragged others in its wake! What bitter consequences we have reaped to ourselves! Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. Let us walk humbly and circumspectly, often asking to be kept out of the way of temptation, unless there is some special lesson to be learnt in its fires.

SATURDAY, September 16. 2 Kings xv.

At this lapse of time, Jeroboam's name is still frequently mentioned as having taught Israel to sin (vv. 9, 18, 24, 28). It was as though his name and evil counsels were in the mouths of many, as they connected the flaw in his foundations with the rents that threatened the utter ruin of his kingdom. The lesson is a very solemn one. If, in building up that young family of children, or that church, you make some mistake like Jeroboam's, who consulted expediency above principle, and made state-reasons preponderate over his loyalty to God, long after you have gone to your grave your children, or children's children, will reap what you have sown, and people who can remember will connect your inconsistency with their downfall.

This carrying of Israel into captivity had been predicted. It had often threatened them; but at last it came, and it was heart-breaking. To the Hebrew, it was a terrific ordeal to be torn from the land of his fathers; and these ten tribes never returned. Those who came back with Nehemiah and Ezra were mostly drawn from the tribe of Judah. Yet this terrible discipline was by God's good hand transformed into blessing for the world; for as they planted their synagogues in all the chief cities of the world, they began to act as salt and light, preparing the soil for the early preachers of the Cross. Many of their descendants also were included in the blessings of the Day of Pentecost, and were won by the Apostles as jewels for the Redeemer's crown. God moves in a mysterious way! Who would have supposed that this dispersion of the ten tribes would have results so far away, so important, and so closely associated with the supreme mission of the Jewish people?

Keeping Ourselves.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH, Sunderland.

ONE of the things which is an abomination to the Lord is a false balance (Prov. xi. 1); while, on the other hand, "a just weight and balance" are specially said to be "the Lord's" (Prov. xvi. 11). It is of blessed importance to recall and dwell upon the Lord's gracious promises of preservation, such as we get in Psalm cxxi.; but it is of practical importance that we should keep ourselves, for the water of God's power is meant to move the mill of our being in obedience to the Divine Word. And it is only as we allow the water of God's power to move the wheel of our obedience that we have the corn of blessing in the mill of our being.

I. A Sure Test. "If ye love Me, ye will keep my commandments" (John xiv. 15). We know we have the life of the Spirit, as the pulse of love is throbbing in us. The galvanism of profession may move the dead body of ceremonialism, but it requires the breath of holy obedience to demonstrate the reality of love. Sounding brass betrays itself on the counter of Heaven's truth, but sanctified lives ring out their worth in loving deeds.

II. An Assured Faith.—"Hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments," (1 John ii. 3). There are two words rendered "know" in John's first Epistle. One meaning, as in 1 John ii. 29 (the first word), that which has come within a person's observation; and the other word signifies a true relation between two parties, as the second "know" in 1 John ii. 29. One means to know about, and the other means to be personally acquainted with. Now the word "know" in 1 John ii. 3, is the latter one, and indicates the ground of assurance as to whether we are personally acquainted with the Lord Jesus. The knowledge of observation is the mere knowing about a certain thing, as when one knows about a feast that is to be given at a certain place; but the knowledge of obedience is the personal acquaintance with anything, as when one is invited to the feast, and partakes of it.

III. A Separated Walk.—"Keep himself unspotted from the world" (Jas. i. 27). Very often it is a vexed question as to what is the world? Generally speaking, the world is anything, or anyone, which takes the place of the Lord. It may be the gold coin of coveteousness, the evil root of bitterness, the tinsel of unnecessary apparel, the black heart of unbelief, the rock of error, the polluting hand of the flesh, the green eye of jealousy, the big head of pride, the tumour of conceit, the cancer of doubt, and the palsy of sloth. What ever it is, the man who is in the path of pure and undefiled religion keeps himself unspotted from it, as one would keep from a plague-stricken district.

IV. A Holy Charge. "If a man love Me, he will keep my words" (John xiv. 23). We can quite understand how the parent prizes the dying words of some beloved child. They are conned over, thought about, and spoken upon. They are treasured in the casket of the memory, and again and again they are brought out to be weighed. How much more should we ponder and prize the words of the Lord Jesus! They should be as a fire to warm us in coldness, as a spring to refresh us in weariness, as a spur to move us in sloth, as a rule to square us in life, as a magnet to attract us in prayer, as a cordial to soothe us in sorrow, and as a staff to stay us in trial.

V. A Faithful Service. "I have kept the faith" (2 Tim. iv. 7). Paul had faithfully traded with the pound of the Gospel. He had kept the treasure of the truth. He had watched the camp of the Church with holy diligence. He had been no hireling, for he had laboured incessantly night and day. There was no mere routine with him, for he had suffered for the Gospel, as his lacerated body testified; and he wept for the Gospel, as his tears evidenced. The slave Onesimus, the prayerful Epaphras, the physician Luke, the worldly Demas, the helpful Timothy, the praiseful Silas, the consecrated Barnabas, and the soldiers at Rome could all testify as to the truth of the Apostle's faithful service.

VI. A Safe Environment. "Keep yourselves in the love of God" (Jude xxi.). What the air is to the bird, and what the water is to the fish, the love of God is to the believer. It is the element in which we are to live and move. The word "environ" only occurs once in the Authorized Version of the Bible, and that is in Josh. vii. 9, although the same Hebrew word is translated "compass" in the previous chapter seven times. Joshua, in his prayer to Jehovah regarding the defeat of Israel at Ai, said the Canaanites would get to hear of it, and "environ" them round and cut them off. An adverse power would surround Israel to their detriment. The love of God is a power to surround us for our betterment, for it is a wall of fire to protect us from hatred, a hedge to keep away the robbers of sin, a fence to keep out the foxes of doubt, an element to keep us warm with sympathy, an atmosphere to make us pure in heart, and a sphere where evil cannot touch us.

VII. A Stimulating Promise. "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love" (John xv. 10). The promise of Christ gives us the crux of the whole situation. There is no royal road to any one of the blessings enumerated in the Bible but through obedience. This is the door through which we enter into the King's garden of delights. The key to unlock the treasure house of Christ's unlimited fulness is by keeping his commandments, for by that means the treasury is discovered to us for our use and enjoyment.

The Blessings of Sunshine.

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be?
Where then were the lovely flowers
That out in the fields and lanes we see
Refreshed by the summer showers?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be?
Where then were the rainbows bright,
That kindle the children's hearts with glee,
And gladden the traveller's sight?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be?
Where then were the fruits untold
That Autumn hangs on each laden tree,
With their tints of burnished gold?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be?
With no lark in the azure sky
To flood the world with its melody
From its circling course on high?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be,
When the heart is sore oppressed,
When we long from the cares of life to flee,
And would gladly be at rest?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be,
When the evening shadows fall,
With no sunset gleam over land or sea,
But a darkening gleam o'er all?

Oh, what must the world without sunshine be,
In those lands of heathen gloom,
With no gladsome song of victory
On the brink of the sombre tomb?

Oh, what would the world without sunshine be
That the Gospel message brings,
And the hope of a brighter world to be
On the Christian's pathway flings?

Oh, what will the heavenly sunshine be,
In the glorious realms of light,
In the House of God, by the angels trod,
With their robes of spotless white?

Clevedon, Somerset. Wm. Kitching.

No Sunday Concerts in Dundee.—At a meeting of the Recreation Grounds Committee of Dundee Town Council the subject of the holding of Sunday concerts in the public parks of the city was again under consideration. A petition from residents in the Magdalen Green District was submitted, strongly protesting against such entertainments being allowed, and after conversation the Committee unanimously decided not to allow any musical body, association, &c., to give musical performances in any of the parks on Sunday.

International S.S. Lessons.

September 17, 1899.

Power Through the Spirit.—Zech. iv. 1-14.

Golden Text.— Zech. iv. 4-6.

Lesson Connection.

YOU will remember that when the Jews had tired of trying to build their temple, God sent two messengers to encourage them on. One was an aged man. His name? We learned about his message last week. The other was a young man, and one of his messages is our lesson for to-day. It is just as true, taken as a message to us, as it was to the Jews.

Zechariah was probably born in Babylon. Find his father's and grandfather's names in ch. i. 1. His grandfather was one of the priests who came from Babylon with Zerubbabel (Neh. xii. 4, 16). Zechariah succeeded to the office, so was a priest as well as a prophet. About five months after the Jews had set to work again on their temple, God gave to Zechariah a series of eight visions, like living pictures passing through his mind, and each meant a message from God to help and strengthen the weary workers. In the morning the prophet told the people, and in Ezra vi. 14 we read that the people "prospered through the prophesying."

The Fifth Vision (Zech. iv. 1-14).

Verse 1. The prophet slept between the visions, and seems to be awakened for each fresh revelation.

Verse 2. Like the candlestick or lamp-stand made for the tabernacle (see Ex. xxv. 31). We know the exact shape of this from the figures on the arch of Titus in Rome, among which is a train of men carrying away the spoils of the temple and the seven-branched lamp-stand. (Show a picture of this.) Above the lamp-stand was a bowl, and a pipe from it to each lamp, a reservoir for the oil.

Verse 3. And on each side grew an olive tree, a branch hanging over, from which a golden pipe carried a constant supply of oil to the bowl, so the lamps would never go out.

Verse 5. It meant this: the candlestick, God's church in the world; the different lamps, individuals; the bowl, points to the Lord Jesus, through whom all life-giving and light-giving power flows (John i. 16); the olive-oil, the Holy Spirit, who will constantly supply all needs.

Verse 6. Perhaps some of the young builders were thinking they could do great things in their own strength; God teaches them they can do nothing without his Spirit.

Verse 7. In God's strength, the difficulties, like a great mountain, would disappear. What words of Jesus does this remind you of? (Matt. xxi. 21); the top-stone would be put on, and the temple finished. God removed the hindrances, and influenced the king's mind to help (Ezra vi. 15-18).

Verse 9. A definite promise, perhaps some of the people had despised Zerubbabel and said he would never get the temple finished. God says, he shall finish it, and what God says always comes true.

Verse 10. God uses the small things of the world to bring about his great glory. "Those seven" refer back to chap. iii. 9. Emblems of God's all-seeing power and ever watchfulness.

Verse 14. God's Holy Spirit, the source of all power, manifested in his witnesses (Rev. i. 4, 12; xi. 3, 4; 1 John ii. 20, 27; v. 7.

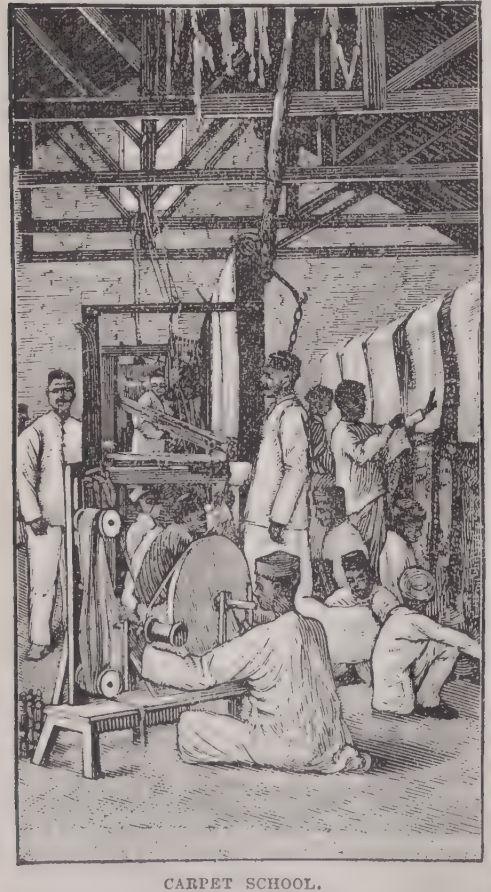
Application to Ourselves.

The Christian Church is Christ's golden candlestick. Each true Christian is one lamp, even though only a child, to shine for Jesus (Matt. v. 14-16), "Jesus bids us shine, &c." We cannot shine by ourselves, there must be a constant flowing in of God's Holy Spirit, like the oil into the lamps. When we feel dark and cold and our light gets dim, it is because some sin has stopped the Holy Spirit from flowing in. Even a weak little child, when filled with the Spirit, can overcome difficulties. God will use such to do great things for Him. Never be discouraged because you can only do a little for Jesus; do the little well, and the work will grow. Recall what Jesus said about little beginnings.

Illustrations.

The fire in "the Interpreter's House" in the "Pilgrim's Progress." The power of steam. In a factory the work was so slow when done by hand, such a change when steam-power was used. Facts from missionary work—how it grows, and the light shines from each convert.

Industrial Effort in India:



Uplifting the Depressed Classes.

By Mary and Margaret W. Leitch.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days."

WHEN the readers of The Christian contributed so generously for the relief of the starving people of India, they perhaps did not realize the great and far-reaching benefits resulting to that country from their liberality. Doubtless many of these gifts, coming from loving and praying hearts, represented much self-denial. It is evident that the Master is owning and blessing them in a very special way.

One example is the work in Ahmednagar, India. Among the various missionaries to whom relief funds were entrusted, the readers of The Christian will perhaps remember the name of Rev. James Smith, principal of the Ahmednagar College. He has been a devoted missionary of that station for twenty years. While supplying, with the relief funds received, food to the destitute and starving, he gave work to the able-bodied among them, thus preserving their self-respect. He was thus able to erect the buildings for the School of Industrial Arts, which is a technical training school; and also the buildings of the boarding department.

CARPET SCHOOL.

There are now 150 students in this industrial school, of whom ninety are boarders.

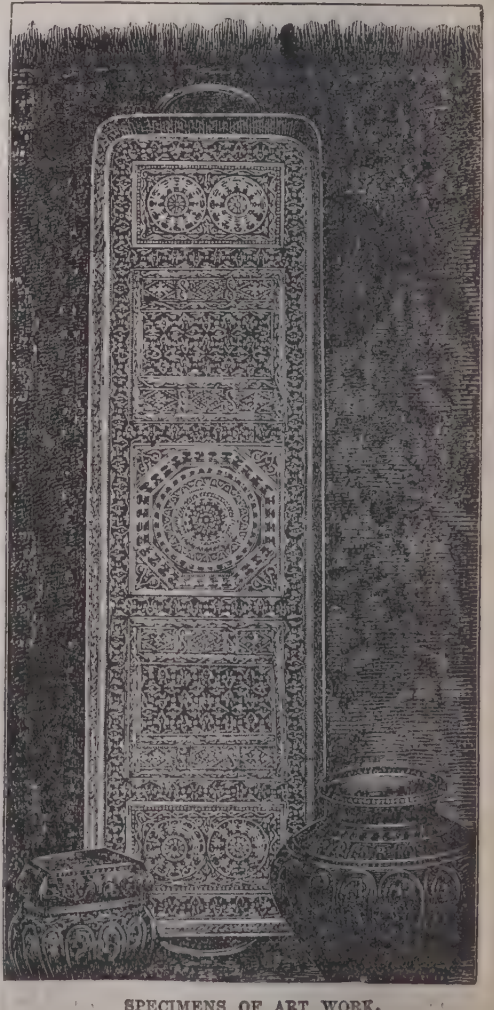
There are three courses of instruction in the school, viz., wood work, metal work, and rug-making. These engage interesting groups of students in the carpenter shop, students in drawing classes, students at work in the metal workers' department, students in the carpet school, students washing yarn previous to dyeing it, students reeling and winding yarn, &c.

A great contrast is noticeable between boys dressed as they were when entering the school and after a sojourn in the school. Training given under such conditions is good all round; it prepares the young people for the life that now is, while they are under instruction regarding eternal realities. And those engaged in the work are greatly encouraged.

DRAWING CLASS.

From a missionary point of view industrial training will help to meet the long-felt and urgent need of providing employment for the native converts, and especially for orphans.

It is a matter of frequent occurrence that a native embracing Christianity has to give up home, friends, and means of livelihood; and missionaries in India have felt the extreme difficulty of dealing with such cases and providing the convert with some suitable employment. The majority of the native Christians in Western India have thus far come from the depressed classes who in heathenism secured a living by rendering menial service to other castes. Much of this service was connected with idolatry, and all of it was of a degrading nature. Their perquisites, in return for this service, were the gleanings of the fields, the flesh and hides of the animals which had died of old age or disease, &c. No Christian could accept such service or live on such fare; hence the urgent need, long felt by the missionaries, of providing, especially for native Christian boys, such an industrial training as would enable them, later on, to secure a respectable livelihood.



In deciding upon the industries to be taught in this school, Mr. Smith wisely chose wood carving, metal work, rug and carpet making, for the following reasons: (1) These industries required only a small outlay for tools on the part of the workers, a dollar or so sufficing for a set of wood carvers' or metal workers' tools. The carpet and rug makers make their own looms. (2) These were industries which could, after being learned, be carried on by the pupils in

THEIR OWN VILLAGE HOMES.

On this latter point Mr. Smith writes:—"This prospect of opening branches in the villages is enlisting the enthusiasm of our people. They feel that it will not be necessary to leave home and friends in order to get work. As we intend to manage it, it will be one of the most simple things possible, and the whole family will be engaged in the work. It is work that is quite as well suited for women and girls as for boys and men (in fact the women are likely to be the most dexterous), so that the whole community may be earning something. One of the first six pupils taken into the school six months ago is now going to Mow to open a branch there. He has thoroughly learned the whole art of carpet-making, though he cannot dye. We are dyeing and sending the wool to him as well as the patterns. The pupils in that school will be famine orphans. Several of the boys whom I took in two months ago can earn their living already. Many of them will be able to do so in less than a year, although to fit themselves for master hands it will be necessary to spend three years at the business."

Mr. Smith continues:—"Our Christian people are enthusiatic in their appreciation of this school. We had our annual examination of mission agents here last week. They all came over in a body to see the workshops, &c. After I had explained the working of all the appliances and our plan to start a branch in every village where a trained workman could be found, they put forward an aged pastor to make a little speech. He began with, 'Well, Sahib, you are making it very difficult for us Christians to beg after this.' What could have been more beautiful and appropriate? His own son is in the matriculation class of my high school, and both father and son have asked that he be transferred to the industrial department; but although he has excellent mechanical ability and artistic taste I have refused so far, as I wish him to become a leader of a high type."

From a financial point of view the outlook is encouraging. The rate of pay for labour is low; materials for the several kinds of manufacture are readily obtainable, and the average

SPECIMENS OF ART WORK.

Hindoo (properly trained and controlled) makes a painstaking and efficient workman; while from inquiries made in India, and in England and America, it is found that there is a large field for goods such as those now being manufactured and at prices which should be remunerative. Mr. Smith writes:—"This is the beginning of the end for which I have worked these twenty long years. If I have the means to carry on this work for five years I hope to see our Christian community growing into an industrial people, self-respecting and self-supporting, instead of the awful swarm of paupers we now have. I have a staff of six instructors in the technical department, and have no difficulty in finding Christian boys who are ready to learn, but the homes of these boys are in the villages far from Ahmednagar. How am I to find the means to bring them in and keep them here, 100 at a time for years—(i.e., as soon as one lot of 100 goes out to take another lot of 100 more? It means an expenditure of £100 a year for scholarships (above what the boys can pay or earn), i.e., I need fifty scholarships of £5 each for the aid of famine orphans and poor Christians.

"I am already bankrupt. I have put my last rupee into the starting of the school, and have made a splendid start. I have received a promise of a grant in aid from the Government, but the Director of Public Instruction has just told me that no funds will be available this year. This is due to the fact that the plague is still eating up all the funds of the Bombay Government. Ten thousand persons died of it in Bombay city in March, twice as many as last year."

We feel sure that when the readers of The Christian know of the work already accomplished, and that only a small sum is yet required to bring it to completion, they will rejoice to contribute that amount, and thus become partners in the enterprise. Mr. Smith will gladly send a photo of the student aided, and an annual letter from that student to each contributor of a scholarship.

AN ENDORSEMENT FROM H.R.H. PRINCE ARTHUR, THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.

"It gives me great pleasure to subscribe to the Ahmednagar College with a view to assist its building funds and to enable it to extend its scope of usefulness. I consider that this college under the able administration of my friend the Rev. James Smith and his excellent staff of instructors is doing a great and good work to the great benefit of the inhabitants of Ahmednagar and the surrounding district. The large and steady increase in the number of pupils shows how much the education given in this college is appreciated by the natives of all denominations, creeds and castes. That to all is imparted a knowledge of our Bible and our Christian religion shows on what broad and tolerant lines such instruction is imparted, and this cannot fail to give a high moral tone to the school, a difficulty which is often found to be insurmountable in the government schools where no education is taught on religious subjects. I have personally visited this school when at Ahmednagar in 1887, and will always retain most pleasant recollections from my visit there. I hope that the enlargement of the college may not be delayed through want of funds, and that it will continue to flourish in the future and to extend its sphere of usefulness.

"Arthur, Lieut.-General
"Commander-in-Chief Bombay.
"Mahableshwar, May 18, 1888."

An Eternal Sabbath.—We are going to spend a Sabbath in eternity. The Christian will acquire as much of the Sabbath spirit as he can. And in proportion to a man's real piety in any age, he will be found to have been a diligent observer of the Sabbath.—Cecil.

Ritualistic Teaching.—The following is a quotation from "A Book for the Children of God," much in vogue among the Ritualists: "The Bible is the Book which God has given to his Church, and it belongs to the Church alone, and not to any dissenting sect; no one but a Catholic can safely read the Bible, and no Catholic can read it safely who does not read it in the Church's way."

THE LATE

Dr. William Wright.

THE Church of Christ was recently called upon to mourn the loss of one who, in a very special way, had long exercised a powerful influence in disseminating Gospel truth. The British and Foreign Bible Society needs no apologist, and those who administer its affairs are well known as men of parts and distinction, and also for their wide sympathies with Christian work throughout the world. If these things can be said of the Society's officers in general, they were emphatically applicable to the late Rev. William Wright, D.D., who for a long period of years occupied the post of editorial superintendent, and departed this life on July 31 last.

Dr. Wright was born in January, 1837, at Rathfriland, County Down, and educated for the Presbyterian ministry at Queen's College, Belfast, and at Geneva. Though, as a young preacher, popular among the churches, he declined to stay at home; and volunteered for what was at that time a difficult and somewhat dangerous post, that of a missionary at Damascus. In the ten years which he spent in that historic city, he acquired a knowledge of Arabic, and made a close study of the customs and physical characteristics of Palestine. The fruits of these observations have appeared in magazine articles illustrative of the times of the Bible, and in the series of Bible maps which he assisted in editing. Visits marked by adventure which he paid to Palmyra and Bashan form the subject of his deeply interesting book, "Palmyra and Zenobia" (Nelson).

From Photograph by Mr. Jas. Bacon, 81, Northumberland Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

It was in 1876 that Dr. Wright became editorial superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in succession to Canon R. B. Girdlestone. For twenty-three years, by interviews and correspondence with missionaries and other workers, he offered, on behalf of the Society, encouragement and help to translators and revisers of the Sacred Scriptures. All questions affecting the text, to be used in the execution of versions, were in his department. He did not himself make or examine translations; the Society's field was too polyglot to admit of that. His duty was rather to promote and foster translation work at the hands of the ripest and most devoted scholars. During his tenure of office 150 new versions of the Scriptures, in whole or part, were added to the Society's list; and all the great vernacular versions of India and China, and other countries, were subjected to a more or less thorough revision.

In 1890, Dr. Wright was the Bible Society's delegate to the Shanghai Conference, and took an important part in its discussions, with the end in view of uniting the large missionary body in China to undertake the preparation of a union Bible. Up till that time several versions had been in use in the same script or language; but joint committees were formed, representative of the different nationalities at work, to prepare versions in High Wenli, Easy Wenli, and Mandarin, and to further translation into the vernaculars of South China, and promote printing in raised characters for the blind. Some progress has been made in these directions; but, from its very nature, the realization of his plans must extend over a considerable period of time.

Dr. Wright edited for the Society an edition of "The Gospel in Many Tongues," being a specimen verse of Scripture—where possible, St. John iii. 16—in each of the Society's versions, and had but lately begun a revision of this booklet. He had also projected a history of versions. His literary work outside the Society was well known, and had a readable quality all its own. His books on the "Empire of the Hittites" and "The Brontës in Ireland" called forth some controversy and criticism. He also edited "The Illustrated Bible Treasury" for Messrs. Nelson and Sons. English and American scholars combined to make this a very useful manual. His subjects always lay very near him, and he had the gift of a vivid and racy style.

Two years ago Dr. Wright's health showed signs of weakness. The sudden death of his old friend and colleague, Rev. Geo. Wilson, in his presence, affected him deeply; and the long illness and death of his eldest son, Rev. W. D. Wright, told upon him visibly. He suffered much from an affection of the heart, and twice during 1898 he had to go to the Riviera for rest and change. The Committee of the Bible Society felt much anxiety about his condition; but, in spite of their urgency, he pursued his work with a brave and cheerful demeanour. His death, which took place, as already intimated, on July 31, was due to failure of the heart's action. He left a widow, three sons (one of whom is a minister in New Zealand), and four daughters.

These facts were kindly supplied to us by Rev. J. Gordon Watt, one of Dr. Wright's esteemed colleagues at the Bible House. The more nearly one knew Dr. Wright, the more was one compelled to esteem and love him. As a worshipper in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood, he gave strength to a good cause in South-East London. Rev. J. G. Train, pastor of the church, writing under a keen sense of bereavement, said:—

Devoted as he was to the great work of disseminating the Scriptures in many tongues, he rested not in the mere letter of the Word of God, but penetrated with keenest enjoyment to its spirit, and indeed rejoiced at God's Word "as one that findeth great spoil." Those of us who are accustomed to meet for prayer in the vestry before service on Sunday, will always recollect the remarkable simplicity and urgency and unction that characterized Dr. Wright's petitions. He prayed as a man who hungered for spiritual refreshment and for the forth-putting of Divine power; and when we gathered for public worship, all of you who ever observed him know there was no more reverent and receptive worshipper.

The September issue of The Bible Society Monthly Reporter bears eloquent testimony to the versatility, industry, and geniality of Dr. Wright. Mr. J. Bevan Braithwaite, chairman of the Editorial Sub-Committee of the Bible Society, writes :—

It was inevitable that his editorial work should grow rapidly; it was never heavier than during the last twelve months. In no previous year had so many versions been dealt with, and so many new languages added to the Society's list. To Dr. Wright this activity was a deep joy. It was an opportunity of which he failed not to take advantage.

I have been again and again especially impressed with the sound judgment, the admirable tact, the gentle firmness, the Christian wisdom and many-sidedness, the unruffled calmness and winning courtesy, displayed by Dr. Wright throughout his correspondence. His long experience enabled him to meet difficulties and anticipate objections which appeared at first insurmountable; and even when constrained to differ, his letters seldom, if ever, left any sting in the mind of his correspondents.

He delighted in showing kindness to all, and ever preferred to dwell upon the points of agreement rather than those of difference. But he was ever faithful to his own convictions. The breadth of his interests never disturbed his loyalty to his early faith. Living himself under law to Christ, and rejoicing in his own subjection to Him as his Lord and King, he presumed not to judge or begrudge the liberty to others.

God continue to give his Church and its societies and organizations men of humility and faith, men of charity and knowledge, men of prudence and enterprise! With these Dr. Wright was largely endowed, and for all that he was and did, God be praised and glorified.

Orchids: a Sad Story.

SOME time ago, an advertisement was inserted in our columns from a Mr. Craig, who wished to find customers for orchids. In answer thereto, a gentleman in Madeira ordered 100 orchids.

By a recent letter we are informed that Mr. Craig, whose family lived a long distance up the Essequibo River, started, in company with a black man, on a three-days' journey in order to procure the flowers. After two days absence from home he felt a severe pain in his knee, and, fearing it was blood-poisoning, he sent his companion to seek for help. The man, however, lost his way, and, after wandering a fortnight in the bush, came out very ill and almost starved to death. He was taken to the hospital, while Mrs. Craig sent other men in search of her husband. At length they found him dead in his hammock and by his side a paper imperfectly written, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

We give these painful details (though it was light at eventide) that the gentleman in Madeira may know why his order has not been executed.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE Central London Association is arranging for an important development of its educational work for the forthcoming winter. The Birkenhead Association has also made similar provision.

The work of the Rangoon Association is making steady headway under the guidance of Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, organising secretary of the English National Council, for work in Burma. Twenty new members were received at a recent election, and both European and Eurasian young men are being induced to frequent the rooms in increasing numbers. The Association has been promised a lease of three acres of land by the Government, upon favourable terms, for the purpose of building on the hills nearest to Rangoon a rest house for young fellows recovering from attacks of fever and other illness.

New Conditions in Western Africa.—The C.M.S. Gleaner calls attention to the great change which will be made in West Africa by the legislation of the last session of Parliament. The territories hitherto ruled by the Royal Niger Company will be taken over by the British Government. The first Governor of the Upper Niger district will be Colonel Lugard, well known as having administered Uganda under the Imperial British East Africa Company, and as having done somewhat similar work in Nyassaland. The consequences of the change to our mission are not easy to forecast. We cannot, however, omit to express our gratitude for the assistance frequently rendered by Sir George Taubman Goldie, the Governor under the Company.

The Negro in the South.

DURING six weeks of the month of March and April last, no less than twelve Negroes were lynched in the state of Georgia alone. Nine were shot by a company of masked men, who broke into the warehouse where they were confined on a charge of being concerned in the burning of some houses. The guards were overpowered; most of the poor creatures were fairly riddled with shot.

But the climax of a cruel barbarism, worthy of a cannibal people, was reached in the torture and burning of Samuel Hose, and the hanging of Elijah Strickland, a coloured preacher whose character was of the best.

Hose quarrelled with his master, Alfred Cranford, about his wages. His story is that his master in anger was about to shoot him, when he threw an axe which killed the white man, and he immediately made for the woods. Report had it that Hose not only killed his master, but also assaulted Mrs. Cranford. A detective sent to the spot by the coloured people of Chicago, has gathered evidence which goes to show that the latter charge was absolutely false. A vigorous search was made; the editor of the Atlanta Constitution offered 500dols. reward for his capture, and the journal incited the people to burn him when he should be caught. The details of the lynching are sickening in the extreme, but are given from the columns of the above-named paper in order that our readers may understand the moral depravity of people involved :—

NEWMAN, Ga., April 23 (Special).—Sam Hose, the Negro murderer of Alfred Cranford and the assailant of Cranford's wife, was burned at the stake, one mile and a quarter from this place, this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Fully 2,000 people surrounded the small sapling to which he was fastened and watched the flames eat away his flesh, saw his body mutilated by knives and witnessed the contortions of his body in his extreme agony.

Preparations for the execution were not necessarily elaborate, and it required only a few minutes to arrange to make Sam Hose pay the penalty of his crime. To the sapling Sam Hose was tied, and he watched the cool, determined men who went about arranging to burn him.

First he was made to remove his clothing, and when the flames began to eat into his body he was almost nude. Before the fire was lighted his left ear was severed from his body. Then his right ear was cut away. During this proceeding he uttered not a groan. Other portions of his body were mutilated by the knives of those who gathered about him; but he was not wounded to such an extent that he was not fully conscious, and could feel the excruciating pain. Oil was poured over the wood that was placed about him, and this was ignited.

The scene that followed is one that never will be forgotten by those who saw it, and while Sam Hose writhed and performed contortions in his agony, many of those present turned away from the sickening sight, and others could hardly look at it. Not a sound but the crackling of the flames broke the stillness of the place, and the situation grew more sickening as it proceeded.

The stake bent under the strains of the Negro in his agony, and his sufferings cannot be described, although he uttered not a sound. After his ears had been cut off he was asked about the crime, and then it was he made a full confession. At one juncture before the flames had begun to get in their work well, the fastenings that held him to the stake broke, and he fell forward partially out of the fire.

He writhed in agony and his sufferings can be imagined when it is said that several blood vessels burst during the contortions of his body. When he fell from the stake he was kicked back and the flames renewed. Then it was that the flames consumed his body and in a few minutes only a few bones and a small part of the body was all that was left of Sam Hose.

One of the most sickening sights of the day was the eagerness with which the people grabbed after souvenirs, and they almost fought over the ashes of the dead criminal. Large pieces of his flesh were carried away, and persons were seen walking through the streets carrying bones in their hands.

When all the larger bones, together with the flesh, had been carried away by the early-comers, others scraped in the ashes and for a great length of time a crowd was about the place scraping in the ashes. Not even the stake to which the Negro was tied when burned was left, but it was promptly chopped down and carried away as the largest souvenir of the burning.

Elijah Strickland was said to be implicated in the murder of Mr. Cranford. Report said that he had promised Hose 20dols. if he would kill his master. The detective, already referred to, however, could find no one who could produce any evidence on this point. Furthermore, Major Thomas, an ante-bellum slave-owner, upon whose plantation Strickland lived, pleaded for the man, whom he declared to be an honest and worthy fellow. But directly he had gone they proceeded to torture and hanging, despite the victim's constant reiteration of his innocence.

The report of the detective, which has been published in pamphlet form, contains the following statements :

The burning of Hose was fully premeditated. And it was not the irresponsible rabble that urged the burning, for it was openly advocated by some of the leading men of Palmetto. E. D. Sharkey, superintendent Atlanta Bagging Mills, was one of the most persistent advocates of the burning. He claimed that he saw Mrs. Cranford the day after the killing, and that she told him she was assaulted. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Cranford was unconscious at that time. He persistently told the story, and urged the burning of Sam as soon as caught.

John Haas, president of the Capitol Bank, was particularly prominent in advocating the burning. People doing business at his bank, and coming from Newman and Griffin, were urged to make an example of Sam by burning him.

W. A. Hemphill, president and business manager, and Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, contributed more to the burning than any other men and all other forces in Georgia. Through the columns of their paper they exaggerated every detail of the killing, invented and published inflammatory descriptions of a crime that was never committed, and by glaring headlines continually suggested the burning of the man when caught. They offered a reward of 500dols. blood-money for the capture of the fugitive, and during all the time of the man-hunt they never made one suggestion that the law should have its course. . . .

As soon as this was settled (the rendezvous) a special train was engaged as an excursion train, to take people to the burning. It was soon filled by the criers, who cried out, "Special train to Newman! All aboard for the burning." After this special moved out, another was made up to accommodate the late comers, and those who were at church. In this way more than 2,000 citizens of Atlanta were taken to the burning, while the Governor, with all the power of the State at his command, allowed all preparations for the burning to be made during ten hours of daylight, and did not turn his hand to prevent it.

Among the prominent men at the burning, and whose identity was disclosed to me, are William Pinton, Clair Owens, and William Potts, of Palmetto; W. W. Jackson and H. W. Jackson, of Newman; Peter Howson and T. Vaughan, of the same place; John Hazlett, Pierre St. Clair, and Thomas Lightfoot, of Griffin. R. J. Williams, ticket agent at Griffin, made up the special Central Georgia Railroad train and advertised the burning at Griffin, while B. F. Wyly and George Smith, of Atlanta, made up two special Atlanta and West Point Railroad trains. All of these gentlemen, of eminent respectability, could give the authorities valuable information about the burning if called upon.

Other Lands.

Notes from New York.

A FEW days ago St. Peter's Church, Westchester, was damaged by fire to the estimated extent of 100,000dols; and now Dr. Frank M. Clendenin, the Rector, states boldly to a newspaper reporter his conviction that the fire was the work of an incendiary, acting as an agent of persons belonging to the "broad church" party, as an act of revenge for his words and actions in connection with the recent ordination of Dr. Briggs by Bishop Potter. At the same time, the Rector says he does not for a moment attribute the act to any of the great leaders—"noble" leaders, he calls them—of the party in question. Dr. Clendenin refused to allow the ordination of Dr. Briggs to take place in the church, and took a very active part in the vigorous discussions caused by the Bishop's determination to admit the doctor to the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church. St. Peter's was regarded as an "old" church, it having been built long enough ago to have received its Communion service as a gift from Queen Anne of England.

Accounts are also to hand of the burning of the barn at Dr. Clendenin's residence at Chappaqua, yesterday morning. Miss Clendenin is a daughter of the late Horace Greeley, and their residence at Chappaqua is on the old Greeley estate. That this fire was incendiary there is no room for doubt. The smell of kerosene was strong about the place hours after the the blaze was put out, and shingles that had not been burned were still saturated with it. The bottle which had contained the supply, brought by the Rector's enemy or enemies, was found not far from the barn, and still had kerosene in it. Whether Dr. Clendenin is right or wrong in his convictions as to the perpetrators of these outrages, the occurrences themselves will not fail to have a very important bearing upon the fierce battle which has been brought into the Protestant Episcopal Church by Dr. Briggs.

A despatch from Parkersburg, West Virginia, mentions a somewhat objectionable form of energy put forth a few days ago with a good purpose in view. It seems that the citizens of Flemington, Taylor County, in that State, finding themselves unable legally to rid themselves of the "speak easy," or illicit drinkshop nuisance, have organized a committee whose duty it is to burn down these establishments. The committee began operations last Wednesday night, and the people in the house destroyed barely escaped with their lives. The destruction of the second establishment occurred two days later. Both buildings had been thoroughly saturated with kerosene, and next to no effort was made by anyone to extinguish the flames. This decidedly lurid despatch concludes with the laconic statement:—"It has always been a prohibition town, and the old citizens will not allow the new element to change the order of things without a protest." Some of your British readers will probably consider the word "protest" rather a mild term to use under the circumstances. ROGER MARTIN.

August 21.

Seamen at Port Elizabeth.

IN a recent issue we drew attention to the fact that Mr. E. Nelson Booth, the missionary of the Port Elizabeth Seamen's Institute and Mission, was now in London on a finance tour. Later particulars to hand intimate that the new Seamen's Institute for that port (the Liverpool of South Africa), is fast approaching completion, and the committee are endeavouring to arrange for it to be opened in October.

The total cost of the building is £4,100 of which over £2,000 has been raised locally. A balance of £500 is required to enable the committee to open the building free of debt. The Mission is entirely unsectarian, and managed by a representative committee of local gentlemen, and one minister of each denomination. The London address of the Mission is—care of Messrs. Davis and Soper, 54, St. Mary Axe, E.C.

The Northfield Conference.

MOODY CHAPEL OPENED.

THE most successful in every sense of the Northfield Conferences closed last week. The attendance throughout was so large that plans are under consideration for the erection of new and extensive premises for the entertainment of guests next year. The teaching throughout was of a very high order, and the resultant influence cannot help but be under the blessing of God very widespread.

The new chapel at Mount Hermon, across the Connecticut, was formally opened on Wednesday, August 16. The building is of Northfield granite, situated in a commanding position on what Mr. Moody formerly called Temptation Rock. He is said to have given it that name, thinking that some one might be tempted to build a chapel there for the Mount Hermon school. Rev. F. B. Meyer and Henry M. Moore (Boston) conceived the plan of raising a fund of 300,000dols, half in Great Britain and half in America, to be presented to Mr. Moody for a chapel building when he was sixty years old. This was done, and 10,000dols additional has since been raised, as the building is larger and better than the original plans suggested. A bronze tablet in the vestibule says: "This chapel was erected by the united contributions of Christian friends in Great Britain and the United States for the glory of God and to be a perpetual witness to their unity in the service of Christ."

More than 10,000 persons were present at the opening. Mr. Moody did not attend the services, fearing, doubtless, that something might be said regarding the man whose advancing years suggested the building. Flags representing England and America were stretched across the platform, and ferns and goldenrod were freely used in decorating the desk. The building, inside and outside, is beautiful, well worthy of Him for whose sake it was erected. Mr. Moore presided, and addresses were made by Mr. Meyer, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, and Dr. A. T. Pierson. The fine organ in the chapel was given by two sisters in New York, whose names were not made public, and one of them gave the hymn books for the use of the students.

As the building is not completed and free from debt, it could not be dedicated then. One friend has offered a clock for the tower, and another a bell. This will make it necessary to raise the tower fifty feet, costing about 7,500dols. additional. No offering was taken, the simple announcement being made that any one desiring to help to complete the building might have an opportunity of doing so.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn left Northfield for Wenona, where he will speak at the largely attended summer gathering of Presbyterians of the Middle States. Rev. Campbell Morgan remained at Northfield to deliver a series of post conference addresses in the Congregational Church. He gave eight morning addresses on "The Spirit of God," and seven in the evenings on "The Table Talk of the Son of Man," and also preached twice on Sunday. During September and October he is visiting many of the large American cities. Mr. Meyer hurried back home in order to attend the Blankenburg Conference.

The Evangelical Church at Monaco.

PASTOR EMIL WETTSTEIN, late Chaplain of the Army in Berlin, now working at Monaco, the stronghold of Roman Catholicism and of the Devil, in the South of France, has organized an International Evangelical Society, with the object of enabling Protestant residents in general to attend a regular place of worship, and to hear the Word preached in French, English and German. In order to effectuate this, the building of a little wooden church is deemed necessary. There are about 100 Protestant families known to Pastor Wettstein.

The number of persons employed in the forty-five hotels of Monaco amounts to hundreds, and about half of the visitors are Protestants. When Countess Schimmelmann, on her mission tour to seamen, passed through Monaco, she could not get a single room to speak in. Persons willing to assist in the realization of this proposal may address: Pastor Wettstein-Barth, Villa "Notre Pella," Saint-Jean Beaulieu-s-M., France.

Prisons in America.—I.

BY MR. T. M. WINTLE.

ONE of the burning questions in every nation is, "How to keep pace with the great army of criminals," who are increasing so rapidly as to become a menace to society, and an alarm alike to the millionaire in his mansion, and to the peasant in his cottage home.

Levy-Bruhl believes that crime is hereditary, and says that "the seeds of the murderer and thief are laid before birth." I am not prepared to accept this theory as an unerring rule, though I have met many cases that go to corroborate it. But while there is a diversity of opinion as to the causes which make a man a criminal, we all agree that crime is a disease within the body politic, and should be cured, if possible; and, if not possible to eradicate it, we should do all in our power to lessen it.

The United States are amongst the first to make a genuine attempt to depart from the old-time method of dealing with the criminal classes by severe sentences and degrading treatment; and we look on with the keenest interest to see the result of these reforms. For years past criminals have increased rapidly in the States, which is proved by the following extracts from Government returns. The prison commissioners of the State of Georgia say: "The increase in the number of convicts of both races has greatly outstripped the increase in the State population. The records in this department show that in 1870 there were only 385 convicts in the penitentiaries, or a proportion of one to 3,075 of the population; while at the present time there are 2,238, or a proportion of one to 800. Of the 2,238 convicts in the State penitentiaries on December 31, 1898, 1,636 were between the ages of fourteen and twenty-six, 399 are serving life sentences for murder, and 173 for assaults upon women. Besides this large number of convicts in the state prison, there are twenty-five chain gangs, or misdemeanour convict camps, with a population in round numbers of 2,000." In North Carolina the within the last three years, and there were received during the year, into Raleigh Penitentiary alone, 137 convicts for murder, eighty-four for manslaughter, and eighty-nine for assaults upon women. Other States report increase in the number of criminals, and the increase of murder has become alarming. Mr. Moody stated the other day at Chicago that 38,000 murders had been committed in the United States during the last four years; while in England and Wales, during the same period, only 500.

PRISON POPULATION HAS NEARLY TREBLED

It is argued by the advocates of prison reform that this increase in crime proves that vindictive sentences and severe punishment should give place to more kind and humane treatment. At every prison and penitentiary we were courteously received, and the officials were ever ready to show us over, and explain every detail of the prison régime and to discuss prison reform. Without exception, the conviction of all was that the most effective way to deal with, and lessen crime, was to treat the prisoners with humanity.

Mr. Thos. B. Russell, the genial and kind-hearted warden of Raleigh State Prison, said to us:—"While I recognise that this is a penitentiary, it has been my purpose to make it as much a reformatory as possible."

Mr. Ernest C. Marshall, Commissioner of Institutions, Boston, in his second report on prisons, says:—"Reformation, rather than punishment, should be the spirit of an institution of this kind. A man's better nature should be stimulated. He should be encouraged to believe that there is a hopeful future before him; that all is not lost, but that the State is desirous primarily of making him a better man rather than punishing him for his offence. We have departed far and entirely from the time when the first thought for convicts was punishment, and it is very desirable that these men should be encouraged in the hope that the State will assist in every way toward making their future a useful and honourable one. It is my purpose," he said, "to encourage this thought, not only for the good of the State, but also for the amelioration of the condition of the prisoners, and for their reformation. It seems," he said, "advisable that a departure from old-time methods should take place, and that the condition of the convicts should be made as pleasant as possible, compatible with their sentences for the crimes they have committed. I believe that these men are confined for the good of the public, and it is more essential to that good that they should be reformed than that they should be punished; and, while recognising that the men in these institutions are law-breakers, and that they are put away for the good of the community, I propose to do all in my power to encourage them to live lives that will be better for themselves and of benefit to the community."

I quote Mr. Marshall at some length, because he has given years of careful study to the question, and has, at the request of his Government, travelled extensively, making inquiries, and has visited the principal prisons and penal settlements in Europe. He expresses the views generally held by prison officials in America.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

GREAT progress has been made towards the achievement of the object of this institution. The first building is now finished, and called the "Administration Block." It will be used as a residence for the medical and other officers, store rooms, &c. An attendants' cottage has also been completed, and already some are out studying the language, in order that they may be ready for work when the Hospital is opened. Two pavilions are in course of erection, each to accommodate twenty patients, and it is hoped that these will be ready for occupation by the end of the summer.

Everything is being done in accordance with the most scientific methods for the treatment of the insane, and at the same time with all the attention to strict economy which long experience can give. Mr. Waldmeier, writes that they already have many applications, and that patients themselves are coming and asking to be admitted. He says that sometimes it is heartrending to have to refuse admission until the buildings are ready. Everything is being hurried forward as quickly as possible, but Eastern dilatoriness has to be contended with, and that needs great patience and tact to overcome.

The committee have had the satisfaction of paying thier way, and hopes to be able, by the kindness of friends, to continue to go forward free of debt. They desire to thank all who have so generously come forward with donations, and especially those who have promised annual subscriptions. We hope that, later on, when the prejudice of the rich natives wears off, they will send their patients, and pay well for them, which will, in a measure, help the poor ones. Efforts will be made to secure support of this kind. It is estimated that the annual cost of each patient will be, roughly speaking, £25, and the expenditure for all purposes will be about £1,500 per annum.

Further information may be had from the secretary, Mr. Francis C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

Buenos Aires.—Just a year ago a young married couple, Mr. and Mrs. Fellowes, who had been members of the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, N., went out to Buenos Aires, expecting to support themselves by their business abilities, and to live and preach Christ to those around them. In a letter recently to hand, Mr. Fellowes says:—"On Sunday mornings we visit the ships. There are between 300 and 400 sailors in port every week end. In the afternoon we visit the hospital, where we meet most distressing cases. Many of the men are British subjects, without a friend in this immoral land. All Gospel tracts find ready readers among these cases, and for the sailors tracts in any language will be a great blessing."

(1150)

The Spezia Mission.

TOO long, alas! has poor Italy slumbered in Papal stupefaction! The withering blight of Romanism can be clearly seen on every side in this land, where the Papacy has had sway for many centuries. But He who called Lazarus forth from death has spoken a similar mandate to Italy, and already his followers are undoing the grave-clothes that she may go free. What is wanted, is not an anti-Papal crusade, but simple, direct, and positive Gospel testimony and Christ-like work.

If some of the thousands of English Christians, who tour to Rome and other Italian cities every year, would call at Spezia (on the coast, about fifty miles S.E. of Genoa), they would not only see what beauty Nature has given to that large sea-side town, but also some of the beauty of grace—"the beauty of the Lord our God."

The Spezia Mission is not yet forty years old; but its record is one of believing prayer and Divine success. Said a visitor to the venerable founder—Rev. Edward Clarke—"A thousand children in your Bible day schools!" "Yes, a thousand—children of professed Roman Catholics." "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." These children are not only instructed in secular studies, but also in Bible truth, besides being taught to pray direct to God the Father without reference to the "Blessed Virgin."

Let the reader fully grasp this one fact alone, and then ask what must be the effect of this continual stream of young and enlightened Italian life flowing out in all directions. Thank God, the Spezia Mission has something more than conjectural fruit or "estimates." You may see here teachers who were once scholars in the schools.

"That good woman you have just shaken hands with," said Rev. H. H. Pullen to the writer, one morning as we left one of the schools, "is a heroine. She was a Roman Catholic, but God used us to bring her into the light. She had great difficulties and much persecution, but has proved steadfast. Some time ago they tried to steal her back again, and made her a tempting financial offer; but she indignantly REFUSED THE PRIESTLY BAIT."

Interesting and wonderful are the stories which can be told of this Mission, which is doing a truly grand work for Italy. Go to their headquarters in Spezia, the "Casa Alberto," on a Sunday morning, and see the audience which assembles there to hear the simple and faithful preaching of the two brethren above-mentioned. Don't be surprised to see some, as they come in, cross themselves. It is as natural to an Italian as to take off his hat. But just watch him as he takes his seat, and looks round in utter amazement to find the place devoid of "altar," "crucifix," and image.

Aye, and the interest and amazement deepen and intensify as he listens, perhaps for the first time in his life, to the simple and glorious truth of salvation through "Jesus only." This has been repeated again and again, and many are the trophies of grace and the seals of approval God has graciously given to this work. Let us rejoice in it, and pray for it. A thousand children in the Bible day schools, besides the Sunday schools! The Gospel is preached at upwards of thirty stations. Tracts and Gospels are given to those who never handled a Bible! Ships of all nations entering the great bay are visited by the missionaries. Thirty little Italian girls—orphans—are housed, fed, homed, in the orphanage close by.

But pastors, Bible class leaders, and Christian workers generally, would do well to arrange for an address at some week-night service, or on Sunday, or, better still, a lantern lecture by the co-director, Rev. H. H. Pullen, who is expected in England about the end of September. In these days, when Rome is bidding high for England, we cannot do better than see what she has done, and failed to do, for other lands like Italy. Mr. Pullen is a most acceptable speaker, and his story is one of the most charming chapters in modern missionary enterprise.

A Visitor.

Work in Westphalia.

AN interesting piece of mission work was begun six years ago by a German lady who had been trained at Mildmay. The town in which she works is called Bochum, in the centre of a large local district of Westphalia, and has about 70,000 inhabitants, of whom the greatest part are miners.

Deaconess Zeller (that is her name) began at first alone among the women and girls; now she has several helpers, who are also deaconesses, and who go about visiting the poor and nursing the sick. There is also a domestic agency connected with the work; and religious books are sold. The chief agency of evangelistic effort is found in the meetings, which are held twice during the week as well as on Sundays. There is a goodly attendance of men at these; and there have been a number of conversions, those that have accepted Christ testifying by their lives that by the grace of God they have been made "new creatures."

Unfortunately, the meeting-room has proved too small for the need; hence a new building has had to be erected, in which, it is hoped, the work will be considerably extended. The expenditure has greatly exceeded the estimated cost, so this need is laid before the Christian public for their prayerful assistance. The address of Sister Zeller, is—Bethel, Bochum, Westfalen, Germany.

Obituary.

MR. TALBOT CROSBIE.

ON Monday, the 4th inst., at the advanced age of eighty-two, Mr. Talbot Crosbie, of Ardfert Abbey, died in great peace. For forty years or more he has been an earnest witness and worker for Christ.

MRS. AGNES FLETCHER.

On August 23, at her residence, Woodville Terrace, Gravesend, Mrs. Agnes Fletcher (née Eversfield) entered into rest. She had resided in Gravesend during a long life, and was an earnest and faithful worker in connection with the parish church of that town. Though frail in body, she delighted to spend her time and substance in ministering to the bodily and spiritual needs of the poor. The last year of her life was passed in intense suffering, but she was kept calmly trusting in God and patiently waiting the home-call.

A. E. D.

REV. T. H. WHITAMORE.

In the death of Rev. T. H. Whitamore, who died a few days ago, Wesleyan Methodism has lost a highly honoured and esteemed minister. He had been confined to bed about a month. It was at first thought he was suffering from a breakdown of the nervous system. The specialist who was called in on Friday week, however, discovered that he was suffering from a tumour on the brain, and pronounced the case hopeless. His state of mind during his illness has been a great comfort to the members of his family. He bore witness to a most vivid sense of the Divine presence. All before him seemed bright indeed, and as though he were going to glory without any painful consciousness of death. Mr. Whitamore was appointed to the Rochdale (Union Street) Circuit by the recent Conference, and in consequence of his death the President may be called upon to exercise his power of disturbing the arrangements for one or two other circuits.

The United Temperance Gazette for September is an interesting number, well illustrated. In addition to full reports of National Temperance Week, there is a biography of the late lamented Dr. Norman Kerr, and some "Personal Recollections" of the veteran, Dr. Dawson Burns. We may see the man in the boy as we read the following extract:—"When, as a boy of ten years of age, I signed the pledge on February 12, 1839, I became imbued with that controversial spirit in which the early advocates moved and had their temperance being. From the outset I strove to master both sides of the temperance question; for it is as true in ethics as in law, that he who does not understand his opponent's case does not fully understand his own. It thus happened that in 1842 or 1843, I wrote an imaginary discussion, in which the interlocutors bore the names of "Aquarius" and "Anacreon." This manuscript of ninety-four pages, including an Appendix, I still retain."

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

"Uncle Tom's Cots."

SOME of you are anxious to know how little Hannah is getting on, and what progress she is making towards recovery. Poor little darling! I am sorry to say she is not yet able to get on to her feet, even by the use of crutches, but is still lying patiently on her back, eagerly looking forward to the time when, like other children, she will be able to run down to the beach and dig and frolic in the sea. However, the doctor says that Hannah is doing well, and he, too, is still very hopeful as to her recovery, only it is a work of time. I am delighted to say that since I saw her, about six months ago, she has got quite plump and rosy, and her father's heart leaped for joy the other day when he called at the Home at Southend and saw how his little girl had improved in appearance since his previous visit.

Many of you have been very kind to Hannah, and she is so grateful to you. You would be amused to see her nursing a beautiful doll which one of Uncle Tom's nieces sent her some weeks ago. Dollie is taken to bed, and kissed, and loved, and bandaged, and put into splints, and is a lasting pleasure to the little sufferer.

I hope that in the course of the next few months Hannah will make rapid progress, and that it will not be long before she will be strong enough to walk about, and to some extent take part in the enjoyments of other little girls of her own age.

But, you know, you have very kindly supplied the funds for the maintenance of two cots; and I fear you have heard nothing about the little occupant of the other bed.

LITTLE ROSY

is a bright child of eleven years of age, whose home is in the East End of London. Her father is a white-smith, her mother is dead. Two years ago she had a fall which resulted in hip disease. She has four terrible wounds which require constant attention and careful dressing. She has been for sixteen weeks in splints at the seaside, and now occupies the second of Uncle Tom's cots. She has been getting on remark-ably well, and is now in one splint, and can get about on crutches. The matron says that it is difficult to keep her from rolling and climbing about like other children; but she has to be watched, so that she may not fall and further injure herself. The doctor hopes that with a prolonged stay in the home she also may be able to run about, and, with great care, that she may be permanently cured.

I rejoice that so many of the young readers of The Christian have interested themselves in these two cases. They will always look back with joy because they took part in the effort to restore two little crippled girls, and feel that in so doing they were walking in the steps of Jesus Christ. One little girl only last week sent a contribution of 5s. towards the cots. She says:—"I notice the list of subscriptions has been very short lately." But the fact is, you have subscribed what was thought to be sufficient for the two girls to remain at the home until they were cured, and your generosity was so great that you were asked not to send more!

However, it may be necessary to further prolong the stay at the Home for both little girls, in which case I know you will gladly supply the funds for this purpose. But in this event I will write you again by and by. I will only add that if any of you should go to Southend-on-Sea and wish to see Hannah and Rosy, you will find them in the Ragged School Union Home, on the sea-front at Southchurch Beach. The secretary of the R.S.U. is Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C.

F. T. Watt.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Vicarage Street Hall, Yeovil, to Sept. 8; Dersingham, Norfolk, Sept. 24-26; Boys' Brigade Mission, Bolton, Sept. 30-Oct. 6; Mr. W. Tye, caravan at Framlingham; Mr. Chas. Harrison, with caravan, Copthorne, Crawley Down, to Sept. 11; Mr. E. P. Rowe, Wickham Bishop, near Witham; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Aspley Guise, Bedfordshire; Mr. Frank McLaine and Mr. W. Drake, with caravan, Lingfield, from Sept. 6; Mr. Hutchison, Powerscourt, co. Wicklow, to Sept. 9; Shifnal, Sept. 12-18; King's Cross, Sept. 15. The Annual Meetings for Reports of Seaside Work, will be held on October 5, St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, 3 and 6.30.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending September 16.

Sun., Sept.	10	Mark xiv. 46-59	Thurs., Sept.	14	Mark xv. 33-47
Mon., "	11	" xiv. 60-72	Fri., "	15	" xvi. 1-20
Tues., "	12	" xv. 1-15	Sat., "	16	2 Chron. i. 1-12
Wed., "	13	" xv. 16-32

Broken Shells upon the Shore.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

Once alive, and whole, and fair,
Clinging to the rocks, or hiding
In the tiny caverns, where
They had safe and sure abiding.
But, alas, they loosed, to mingle
With the rough and rolling shingle,
Now they lie along the shore,
Broken shells and nothing more!

Once alive, and whole, and fair,
Clinging to the rock and hiding
In God's love, our world was where
It had safe and sure abiding.
But alas, it fell, and broke
Finds the word by God first spoken
True, for the fair world that fell
Is to-day a broken shell!

There are broken lives I find
Scattered on these shores of sorrow—
Lives of beauty, soul and mind;
But as I their history follow,
They have left the truth to mingle
With earth's dead and tossing shingle:
In an evil hour they fell,
Fair ones, now a broken shell.

There are broken hearts that lie
Shattered on the shores of pleasure;
Jesus, Helping One, pass by,
Raise these relics of past treasure.
On the shores of crystal gladness,
Yonder, are no signs of sadness;
Nothing broken there to tell
Life was once a broken shell.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 192).

Complete the following texts, giving chapter and verse.

1. Ye know not what hour (Matt. xxiii.-xxvi.).
2. Watch ye, stand fast (1 Cor. xiv.-xvi.).
3. Be watchful (Rev. i.-v.).
4. Ye know not when the time is (Mark x.-xv.).
5. Be vigilant (1 Peter iv.-end).
6. Ye know neither the day nor the hour (Matt. xxiii.-xxvi.).
7. Who commanded us to watch, and why? (Mark xii.-xiv.).
8. What was the watchman's duty? (Ezekiel xxxi.-xxxv.).
9. What was the watchman's reply to the question, "What of the night?" (Isa. xviii.-xxii.).
10. Why were watchmen set on the walls? (Isa. lx.-lxv.).
11. When would the watchman wake in vain? (Psalm cxx.-cxxviii.).
12. Who was told to "watch and pray," and why? (Mark xiv.-xx.).

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen, any six; under seventeen, any nine.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 191).

Hidden Text.

1.	Be	(Phil. ii. 5).
2.	Thou	(Ps. xxiii. 4).
3.	Faithful	(Rev. iii. 14).
4.	Unto	(Isa. xxxiii. 21).
5.	Death,	(1 Cor. xv. 55).
6.	And	(2 Cor. iii. 4).
7.	I	(Matt. xxviii. 20).
8.	Will	(John xiv. 18).
9.	Give	(2 Thess. v. 18).
10.	Thee	(2 Cor. xii. 9).
11.	A	(John xiv. 2).
12.	Crown	(1 Pet. v. 4).
13.	Of	(Ps. xxxvii. 39).
14.	Life.	(John xi. 25).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Jennie Almond, Violet Ashworth*, Dora, Ernest and Ralph Aldwinckle.
B—Corbet Browne*, Nellie Buck, Ella Berryman, Evelyn and Dorothy Barrett, Clara Barnes, Gordon, May and Daisy Bligh, Phyllis Boyd, Violet Braun, Edith Banks, Esther Bobroff, Leah, Esther* and Rachel Blumenthal.
C—Ida, Mabel and Edith* Cole, Edie Chevalier, Elizabeth Clarence, Kitty Cope*, Gladys Clark, Mary Coward, Eleanor Chance, Lydia Cleary, Grace Charlk, Rodia Constantinides, George Cary.
D—Mabel De Rusett*, Pelognia Daws, Nellie Dowsett*, Ruth Dawson, Stanley Drew*.
F—Mabel and Vincent Fleet, Francis Field, Sarah Finkelstein.
G—M. Gover, Kenneth and Constance* Gabbett, Kathleen and Irene Gough, Esther* and Rose* Goodman, Elizabeth Gerechter, Clarice and Bertie Gale.
H—Florence Hoyte, Claude Hutchence, Hetty Hill*, Jennie Holmes*, Elizabeth and Mary Hooper, Gertie Hayward, Evelyn* and Dorothy Hewer, Nellie Hatchett, Willie Hooper, Walter and Beatrice Harland, Beatrice Hastings.
I—Nellie Irving*, Alice Ingberg.
J—Emily Jones.
K—Nellie Keeley, Gertie Krambach.
L—Gertrude Lambert, Arthur Llewellyn*, Blanche Lindup*, Henry, Edward, May and Sydney Law, Annie Lipschitz, Annie and Mary Levine.
M—Marie Meek, Mabel Morris, Arthur, O. L., Lewis and Grace Morice, Mabelle Mounstephen, Margie Marston, Emily Maddox*, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin.
N—Amy and Maude Nottage, J., H. and Mary Neligan, Leah and Dora Niels.
P—Lilian Pearson, Lizzie Pratt, Gladys and Ethel Palmer, Louie W., and M. Penny, Winnie Page, Ruth Pledger* Hattie*, Mildred* and Evelyn Peters, Kathleen Pincott, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry, Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Alice Palmer, Daisy Pym, Margherita Perlmann, Mary Plumb, Walter, Katie* and Leonard Picknell.
R—Ethel Rowe, Nora Read, Gordon Remington*, Marion Richards*, Maud Rosenberg*, Alice Reid.
S—Douglas and Kathleen Shepherd*, Fanny Stileman, W. R. Sadler, Laura Stauden*, Annie Shelley, Douglas Stevens, Amy Stileman*, Betty Stocks*, Flora Simmons*, Florence Smith, Lily Stanley, Enid Southwell, Mary Sowden, Mary Seed*, Cicely Sherbrooke, Lizzie Simons.
T—Theodora Thorn, Olive Taylor*, Naomi Torff, Rebecca and Rachel Tuskinsky.
V—Kenneth Vining, May and Edwin Vickers.
W—Louise and Joanna Wolnitzer, George, Annie and Lucy Willis, Sydney Wisdom, Dorothy White, F.* and Madge Wilson, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright. Douglas Wilkinson, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Agatha Ward, James Wood, Winifred Wise*, Tom Walker, Sarah Wood*, Robert and Thomas Weddell.
Y—Gladys Young.

No. 190.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Irene Ashdowne*, William Aston, Enderby Anderson, Percy Allen, Maggie Arres-Mather, John Adams.
B—Gladys Bartlett, Maggie and Charlie Banks, Lilian Butler, Evelyn, Dorothy, Maud and Sylvia Barrett, Dorothy Berry, Massy and Allen Baker, Catherine Barber, Lily Boxer, Louis Berthé, Ashley Bowker*, Eva Browne*, Ella Berryman, James Barker*, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Cecil and Mabel Bailey, Leonard, Corbet and Lindsay Browne, Gordon and Stanley Boxer, Mary Bryant, Hannah Bridgman, Mabel Birney, Gladys, Godfrey, Edward, Dorothy and Ernest Bates, Susette* and Mary* Beck.
C—Violet and Katherine Cawston, Walter*, Maggie* and Jessie* Carter, Alice Crang, Alice Cady, Duncan Campbell*, Oscar Cross, John* and David Colville, Dorothy Cooper, Ethel Craigie, George Crawford, Katie Clark, Beryl Calvert, Cicely Craven, Flavelle Caldwell, Bessie Cheale*, Dorothy Clarke.
D—Catherine and Agnes Darke, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke, William Dilly, Vera Dickinson, Violet and Mai Davidson, Marie Denizot, Nellie Dowsett*, Ruth Dawson, Kate DeRusett*, Violet Dodsworth, Ralph and D. Daintree, Violet, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Esther and Jean Dickson.
E—Muriel Edwards*, Miriam and Edwin Ecroyd.
F—F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Gwendoline Firth, Hyacinth Fitz-Simons, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Maggie, Kate, B., Eva and Mabel Fletcher, Claire and Lily Ferguson, Herbert, Richard and Laurence Farmer, Bessie and Mary Freeman.
G—Frank and Alfred* Gibbs, Edith Grieve, Thos. Groombridge, George, Colin, and Margery Graham Brown, Kenneth and Constance Gabbett, George*, Charles, Mary and Effie Graham, Margaret*, Edith*, Jack, Stuart and Dorothy Gray, Daisy, Mary* and Ethel Greenacre, Dorothy Grove, Gracie Grout.
H—Ella Hake, Mary and Juliet Haines, Edith and Winifred Harvey, Jennie Holmes*, Muriel Hare, James Henderson*, Elizabeth Hooper, Georgette Hoffmann, Kathleen Hughes, Stanley and Florence Hoyte, Claude Hutchence*, Edith Hill, Helen Hunter, Rosetta and Lottie K. Hamilton, Theodora Hill, Francie Hoyte, Violet Holford*, Ethel Hutchings*, Edith and Queenie Holms, Freda Hunton.
I—Nellie Irving*, Isabel and Ami Inglis, Daisy Iredell.
J—J. Jackson, Lizzie Johnstone*, Kate Johns.
K—Lily and Brada Kinvig, Catherine and Louise King, Alex*, T., A. and Isa* Kay, Philippa*, Grace* and Dorothy* Kerr, Jeanne Kyle.
L—Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Hannah Lovell, Arthur Llewellyn*, Carrie Livingstone-Learmouth.
M—Christina Marshall, Nellie*, Daisy* and Annie* Mackenzie, Arthur, Gwendoline and Evelyn Moir, Mary and Edith Maitland-Kirwan, Lois and Olive Mewburn, Emily* Maddox, Mary Mac Lennan, Bella and Abraham Mack, Ada Macnutt*, Charlotte Millar*, Winifred Marshall, Margaret Macphee, Mildred Morgan, Howard Moir*, Dorothy, Daniel and Margaret Morris, Adelaide Moore*, J. and Barbara Maconchy, Dora Muir, Violet Mackintosh.
N—Cissy and John Nicholson, Amy and Maude Nottage.
O—Eva and Maude Oakes, Sidney and Katie Oliver.
P—Ruth Patient, Willie, Eddie, Ada and Jessie Palmer, Daisy, Vera and May Pethridge, Edith Purkis, Louie Penny, Laura Pratt, Dorothy Patten*, Walter Perryman, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Laura Percy.
R—Isabel, Jessie, and Ellie Roe, Nora Read, Marion and Gussie Roach, Herbert Rainey, Elsie Ridewood*, Marjorie, Winifred and Aileen Roberts.
S—Marie Stuart, Lily Stanley, Nannie Sturrock, Florrie Smith, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Emma and Frank Sutton, John Smith, Bessie Symes*, Evelyn, Gwendoline*, Undine, Gladys and Eric Shaw, Francis, Helen and Dorothy* Stalker, Herbert Stuart, Mary Sowden, Mary and Alan Symon, Minnie* and Bessie* Shepherd, Olive Swift*, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Elsie and Kathleen Stark, Lettice, Violet and Maude Sall, Rosetta, Ivy and Muriel Sherwin, Bertha Stocker.
T—Frank Tomkins, Marjorie Tracey, Nannie and Louie Tibbits, Olive Tritton*.
U—Queenie Upton*.
V—Kenneth Vining.
W—Winnie Williamson, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Connie Wood*, Ronald Watson, Leonard Wall, Pringle Wilson, Sydney Wallace, Mary Ware, Louisa and Violet* Walker, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Rosamund Woodgate, Fanny and Edith Wheeler, Rachel Wilson*, James Wood, Queenie Kenrick, and Ernest Wakeford.
Y—Maurice and Gladys Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 183.—W. B.* and Alice* Henderson (Jamaica), Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 184.—W. B.* and Alice* Henderson, Cuckoo* and Minnie Lister (S. Africa), Daisy McArthur. No. 185.—Frank* and Vera* Sjöström (U.S.A.), W. B.* and Alice* Henderson. No. 186.—Frank* and Vera* Sjöström, Rotha, Ivan and Lottie St. George, Jean Scott, Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 187.—Frank* and Alice* Henderson, Eliza and Jean Scott. No. 189.—Olive van Millingen (Constantinople).

Uncle Tom's Cot—R.P, 5s.

Uncle Tom.

Bishop Westcott and the Friends.—A pamphlet just published by Headley Brothers, entitled "The Scriptural Limitations of the Friends' Doctrine of the Sacraments," by Mr. William Tallack, has elicited from the Bishop of Durham a letter, in which he remarks, "I have never been able to understand the position of the Friends towards the Sacraments; for they are careful students of the Holy Scriptures; and I do not see what answer can be made to the arguments which you state." Mr. Tallack's pamphlet pleads emphatically for a belief in the visible and outward second coming of Christ, which many Friends have attempted to explain away as having only a "spiritual" and inward fulfilment.

"A Man of Ethiopia" (Acts viii. 27).—In a sermon on this text, in "The Church in the House," the late Dr. William Arnot says: "In that carriage Philip sits beside a coloured man, and leads him into the Kingdom of God. The Word is not 'Blessed are the fair in skin,' but 'Blessed are the pure in heart.' The Ethiopian's colour cannot be changed, but his character may. He may become a new creature in Christ. If he is born again he will see the Kingdom and enter it too. It does not go by good looks. There is no respect of persons with God. A few days in the grave will make white and black people all alike: and the Ethiopian, if he has been renewed, will be very beautiful in God's sight when he rises from the grave. Angels will gaze in wonder on his gracefulness as he enters the gates of the New Jerusalem."

Home Missions.

"Mr. Fegan's Boys"

at Wisborough Green.

THE advent of our boys for their "camping out" at Wisborough Green, for the fourth year in succession, was accentuated with special interest, as last year a few well-to-do objectors applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain them from playing on the village green. The inhabitants, however, resented this obstructiveness so warmly that the Parish Council election this spring was fought out on this one question, and all the candidates pledged to welcome our boys again this year were returned, while those who were unfriendly or wished to be neutral were rejected. I suppose I need hardly explain that this opposition was really against the mission tent, and the use of their green was merely a pretext to get rid, if possible, of the evangelistic services, which, from the first, attracted the people in crowds for miles around.

Our object in "camping out" is two-fold. First, the health and happiness of the boys. Secondly, the spiritual welfare of the neighbourhood we visit, by turning the interest awakened by the novelty of "the camp," the singing of the boys, &c., to advantage in gathering the people to hear the Word of Life. The camping out just concluded has been quite the most successful we have had in both respects.

(1). The boys' holiday. The weather was glorious—not a drop of rain till I was closing the open-air service the last night. The situation of the camp, in meadows kindly lent free of charge by the worthy miller, was picturesque beyond description, looking away to Chanctonbury Ring and the South Downs on one side, and to Haslemere and Blackdown on the other. The health of the boys was splendid—we never had so little sickness before. Cricket, fishing, bathing, blackberrying, &c., were enjoyed to the full. The conduct of the boys was most satisfactory. The village constable, one of our warmest friends, has proudly pointed out to people, who have inquired as to their behaviour, apple trees laden with fruit, in a little orchard they passed up and down daily, untouched, although 230 boys have been camping close by for two or three weeks for the past four years.

Words fail me to describe the kindness of the Wisborough Green people. I can only say that in four years I have not met any one who said an unkind word or did us an unkind act, but I have been really embarrassed by their whole-hearted generosity and sympathy in every way. They each year entertained the boys by subscription to tea and sports, with valuable prizes for the successful competitors. "The camp" entertained the village children similarly on another afternoon. At the close of each of these treats there was a great gathering of parents, neighbours, children, &c., for a happy service in the mission tent to finish the day's proceedings.

(2). The spiritual work. The crowds flocking to hear the Gospel, especially on Sunday evenings, have increased year by year, so that this year we got a much larger mission tent; but even it proved quite too small.

Perhaps the most interesting indication I can give of the impression made upon the village generally is the fact that, although it has been the custom there to give open-air preachers a very discouraging reception; yet, after an address on Saturday, on "Open-air Work," by Mr. Barry Wake, I had the pleasure of sending £6 13s., as a free-will offering from the people, to the friends of the Open-air Mission.

Besides the nightly services at Wisborough Green, we journeyed, some on foot, some in farmers' waggons, on two evenings to the neighbouring villages of Kirdford and Loxwood. The people in each place gave us a most kind reception. I shall never forget those impressive services. The lovely summer sky, the hush of evening falling on the quaint, old-time villages, the folks coming up the lanes and across the fields, the sweet young voices of our Ramsgate orphans singing so touchingly, "He died because He loved me so," the solemn awe with which the message was heard—these will all remain holy memories till we meet, as we know we shall do by-and-bye, dear souls that there found their way to the Saviour's feet.

The last Sunday evening service at Wisborough Green was the crowning time. It is a very sparsely-inhabited district, yet more than 1,500 people were counted out as they left, not including our boys. The stillness was such that you could hear a pin drop. It was the largest gathering of people ever known for any purpose whatever in the place. The power of God fell on us. The text was "Brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel." It was a touching sight to see the people gather from all points—aged women toiling miles in the sultry heat, aged men plodding along in their shirt-sleeves with their coats on their arms, young men in groups who hardly ever attend any place of worship; but it brought tears to my eyes as I saw them leaning forward so eagerly, straining to catch every word, with soul-hunger in every line of their faces. They felt it was true that night, as we had been singing, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by;" and many, we feel assured, touched the hem of his garment and were made perfectly whole. J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark Street, S.E.

Lancing Homes of Rest.

PERHAPS in no path of service for the poor, partaking of a philanthropic character, has sacerdotalism been more astute and awake than in securing for itself a conspicuous pronouncement in the daily routine and the religious exercises practised in our convalescent homes. High Church ritual and image worship and mariolatry prevail in numerous institutions.

There are, however, yet some "Homes" which preserve the simplicity of Scriptural usage, and in the conduct of the daily devotions and otherwise, seek in no way to influence their patients in favour of any particular creed, much less to instil incipient Popery under the nominal garb of Protestantism. Of these Protestant homes of rest, those of Lancing-on-Sea, near Worthing, are to the fore. Provision is made for practically all classes in the four separate establishments, known respectively as "Hope Lodge" (mothers and babies), "The Chestnuts" (women and children), "Channel View" (men and youths), and "Lorne Cottage" (the aged and dying). The number of beds made up amount in all to 140; but as many as 160 are easily accommodated.

The payments received from the poor people do not amount to quite half the cost of maintenance, and many are taken free of charge. The Committee are daily receiving the most pathetic appeals to give assistance to poor broken-down bread-winners, both mothers and fathers. The trustees are anxious to secure also the freehold of the very eligible premises just opened this season for men and youths, containing thirty beds. They have the option of purchase for about half its original cost if completed by a given date. Further information would be gladly furnished by the secretary of the Homes, Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N. It is worth remarking that the entire cost of management does not exceed £160 per annum for all the four Homes. The number benefited last year was over 1,200, while it is hoped this number will be largely increased this season.

Friendless and Fallen.

IT is often thought that the applications by penitent outcast young women and girls to be saved from their sinful lives, are more numerous in the winter than during the summer months; as though repentance and a desire for reformation depended upon the state of the weather. Undoubtedly it is true, as in the case of the prodigal son, that the outward condition oftentimes produces reflection which leads to repentance; but the work of the Divine Spirit is independent of all such conditions, as the experience of the past month in connection with the five Homes and Open-all-night Refuge illustrates. During August there were more applicants seeking to be saved than any other month this year excepting one; and, although the daily expenses of the Homes have greatly exceeded the income (in consequence of so many supporters being away), no suitable case has been refused help because of an exhausted treasury. Current accounts are now due for payment, but we are waiting in faith and expectancy for the means to meet the claims. William J. Taylor.

200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

National Home-Reading Union.

NOW that the autumn is approaching, may we remind our readers that the new syllabus of subjects for the eleventh reading season of the National Home-Reading Union is ready?

Briefly, the aim of the Union is to render reading attractive and profitable, by the following means:—1. Issuing lists, drawn up by authorities, of the best books in various subjects; 2. Publishing magazines which provide all possible help, introducing readers to the subjects under study, suggesting the best methods of work, removing difficulties, answering questions, criticizing essays, and giving news of other readers' doings.

The most valuable way of using the Union is to form a reading circle; this is simply an association of friends meeting weekly, fortnightly, or at any convenient interval to talk over together the reading they have done at home.

The issue of cheap editions through the kindness of the publishers, is one of the bye-ways in which the N.H.R.U. makes itself useful to those who join its courses, and the mere right to buy these books is alone worth the very small subscription.

The work of the Union falls into three divisions respecting which (with all needful particulars) information may be had of the Secretary, at the office, Surrey House, Victoria Embankment, W.C.

Stockton Races.

STOCKTON Races have not been allowed to pass without some special effort to combat the evils associated with racing, and to proclaim to the multitudes the words of eternal life.

Inspired by a visit to meetings of a similar character at Epsom, the proposition was made for evangelistic meetings to be held during the races; and, as they approached, arrangements for a mission on an undenominational basis were made, and the co-operation of the churches invited. The headquarters of the mission were at Cleveland Wesleyan Chapel, and Rev. F. J. Feltham was appointed leader, assisted by Revs. C. Rickard and G. G. Muir, Messrs. Smith and Tunstall (Darlington), and Bob Johnson, the converted banjoist; also supported by a number of Christian workers.

Two Gospel meetings were held each day at 12.30 and four o'clock opposite the course gates, and in the evening at 7.30 at the Five Lamps, Thornaby, and the Market Cross, Stockton. Much testimony and prayer at each meeting, and the "living pictures" of the power of God's grace to transform and renew, appealed strongly to many minds. Gospels and other literature were circulated.

It would be impossible to convey any adequate idea of the power and influence of these meetings by any tabulated results. The influence and power of the Holy Spirit were manifestly present, and eternity alone will reveal the amount of blessing. We thank God for the trophies of his grace won at the meetings, and pray they may be established in the truth, and lead others to Christ. G. McE.

"A Church in a Railway Carriage."

THE Wesleyan community at Portbury, Somerset, has taken the first step towards removing from their railway-carriage church.

In connection with the erection of a chapel, a brick-laying ceremony has just taken place. Bricks were laid by a number of friends, mostly villagers, who had been blessed in the old carriage, and also in the name of a number of readers of The Christian. At the public meeting, subsequently held in a tent, Mr. Charles Phillips, of Bristol, presided, and Revs. H. A. Scott (Clifton), R. Simpson (Clevedon), and others took part, powerful addresses being given on the subject of aggressive Christianity. The fifty guineas asked for to complete the scheme were contributed, so that the entire cost of the chapel, £325, has been raised. No wonder, therefore, that the Doxology was sung with much fervour at the close of the meeting.

Money and Microbes.—Dr. Romane Curtis, formerly Professor of Bacteriology at the Chicago College of Physicians and Surgeons, has written an open letter to Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire, in which he declares that "if people would only live hygienically and scientifically, they could live to the age of a thousand years." He says the secret of long life is the destruction of parasitism, and urges Mr. Carnegie to devote 50,000,000 dols. to the founding of an institution for the teaching of hygiene, and for the study of bacteriology for the benefit of the human race! A correspondent, calling attention to this, remarks with evident sarcasm, "It is curious that to the vivisectors should be given the privilege of discovering the way to the millennial age, which, it appears, lies through cruelty and death."

Conference of Evangelists.

AN INVITATION.

On a former occasion we had the pleasure of convening a meeting of evangelists for an all-day conference, for fellowship and the consideration of the best methods for prosecuting the work of evangelization.

We are glad that the time has arrived to invite you to a similar gathering, which will be held (God willing) in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate Street, London, E.C., on Monday, September 25, 1899.

We cordially hope you will be able to attend, and ask an interest in your prayers on behalf of the gathering.—Yours sincerely,

M. H. Hodder.
F. W. Lawrence.
R. C. Morgan.

Sunday Labour at the Crystal Palace.

The announcement made yesterday by the chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, that the directors intend to continue to open on Sundays, is an attack upon law and order and the rights of toilers, which should enlist the opposition of every religious and humane person.

It is (1) a clear case of running our greatest place of amusement seven days a week for money-making; (2) a bold attempt to seize the toilers' day of rest for gain; (3) a defiance of the music licence granted by the L.C.C.; (4) a violation of the original charter and the Crystal Palace Act of 1877; and (5) a clear infringement of the valuable law which prohibits the opening of any place of amusement for money-making on Sundays.

If this movement is not crushed it will pioneer the way for a Continental Sunday more than any other movement of the day.—Your obedient servant,

Charles Hill, Secretary,
Lord's Day Rest Association.

13, Bedford Row, W.C.

Personalia.

Rev. Charles Garrett preached on Sunday morning for the first time since the death of Mrs. Garrett. He occupied the pulpit of Barmouth Chapel, and his subject was "Our Duty in Praising and Giving to God."

Rev. D. J. Martin, of Oban, and Rev. Peter Macdonald of Stornoway, have been delegated by the Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland to visit the missions in India. They will sail by the Mataina on October 6.

Mr. Henry Varley, who hoped to be engaged in service in London on Sunday last was confined to his room at Crawley, Sussex, by an attack of lumbago. He has been in much pain for several days, but hopes to be able, on Sunday next, to fulfil an engagement to preach in the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Rev. Ernest E. Baker, who is to occupy the pulpit of the King's Weigh House Church, Duke Street, Grosvenor Square, W., for the next five Sundays, is pastor of the Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio, U.S.A. This is Mr. Baker's second visit to the Weigh House.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould, secretary of the C.M.S., is in great sorrow owing to the death of his wife, after a brief illness. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon at Charlton Cemetery. The service was conducted by Rev. H. E. Fox and Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, and many friends were present.

Owing to the illness of the honoured minister of the Wynd Free Church, Glasgow (Rev. J. Riddell, M.A.), the mission arranged with the Weaver Brothers has had to be cancelled, and these missioners have arranged to give these dates to the London Tent Committee—viz., Clapham, September 3-9; Peckham, September 10-15.

Mr. W. T. Float, who has been assistant-secretary of the North Africa Mission for upwards of twelve years, is resigning his post at the end of September. He intends resuming the work of the ministry, and would value the prayers of the Lord's people for guidance as to the future. His address is 40, Longbridge Road, Barking.

Rev. Dr. Scofield, pastor of the Congregational Church at Northfield, Mass., arrives in London this week from Switzerland, where he has been spending several months in rest and quiet study. He will occupy New Court Church pulpit from Sunday, September 17, until the end of October. He is known on this side of the water by his books, and as pastor of the church at which the students from the Northfield and Mount Hermon seminaries worship. He is a most able expositor and teacher, and many who now only know him by repute will doubtless seize this opportunity of seeing and hearing him.

Temperance Notes.

The United Temperance Competitions Committee renew, for another season, their offer of solid silver medals to every adult or juvenile temperance, religious, educational, or social society, lodge, guild, school, or class, for its own committee to award to their best adult and junior singer, reciter, or essayist, on some temperance subject. Application to be made to the Temperance Competition Department, 168, Edmund Street, Birmingham.

* * * * *

The Allahabad Pioneer relates that one of the latest ideas in advertising comes from Ceylon, where a firm of whisky sellers has engaged an aeronaut to give a series of balloon ascents, and, while ascending, to drop sample bottles of whisky attached to miniature parachutes. Each ascent will wind up with a pyrotechnic display.

* * * * *

Mr. J. F. Hogan, M.P., who recently called attention in the House of Commons to the evils arising from the sale of intoxicants to British sailors at Rio de Janeiro by means of floating public-houses, has been informed by the Board of Trade that in consequence of the representations made by the British Consul-General the Prefecture of the district has decided to refuse licenses for the trade in question.

* * * * *

At the Heanor Brewster Sessions, Miss Agnes Slack presented a memorial to the licensing magistrates from the Ripley Free Church Council and the B.W.T.A., petitioning against two applications for licences at Ripley. The bench refused both the licences.

* * * * *

The Bishop of Durham has written to Mr. Tallack, of the Howard Association, advocating more united action by the friends of Temperance for actual attainable objects. The Bishop says:—"Before Parliament meets I trust that there will be a serious endeavour to unite all Temperance reformers in the support of some measures of reform. I have always pleaded most strongly that we should all go as far as we can together, and then afterwards consider what more can be done. I shall continue to do whatever I can for Temperance reform."

"Hear ye Him."

Hear ye Him, when life's sweet morning
Glitters radiant on thy sight,
And the path that lies before thee
Streams with golden sunshine bright.
Hear ye Him from that fair height
And thyself to Him unite.

Hear ye Him above the clamour
Of the noontide throng and din.
Be attentive to the whisper
Of the Spirit from within.
Though life's cup is filled to brim,
"This, my Son, Oh, hear ye Him."

Hear ye Him when Fortune beckons
Fame and glory just in sight;
Hear, oh hear, that Voice beside you
Ere ye turn to left or right.
"Christian soldier!" ye shall fight,
And shall conquer through my Might.

Hear ye Him above the conflict
And the rush of trampling feet;
Hark! his voice shall nerve to action;
Forward! haste from thy retreat.
Stand! in Me entire, complete,
Thou canst never know defeat.

Hear ye Him above the breakers,
As they toss along the shore.
Fear ye not or be affrighted,
"I am with you evermore."
Through the tempest's angry roar
Doubt ye not, but still adore.

Hear ye Him when twilight deepens
Through its amber tints to grey,
And the bells that rang so gaily
Chime the closing hours of day.
Hear ye Him; Oh! hear Him say
"Rise, beloved! Come away!"

Mary E. Kendrew.

High Gatherley, Harrogate.

The Freedmen's Missions Aid Society, which has been in operation for thirty years past, has been dissolved, for the reason that the work for which it was organized has been practically accomplished. The work planned in Egypt has been found impossible of immediate execution. In consequence, money subscribed for that purpose has been handed over to the Foreign Mission Board of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., which sustains a large mission in Upper Egypt.

Lady Guardians.

There has never been a time when children were the subjects of so much legislative solicitude as they are to-day. We rejoice to see that the Government has been induced to take up the bill promoted by the State Children's Aid Association.

The Daily News remarked on July 27: "It is one thing to make a law, another to administer it. The burden of its administration, if it is to be effectually administered, will fall mainly upon the women guardians." This acknowledging of the distinct need of lady guardians will in due time be a call all over the land for gifted ladies who will enter upon this noble service, and will make it a real study how to foster the individuality and develop the character of the children of the State.

When the Bill is passed, it will be seen, as lady guardians exercise their new powers, how many thousands can be efficiently helped to become useful servants here and elsewhere. In the seventies we were privileged to make an experiment, and pioneered in Canada, placing out amongst the colonists some hundreds from the workhouses in Bristol, Southampton, Cheltenham, &c. Notwithstanding all the hard things that have been written about pauper children as sullen, obstinate, and disobedient, more favourable circumstances have marvellously changed them; the environment of a Canadian farmhouse, with its freedom and plenty, has tended to develop character, and has given ability to fulfil all womanly duties and manly enterprise; and what has cheered us most, has been the loving, homely way in which our Canadian sisters have sheltered and shielded both boys and girls until they were settled in life for themselves.

Many difficulties have had to be overcome on both sides of the sea, but now we have hope, if ladies of influence, those especially fond of children, become like those seven of whom a friend writes, who, as guardians, have a kind of model colony of such children near Leicester. It consists of twelve or more separate houses, each having about twenty children, with a married couple as father and mother. The children are very happy, and some have shown reluctance to leave when their time has come,

After thirty years of steady plodding, we have much to encourage us. Reports from our Canadian home, just received, give the following: "A young woman called this week, bringing her husband to see us. She has a comfortable home at Woodstock, and seems to have a fine young man for her husband." Since May, five other marriages have been notified, and all apparently comfortably settled. They are so grateful to have a home of their own. One, with tears in her eyes, said to our niece: "I am so happy now, and have very, very much to thank God for."

We are truly thankful that the committee of the State Children's Aid Association has made exhaustive inquiries into the work and results of those voluntary societies who send out children to Canada; and we are glad that the committee say they are convinced that emigration, if carefully carried out, is one of the most wholesome and economical ways of dealing with State-dependent children. I ask the constant prayers of all who long for the best welfare of children of the various neglected classes.

Annie Macpherson.

Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green Road.

Lansdowne Hall Convention.—The King's Herald, for August and September (double number), reports the Summer Convention held at Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood. The editor is Pastor Fuller Gooch. The addresses are given very fully, and abound with well-put truth. Professor Newell, in an address on "Power with God," said: "We have power, if we will, to have things our own way when what we want is God's glory. I am sick and tired of a Church that is afraid of ritualism, ceremonialism, papacy, the devil, and the world. The Church of Christ is being driven and oppressed, like Israel in the invasion of the Midianites. It is time we came out and began to assert our power with God. The devil is already beneath our feet, and we have already overcome the world in Christ, and by simple faith we ought to claim it."

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, September 4th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

A.M.M.L. and N.D.R.—Please say whose Holiday Fund?

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. Lewis's Homes, Paris (Children)—A Mother ...	1	0	0
West Indian Hurricane Relief Fund—M.D., 5s.; H.S.G., 10s.; H.M.P., 5s.; Mrs. L.M.C., £2; Will, £15; Cleve, 5s.; Cs., £1	19	5	0
Finnish Emigrants (New Testaments)—B.I.W., 5s.; E.H., 10s.	0	15	0
China Inland Mission—Francie, 10s.; X.Z., £1 8s.	1	18	0
Dr. Paton's Mission, New Hebrides—Francie, 10s.; Cs., £1	1	10	0
Paris City Mission—Francie	0	10	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—Francie, 10s.; L.M.P., Clapton, £5	5	10	0
Moravian Missions—Memorandum, £3; H.B., £2...	5	0	0
Suffering Jews, Russia—Per J.M.	0	2	1
Famine in S. Russia—Of Thine Own...	1	0	0
Pundita Ramabai's Widows—M.E.C.	0	10	0
South Africa General Mission—M.E.C.	0	5	0
Central African Mission (Mr. Arnot)—M.E.C. ...	0	5	0
London Missionary Society (Central College, New Guinea)—Cs.	1	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India (Europeans and Eurasians)—Cs.	1	0	0
Miss Procter's Schools, Lebanon—Cs.	1	0	0
Bible Lands Mission (Armenian Relief)—Cs. ...	1	0	0
Florence Protestant Orphanage—Cs.	1	0	0
Soldiers' Home, Cairo—Cs.	1	0	0
Mr. Moody's College (Training Indian Student)—R.B.	13	2	0
Uncle Tom's Cot—See page 21	0	5	0
Mr. G. Heath's Hop-pickers—Cs.	0	10	0
R. N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen (Labrador)—Clothing for Women and Children—Cs. ...	1	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Cs., £1; (Preventive Work)—Cs., 10s.	1	10	0
Rev. D. Baron's Work (Jews)—S.A.	0	10	0
Kensit Crusade—H.B.	2	0	0
Scripture Readers' Soc., Ireland—J.S.G., 5s.; H.B., £2 2s.; E.E.J., £20; M.S., £5	27	7	0
Day in Country Fund—St. Clair, 10s.; M.C., £2; C.B.M., 10s.; Proceeds of Sale of Razors, £1 15s; T.M.T., 4s. 6d.	4	19	6
Ruth Elliott Home (Children's Holiday)—St. Clair	0	10	0
Flower Girls' Mission—M.E.C., 5s.; (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday)—L.A.C., 10s; E.M., 10s.; C.B.M., 10s.	1	15	0
Open-Air Mission—H.B., £2 2s.; (Doncaster Races)—K.F., 2s.; (Races and Hop-pickers)—Will, £10	12	4	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—A.C.M.	1	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—A.C.M., £1; M.E.C., 5s.; H.B., £3 3s.; Cs., £1	5	8	0
London City Mission—A.C.M., 10s.; Memorandum, £4	4	10	0
Church Pastoral Aid Society—A.C.M.	0	10	0
Church of England Temperance Society—A.C.M. ...	0	10	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—Memories, 1s.; M.E.C., 5s.	0	6	0
Ragged School Union (Holiday Fund)—Miss E.C....	2	10	0
Irish Church Missions—Memorandum	3	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes (Women's Holiday)—Mentone	0	10	0
Mission to Hop-pickers (Rev. J. Burnham)—M.S. ...	1	1	0
Tower Hamlets Mission—C.B.M.	0	10	0
Scripture Gift Mission—Heb. iv. 12	1	10	0
Evangelical Alliance—Y.R.	1	0	0
Mr Shield's Mission to Railway Men (Harmonium)—M.S.	0	10	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—In Memoriam, H.F., £1; H.B., £3	4	0	0
Friendless and Fallen—M.E.C....	0	5	0
Salisbury Conference (Rev. N. Thwaites)—Anon ...	5	0	0
Children's Country Holiday Fund—T.D.M.... ...	0	5	0
London Medical Mission, Endell Street—H.B. ...	1	0	0
Aldershot Mission (late Miss Daniell's)—H.B. ...	2	2	0
Miss Weston's Work, R.N.—H.B.	2	2	0
THE CHRISTIAN Tract Fund—H.B.	0	10	0
Village Missions (Mr. Heley)—H.B.	1	0	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—H.B.	1	0	0
Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth—H.B.	2	2	0
Mr. Charles Cook's Work, Hyde Park—H.B. ...	2	0	0
Tram Car and Scripture Text Mission—H.B. ...	0	10	0
The Lord's Day Observance Society—H.B. ...	1	0	0
Soldiers' Home, Winchester—H.B.	2	0	0
Rev. T. Connellan's Work, Ireland—H.B. ...	1	0	0
Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry—H.B. ...	1	0	0
Friedenheim Home for Dying—H.B....	2	0	0
Salvation Army—H.B., £1; M., £5	6	0	0
Total	£166	13	7

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Parents' Mission, 39, Warwick Lane, E.C.—Anon. £1.

Open-Air Mission (Doncaster Races)—C.P., Blackpool, £1.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—F.W.C., 2s. 6d.; R.C., £1; E.C., 10s.; D.C., 2s. 6d.; C., £1 1s.

Kensit Protestant Crusade and Wickliffe Preachers' Fund.—The Committee thankfully acknowledge:—F. Parry, £5; A. Hewens, £1; G.P., 10s.; Miss Fraser, 10s.; J. Roynon, £2 2s.; J. Sparks, £1; E. Logier, £1; R. Leeming, £2 2s.; Miss Tacey, £1; Mrs Harding, £2; A. L. Vernon, £5; R. C. Hankinson, £2 2s.; Mrs. Conrad Green, £5; Miss Keating, £1; Mrs. Fielder, £1; S. Schofield, 10s.; J. Howard, £1; Col. Doran, £2; W. R. D., £5; Rev. R. H. Jackson, £1; Dr. Leeson, 10s. 6d.; Dr. Vardy, £1 1s.; Rev. Ireland Jones, £2; Protestants of Workington, £15 3s.; Whitehaven Protestants, £9; J. Cory, Cardiff, £10. Further subscriptions greatly needed.—John Kensit, Secretary, 18, Paternoster Row.

Othello Mission.—Mr. J. J. Meek, whose work at Rorke's Drift, Natal, is well known to our readers, is in need of help. In some measure he has hitherto been able to support himself, but present conditions make him more dependent upon outside help. He reports continued success in his work. Address, care of Major Liebenrood, Prospect Park, Reading.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission

THE

"Carter" Home for Destitute Boys,

49, HIGH STREET, CLAPHAM, S.W.

The object of the Institution is to receive and morally and spiritually train homeless and destitute orphan and fatherless boys, who number about 100.

Funds are very urgently required to carry on the work and to meet heavy outstanding liabilities.

WILL FRIENDS KINDLY HELP?

DR. CRONIN,
Chairman and Treasurer.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.
Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

PLEASE REMEMBER

THE

1,100 BOYS & GIRLS

OF THE

Childrens' Home & Orphanage.

Very little Help comes in the Summer.

Remittances should be addressed to

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, Bonner Road, N.E.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

President - - - - THOMAS SPURGEON.
Vice-President - - - CHARLES SPURGEON.
Treasurer - - - - T. H. OLNEY.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN

And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

"I will sow them among the people; and they shall remember Me in far countries." Zechariah x. 9. AMEN!

Dear Friend,

These autumn days bring home an urgent message which I make haste to ask you to enable me to reply to. It comes this time from a band of Two Hundred and Fifty-five of my trained children. A few years ago most of these were knocking at my doors for admission. To-day they are asking me to open my doors and LET THEM OUT! We have given them all we could—but that all has been of the best! They have had bread to eat and raiment to put on. They have been taught to read and write, and to make themselves useful in the household and in the workshop. They have been won back to bodily fitness, to decent living, to docile habits, and to industrious ways. They have learned to know what home and love and friendship mean. Best of all, they have constantly heard the Gospel message, and have been shown the way to the Saviour of sinners. Not a few have already proved themselves true-hearted little servants of the Master.

But I cannot keep them much longer; for a long, ragged line of destitute, homeless and forlorn Waifs, as yet unrescued, are pressing in to take their places! Will you help to equip them for their life-work and so make way for their successors?

On Thursday, 14th September, their emigrant ship will (D.V.) sail for the West, and I long with all my heart to include these Two Hundred and Fifty-five Boys and Girls among her passengers. Canada will receive them with open arms, and in a year or two they will, I believe, be among the most useful, reliable, and successful of her sons and daughters. They will go from the "evil to come" that would await them in over-crowded England, where bread is too often earned only by displacing some worker who already has others dependent upon him. They will go to almost certain success in the Dominion, as our long bede-roll of emigration testifies. Listen! Out of 10,431 children already sent over the seas from these Homes in the past, less than seventeen in the thousand have disgraced their names or proved failures in life's battle.

But situated as I now am, I dare not incur the needful expenditure for these 255. The summer season has emptied my exchequer, as it always does; for friends and helpers are then away from home, and it is perhaps not to be wondered at that my children have been somewhat forgotten! Indeed, each day of this lovely holiday season brings with it fresh anxieties and new exercises of faith as to how even to supply daily bread to my large family of over 5,000 young people!

Nevertheless, each of these young emigrants, if they are to go, will cost £10 for outfit and travelling; so that I really want £2,550 specially contributed for emigration, before Thursday, 14th September, in order that I may give to this party of 255 young people the life-chance they are waiting for. These 255, if they go, will constitute my Third Party for 1899. The first Emigration Party this year left our Homes on Thursday, 23rd March, when, through the kind aid of God's servants, I was able to emigrate 166 fine lads. On Monday, 17th July, I sent out 252 Boys and Girls. The 255 whom I am now hoping will go on the 14th September, will thus bring the total of my emigrants for 1899 up to 673; and the grand total, since I began the work of Emigration, up to 10,686—an exceeding great Army! Not a few of these are devoted followers of Christ, and are carrying the Gospel to distant regions, where our loving Father is putting great honour upon their testimony for Him.

Ten pounds is not a large sum to make the fortune of a Boy or Girl with! But gifts of any amount, however small, in aid of the Emigration Fund will be gladly welcomed and gratefully acknowledged. Such sums may be sent to our Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq.; to our Chairman of Committee, Howard Williams, Esq.; to our Bankers, London and South Western Bank, and Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale & Co.; or to

Yours most sincerely in God's service among the Waifs and Strays of our Streets,

Offices of National Waifs' Association:
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

5th September, 1899.

Thos. J. Barnardo.

"The Church."

1. "M." did wisely and well to traverse the erroneous impression that this corporation and community originated, or was created, at Pentecost (Acts). This view is, I fear, the outcome of Gentile pharisaism. Hebrew pharisaism wanted to exclude Gentiles from the Church. Is it possible that Gentile pharisaism falls into the same error, both as to the Hebrews and as to their fellow-creatures, who numbered millions of millions before Abraham? But this is not the only erroneous impression about "The Church." Paul in his letters, and John in the Apocalypse, represent the Church as the mystical body of Christ, and as the Bride, the Lamb's wife. Who then constitute that real but invisible body? All who live by faith, and die in faith. None of such are excluded; none but such are included.

2. When did men begin to live by faith? Who was the first human being to die in faith? Many of these are mentioned in Paul's letter to the Hebrews; and they all lived long before the Pentecost of the Acts. Did they not belong to the Church on that account? They could not if there was no Church. Could the mere accident of time exclude them? Yet, if they lived by faith and died in faith, they must have been members of the Church.

3. The Old Testament Scriptures speak of a Church as existing previous to that date; and the New Testament Scriptures confirm it. What Church so existed? Was it merely the Hebrew Church, a theocratic visible organization which had existence, even if we date back to Abraham's call and conversion? Was there no Church from Adam to Moses, or from Abel to Abraham? The Law was a divinely-appointed school-officer to go round the homes and hearts of the Hebrews, and to conduct them to Christ, i.e., for Him to teach them how to live by faith, and to die in faith; in other words, how to become the children of God.

4. I submit that, apart from the creation of the Church in the mind of God from all eternity, its actual, historic existence, by redemption and regeneration, dates from the moment when the first human being personally beheld the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, and so potentially began to live that life of faith on the Son of God, which afterwards enabled that human being to die in faith. With the eye of faith, that immortal human being looked forward to Calvary, just as any one now looks backward to it.

5. No doubt there was a visible Hebrew Church, and there is a visible Christian Church; but in these two all were not living by faith, nor did or do all die in faith. And so they were not, and are not, members of the Church, which is Christ's Body. On the other hand, were there not visible churches of Hebrews in Palestine, Egypt, and Chaldea, in the days of Jeremiah? And so in the days of Paul and John, were there not numerous Hebrew and Gentile visible churches, not all of whose members were children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and members of the mystical Body of Christ?

6. Pentecost (Acts), therefore, does not date the creation of the Church. But this real though invisible corporation and community (not invisible, however, to God, or to the angels, perhaps not to the spirits of just men made perfect), consisting of all Spirit-regenerated Hebrews and Gentiles, i.e., of all those of the human race who by faith became the children of God, had its actual creation, its historic existence, in the first regenerate human being. And it will have its actual completion, as well as its historic exhibition, when the last human being receives the Spirit of Adoption to cry, "Abba, Father." Paul says, "This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and his Church." One of the seven angels says, "Come hither, I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife." Jesus Himself says, "The Spirit and the Bride say, 'Come;' and surely I come suddenly." Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

O blessed Bridegroom! O thrice-blessed Bride!
The husband is the Lord, the Lord of Hosts;
The Church Queen-Consort of the King of Kings.

A.

(1156)

Evangelistic.

On Margate Sands.

During the month of August, Mr. Newton Jones, the S.S. Union Evangelist, has been holding services daily on the Margate beach. The weather has lent itself to the work, and friends from all parts have thrown in their lot with Mr. Jones and his colleague, the Rev. Ernest Thorn. The children's meetings have been attended with much blessing, and, strange to say, more boys than girls have been among the congregation invited. The flower, fruit, and toy service was a great success, and gave much pleasure to all, the gifts being handed over to the Sea Bathing Infirmary. The open-air lecture service in the grounds of Holy Trinity Church left deep impressions, and testimonies from parents speak of definite conversions. The curate of Holy Trinity conducted the services at Cliftonville, and exchanged (sand) pulpits with Mr. Jones.

The indoor illustrated Gospel lectures on "The Potter," "The Paper Mill," and "My Life Story," all attracted large congregations, and brought definite results. The open-air harvest thanksgiving afforded a grand opportunity of pressing home the claims of the Gospel. The month's campaign concluded with cheering testimonies to blessing received. It might be stated that it was on the same spot Mr. Jones began his work in 1888, and hopes (D.V.) to make it an annual visit.

Hop-pickers in Hampshire

The Gospel campaign among the "hoppers" of Hampshire is now, for the thirty-fifth season, in full swing. Never before has the work been so extensively organised, nor has the need been more pressing or important than now. Men, women and children of every class, colour, and character, are being evangelized by the agents of the Mission, comprising a dozen missionaries and as many lady workers, all of whom have had special training for this difficult service. Within a radius of about twelve miles we have erected five large tents, which afford refuge, rest, and refreshment for hundreds of pickers, who crowd these "canvas tabernacles" night after night.

The work is greatly hampered for funds. Never has such difficulty been experienced in procuring the wherewithal for prosecuting the task. Two tents are this year flying the red cross, for the missionaries in charge, being members of the St. John's Ambulance Brigade, are happily qualified and prepared to render aid to wounded bodies as well as wounded souls. This is an invaluable acquisition, seeing that the gardens for the most part are removed several miles from the place of medical help. Miss Chinn, of Lenten Street, Alton, would be most happy to forward particulars of the work. Tracts also are scarce, specially such as are fitted for children's reading.

J. Newcombe Goad, L.C.M.

Holiday Evangelization.

Dear Sir,—It has been our custom to spend the holidays at some fashionable watering-place, watching the Children's Mission, and singing with the Y.M.C.A.; no other opening for Christian work could we find. But a short time ago there appeared in your columns an article suggesting that during the holidays evangelistic work should be undertaken in some of the many villages where High Church doctrine is absolute.

After much inquiry, we were guided to a village of upwards of 400 people, agricultural and isolated. A High Church vicar had been in charge for several years, and during his temporary absence, on a holiday, a member of the "Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament," from a distant part of the country, officiated.

We arrived perfect strangers, and found a charming village, with a central green surrounded by houses. We brought with us harmonium, hymn sheets, and tracts, and, encouraged by the prayers of many Christian friends, proceeded to place in the shop windows a notice of open-air meetings on the green on Sundays and one weekday, and also of proposed cottage Bible readings. The open-air meetings were well attended from the first. The tracts were thankfully received, and the Bible readings proposed after a house had been kindly thrown open to us.

What a pleasure it was to meet by the way and talk of heavenly things to these kindly people, who always stopped and listened, but were invariably too shy to utter a word concerning their spiritual needs. The words of the Apostle came to our minds, "Ye have need of patience," as we wondered why no one came forward to talk of spiritual things, though several kindly helped in the singing and "inviting." Yet it was a very happy time, for we knew that the seed sown was "precious and good," and here our work ended.—Yours sincerely, A Churchman.

London Tent Evangelization.

Your readers will be glad to have some particulars of the work that is being done at the Clapham Junction Tent. Up to date we have had (1) Some 420 cases of professed conversion among adults; (2) 350 children have been personally dealt with, some 200 of whom have given evidence of the reception of Jesus as their Saviour; (3) fifty Gospel Temperance pledges; (4) a great number of tracts and Bibles have been distributed. All the inquirers have been handed directly over to the churches, members of which are actively visiting the same, and adding them to membership. The children, so blessed under the preaching and blackboard talks of Mr. Vander Venter, have been especially cared for, and will be handed directly to the Sunday School superintendents.

It is impossible to speak too highly of the magnificent services rendered by Messrs. Leonard Weaver, Charles Inglis, John Vine, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, Madame Annie Ryall, and Mr. James Gracie. They have not spared themselves, but have worked heroically in the great work of reaching the people. I have been exceedingly fortunate in raising a splendid band of consecrated workers, who have honeycombed the meetings, and made it almost impossible for a sinner exhibiting the slightest signs of "breakdown" to escape. We have yet three weeks to run ere we bring the mission to a close. Our arrangements are:—September 3-10, Mr. W. R. Lane, and Madame Annie Ryall; September 12-18, Mr. Henry Varley; September 19-23, Mr. Chas. Inglis and Mr. Leonard Weaver.

I feel convinced that the Christians of London do not fully understand the great blessing that is resting upon this movement, which, if helped by them, will prove to be the very revival for which all are so earnestly praying.—Yours very sincerely,

Frank Wm. Cannon, Hon. Sec.

98, Bramfield Road,
Wandsworth Common, S.W.

At the noon prayer meeting on Monday last, Mr. Alfred Holness made reference to the remarkable revival in progress at Peckham Rye (Troy Town) tent services, in connection with the London Tent Evangelization Committee's work. On Sunday evening last, the densely-crowded congregation was much moved by Divine influences, and at the close many persons, under conviction of sin, walked out to a space in front of the platform and publicly professed faith in Christ. The attendances are increasing, and keen interest in the work is manifested throughout the district.

Mr. William Forbes closed a series of services on Sunday, at Ancoats Presbyterian Church, Manchester.

Tidings of blessing in connection with services at the seaside continue to reach us from various popular resorts on the coast. A communication from Lowestoft tells of daily gatherings, at which a number of local friends laboured earnestly with the Children's Special Service Mission workers.

The second month of the mission on Skegness sands, in connection with St. Paul's Baptist Church, has just concluded. The mission was conducted by Rev. G. Goodchild, and the special evangelist was Mr. J. S. Alexander. Christian workers from various parts of the country assisted in the work, and a number of definite cases of blessing are reported.

Very successful beach services have been conducted by workers of the Irish Church Missions at Kilkee, a popular watering-place in county Clare. The Society's Wooden Hall has been also established there for the summer months, and very interesting meetings have been held in it. The services have been very well attended, and have been much appreciated by many of the visitors.

Mr. C. Lazenby has just concluded a fortnight's special tent services at Keynsham. The united gatherings, held prior to the mission, were times of blessing, the esteemed vicar meeting for prayer with Nonconformists in the various schoolrooms. The mission services were well attended, and were characterized by deep spirituality, Christians freely acknowledging the help and blessing they received. There were also several cases of evident conversion.

Pastor R. Howton, of Glossop, reports blessing on the work in Derbyshire villages. At one of the centres, Mosbro', some notorious characters have professed conversion. One man, whose life shows a wonderful change, has opened a house for preaching, with the result that some who had not attended a place of worship for many years have been brought out of darkness into light. Another collier, who had been blessed, purchased chairs to the value of £6 15s. for furnishing the "meeting house."

Mr. WILLIAM DAY writes from Leeds: "We have entered upon the eighth week of evangelistic tent services, and the interest is deepening. The tent is pitched in, according to the police report, the worst part of the town; hundreds of gamblers live in the vicinity. We are in need of another tent, so many persons being unable to obtain admission. A gentleman has offered to defray all expense of removal and return, if any friend will lend one at once. Where sporting newspapers were formerly purchased, there is now a demand for Testaments. We have good hopes of the many cases of professed conversion. Address, 13, Moreland Place, Hyde Park Road, Leeds."

Evangelists' Engagements.

REV. HUGH C. WALLACE.—Sept. 28-29, Crescent Church, Liverpool.

MR. LEONARD WEAVER, Gospel Tents, South London, until further notice.

MR. JOHN COATES, with Gospel Tent, Cranham, till end of September.

MR. BEN ALBERTO.—Sept. 10, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

GIPSY SMITH.—Till September 11, Grimsby; 16-25, Mansfield; 30-October 9, Bromsgrove.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS.—Every Sunday during Sept. at the Polytechnic, Regent Street; Sept. 5-9, Peckham; 12-16, Clapham Tent; 19-23, Battersea Tent; Oct. 1-16, Dorking.

WEAVER BROTHERS.—Till Sept. 15, Glasgow; 17-29, Carlisle; Oct. 1-13, Hartlepool; 15-27, Scarborough; 29-Nov. 10, Woolwich.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT.—Sept. 17 and 24, at 7, 21 and 28, at 8, Shirley Hall, Enfield; Oct. 1-13, Baptist Church, Milton Street, Chester.

REV. F. C. SPURR.—Sept. 9-18, Belper; 23-Oct. 2, Liverpool; 7-17, Morley; 21-30, Todmorden; Nov. 4-13, Leamington; 18-27, Walsall; Dec. 2-12, Chester.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—Till Sept. 18, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; Sept. 24, 27, and Oct. 1, Brunswick Chapel, Bristol; Sept. 26, Chippenham; Oct. 7 to 16, Warrington; 21 to 30, Greenheys, Manchester; Nov. 4 to 13, Rothwell, Kettering; 18 to 27, Dartmouth; Dec. 2 to 11, Tiverton; 15 to 24, Westminster.

REV. THOMAS COOK.—Sept. 10, Harrogate; 17, Blyth; 24, Harrogate; Oct. 1, Fleetwood; 8, Halifax; 15, Hoyland; 22, Sheffield; 29, Birmingham; Nov. 5, Oldham; 12, Horsforth; 19, Scarborough; 26, Manningham; Dec. 3, Hull; 10, Gainsborough; 17, Bromley (Farwig Mission); 24, Harrogate.

MR. J. S. HARRISON.—During Sept., Folkestone Road, Walthamstow, Sundays and Thursdays; Oct., St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays; Nov., Merrion Hall, Dublin, Sundays and Fridays; Dec., Great Assembly Hall, Sundays and Wednesdays.

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE.—During Sept., Park Hall, Barking; during Oct., Belfast.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—Sept. 23-28, Woolwich Baptist Tabernacle; 30-Oct. 9, Congregational Church, Pickering, Yorks.; 14-19, Holly Park Wesleyan Church, London, N.

MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ.—Sept. 17-Oct. 2, Pollokshields, Glasgow; 22-Nov. 6, North Shields.

EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.—The following missions, with others, will be in progress on Sunday next:—Limehouse (Edinburgh Castle), H. Collins; Manchester, N. Taylor; Blakeney, C. Lazenby; Jarrow, H. R. Francis; Newick, J. Lovell; Stour Provost, H. S. Smith; Cookley, J. Clark; Wetheringsett, J. Harris; Dunmow, J. Whiting; Shillington, E. Bailey; Seend, C. B. Jolliffe; Gamlingay, K. Lambert; Great Welnetham, J. Stanger; Pleck, S. Vivian; Waltham, G. Pell; Great Harwood, J. Shields; Hullavington, W. F. Davies; Ditton Priors, H. Bryant; Ringwood, H. Bray; Loughton, T. Godie; Marden, R. Williams; Whitehaven, D. M. Bayne; Woodside, C. G. Roger; Glasgow, T. W. Canning; Riccarton, H. Young; Hawick, R. Hill.

LONDON TENT EVANGELIZATION COMMITTEE'S ARRANGEMENTS.—American Tent, Lavender Hill, close to Clapham Junction Station; till September 10, Mr. W. R. Lane and Mr. Jas. Gracie; 11-17, Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. Jas. Gracie; 18-23, Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. Chas. Inglis. Meetings on week-nights at 7.30; Sundays 11 a.m. (men only), 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. The Victory Tent, Troy Town, Peckham Rye; till September 9, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker; 10-15, the brothers Weaver, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker. Meetings as at Lavender Hill. The Great Tent, High Street, Clapham Road, close to Clapham Road Station; till September 9, the brothers Weaver and Mr. Van de Venter; 11-16, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker. Meetings on week nights at 7.30 p.m., Sundays 3.30 and 7.30 p.m.

Appeals.

AN APPEAL—NOT FOR MONEY.—The vicar of St. Thomas', Lambeth (Rev. J. B. Barraclough), appeals to Protestant and evangelical Christians to help him in his work for God. Help is urgently needed in the Sunday schools, week-night meetings for young men and young women, open-air services, visiting the sick and afflicted, and various other agencies; but it must be given without Sunday travelling.

THE LONDON TRAMCAR AND OMNIBUS SCRIPTURE TEXT MISSION.—For fifteen years this mission has been seeking to bring before the travelling public in London the Word of God, by means of printed texts and transparencies affixed in tramcars and omnibuses. The number of such cars and 'buses throughout London is estimated to be 3,000; and the passengers travelling annually by these conveyances cannot be fewer than 500,000,000. It will be seen, therefore, that there is a very large sphere of usefulness for such a mission as this; but its work in the past has been seriously crippled through lack of funds. In order to place one text in each of the cars or 'buses, as above, it is estimated that the sum of £2,250 will be annually required. The committee hope for such further responses as will enable them to cover the entire ground during the present year. Address, Mr. Lionel Newbery, Treasurer, 1, King Edward Street, E.C.

Books Received.

From American Baptist Publication Society. THE FIRST EPISTLE OF JOHN; OR, GOD REVEALED IN LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE, by Robert Cameron. (1dol. 25c.)

From Messrs. Sampson, Low, & Co. THE SACRED VESTMENTS; an English rendering to the third book of the "Rationale Divinorum Officiorum" of Durandus, Bishop of Mende. With notes. By the Rev. T. H. Passmore, M.A.

"Eight Months old, has Eight Teeth, and has cut them without even a single bad night."

ARTHUR ADAMS.
(From a photograph.)

If your baby is fat and well nourished it will stand a good chance of going through the period of teething without much distress. On the other hand, the weak, thin, delicate babies have no end of trouble. It is like a strong, vigorous adult, who resists a disease that would result in the death of a weak person. Do not think that you are especially different from your baby. The only difference is, that the organism of a child is more susceptible to outside influences than that of an adult, and the child must also have material for growth.

Here is an object-lesson for parents who have teething babies:—

"26, Heyford Avenue,
"South Lambeth,
"London, S.W.
"March 7th, 1899.

"Gentlemen,—I beg to testify to the excellence of your Scott's Emulsion for babies during teething. I have also found it a grand remedy for coughs and colds. I enclose my son's photo. He is eight months old, has eight teeth, and has cut them without fits, etc., or even a single bad night.—Wishing Scott's Emulsion the success it deserves, I am, gentlemen, yours sincerely, (Signed) A. L. ADAMS."

If baby is teething, or if baby does not thrive, we suggest that you try a little Scott's Emulsion, and see how quickly this preparation will restore health, flesh, and strength. Scott's Emulsion contains the hypophosphites of lime and soda, which are useful in the formation of healthy bones, and are also beneficial to the nerves and to digestion. In addition to this, Scott's Emulsion comprises the purest Norway cod-liver oil and glycerine. The formula of Scott's Emulsion is freely given to the medical profession, and highly endorsed by all medical men. Scott's Emulsion is not a secret remedy, and it has more uses in the human system than any other preparation of its kind. You will find Scott's Emulsion perfectly palatable and of a positive benefit to the digestive system, especially of an infant or growing child. Children thrive on Scott's Emulsion when no other remedy seems to do them any good.

You can obtain a sample of Scott's Emulsion by sending threepence to cover postage to Scott and Bowne, Limited, Manufacturing Chemists, 25, Great Saffron Hill, London, E.C., and mentioning this paper. All chemists sell Scott's Emulsion.

Church Notes.

The Dean of Rochester (Dr. Hole) has ceased to be a member of the English Church Union.

A Wiltshire lady has just presented the Church Army with a three-acre field to be sold or used for the benefit of the work amongst the outcast and destitute.

A new Wesleyan Church is in course of erection at Wednesbury, and will cost £6,500. At the stone-laying a few days ago £2,222 was reported to date.

The Hamilton Presbytery of the Church of Scotland has arranged for a simultaneous mission in all the parishes within its bounds. Forty-eight preachers have been engaged.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., is announced as one of the speakers at the Baptist Autumnal Missionary Anniversary, to be held in Leeds on the 25th inst. Dr. Parker is also to preach.

Prebendary Askwith will be publicly inducted to the living of St. John, Upper Holloway, on September 28, by the Bishop of Islington. His coming is anticipated with interest and hope in the parish.

Rev. W. B. Russell Caley, vicar of St. Matthias', Plymouth, has decided, at the request of several members of his congregation, to start an evening communion on the fourth Sunday in each month.

Memorial stones of a new Wesleyan Church, at Worthing, have been laid. The scheme provides for an expenditure of £6,000, towards which £1,200 has been raised, and £600 more has already been promised.

A new and handsome Wesleyan Church, in Abbey Road, Barrow, has just been opened for worship. It will accommodate 750 persons, and cost £7,000. Toward this amount £3,500 has been raised.

The Bishop of Carlisle has consented to take part in a united District Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s at Carlisle on September 14, and will entertain Sir George Williams at Rose Castle during the president's visit to the city.

Rev. A. G. Townshend, who has been appointed to the vicarage of Sileby, was useful in his former spheres of labour in London, Kilglass, and Glasgow, as a faithful preacher of the Gospel and upholder of Reformation principles.

The handsome pulpit erected in St. Peter's Church, Fraserburgh, by the congregation to the memory of the late Rev. Charles Pressley was used on Sunday for the first time, when Rev. H. Fyfe, B.A., preached from it an eloquent sermon.

The Baptist Tabernacle, at Aldershot, which had been closed for decorations and repairs, was reopened on Sunday for Divine service. The sermons, both in the morning and evening, were preached by the pastor, Rev. F. G. Kemp.

Rev. W. H. Harrowes, M.A., late of Dufftown, was last week ordained to the pastorate of Gallatown Free Church, Kirkcaldy, vacant by Rev. Mr. Agnew accepting a literary appointment in Stirling. The settlement augurs well for the future of the congregation.

The work of pulling down the old Baptist Chapel at Bishop's Stortford, preparatory to rebuilding, is now well in hand, and during the alterations Sunday services are being held at the Friends' Meeting House in the morning, and at the Great Hall in the evening.

Rev. T. M. Day, B.D., the respected assistant of St. John's, Dundee, was on Friday night unanimously elected to the vacant pastorate of Strathaven Free Church, in the Presbytery of Hamilton. The proceedings were marked by great cordiality and enthusiasm.

At a meeting of the Oban Colportage Society, the Earl of Moray presided, and briefly referred to the good work done by the Society, and of the necessity for good wholesome literature. The Countess of Moray also spoke, and related instances of the value of the work of the colporteurs.

The First-day School, opened by Friends fifty years ago, in Quaker Street, Spitalfields, has, by its long-sustained usefulness and germinating power, well earned its jubilee, which has just been commemorated; for, whilst in itself continuing as effective as ever, it has proved the germ from which all the mission work of London Friends has radiated.

The Kyle of Rochalsh Free Church was opened by Rev. Dr Alexander Whyte, Free St. George's, Edinburgh, on Thursday last. He preached a most eloquent and practical sermon from 2 Chronicles vi., which was listened to with rapt attention throughout. Rev. Mr. MacLeod, Portree, also preached in Gaelic. The church is seated for 270 persons.

Rev. John Mack, B.D., who was ordained and inducted by the Garioch Established Presbytery to Insch Parish Church on Thursday, was on Sunday introduced to the congregation by Very Rev. Dr. Pagan, Bothwell Parish Church, and Moderator of the General Assembly. There was a large assemblage, including representatives of other denominations.

The annual conference of the colporteurs employed in Aberdeenshire in connection with the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland was held at Udny on Saturday. Reports were given by those present on the different kinds of work done by the Society in each of the different districts represented, most of which are supported by local contributions.

Rev. Alfred Oates, having stated that unless his health improved he would have to resign Christ Church, Ware, has received an address, signed by 633 adult members of the congregation and parishioners, begging him to wait a little longer before he finally decides to resign. Mr. Oates, in his letter in reply, says he will "try a little longer, and may God give his blessing."

During the last month religious services have been held daily on the beach at Llandudno in connection with the "Children's Special Service Mission," and in the "Happy Valley" on Sunday afternoons. The services at the English Baptist Church have been well attended. The preachers during August have been Rev. Dr. Farrar, of Brooklyn, Rev. James Owen, Swansea, Rev. Arthur Mursell, London, and Rev. Joseph Hocking.

The following have been appointed as the Primitive Methodist proportion of the Methodist Œcumenical Conference. Arrangements Committee for the ensuing year: Revs. William Goodman (president of the Conference), J. Hallam, H. B. Kendall, R. W. Burnett, and Mr. E. C. Rawlings. The programme of the Conference is now being discussed by correspondence, the main outlines being pretty well agreed upon. Australia is likely to have a better position this time, to the satisfaction of all concerned.

The Bishop of Carlisle has received from Rev. E. F. Crosse, vicar of St. Luke's, Barrow-in-Furness, a letter with reference to the decision of the archbishops in the matter of incense and processional lights. Mr. Crosse writes: "I am president of the English Church Union for Westmoreland and North Lancashire, and, though I am writing only as one of your clergy, I thought you might care to know that whatever little interest or power I may possess privately or publicly, it will be used in maintaining the duty of accepting the archbishops' ruling."

In connection with the Free Church of Scotland Extension Scheme, a hall has been erected at Cathcart, N.B. The hall was dedicated to public worship on Thursday last, Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, moderator of the last General Assembly, preaching to a crowded congregation. The Presbytery afterwards inducted Rev. T. Pearson, late of East Kilbride, to the charge, the service being conducted by the Rev. D. S. M'Donald. As Cathcart district is a rapidly growing one, it is expected that the congregation will soon be able to proceed with the church, of which the hall is but a part.

The services on Douglas Head, Isle of Man, continue to meet with great encouragement. On Sunday week appeals were made on behalf of the Isle of Man Industrial Home for Orphan and Destitute Children. Rev. W. M. Barrow, vicar of St. Philemon's, Liverpool, preached the sermon, and was assisted in the short service that preceded it by Rev. R. B. Baron, vicar of St. George's, Douglas, and by Rev. Canon Quirk, vicar of Bath Abbey, who was formerly vicar of St. Thomas's, Douglas, and assisted Bishop Rowley Hill when the services were originally started on Douglas Head.

On Saturday last seventy of the delegates appointed to represent British Congregationalism at the International Council, to be held next month at Boston, left Liverpool by the steamer Umbria. Among the number were Rev. Alfred Rowland, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A., the secretary to the Union, who was happily sufficiently recovered from his recent severe illness to be able to join his brethren. Although this is supposed to be the "official party," several prominent ministers have already reached the United States, including Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, the chairman of the Congregational Union for the present year, and Rev. Burford Hooke, secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, who has entered upon extensive deputation work in Canada. Then the steamer Oceanic, which will make her first voyage this week, will have among her passengers the final detachment, including Drs. Principal Fairbairn, J. Brown, and P. T. Forsyth, and Mr. W. Crosfield, of Liverpool.

Notices.

A correspondent inquires regarding a booklet entitled, Ankle Deep; or the River of Pentecostal Power. He would like to know the price and publisher. Address: Mr. Lewis Weaver, 55, Rice Lane, Walton, Liverpool.

Communications Received with Thanks—G.McE. J.R. F.M.G. I.M.M.Y. B.J.W. Mrs. R. I.H. K.M. H.C.P. H.W.H. J.W.C.F. B.H.A. J.H. J.G.B. F.E.M. G.B. B.P. R.H. T.H.G. H.B.M. S.T.F. F.W.C. T.F. M.F.P. W.R.B. E.B. T.H. W.O.M. V.N.T. E.V.K. C.H. G.H.P. J.N.G. M.C.M. H.H.W. J.M. W.D. G.S. W.J.T. M.S.S. S.S. S.S. A.S.C. N.J. W.S. R.D.S. W.C. E.W. A.E.L. F.I.B. G.G. M.F.P. N.W. F.R.H.S. A.E.D. R.S. J.A.F. Mrs. G.H. M.A.R. J.C.H. G.S. J.B.M. A.W.N.

Applications for Tracts.—Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.; Mr. Geo. E. Baker, 3, Oak Village, Gospel Oak, N.W. (for hop-pickers); John Watkins, 69, 4 Row, George Town, Tredegar, Mon.; Walter Whenday, Freehold, Hadlow, Kent; Mr. David Millie (for lodging-house distribution), 8, Bruce Street, Stirling, Mr. W. J. Harrison, 14, Neckinger Street, Abbey Street, Bermondsey; Maggie Reid, Irvinestown, Fermanagh, Ireland; Mr. A. M. Scuttlebury, 12, Claremont Road, Handsworth, Birmingham; Mr. Lambert, 55, Chamberlain Road, The Hyde, Lower Edmonton, N.; W. Neill, 7, Manor Road, Bowes Park, N. (for seamen); Mr. W. G. Hedges (Police Court Missionary), 59, Hendford, Yeovil; Mr. S. Parkes, Middleton Cowling, via Keighley, Yorks; Mr. W. Jeffrey, 21, Carnarvon Road, Norwich; Mr. H. Burnett, Gospel Hall, Westerham, Kent.

Requests for Prayer.

For a great blessing upon the approaching Convention, to be held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, in the last week of September.

For blessing on the Kingstown (co. Dublin) Convention, September 11-16; also on meetings for men to be held during the winter, at the Men's Christian Institute, Kingstown.

On behalf of a tent mission to be held during September at Loughton, conducted by Mr. Thomas Goudie of the Evangelization Society.

The Church Army and the Workhouse.—Nearly 150 workhouses have been booked for short missions by the Church Army Prison and Workhouse Mission Staff, and the society expects to have close upon 300 booked by the autumn. The reports received week by week from the chaplains and masters of the workhouses where these missions have already been conducted are very encouraging. The Chaplain of the City of London Union (Rev. Dr. Roberts) reports: "I cannot but feel most grateful to the Church Army for the good work done. The missioners were earnest, full of zeal, and acted with due discretion. The addresses were practical, and uttered in words full of enthusiasm, and well adapted to the capacity of the congregations. The pure Word of God was preached in all earnestness to awaken the conscience and touch the heart." These missions are conducted free of all cost.

Pure Literature Society.—Nearly fifty years ago a pamphlet was written by Miss Mayne, entitled "The Perilous Nature of the Penny Periodical Press." This excited at the time a great deal of attention, and led some to think what could be done to promote the circulation of healthy and useful literature. The issuing of this pamphlet was the seed which was to bear fruit in the form of the "Pure Literature Society." The report for last year shows good work still being done:—9,247 libraries supplied half-price to working men, schools, and other institutions; value, £74,327. 1,000 parcels of selected periodicals sent out monthly. 4,733 volumes, carefully selected, are on its list. 100 magazine associations in connection. 106 libraries, value £692, granted half-price in 1898. An appeal is made for increasing support in order to meet the ever-widening opportunity for effective service. Address: 11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, Strand, W.C.

About Books.

Frederick Langbridge has a remarkable power of packing much thought into few lines. Many will welcome his new publication, Little Tapers: A Daybook of Verses. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) The short pieces are suggestive of great things in the sphere of faith and godliness.

A series of papers by Ruth Lamb, first published in the Girl's Own Paper, appear in more permanent form in In the Twilight. (Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society). The pages are distinctly superior to much that is issued for the moral and religious instruction of young women, and we trust they will have many readers.

A volume having varied attractions for Christian workers is The Story of the Religious Tract Society for One Hundred Years. By Rev. Samuel G. Green, D.D. (1s. 6d. R. T. S.). What with its many portraits and pictures, the work has a personal as well as a literary and evangelistic interest. The story is one of remarkable progress, and the facsimiles of old publications show this to apply to style of production as well as to the extension of operations.

A handbook which many ladies will be glad to consult is Embroidery; or, The Craft of the Needle, by W. G. Paulson Townsend (Design Master at the Royal School of Art Needlework), assisted by Louisa F. Pesel and others. The letterpress instructions are accompanied by some seventy illustrations, including examples from the South Kensington Museum Collection, also from designs by the late Sir Edward Burne-Jones and William Morris; and by Walter Crane, Selwyn Image, G. Faulkner Armitage, and others. (3s. 6d. net. Truelove, Hanson, & Combe, 6b, Sloane Street, S.W.)

Dr. Alexander MacKennal has written a volume descriptive of the Homes and Haunts of the Pilgrim Fathers, to which Mr. Charles Whymper has supplied upwards of 100 illustrations. It will be issued in two forms. There will be an Edition de Luxe of 200 copies, 150 copies for Great Britain, and 50 copies for the United States, containing four coloured plates, and with first impressions of all the illustrations. A further edition of 800 copies will be issued. A prospectus issued from the Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster Row, gives particulars regarding bindings and subscription prices.

Kensit's History of the Reformation is a big penny-worth. It summarises a great chapter in history. (Kensit.)

Bridget's Watch, by Mrs. Harvey-Jellie, is the first of the "Gem Stories," issued monthly, by G. Stoneman. (One penny.)

Light and Darkness, by "Spes," is a story of modern life, in which Ritualism is attacked in strenuous fashions (1s. Partridge).

A revised edition is issued of Mr. F. W. Pitt's After Death (9d. Partridge), an analysis and review of various opinions, and a comparison of the same with scriptural pronouncement.

The Photo-Miniature for August is devoted to Stereoscopic Photography. Both in point of contents and style this is an admirable periodical of its class. (6d. net. Dawbarn & Ward.)

Lesson Papers in Religious Knowledge—Part 1, St Matthew, by Rev. George Hugh Jones, will be found a useful book by those preparing for examinations. (6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

A deeply interesting publication is The Presbyterian Church of England: an Outline of its Doctrine, Worship, Polity, History. It was prepared by the late Dr. Donald Fraser, and has since been revised. (1d. Office, 14, Paternoster Square.)

Bishop Ryle's stirring Gospel booklets are now being published from Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling. The Stradbroke Series, printed on tinted paper, cost 2s. per 100. So far three packets (6d.), each containing twenty-five, assorted, have been issued.

The Great Eastern Railway Company has issued a booklet, giving particulars of tours arranged in the Thuringian Mountains, the Luther Country, and the Hartz Mountains, via the Royal Mail Harwich-Hook of Holland Route. (Office, 30, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Mr. A. Ritchie Leask, 95, Minories, E., has issued a series of Pictorial Post Cards, displaying typical British warships, from original pictures, by Fred. T. Jane, the naval artist. The cards are reproductions in twelve colours, and are fine examples of chromo-lithography. (1s. for twelve.)

Mr. B. Tompkins has issued a second and enlarged edition of his book, The Theory of Water-Finding by the Divining Rod. The pages deal with the history of the method, and proclaim its success in the hands of the author. There are portraits and illustrations. (1s. 6d. B. Tompkins, Chippenham.)

The official Report of the Christian Endeavour Convention held at Belfast in Whitsuntide, 1899, makes a goodly pamphlet of 180 pages. A portrait of Rev. F. B. Meyer, president of the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland, is given as a frontispiece. There are many other illustrations. (1s. Andrew Melrose.)

Thoughts from the Word of God and Words of Life are little magazines or leaflets, printed on the cyclostyle, and intended for Christians and the unsaved respectively. They are very neatly printed, and contain good pointed truth in condensed form. The editor and publisher is Mr. P. W. Heward, 14, Pier Head, Wapping, London, E.

Useful pamphlets, issued by Mr. C. J. Thynne, on Protestant principles and practices, are—The Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers thereof, by Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool (3d.); and The Atonement, a Witness against Sacerdotalism, by Professor Moule, of Cambridge. (1d.) A plain and positive statement of sound doctrine is The Lord's Supper, by Rev. F. C. Spurr. (1d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE summer holidays are now drawing to an end, and Christian workers are flocking homewards with renewed health, and eager hearts, to their several spheres of labour. Seldom, if ever, has there been a more beautiful summer granted to us. The health resorts have been crowded since the spring, while the high tide of prosperity, which the country has been enjoying, has enabled thousands to enjoy a time of rest and refreshment, who otherwise would have been unable to avail themselves of the opportunity. Here is a call to renewed energy in the Lord's work. Rest and refreshment should lead to more earnest consecration. The problems of evil and suffering, want, and woe, are all around us. Gratitude for the goodness of God to us, as individuals and as a nation, should fill us with an honest desire to bless those around us, and deepen a sacred passion for the souls that lie in darkness and sin. The sunshine of the summer ought to be transformed into the ministries of spiritual service during the winter.

The result of the Cabinet Council which met on Friday last is to emphasize the "policy of firmness and patience" which has hitherto guided the British Government in its dealings with the Transvaal. The war party in this country had been expecting great things from that meeting, but they have been rightly disappointed. Slowly, but surely, opinion in South Africa is tending towards pressure on the Boers to grant a rightful proportion of representation to the Uitlanders; and, if President Kruger and his advisers are wise, there will be no war. The incalculable evils that would arise from an armed conflict at present in South Africa are slowly pressing themselves on the hearts of all concerned. Here is a call for continued waiting upon God, that He may guide the deliberations of the rulers into the path of peace and friendship.

The Friends have always been honourably distinguished by the high standard of commercial morality which has marked their business relations; and the problem of "secret commissions" has very properly taken a prominent place in the deliberations of their "Summer School." That it is a great, crying evil, a recent investigation by the London Chamber of Commerce has clearly shown. How to overcome it is a more difficult matter. Some good advice was given to employers to discountenance the custom in every possible way, and to employés, to report to their own employers every offer of commissions made to them. Something may be done, doubtless, by legislation to stem the evil, but nothing short of the purifying of public opinion will meet it at its root. It would be a bad thing for this country if something is not done to check this far-spreading iniquity.

Another serious difficulty in the way of commercial integrity is disclosed in the correspondence carried on in a contemporary on the subject of "premiums to shop-assistants" for the sale of out-of-date dress and other materials. This puts a temptation in the way of many of weak principles to push unsaleable articles under false pretences. One assistant pertinently writes:

It is strange that in houses of religious masters no instructions are given, nor any effort made, to ascertain the statements made by assistants; and the employer little knows how much his profits are swelled, and his stock kept in good condition, by the untruthfulness of some of his employés in their cupidity to secure valuable premiums.

Christian employers would do well to take note of this hint; for dishonesty committed in their name they are responsible, unless they do their best to hinder it, by removing the temptation that leads to it.

When business men learn that one subject set down for debate at the forthcoming Church Congress is, "The Commercial Morality of Companies, and the Responsibility of Directors," they will be inclined to say "Physician, heal thyself." And there is certainly good ground for the retort, so long as the clergy in many instances violate without scruple their own ordination vows, and receive the emoluments of a Protestant Church while spreading the tenets of Rome. Nevertheless, the topic in itself is extremely important, and will undoubtedly be considered with a view to purging certain business relations of the appearance of combined deliberate fraud. There is certainly an urgent need for the cultivation of a higher morality in the multifarious business combinations which seem indispensable to the commercial life of to-day.

A Jesuit priest read a paper at the Conference of the Catholic Truth Society, in which he pointed out that three of the principal stumbling-blocks in the way of accepting the Catholic faith have been removed by the teaching systematically given in a Protestant church. An appreciable number of persons in a village he knows have, in twenty years, been changed from Protestants into those who love a ceremonial religion, who believe in the real presence, and who practise confession. He goes on to say that, when seeking forgiveness for their sins, men should be brought into dependence on their fellow men. Yet the Romish tendencies of Ritualism are pooh-poohed by some, probably in the hope that things may be smoothed over until the time comes for an open secession of the English Church to Rome.

From the letter of a recent convert to Rome found in the pages of the Record, it is no use to deny further that sacerdotalism is a very safe nursery for Rome. It is the whole system of ritualistic teaching and practice that is so pernicious. The writer says:—

The actual decision was very much the result of the E.C.U. manifesto, and its thinly-veiled defiance, coupled with absolute defiance of the bishop in this town, and determined disobedience to him.

Could you have heard some of the sermons I have sat under, you would have said with me, "This is not Protestantism, and if these doctrines be true let me go to the fountain-head for them and be honest." Where is authority if each clergyman is his own law, and where is honesty if a man is recommended by Lord Halifax to sail as close to the wind as possible, and obey the letter and not the spirit of the decision?

Conscientious laymen are thus alienated from the Church of their fathers by the utter disregard of oath and vow on the part of some of the clergy. It is time this heresy was driven out of the Establishment.

Another point on which special stress was laid at the Catholic Truth Conference was the paucity of lay workers in the Romish Church, as compared with Protestant churches generally. The reason for this is surely not far to seek. Where the priest bulks so largely, and the layman has no organized place to fill in the church order, and no voice in its management, it is inevitable that he should tend to leave all religious work in the hands of the priest, as being alone properly qualified to do it. It is only when the rights of all believers, as members of the true Body of Christ, are freely and fully acknowledged that the responsibility of all to take part in the furtherance of the Kingdom can be brought home. This is done in all truly Protestant churches, and, as a result, laymen, equally with their ministers, feel the call to service to be a personal one to themselves. Romanism, in the above lament, condemns herself as a false system. She is only reaping as she has sown.

We have absolute sympathy with a distinguished priest, who, on leaving the church where he had been a teacher and confessor of some high in office, declined to say whether he would join Protestantism.

For the moment, I desire simply to be a good and true Christian, and to eat my bread in the sweat of my brow.

"A good and true Christian:" that is enough. If men can be brought to that, the isms may take care of themselves.

Mrs. Humphry Ward's letter to the Times, in which she pleads for the inclusion of Unitarians like herself in the "National Church," is a curious sign of the times. This is not the first time that a member of that body has shown a strange tenderness towards the High Church party. Extremes meet here as elsewhere. Mrs. Ward takes the part of the Ritualists so far as affirming their right to worship as they please within the Episcopal pale; and, in return for this remarkable catholicity of temper, asks for a place within the Church for the "Christianity of Jowett, Caird, Martineau, and Green," i.e., the religion of "free and critical thought," in which miracles, the Virgin Birth, the Incarnation, and the Resurrection are calmly ruled out of court!

If this eirenicon from the extreme "left" to the extreme "right" of English Christianity were accepted, we should have an Established Church composed of Romanists at one end and Unitarians at the other! It is difficult to see how such people could possibly worship together. The Church papers of all shades reject the suggestion with emphasis. The only significance of the incident to the average Christian is the proof it affords that the more earnest and open-minded thinkers among the Unitarians feel a vague lack in their creed and modes of worship, and long for a little of the warmth and devotion of those whose faith is more definite and robust in form. So far, at least, we may be thankful. Such a tacit confession and appeal are valuable, as showing that the bald abstractions and cold generalities of "free and critical thought" do not satisfy even their votaries.

Canon Christopher enjoyed the personal friendship of the late Sir Arthur Cotton, and many read with satisfaction and pleasure his biographical tribute in the Record a few weeks ago. Having now been issued in booklet form, the pages will have a still larger circle of readers. They outline the career of one whose life in India was a public benefaction. It is worthy of remark that this great worker was for fifty years an abstainer from the use of alcoholic drinks. His engineering achievements are here sketched by the pen of a firm friend and admirer. (25 copies for 1s.; 250 for 5s.; post free. "Record" Office, Red Lion Court, E.C.)

We are frequently receiving appeals for Nonconformist church buildings, often expensive ecclesiastical structures, not nearly so suitable for evangelistic purposes as a hall, which would be much less costly, and more generally useful. We commend to the notice of friends in populous neighbourhoods the buildings of the Forward Movement in Cardiff, concerning which Rev. J. Pugh, of that important centre, might be consulted.

The love of danger is among the strangest passions of human nature, and year by year it leads many bold spirits to their doom. This year has been remarkable for the number of fatal accidents in the Alps. Physical dangers are not the only kind that exercise fascination over adventurous spirits. Moral perils also have their captivating influence, and to walk in dangerous places charms many a soul to its ruin. It is better to walk in the middle of the path than to be ever skirting spiritual precipices.

When men fall into diverse kinds of temptation, it is for one or both of two reasons. Falling may result from unsteadiness, or from the habit of walking in "slippery places." Spiritual unsteadiness accounts for the loss of many souls in their walk through life—hesitation as to the value of their principles, a dallying with alternatives that should never be tampered with. And there are multitudes who are ever fond of skirting the perilous line of wrong-doing, and indulging in doubtful pleasures or courses of conduct. The path of safety is the right and reasonable path in all matters of life and habit. And that is to be found only under Divine guidance. "As for me," said the Psalmist, "my feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped, until I went into the sanctuary of God." (Psalm lxxiii. 2, 17.)

In Gateshead, which has one licensed house to every 461 inhabitants, there are also five clubs in which intoxicants are sold, and over which the police have no control; these clubs, it is believed, are likely to increase as they have done in Lancashire. This club question is one of serious moment. If the most dangerous trade in the land can be carried on without leave or control, there is no telling to what lengths it may go, and even where it is licensed and controlled it has gone beyond all reasonable bounds. Selfishness among manufacturers and dealers, passion among the victims of drink, and apathy among many Christians as to the evil done, combine to maintain and extend a great national danger.

A healthy protest needs to be raised against the tyranny of fashion among women who belong to religious circles. A writer in Blackwood's speaks strongly against the amount of money spent during the present season on the details of dress. The fashions have been cunningly arranged with a view to lavish expenditure. An exaggerated importance is given to outward appearances. What economists call "the standard of comfort" is being continually raised, which means that as our national wealth increases, so do the artificial wants which tend to eat it up. The result will be that when bad times return, as must inevitably be the case, there will be less reserve in hand to meet them, and much needless suffering must ensue. Simple tastes, and a hatred of luxurious ease, are all-important to the true welfare of the people, and those who profess to live by higher standards should be the first to set an example in this direction.

The exceptional prosperity of the country—as the returns for the past three-quarters of the current year show—both as regards exports and imports, gives rise to many thoughts concerning the languishing condition of certain missionary and philanthropic societies. The increase of £13,000,000 in our exports points to a source whence the several new century funds should receive ample and ungrudging support. We are convinced that it requires a very little self-denial to lay upon the altar of the new century such gifts from Christ's own redeemed ones as shall equip the Church for a mighty forward movement all along the line. The money is in the country, some of it in the hands of Christian people. Christ expects that believing men and women will not fail to devote a fair proportion of it to the moral and spiritual needs of the world.

Mr. Richard Whiteing, author of "No. 5, John Street," thinks that the ills of the East End of London require many remedies; no one thing can succeed. Every man must work according to the light that he has; and some day, perhaps, a man will arise with power to unite all the several plans, and use them for the common good. We agree that many things are wanted, or rather one thing—the love of God—applied in many ways. But no one person is likely to organize and use the manifold energies that are required. The great work of doing good is always intricate, delicate, subtle, varied, like the functions of the different organs of the body. There is only one wisdom that can guide, one power that can control. "God worketh all in all." We do our little parts, but the plan of the whole is in his mind alone. Let us ever pray to be directed by Him!

Doing good by deputy is a poor thing; doing our duty in that way is impossible, and the attempt always ends in failure. Sir John Gorst has pointed out with great force that nothing can compensate for the lack of interest on the part of parents in the education of their own children. It is a parent's duty to see that his children are educated, and if he fails, neither the Government, nor the School Board, nor the paid teacher can make up for the lack. There are duties which are imperative, as there are relationships which are fundamental. To quicken conscience in regard to these is one of the grand offices of religion. If the hearts of the fathers are turned to the children, and of the children to the fathers, education and a great many other things will be improved.

In The Speaker's Commentary we find the following questionable note on 2 Kings vi. 19.

> Untruth has been held by all moralists to be justifiable towards a public enemy. Where we have a right to kill, much more have we a right to deceive by stratagem.

This defence of untruth is entirely unnecessary. The man whom Benhadad sought was not Elisha, but the king of Israel, and Elisha fulfilled his word by leading the Syrians to Samaria, and introducing them to the king.

France on Trial.

DREYFUS has been again condemned as guilty of treason, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. It still seems impossible that this unrighteous sentence should stand, and all the civilised world waits the issue of the appeal which has been already lodged. The evident bias of the Judges against the accused, and their no less evident subserviency to the Generals who were the accusers, had prepared the minds of many close observers for a divided verdict, but the actual result has given a shock to the moral sense of the whole world, and has grievously lowered the prestige of France among the civilized nations of the earth.

It was not Jesus who was really on his trial before Pilate. It was Pilate himself, and the Roman Government, the Jewish nation, and the Gentile world. The unrighteous judgment was reversed by the Judge of all the earth, and Pilate and the priests, the Jews and the Gentiles, have been condemned in the Court of Heaven for the murder of the Son of God. It is not really Captain Dreyfus who has been on his trial at Rennes, but the Court-Martial and the Army, the French Government and Nation. So far, judgment has gone against them. The Judges, by a majority of five to two, have condemned themselves and the Army which they represent. It remains to be seen whether the Government will perpetuate the infamy, or, by whatever process, release this man whom all the world outside of France believes and declares to be innocent of the charge, for which he has already endured five years of physical and mental torture.

The main cause of the enmity against him, and the head and front of his offending, is that he belongs to the race beloved for the fathers' sakes, the time of whose redemption draweth nigh. He is a typical illustration of the present position of the Jewish nation. He is, and will be, a burdensome stone to France, as his people will be a burdensome stone to all nations. Meanwhile, we hope and pray that he may see in Jesus his Friend and Saviour, by whom alone the sinner of any nation is reconciled to God.

We cannot pass, without rendering them the honour due to their courage and honesty, the names of the two minority judges, of Picquart and Freystaetter, Casimir-Perier, and Trarieux, and not least, Labori and Demange, who have so bravely fought for the right. Labori, carrying on his masterly examinations with an anti-Semite bullet in his back, is as great an honour to France as the five majority judges are a disgrace. Very deep, too, is our sympathy for Madame Dreyfus and her children in the terrible ordeal to which they have been subjected. In this none of our readers can do other than join.

France fails to see the thing that is for her good in the remarkable acquiescence she manifests in the decision. The whole civilized world looks at the nation that can approve of an iniquity like that which has just been revealed, with profound alarm for the honour of what was once a great nation. This is the final outcome of the godless Revolution of a century ago. The very idols which were then raised in the place of the true God, "liberty, equality, fraternity," have become a by-word and a reproach. With certain differences, the lament of Jeremiah has become strangely applicable to a new situation: "A wonderful and horrible thing is come to pass in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." And we are impelled to ask in the prophet's further words:—"But what will ye do in the end thereof?" (Jer. v. 31.)

The Lord's Prayer.

Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

III.—The Coming of the Kingdom.

ALREADY in this form of prayer, which our Lord gave to his disciples for their guidance, we have learned that not our own personal needs or wants, but God's glory, should come first in our seeking. When we come into the presence of our bountiful and gracious Father, we are not to begin at once to clamour for the things we would like for ourselves, but are first of all to plead for the hallowing of our Father's name.

We are taught to hold our own wishes still further in check, for in this second petition our prayer is to be for the coming of God's kingdom. We should note well the relative value of things pertaining to God, and things which pertain only to the life and comfort of our bodies. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." No matter how pressing our need for bread, we need God more.

"Thy kingdom come." What is the kingdom of God for whose coming we are here taught to pray? It is not the rule of God over the material universe. Nor is this a prayer for the speedy coming of death to the child of God, that he might enter into the joys and felicities of heaven's blessedness. Our Lord's own prayer for his disciples was not that they should be taken out of the world, for they have a work to do here, but that they should be kept from the evil one. "Thy kingdom come" is a prayer for the coming of God's moral and spiritual sway over the hearts and lives of men. There is no need to prove that in this realm God's kingdom does not have unresisted sway. It is not necessary here to recite the story of man's rebellion. It began in Paradise. It is interesting, however, to notice that, immediately, God set about restoring his kingdom. The protevangelium was spoken amid the very words which told of sin's ruin. From that day to this, God has been seeking to reclaim his place as King in the hearts and lives of men. In the fulness of time to reveal to man the possibilities of spiritual life, to die for the world, and to set up the kingdom of God in full power on the earth.

CHRIST CAME TO DECLARE GOD,

We have only to turn to our Lord's teachings, to learn the character of this kingdom. It is spiritual; it seeks to rule over men's consciences, their affections, their whole life. A kingdom is where a king rules; God would rule in our hearts. The kingdom has come in any of us just in the measure in which God governs our thoughts, our wills, our desires. The kingdom is not fully come in us yet, in so far as we still resist God's will and fail to obey Him fully, whether it be in act, or word, or wish, or affection, or feeling.

If we ask, What is the character of this kingdom of God? we find the first answer in the name of the King. He is our Father. We need not be afraid of this King. The Bible in every chapter declares the goodness of God. The Old Testament shines with revealings of his mercy. Then in Jesus Christ we have the full revelation of the Divine character. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," Jesus declared. Every word, act, and disposition of that life of marvellous beauty, show us some new revealing of God. Then on Calvary we have the unveiling of the very heart of our Father, when He gave his only begotton Son; when Christ, the Son of God, gave Himself up to the death of the cross for us.

This is our King. The King desires to reign in us.

HIS NAME IS LOVE.

No reign of the gentlest sovereign on earth was ever so beneficent, so gracious, as the sway of Him who desires to be our King, and craves of us that we submit ourselves to Him.

When we turn to our Lord's teachings, we find many thoughts about this kingdom, revealing to us its character. It "cometh not with observation"—that is, so that its progress can be noted by human eyes. Earthly kingdoms advance with pomp and noise, in cruel wars, crushing enemies before them, in display of power which awes men. The kingdom of God advances silently. One of its symbols is light—the morning comes noiselessly.

This kingdom is not an earthly organization. The Church is not the kingdom of God—the Church with its ecclesiastical system, its ritual, simple or ornate, its numbered membership, its sacraments, its ministrations. "The kingdom of God is within you," said the Master. It sets up its throne in men's hearts. It rules over men's lives. Every true Christian is in the kingdom of God, and this kingdom is also in him. But the kingdom of God and the visible Church are not identical. There are many in whom this kingdom is, whose names are not on the roll of any church; and no doubt there are members of the visible Church in whom the kingdom of God has not found a realm.

If we ask what the laws of this kingdom are, we find them plainly revealed in our Lord's teachings. The Beatitudes tell us who are the blessed or happy ones; that is, who have submitted to the rule of God. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The meek, also, and those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake—all these give evidence that the kingdom of God has taken its place within them. Love is of this kingdom. Christ taught his disciples that they must have love. They must love each other as He had loved them. They must love, not merely the good and the lovable, but the evil and the unlovely as well. The love must be like God's, and He makes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the just and the unjust. John, who had learned the lesson on the Master's bosom, into whose life the kingdom came with marvellous power, taught that "if we love one another, God abideth in us, and his love is perfected in us." And again, "If a man say, 'I love God,' and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?"

THE GREAT CENTRAL LAW

This love is not a sentiment merely—it rules the life, and its outcome is service. In Christ Himself the kingdom of God had perfect development, and He said of Himself: "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." The kingdom of God has come in us just in the measure in which we love and serve.

Meek Jesus! to my soul thy Spirit lending,
Teach me to live like Thee in lowly love;
With humblest service all thy saints befriending,
Until I serve before thy throne above.

What, then, do we pray for when we say, "Thy kingdom come"? Our prayer has a twofold burden. We ask that in others and in the world God's rule may be more and more fully recognized. We ask that men may become better, holier, truer; that righteousness and truth may prevail; that love may grow. When we see wickedness yet abounding, when we read the story of the crime, cruelty, and wrong that stain this fair earth, making such sorrow, we are apt to think that a most meagre answer has come to this prayer, which has been going up to heaven, now, these nineteen centuries. Yet the prayer has been wondrously answered already. "If God had not heard this prayer," says Maurice, "going up from tens of thousands in all ages, the earth would have been a den of robbers." What the best Christian civilization is, in contrast with the debasement of the worst heathen lands, shows how far the kingdom of God has come.

Still, however, even the best and holiest parts of the earth are far from the perfect realizing of the blessing sought in this petition.

EVERYWHERE SIN STILL ABOUNDS

and wrong, injustice, crime and cruelty are found among men. Even in the purest church and in the sweetest home the kingdom of God is not yet fully come. We should never cease to breathe to our Father the petition, "Thy kingdom come."

We also ask in this prayer that in our own heart the kingdom of God may come with more and more power. Joan of Arc, when asked what was the secret of their victoriousness and unconquerableness of her white banner, answered, "I send it forth against the enemy, and then I follow it myself." When we send out the white banner of such a prayer as this, we should be careful to follow it with our own life. While we ask that the kingdom of God may come, we should make sure that its coming be not hindered, but in every way promoted in us. This means that we shall leave our sins, our grasping and greed, our jealousy, our resentment, our selfishness and pride, and whatever in us is unlovely and unholy; and that we let into our life whatsoever things are true, honourable, just, pure, and lovely. The kingdom of God has its perfect realization in heaven. It has come in us, then, only in so far as heaven's spirit has been brought down into our heart.

There never is a day, therefore, for any of us when we do not NEED TO PRAY THIS PRAYER.

Who of us has yet let the kingdom of God come in him as it might have come? Who of us is ready now to have this kingdom rule in him absolutely, yielding to God's sway every part of his being, bringing into subjection to Christ every thought, feeling, desire, and affection? That is the way to the highest possibilities of grace in us. We do not know what God would make of us, what He could accomplish through us, if only we would offer this prayer out of our deepest heart, and then follow it with the complete submission of our life—body, soul, and spirit—to Him.

Whatever there may be disheartening to those who pray this prayer day and night, because of the delay of the answer, we know that the kingdom of God will come in glorious power, and that all men will yield to its blessed sway when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever."

True Wisdom.

MAN is become so devoid of understanding by his melancholy fall, that he is wholly turned away from God, his affections, as well as his cares and occupations, being entirely directed to vain and worthless outward things.

Everyone has his own puppet and foolish fancy. One man busies himself with honour and dignity; another with money and property; a third with pleasure and sensual gratification. They think and talk of buying and selling, of houses and gardens, of furniture and apparel, of eating and drinking, and of every novelty that occurs; and this not merely as need may require, and in a cursory manner, as ought reasonably to be the case, but with their whole attention, even as if they were matters of the greatest importance.

Blessed and truly wise are they who solely exercise themselves, with all their hearts, in the one thing needful; and, without much prolixity or stopping short with others, seek to live as though they were alone with God in the world. This is the shortest and easiest way to attain to a thorough, genuine, and habitual holiness and peace of mind. Bid eternally farewell, O my soul, to the vanities of this world, which in a little while shall vanish like a dream. Of all that thou hast and seest in this world, thou canst take nothing with thee out of it; all men will forsake thee, and thou must part with all men; thou wilt then have to do with God alone.

Gerhard Tersteegen (1697-1769).

The Scottish Navvy Mission Society has largely increased its staff of missionaries, and from their monthly reports there is every reason to expect that much good is being done. The mission rooms (which are built in sections and are movable) are open every evening, and, when wet, all day. Services, meetings and classes of different kinds, are held; and on the Sabbath a school for the children, and a Gospel service for the navvies and hut-keepers. During the week the missionary conducts a short service during the meal hour on the works, and visits the shanties, huts, and houses in the neighbourhood where the navvies may be living. To carry on this important work, and to open up fresh ground, an increase of help is needed. Books suitable for the reading rooms will also be gladly received. The hon. treasurer is W. A. A. Balfour, C.A., 49, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 17. 2 Kings xvi.

THROUGHOUT the reign of Ahaz, one of the most wicked of the kings of Judah, Isaiah was pursuing his course as prophet and statesman. The first ten or twelve chapters of his prophecies cast a flood of light on the inner politics of this time. No servant of God can look on the state of national affairs without deep concern. By prayer, speech, influence, vote, we are bound to resist what is wrong, and secure, so far as possible, that God's will should be done on earth, as in heaven. Our citizenship involves a solemn responsibility, which we cannot evade.

The policy of calling in the king of Assyria was fraught with the most disastrous ultimate consequences, in opening the way to further interference. Ahaz gave a portion out of the house of the Lord to the king of Assyria, "who distressed him, and strengthened him not." And in the time of his distress, did he trespass yet more against the Lord, this same king Ahaz.

It is remarkable, as showing the folly of the human heart, that though Damascus had fallen before the king of Assyria, and Ahaz went to meet Tiglath-pileser amid the ruins of its national life, yet he imitated the altar which he saw there, displaced with it the ancient brazen altar in Jehovah's temple, and introduced the gods of the conquered Syrians into Judah. One would have thought that he would have seen the futility of such a course, but there is no reason in the heart which has rejected God. This is the clue to much that we see around us in the present day. Men are going back to exploded philosophies, systems, and religious cults, which have failed again and again in the past. Take for instance, the revival of mediæval Roman Catholicism, which has cursed every nation that has put itself under her yoke.

MONDAY, September 18. 2 Kings xvii.

What an indictment is presented in this chapter against the chosen people—their secret sins (9), their public idolatries (10, 11), their rejection of God's testimonies (13), their assimilation to the objects of their worship (15), their sale of themselves to do evil (17)! For these reasons, the ten tribes, as such, were scattered, and have never been gathered since. Wanderers over the earth, they have found no resting-place, and are for evermore an evidence that God will not brook evil in his people, though they be bound to Him by the tenderest ties.

Yet, how marvellously this national uprooting and transportation have influenced the after-history of the world! What seemed an unmitigated evil was turned, in the good Providence of God, to marvellous gain. For as the scattered Jews went everywhere, they built their synagogues, scattered their Scriptures, and taught their doctrines of the unity and spirituality of God. It was on the foundation thus laid that the Apostles were able to build the churches which shone like lights amid the darkness of the first century of this era. Contrast the difficulty experienced by the missionaries of to-day, in acquainting heathen peoples with Christian modes of thought, with the avidity with which the proselytes and Gentiles welcomed the Apostles. The benefit accruing to the world through this dispersion is obvious.

How curious the mixture of the imported peoples and their attempt to worship Jehovah and their own gods together! Too many professing Christians treat religion as a kind of fetish. They feel that they ought to do something to recognize and propitiate the Deity! The Jews hated the Samaritans. But how generous the Saviour was, even making one of this hated people the central figure of his parable of mercy, and compelling the world to speak of the Good Samaritan!

TUESDAY, September 19. 2 Kings xviii.

When a soul is all for God, God is all for it. He takes such into his care, and pledges Himself to safeguard its interests. It was so with the good Hezekiah. Out of the ruins of the Jewish state, both national and and spiritual, he stood alone like some monolith of jasper or chrysolite. It is a refreshing change after the monotonous record of idolatry and sin, with which the previous pages of this book have been filled.

But such a career is never allowed to mature apart from virulent hatred and opposition. Whenever the Divine nature is reproduced in this fallen world, it excites antagonism. Herod seeks the young child to destroy it. At first the soul may flinch, and be terrified to compromise, as Hezekiah did when he promised submission to Sennacherib, and paid tribute. Well is it when such yielding is immediately followed by such exorbitant demands as to startle us back to our only true resting-place, in the care and love of God.

It may be, dear soul, that thou hast heard the voice of the adversary lately, as if he were ready to destroy. Thou hast stepped out on a course of obedience in simple faith in God, but, lo! the world seems in arms against thee. Acquaintance and friend stand aloof. The air is filled with the harsh voice of Rab-shakeh. His taunts are barbed with biting satire and sarcasm, and are uttered so that everyone may hear and repeat them. Sometimes they are exchanged for winning and gracious proposals, which promise an entire immunity and deliverance from all threatened evil, if thou wilt only yield. These are hardest. Yet dare to stand thy ground. Having done all, stand. Answer not the adversary; go on doing right, and leave God to vindicate thee.

WEDNESDAY, September 20. 2 Kings xix.

The story of Hezekiah's deliverance is in many respects parallel with the destruction of the Spanish Armada, when God shattered its proud array on the shores of our island home. But it is also fraught with instruction for the individual.

When bitter and threatening words are addressed to us, let us go up to the house of God. The prayers and assurances of his people will stand us in good stead. Let us ask them to lift up their entreaties and intercessions on our behalf. When we stand in God's secret place, we are in the calm centre of the cyclone. Around us the elements rage, but where we stand is peace. It is blessed when we feel that our cause and God's are so closely identified, that it is imperative for Him to interfere for his great name, with which our case is identified. He has heard and will rebuke.

Hezekiah's act in spreading out the letter before God, as if asking Him to peruse it, is very suggestive. God knows the contents of every envelope, but whatever the contents, spread it before the Lord; pray Him to incline his ear and hear, to open his eyes and see.

How triumphant is faith! Before ever the battle was formed, or the siege was raised, whilst yet only the threats were in the air, Isaiah spoke of the certain victory which must accrue, and of the irremediable destruction of the foe. Faith is the substance of things hoped for.

THURSDAY, September 21. 2 Kings xx.

What a contrast between Hezekiah and the Apostle Paul! To the great Christian hero death seemed infinitely desirable. He was ready to be offered; it would be gain to depart and be with Christ. But Hezekiah, good man though he was, who had walked before God in truth, with a perfect heart, turned his face to the wall and wept sore as the shadow of death fell on him. Could anything prove more conclusively how much we owe to the Lord Jesus, who has abolished death for those who trust Him? We cannot see how much difference his death and resurrection have made, because we view death only from the earth side. Could we view it from the other side, we should rightly estimate all the transformation which the bursting of Joseph's grave has wrought.

We cannot bring back the shadow of life's declining day. It has already passed down the ten steps on the dial, and will not recede. Yet there is a sense in which our sun never more goes down, but leads our days forward, when the Lord becomes to us an everlasting light, and the days of our mourning are ended.

The best of us, even after we have received some crowning mark of God's favour, are still liable to make great mistakes and fall into the sin of pride or vainglory. On the ruins of Assyria the kingdom of Babylon had arisen, and it was suicidal on Hezekiah's part to show all that the capture of Jerusalem might mean. Let us not be proud of anything we possess. God has given us all. We are his stewards and administrators. Oh, to be "found faithful!"

FRIDAY, September 22. 2 Kings xxi.

That Hezekiah was a sincerely good man is undeniable. Yet what a son he had in Manasseh! We wonder, naturally enough, whether the gross evils of his character were the result of the bad influences of his mother. But her name, Hephzibah, with its beautiful significance, "My delight is in her," assures us that she was probably a worthy consort to her husband. How then did Manasseh come to such a pitch of sin? Was there an undue austerity in his father's home which repelled him? Was Hezekiah so absorbed in the national reformation, which was proceeding under his direction, that he neglected his children? Was there unwisdom in the choice of the young prince's companions or preceptors? We suggest these, because we have so often seen their evil results in our own circle. It is beyond measure sad, however, when such a son follows such a father!

No man sins by himself. The evil of his deeds is far-reaching as the upas tree, which casts its poisonous effects upon all those who come within the sphere of its influence. Manasseh made Judah also to sin with his idols (11). Some of Christ's heaviest denunciations were launched against those who put an occasion to fall in the way of one of his little ones. God forgive us, if we are making life's battle harder for any soul.

What a contrast to this blood-thirsty, idolatrous monarch was that noble prophet Isaiah, whose blood may be included in v. 15! He is said to have been martyred, though not before he had written his sublime closing prophecies, as though turning from the present to the golden future.

SATURDAY, September 23. 2 Kings xxii.

This was a fair sunrise. This young life revived, in its earliest promise, the memory of the days of David. The house of God was repaired; the lost Book of the Law, which existed only orally, and in the memory of the Levites, but of which no known copy had survived the ruthless destruction of Uzziah, was found, read, and honoured; the Passover was re-instituted. As the outcome of all this, the promise was made that he should be gathered to his people in peace. Yet that prediction was not realised. Josiah died in battle against Egypt, as we shall see presently, and his dead body was brought to Jerusalem amid mourning, which became proverbial (Zech. xii. 2). Why this apparent "breach of promise"?

The answer is probably suggested in the temptation of our Lord. After He had refused to make bread of stones, because of his unutterable trust in his Father providing Him with all He required, Satan tempted Him to cast Himself from the Temple, in the utter abandonment of faith. This, however, our Lord refused to do. Though He could trust God, He must not tempt Him. He must not, for a moment, go beyond the enclosure of his will or revealed plan. On the other hand, Josiah, no doubt with this promise in his mind, and, it may be, rashly relying on it, rushed into battle with Pharaoh-nechoh, though there was no feud or hostility between them. The king of Egypt entreated him to forbear, but in vain. He threw himself over the mountain-brow in the madness of temerity, and suffered a crushing defeat. Trust God to the uttermost, but do not vaunt thyself, nor rashly shoot the rapids of temptation, unless clearly assured that such is God's purpose for your life.

Studies in Zechariah:

The Candlestick.

Zech. iv.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

On their return from Babylon, the Jews were confronted with immense difficulties arising from the opposition of their neighbours, their want of resources, and the incompetence of their leaders. The last was probably their most serious difficulty. Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and Zerubbabel had faltered in his attempt to rear the Temple. His hands had laid the foundation, but, after a brief effort, they had fallen paralysed by his side. Royal blood was in his veins, but he sadly lacked the energy and faith of the princes of his line. The rebuilding of the Temple had been greatly hindered, and for some time had been entirely suspended, and, all around, the heaped-up ruins and unused materials showed how much needed to be done. The suspicion may have suggested itself, and spread from lip to lip, that there could be no improvement, no hope of advance, whilst Zerubbabel was to lead.

These difficulties and forebodings rose like a mountain range between the returned exiles and the accomplishment of their purpose. Not more absolutely do the Himalayas, which seem like a vision of clouds to dwellers on the plains of India, wall out invasions and bar the northern route, than did these tremendous obstacles rear themselves before the returned remnant.

It was at this juncture, and to reassure them, that the Angel that talked with Zechariah came again, and waked him, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep. He did not minimize the greatness of the discouragements, but he brought a message of hope. Even though Zerubbabel might lack the essentials of a great leader, yet the success of their undertaking did not depend upon him, but on the Divine power, which was working through him to achieve the Divine purpose. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, "This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, 'Not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit,' saith the Lord of Hosts. Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain."

In the most express and unmistakable terms Zechariah was further assured that God would certainly fulfil his word through this scion of David's house. Moreover, the Word of the Lord came unto me, saying, The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it. He shall with shoutings of Grace, Grace unto it. With what new pleasure the prophet would contemplate the state of the temple area; and, the day of small things, as it undoubtedly was. With what new fortitude he would bear the adverse criticism of the old men who had seen the glory of the former house, and were loth to believe that anything could come of beginnings so feeble and delayed. He could already see the Prince of Judah, standing in the sunny air, plummet and trowel in hand, fixing the capstone in its place, amid the enthusiastic shouts of the people. Better than all, he could see the eyes of God, seven in number, because of their perfection, which run to and fro throughout the whole earth, rejoicing as they beheld the plummet in his hand. We pause here for a moment to absorb the sweetness of the suggestion, that God delights in his people's work for Him, and joins his congratulations with theirs, when the crown is placed on their labours.

BRING FORTH THE HEADSTONE

In order to make God's meaning clearer, the prophet was granted the vision of the candlestick (lamp-stand), the gist of which was that the wick, though necessary to the light, played a very inconsiderable part in its production. It had no illuminating power; it could only smoke, and char, and smoulder. At the best, it could only be a medium between the oil in the cistern and the fire that burnt on its serried edge. Thus Zerubbabel might be weak and flexible as a wick, but none of his deficiencies could hinder him finishing the work to which he had been called, if only his spirit was kindled with the Divine fire, and fed continually by the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit.

The candlestick, which Zechariah beheld in prophetic ecstasy, was evidently fashioned on the model of that in the Temple, the shape of which is still preserved to us on the Arch of Titus. The branches radiated from a central stem to the seven lamps. According to the R.V., there were seven pipes to each lamp, and therefore forty-nine in all. At the top there was a large bowl or cistern filled with the golden oil, in which the wicks of the lamps were dipped, and which stole up their texture to burn on the serried edge of flame. Nor was this all. On either side of this massive candlestick stood an olive-tree, from the heart of which, by a golden pipe, the oil was continually being poured into the reservoir, so that even though it might be limited in its containing power, there could be no failure in its ability to meet

THE INCESSANT DEMANDS OF ITS LAMPS.

As far as the Jews were concerned, the meaning of the vision was obvious. They were represented in the candlestick, of which the many lamps and the precious metal of its composition set forth their perfection and preciousness in the thought of God. Their function was to shed the light of his knowledge on the world, as it lay under the Power of Darkness; and, to aid them in fulfilling this mission, Divine supplies would be forthcoming from a celestial and living source, but brought to them through the golden pipes, of which one represented Joshua the Priest, and the other Zerubbabel the Prince. These men, therefore, were but mediums for Divine communications. Their sufficiency was not of themselves, but of God. The mission of Israel would be realized not by them but by the Spirit of God through them. They might seem altogether helpless and inadequate, but a living fountain of oil was prepared to furnish them with inexhaustible supplies.

For us, too, this vision is full of teaching, encouragement, and admonition, to which we do well if we pay heed.

The first chapter of the Book of Revelation, which compares the work of the Church during the present age to seven light-bringing candlesticks, suggests the application of this vision of Zechariah's to ourselves. As yet dawn has not broken, darkness envelops the earth, and gross darkness the peoples. But God has called his people, in the meanwhile, to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life." Let us recognise the important work to which God has called us; and whether it be as the household candle, the street lamp, or the gleam of the lighthouse, let us beware of hiding our light under a bushel, lest men stumble to their destruction. The lights of a dark night seldom receive their meed of notice or gratitude; but

HOW SHOULD WE DO WITHOUT THEM?

And though the children of this world rarely recognise their indebtedness to the Christian Church, they would be in a sorry plight if it were not for its threefold beam of faith, hope, and love.

The golden bowl filled with oil is an eloquent symbol of the relationship of our Redeemer to his people. "It hath pleased the Father that in Him all fulness should dwell." The fulness of the Holy Spirit is always at high-water mark within his glorious nature. It is not possible to imagine any aspect of Holy Ghost fulness which is not embraced and included in our glorious Lord; and there is no quality needed for the out-shining of Christian character which is not richly stored in Him; He is "the fulness of the Godhead bodily." His the spirit of wisdom and understanding; his the spirit of counsel and might; his the spirit of understanding and of the fear of the Lord; and He "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Press this thought to your heart, child of God, and dwell on this, that in Christ are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; He is the ocean-basin of God's infinite resources, that we may for ever draw on his stores, and be replenished from his fulness with grace upon grace.

It was explained to Zechariah that the olive trees on either side of the candlestick were the two sons of oil that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. If, in its primary significance, this figure indicated the royal and priestly elements of the Jewish national life, in our case it signifies the royal priesthood of our Lord and of us his people. He is a Priest upon his throne. He is a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek, who was King of Salem as well as Priest of the Most High God. Had He been only our Aaron, He would have made peace between God and us, by the shedding of his blood, and have gone into the Holy of Holies to intercede; but the veil would have fallen intact behind Him, and He would have had no power to introduce us into the Most Holy Place, and maintain us there. He would not have been able to communicate a royal and victorious life, which defies the power of sin, and goes forth to conquer in eternal vigour and beauty. Christ is King as well as Priest; and therefore He not only brings us nigh to God, but makes us sit with Him in the heavenlies of his eternal supremacy.

Yes, friend, we may be but as wicks, with no pith or power of our own, smoking, charring, burning out; unnoticed amid the flame we yield; unrewarded and unthanked; pieces of coarse tow. But let us keep a-soak in the fulness that is in Christ Jesus, let us abide in Him, let us dip deep into the well of his supplies; so shall the quality of his glorious nature yield itself up through us to the illumination of men.

The Late Mrs. G. J. Hill.

THE FRIEND OF SEAMEN.

A LIFE of practical goodness, of bright Christian service, and, latterly, of strange suffering and of calm endurance, was recently consummated by promotion to the heavenly sphere. By the departure of Mrs. G. J. Hill, the Seamen's Christian Friend Society has lost its truest friend. The diligent worker, the sympathetic comforter, the faithful remembrancer before God, has passed from our sight. This devoted woman, whose image is embalmed in many a heart, and the news of whose death was as tidings of a personal loss to hundreds on land and sea, needs no eulogy; yet it may be well to sketch the character which, by the grace of God, attained a rare and excellent beauty, and which has left its impress deeply graven on the Lord's work at the headquarters of the Society which it was her joy to carry on for thirty-three years, in fellowship with her beloved husband.

Emily Hill, whose maiden name was Jennings, was born fifty-three years ago at Burford, in Oxfordshire, the only child of Christian parents. The real value of that Christian parentage was seen in the fact that in her ninth year she definitely yielded herself to her Saviour, and five years later avowed her faith in Him in the ordinance of baptism, in connection with the Baptist Church of which her father was a deacon. Her early education was entrusted to Miss Unwin, a connection of the great African missionary, Dr. Moffat; and whose Christian influence has been felt by so many of the daughters of missionaries. Her exertions with the child were seconded by the parents, for when placed, in later years, at a more advanced school, they declined to allow her to be taught dancing, fearing lest it might prove a snare to her Christian life. In her nineteenth year, when on a visit to London, she had a long and serious illness, from which she reaped much spiritual benefit. In the school of affliction she learned lessons which no human teacher could have imparted. She was married towards the close of her twentieth year to Rev. G. J. Hill, who had known her from childhood days.

From a photograph by Mr. W. Bartlett, 134, East India Road, Poplar, E.

Her public ministry included the service of song, her voice being consecrated to her Lord; the conduct of Bible classes, public speaking, and lecturing, for which she was singularly gifted; and lastly, the collecting of funds for the work among seamen, a task to which she devoted the strength of her life. The success of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society is due, in no small measure, to her untiring energy, her wide and gracious sympathy, her attractive power, her faith in Christ, and her fearless zeal for the honour of his name in the salvation of men for whom He died. It was in the year 1875 that she began to engage in personal dealing with the anxious, and took some part in the inquiry-room work during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London campaign. To this form of service, in which she was afterwards so greatly used, she often said she was first prompted by the example and influence of her friend, Rev. G. M. Butler, of Liverpool.

During all these years, at the regular services at the Society's headquarters in Ratcliff Highway, when her husband was preaching, she would be scanning the faces of the sailors, and would meet and speak, at the close, with any whom she had seen in tears, or who had given any other indications of anxiety. In this connection it may be noted that she had a wonderful eye and memory for faces. The late C. H. Spurgeon once told Mrs. Hill that he rarely forgot a face that he had once carefully looked at. This gift she possessed in a large degree, and in working with sailors it proved specially helpful. Once when occupying the pulpit with her husband at a Wesleyan chapel in Cornwall, she said: "The mate of the Conductor has just come in, and is sitting in the last seat." When service was over, the mate was waiting to speak with her. She had last seen him in London, never in Cornwall, and he was not one of the best known of her large circle of sea-faring acquaintances.

For many years Mrs. Hill engaged in Sunday School work, and one of the teachers at the Headquarters Sunday School still delights to tell how, through her words and influence, himself and a companion yielded their lives to the Saviour nearly a quarter of a century ago. She never ceased to take an interest in the welfare of the young, and that was doubtless the reason she was specially drawn to the Thursday noon meetings at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., where, for nearly twenty years, she presided at the organ, and led the singing, and by testimony and prayer assisted in those interesting gatherings.

Her private ministry was as varied as were the sympathies of her heart, including the visitation of the sick and dying in workhouses, hospitals, and homes, securing pensions for aged sailors, getting children into orphan homes, obtaining situations for lads, girls, and working men. One of the worst women in Ratcliff Highway was brought to the Saviour through Mrs. Hill's sisterly influence, and lived to witness for Jesus in the very locality where for years she had been such a notorious sinner.

Mrs. Hill was a woman of great courage, and when she has seen young sailor lads in vicious company she has gone and claimed them in their mothers' name, and has on several occasions brought them out of the clutches of their enemies into the Lord's house. An extract from a letter lately received by Mr. Hill from a seaman on a Castle liner shows how deep was the hold she had obtained of the sailors' hearts:—

I thought I should like just to ask how Mrs. Hill is getting on. I hope God will spare her to do more of the splendid work she does among our seamen; and not only our seamen, but also among the shore people. As for myself, I shall never forget the Bethel. It was through you and Mrs. Hill that I was led into the right path, and, with God's help, I will keep in it, too.

Another, which was addressed from a South American port to Mrs. Hill, and received the morning before she died, says:—

The Testament you gave me has been a great comfort to me, and I have studied the marked passages closely. I feel that my faith in God can never be shaken, so deep has it taken root in my heart; and my most earnest prayers are offered to God for your return to health.

Of the last few years of her life, it may be truly said she was always "about her Father's business," and seldom lost an opportunity of witnessing for her Saviour; never even going for a holiday without seeking the spiritual good of the strangers among whom she mingled. There was something about her which drew many who were sorely troubled to confide in her, and by her gracious influence and counsel some have been saved from suicide. Whilst ever feeling tenderly towards the poor, the weary, and the heavy laden, she was outspoken and faithful with the rich, to some of whom, also, she was made a blessing. Though often seeking help for the work of the Lord from those who had an abundance of this world's goods, she was never backward in giving away what involved self-denial, her only regret being that her slender means allowed her to do so little where so much was needed.

For Christ's sake she loved all, but because of their greater hardships, temptations, and dangers, she loved sailors with a special love. She dreamed of them; she prayed for them; she toiled for them; and all throughout her long and terrible illness, and even on the day she died (July 12), she talked of the sailors! Without salary, gratuity, or payment of any kind for her well-nigh matchless services, it was Mrs. Hill's delight to "spend and be spent" for the glory of God in the salvation of the men of the sea.

Diligent as she was in caring for the spiritual good of other mothers' boys and girls, she carefully nurtured and trained her own, and had the joy of seeing them each yield themselves unto the Lord. Joyfully exclaiming, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," and "a place prepared for you," she peacefully passed into "the Father's House," in the full assurance that every one of her own, and of her adopted children, beside a great company of sailors, will some day meet her there. Crowds of sorrowing friends, including many sailors, attended the funeral and memorial services at the Society's headquarters, and at Abney Park Cemetery, conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, and Rev. Robert Dawson, B.A.; who were assisted by Revs. F. J. Hobbins (Vicar of Christ Church, Stepney), Joseph Fletcher, G. M. Bulter, Sir George Williams, and Mr. M. H. Hodder. Christian seamen, some of whom she had helped to lead to Christ, tenderly lowered the body into the grave. Her character may be found in the familiar words: "She openeth her mouth with wisdom. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. Favour is deceitful and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord she shall be praised." (Prov. xxxi. 26-30).

THE LATE MR.

H. Wilbraham Taylor, J.P.

THERE are large opportunities in the service of the Master for men of means and leisure. Happily there have been many such who have appreciated the possibilities of a life of consecrated service, and their lives have been a constant blessing to all with whom they have come into contact. Such an one was Mr. Herbert Wilbraham Taylor, of Barnet, who passed to his reward on June 14 last, finishing his course with joy.

Mr. Taylor was born in May, 1847, and was thus fifty-two years of age, fifty-one years of which he had lived in Barnet. He was the second son of the late Mr. Wilbraham Taylor, who was a Gentleman Usher to the Queen. His mother was Janetta Anne, youngest daughter of Sir William Gosset, a former Sergeant-at-Arms to the House of Commons, and sister of the late Sir Ralph Gosset.

By parental influence and solicitude, Mr. Taylor was early led to a faith in God which never failed him, and when conducting the funeral service at his mother's grave he made reference to her constant, watchful care for her children. He said, "Only on the preceding Saturday (a day before her death) she had said that to have all her children living for Christ, and serving Him, was her constant prayer; she had found Him faithful whom she served, and desired that those she loved should also find Him so."

It is said of his early schooldays that he never wearied of speaking to his companions of the love of Jesus, and thus he commenced early to labour in a vineyard in which he sowed much seed and garnered not a little fruit, and from which, at length, he was called somewhat suddenly.

He received his education, first at Blackheath, and subsequently at King's College. When about twenty-two years of age, together with Mr. Henry Moorhouse, Mr. Taylor went to America to conduct an evangelistic mission. The rousing oratory, the burning enthusiasm, and the transparent Christian zeal and sincerity of the young evangelist, excited much interest. Enormous crowds gathered to hear him, and for nearly a year Mr. Taylor toiled and laboured in his missionary enterprise. Mr. Moody was with him at many of his meetings. The result of the mission it is beyond human vision to measure; but that it met with abundant blessing and phenomenal success, evidence remains to this day to prove; and thousands of Christian pilgrims in all parts of America still remember with thankfulness the name and mission of Herbert Taylor.

Mr. Taylor's married life was a short, but singularly happy one. His wife was Rebekah Hope Morley, the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, who was born at Upper Bedford Place, London, April 3, 1842. They were married on May 16, 1872, and from that time lived at Hadley Grove, Barnet, where, on November 8, 1877, a few hours after the birth of her fourth child, the Lord, whom she loved above all, took her to Himself.

In her letters, some of which have been published, we have evidence from Mrs. Taylor's pen of how thoroughly the two hearts beat as one—their aims, and objects, and work, and prayers having one common source, and inspiration, and goal.

The principal centre of Mr. Taylor's activity in Barnet was the Iron Room, established by him, and opened on November 10, 1880. Adjoining is also a convalescent home, of which Mr. Taylor was owner, sole manager, and probably the sole supporter financially. At the Iron Room, Sunday by Sunday, he conducted meetings for worship and preached the Gospel. Mr. Taylor, at one time, took a very deep interest in the work of the Wooden Room, Lattimore Road, St. Albans, where he frequently preached. All evangelistic work was congenial to him, and claimed his best energies.

A friend who knew him well says: "Both Mr. and Mrs. Taylor spent a great deal of time in the Bucks. villages in past years, and held many meetings, resulting in great numbers of souls saved, some of whom have gone home; others are left to witness for their Lord. Uxbridge, Slough, Maidenhead, Beaconsfield, Chalfont, Amersham, Rickmansworth, Chesham, Missenden, Wendover, Aylesbury, Kingswood, Leighton Buzzard, Buckingham, High Wycombe, and many other places were visited, and great numbers came to listen to the Gospel preached by them both; and often till late at night they were engaged in dealing with anxious souls. In those years both Mr. Taylor and his beloved wife were much used. In driving through the villages together they often posted large texts of Scripture on walls or buildings, and I have known of souls saved as the result.

From a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker Street, W.

"His preaching was often with great power, and some of his little books have been the means of great blessing to many. A little book of his, called 'The Prisoner of Aylesbury Jail,' had a large circulation, and did great good; also 'Acceptable Words.'"

Mr. Taylor was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Hertfordshire on January 2, 1893; and a J.P. for Middlesex on October 19, 1895. The assiduity with which he discharged his duties, the perfect fairness with which he endeavoured on all occasions to administer justice, yet to temper it with all possible mercy, commanded universal respect. He was also a vice-chairman of the Board of Guardians, and after his decease his colleagues on both bench and board gave eloquent expression to the high esteem in which he was held by them.

Though taking little or no part in the politics of the town, Mr. Taylor had associated himself very closely with the religious and social life of the neighbourhood. He was genial, kind, and sympathetic; his ear was never deaf, nor his pocket closed, to a case of real distress; he was friendly and helpful in counsel; he was liberal and kind in charity; he was earnest and devoted in Christian work.

The circumstances preceding the death of Mr. Taylor were quite in keeping with his whole life. He was, in fact, preaching at Hadley Green, Barnet, on the previous Sunday, and the end came suddenly from a long-standing complaint. His peculiar earnestness at that last service was noted by all around him, and the exertion undoubtedly contributed to the sudden seizure the following morning. His end was perfect peace. For him there was no mourning. To all who knew him, the memory of his life will abide and be a constant inspiration to faithful service for God.

Christ's Conquest.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii. 8.

UNWEARIED by the labour of centuries, and undaunted by countless failures, the fire of undying hate in his veins, and desperate with the sense of impending doom, the devil girds himself with enmity, and hurls defiance in the face of God. There is no spirit of indifference in hell. The devil is in earnest! There may be faction and division among men, but the devil and his minions are ever unanimous in council. From the day Adam stood among the roses of Eden till to-day, the tongue of the slanderer has walked through the earth. His mission is to misrepresent God. He hints at injustice, and provokes to rebellion. He makes light of the Divine claim, and feigns himself an angel of mercy. He is at once the counsellor and betrayer of those who put their trust in him.

There was a purpose in Christ's coming: "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested." Surely the purpose of God counts for something! What was this purpose, we ask, as manifested in the life and sufferings of the Son of God? "I shall show you plainly of the Father." Christ has nailed the devil's lie to his cross, and has Himself become to us the face of God, "the express image of his person." Was there ever a grander triumph than this? Evil died on the cross of Christ. He "bare our sins in his own body to the tree." In some very real and mystic sense He became sin for us; the very sin which nailed Him to the Cross was itself transfixed. Some speak as though the devil were to have a triumph. The thought cannot be entertained for a moment. Evil, now permitted to exist by Divine wisdom and in wrath working out the purpose of mercy, has its place in the lake of fire. It can never prove its claim to perpetual existence. There cannot always remain a blot upon the fair page of God's universe; mercy and justice alike demand its removal, that God may be all in all. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."

HOWARD T. N. USSHER.

To Reach the Cultured Italians.—At the suggestion of Madame Nicolas, Signor Luigi Mario Galassi has translated a book, entitled "Serge Batourine," into the Italian. It was written by Mrs. Wood, formerly governess of Colonel Pashkoff; and, while in the form of a story, is calculated to interest the educated Italians, and bring before them Christian truth which they would refuse to read in any other manner. The work cannot be produced without a measure of financial assistance, and Signor Galassi will be glad to hear from friends willing to assist. He may be addressed at 10, Via Tavolini, po. 40, Florence, Italy.

A Missionary Farewell.

IN spite of the oppressive heat, the Lower Exeter Hall was crowded on Tuesday evening, September 5, on the occasion of the public farewell of a band of missionaries who are shortly leaving for China, in connection with the China Inland Mission. The party numbered thirty-six, of whom eighteen were going out for the first time, this autumn, the remainder returning after a period of rest. The gathering was marked throughout by deep earnestness and enthusiasm.

Mr. Theodore Howard, prior to reading Psalm lxvii., referred to the great loss sustained by the society in the death of Rev. E. O. Williams. The departed worker was a man of many gifts and great humility of character. Rev. H. B. Macartney engaged in earnest prayer for blessing on the work, that while nations were coveting and anticipating their shares in the spoiling of China, the wrath of men might be made to praise Him and converts be gathered in from far and near.

Mr. W. H. Seagram, who presided, after alluding to the evils of the opium traffic, and deprecating the fact that too often commercial affairs are so conducted as to arouse hatred of western civilization and of Christianity, spoke in feeling terms of the vast needs of China, and the call for more workers. The secretary, Mr. W. B. Sloan, referring to the constitution of the outgoing party, said one of the brightest features of the work was the way in which the were rising up to follow in their parent's footsteps. As illustrating the international character of the work, the speaker pointed out that Sweden, Switzerland, and Germany were represented in the party.

CHILDREN OF MISSIONARIES

Next came brief but fervent words from some of the missionaries. Rev. Wm. Cooper spoke of the many labours of the Mission's general director, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and enumerated subjects for prayer, especially emphasizing the native church, upon which so much depended. Rev. Geo. Hunter, speaking on the work in Hunan, brought encouraging news of progress in connection with various societies, and quoted a recent letter of Dr. Griffith John, in which the writer told glowingly of the remarkable developments of Christian work. Mr. Hunter, picturing the present condition of affairs, said large numbers of people were in the position of "wanting to know" about the verities of Christianity. Some of the natives had gone so far as to erect, at their own expense, a building in which they might meet for worship, although they were, as yet, unconverted. That illustrated the general movement of curiosity. Inquirers might or might not become Christians. Mr. Hunter concluded with a telling word of personal exhortation, and then the missionaries who are returning to the field were commended to God in prayer by Mr. J. McFarlane, of Tasmania.

Speaking as a representative of the lady workers going out for the first time, Miss Smith, the third of who have become missionaries, expressed the joy she felt in going forth as a witness for Christ. Miss Morris added some stimulating words of experience, outlining her spiritual career from the time when the call came to her in the words, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." In her Testament she had specially marked 2 Cor iv. 11., writing against it the word "China." Those who were going out would naturally be impressed with a strong sense of the reality of the words, but though they might be "delivered unto death," it was, they rejoiced to know, "for Jesus' sake."

A TRIO OF SISTERS

Two brethren followed with interesting testimonies. Mr. F. Traub, who is of German nationality, gave a pithy account of his evangelistic labours in his native land, and in Switzerland and France. Consecrated to missionary work from his birth by godly parents, he had gladly welcomed the call to China, and wished to bear witness to the joy which flooded his soul in doing his Father's will. Mr. C. H. Judd bears a name familiar in the China Inland Mission. He appealed to young men to seek earnestly to know the will of God regarding their position towards the heathen. God would not be slack in answering prayer. As to the question of mixed motives in offering themselves, romance might cause a man to volunteer, but only Christ could lead them to give their lives, practically, for his service. Speaking for the young men of the party, Mr. Judd said they took their stand on the words, "My God shall supply all your need."

Amid deep solemnity, Rev. C. Inwood then commended in prayer those who were going out for the first time, adding that, in the closing moments of that precious meeting, he desired to speak a word on behalf of China. Until his recent tour of 10,000 miles from Pekin to Canton, and up the Yang-tse, he had formed no adequate conception of the extent of the upheaval of affairs. Lord Charles Beresford had written on the "Breaking-up of China," but they might preferably speak of the "Waking Up of China." Mr. Inwood considered that they were on the eve of the most remarkable work China had ever known. The impact of western civilization might have had something to do with the awakening, but he considered the chief factor had been the work of missionaries. After describing the grandeur of the opportunity, the speaker sounded a note of warning.

As with men, so with nations, a wasted chance might never recur. Let them not neglect the opening which presented itself for the evangelization of the great Chinese nation. As to the prospects, he had a more profound faith in Christian missionaries than ever before. They were the glory of the church; God had put them in the place of peril, but it was also the place of honour. In conclusion, the speaker desired to burn in upon his audience a deeper sense of their personal responsibility. The missionaries, who were about to start, were for there was no such thing as vicarious service. If God called a person to China or to England, that person and no other must go. Personal responsibility could not be evaded by defraying the expenses of a missionary. Describing an experience in China, in which the blare of brazen trumpets, calling to idol worship, was interrupted by the voices of native children in the mission school singing "Jesus loves me," Mr. Inwood said the incident was symbolical of the position; the Gospel message was about to rise and triumph over the hideousness of heathenism. He could gain but little hope from the spread of railways or the partition of the empire, except that those things might contribute to the glorious end, as the earthquake did to the Philippian gaoler. The true hope of China lay in Christianity, in the men and women who would shine as the stars for ever and ever. The speaker fervently prayed, "God bless them in that lonely field, and baptize those at home" with Pentecostal missionary enthusiasm.

NOT GOING AS DELEGATES,

Missionary Libraries.—Mr. John E. Pim, Bonaven, Antrim Road, Belfast, writes: "I understand that missionary libraries are in existence in connection with a good many churches and societies. If any of your readers have the management of such libraries I should feel much obliged if they would be so good as to let me have a copy of their rules, or give me any information as to how they are worked."

International S.S. Lessons.

September 24, 1899.

Review of the Quarter's Lessons.—Golden Text, Ps. xxxiv. 7.

OUR golden text is a precious promise, which is just as true to us as it was to God's people in olden times, if we fulfil the condition. What is that? To fear God does not mean to be afraid of Him, but to love Him so much that we fear to grieve Him or displease Him; to fear lest we break his laws or forget to do his will. Everyone—man, woman, or child—who has asked Jesus for release from sin's power, and is forgiven for his sake, knowing something of what the Saviour did and suffered for him or her, longs to please Him, and can claim this promise. How safe we are then! Nothing to fear from anybody or anything. We cannot see God's angels, but they are round us all the same. Do you remember about Elisha (2 Kings vi. 17; see also Heb. i. 14)? In our quarter's lessons we have been learning about God's dealings with his ancient people; and, though He had to punish them for their sins, yet He never forsook them, and all his promises came true.

Methods for Review.

For elder classes, it is a good plan to get each member to take one lesson and write a little paper on it, each reading their own as called for in order.

Others may find it better to give two or three questions on each lesson to the scholars the week before, that they may come prepared with the answers, which will be required in turn; if an answer fail, the whole class can be appealed to.

Infants are best reviewed by means of the pictures or blackboard suggestions.

Places.

Israel; Babylon; the River Chebar; Jerusalem.

Prophets.

Hosea, who lived at the same time as Isaiah, and spoke words of warning and appeal as the people hastened to ruin.

Ezekiel, a young priest, in captivity, to whom God revealed the future by visions.

Haggai, the old prophet who returned with the people to Jerusalem, and gave them consolation and encouragement.

Zechariah, young priest and prophet, had many visions from God, revealing future glory, the coming of Jesus Christ, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Other Characters.

Daniel and his three friends, not ashamed to confess God and keep his commandments.

Ezra, the Jewish Scribe, who led the returning exiles back to Jerusalem. How many went?

Zerubbabel and Joshua, who superintended the rebuilding of the temple, and put on the top stone with joy.

Leading Truths.

I. God's loving invitations and welcome to all returning sinners. Compare with our Lord's words Matt. xi. 28-30.

II. Resisting temptation. Faithfulness to God. Like our Lord Jesus. Matt. iv. 1-11.

III. "Courage to suffer, rather than do wrong," Jesus said. Matt. v. 11, 12.

IV. Weighed and found wanting. Matt. xxv. 45.

V. Perfect trust in God. Matt. x. 31-33.

VI. The new heart. The new birth. John iii. 3-5.

VII. The new spirit to fill the cleansed heart. John xvi. 13, 14.

VIII. The River of Salvation, broadening and deepening. Jesus promised living water. John iv. 14; vii. 38.

IX. Returning to God and his worship. The prodigal son. Luke xv. 20.

X. God's work done by God's children, earnestly and joyfully. Our Lord says to us. John iv. 35-38.

XI. Be strong, for God is with us. Matt. xxviii. 20.

XII. Not our own strength, but by the Holy Spirit's power. Luke xxiv. 49.

Y.M.C.A. Autumn Convention.—At the forthcoming autumn convention, to be held in Exeter Hall, October 3-6, the subjects announced are "The Christian's Life," "The Christian's Calling," "The Christian's Hope." Amongst the speakers will be Revs. Archibald G. Brown, J. T. Butlin, W. Fuller Gooch, Dr. G. Hanson, H. J. R. Marston, F. B. Meyer, W. Darlow Sarjeant, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Griffith Thomas, E. N. Thwaites, F. S. Webster, Frank H. White, and Dinsdale T. Young. The meetings are to commence at 3.30 and 7 p.m. on each of the three days, and an opening service for prayer and praise has been arranged for Monday, October 2, at 7.30 p.m.

Other Lands.

Thüringia and Saxony.

THE sorrows of Baptists and Methodists in Saxony have from time to time been described in The Christian. Some recent developments suggest a further communication on the subject. The religious history of Saxony is somewhat unique. It became Protestant at the Reformation, and has so remained; but in 1697, when the Elector Augustus the Strong became elective King of Poland, he, for purposes of State, became Roman Catholic. From that day there have been two State Churches—the Lutheran and the Roman Catholic. The rivalries of these two bodies led to many great evils, till, in 1870, laws were passed imposing heavy fines on anyone who should attempt to persuade man or woman to leave his own communion.

This Constitutional Law was not intended to apply to any but the two State Churches, but it has been used by the Lutheran Consistorium and the police as a means for repressing the few Nonconformists from the State Churches who make Saxony their home. When the law was made, in 1870, dissent was almost unknown. In 1871 and 1878, some favour was shown to certain congregations who are Methodists, or of Methodist doctrine and worship; and those congregations have considerable freedom; but other Methodist congregations share with the Baptists the bitter

INCIDENCES OF REPRESSIVE LEGISLATION.

The Nonconforming Saxon communities consist of about 2,000 members, gathered into about twelve churches—a very small number in a population of 4,000,000, of whom 100,000 are Roman Catholics.

The degree of liberty enjoyed by these feeble communities may be judged by the following examples. In the year 1897 a fine of £5 was imposed for having advertised a meeting in a local newspaper, and another fine of £7 10s. for baptizing a woman without having seen her certificate of liberation from the State Church, which had actually been granted to her after much patience and endurance of contumely.

During the present year, at Cheminetz, in Munich, a parent legally separated from the State Church was fined £5 for taking his own children with him to worship. At Sosa, a fine of £5, or alternative imprisonment for twenty-eight days, was enforced for having permitted two Lutheran children to attend a Sunday school festival. At Zschoppau, in February, six fines of £7 10s. each, amounting in all to £45, were imposed on as many persons for having prayed audibly and sung a hymn in a religious gathering. The sufferers in this case were Methodists, and it is these Methodists, and not Baptists, who, at this very time of writing, cannot get permission to worship in their town of Plaue."

At the recent Blankenburg Conference, some accounts of which has already appeared in The Christian from the pen of our brother F. B. Meyer, much consideration was given in private conference to the case of

THE SUFFERERS IN SAXONY,

and it was resolved to seek an interview with his Excellency Herr von Seydewitz, the Saxon Minister of Worship. This was adventured in faith and prayer. On Tuesday last, six gentlemen, representing the London Council of the Evangelical Alliance, met in Dresden, and were received by the Minister. These were Dr. Grattan-Guinness, Dr. Baedeker, Rev. Darlow Sarjeant, Mr. E. P. Field (General Secretary of the Alliance), Herr Hoyer, and the writer of this paper. After considerable conference on general principles and particular instances, the following points were submitted to the Minister as embracing the wishes of the deputation:—

It was asked that within the limits of Saxon Constitutional Law all possible liberty should be granted to Nonconforming Christian communities—(1) to worship as their conscience dictated, and to be at liberty to sing and to pray audibly; (2) for parents to take their own children, of any age whatever, with themselves to worship God; (3) to advertise their places and times of service in the public press, and by notices posted at the doors or windows of chapels and halls; (4) to use singing and prayer in all meetings convened by Christian men; and (5) that the maximum amount of liberty granted to the most favoured Christian community should be extended to all.

Herr von Seydewitz received these suggestions very kindly and with evident sympathy, and he intimated that, excepting the right of public advertisement, which could not be granted, it would not be long before the grievances of the Baptists and Methodists would be removed. He was not, however, prepared to specify in what way his plan would operate, or to mention the character of the plan itself. The deputation accepted his Excellency's statements with hope and gratitude, and went on one side for praise and prayer.

In the strange inconsistencies found in the action of authorities in Dresden, we were surprised that on Wednesday and Thursday evenings we were able to be present at two large and enthusiastic services in two different chapels in the city, at which we prayed, and at which hymns of praise rang out of lips which stinted neither words nor harmony. At the one, Dr. Grattan-Guinness preached on the work of the Holy Ghost in the Church of God; at the other, the writer expounded 1 Thess. i., as a moving exhibition of a living Church. One of these meetings was privileged, but the other might have been broken up by any policeman who cared to do it. Let us pray for blessing, and for full freedom for the Gospel in Saxony; for our worried brethren are doing a great work, and the Lord uses them greatly and very specially among young men.

John Gritton.

Blankenburg, September, 1899.

Prisons in America.—II.

The Chain Gang.

By Mr. T. M. WINTLE.

THE chain gang is a barbarous and degrading institution, and is therefore not reformatory but demoralising in its effects. The prisoners are generally hired out to large employers of labour in companies of 100, 200, and 500, and are put to work on railways, brick-yards, saw-mills, coal-pits, &c.

They are heavily manacled by a shackle on each leg, with a chain just long enough to allow the prisoner to move along at his work. Attached to this chain is another about two feet long, with a ring at the end. This is wound round the leg while the man is at work, but when the prisoners are being taken to and from their work, the end of the chain is put through a loop in the waist of the trousers behind, and a long chain passed through the rings from one end to the other, uniting the whole gang together and preventing escape. Instead of the ordinary shackle, dangerous and refractory prisoners wear irons, with long spikes projecting in front and behind, so that should any attempt be made to run, their flight would be cut short by these spikes sticking into the ground.

The guards in charge are armed with carbines, and, as at our own convict establishments, in any attempt to escape. There are many well-conducted men who are called "trusties," and are allowed to work unshackled, and even go on errands, and drive teams into the city unattended by guards.

WOULD NOT HESITATE TO SHOOT

Camps wherein such prisoners are confined contain a number of sheds with a reclining platform upon which are laid straw mattresses for beds. The shackles are worn as during the day, being at night attached to a ring at the bottom of the bed.

Under the system of leasing convicts to private individuals, without state or government control, shocking irregularities existed in the Southern States; so flagrant were the abuses that in 1894 the Governor, the Hon. W. Y. Atkinson, made a communication to the Legislature recommending State supervision of "misdemeanour" convicts. After the adjournment of the Assembly, reports reached him touching the management of these convicts, which indicated such a state of affairs that he felt it his duty as Chief Executive of the State to investigate the matter; and to perform this work he appointed the Hon. R. F. Wright as a special commissioner to inquire into the condition of the chain-gang in the State. The following are quotations from the Commissioner's report made in 1895:—

"Of the thirty-three camps visited, twenty-six were worked by private individuals.

"Generally the whites and blacks are not chained together, nor are the males and females, but they are and in many of the gangs practically no provision is made for a separation of the sexes during the day, or at night in sleeping quarters.

WORKED TOGETHER INDISCRIMINATELY,

"There are many convicts still under their majority, and I found eleven under the age of fourteen.

"Very little attention is given to the comfort or sanitary condition of the sleeping quarters. The bedding is generally scant and filthy, frequently full of vermin.

"The Act of 1884 allows a convict commutation of four days off each month for good behaviour, or forty-eight days off a twelve months' sentence. I find that this law has never been observed except in three out of thirty-three gangs visited, notwithstanding it has been on the statute-books for the past ten years.

"At many camps I found no regular whipping boss, but all guards and bosses carried straps, and punished the convicts ad libitum, and from this fact have gone out the reports—in many cases too true—of cruelty and inhuman treatment. At one camp I found five convicts who had been so severely punished that, though three or four weeks had elapsed, the effects were still plainly visible on my visit."

Mr. Wright finishes up his report by saying that—"Many of the lessees I found to be good business men, intelligent and humane, who were anxious to be informed of their duty under the few laws now in force touching the misdemeanour chain gangs, and who expressed themselves as thoroughly in accord with the Governor in endeavouring to improve the system by proper legislation."

This able and exhaustive report was supplemented by the courageous stand of the Governor, who refused to allow himself to be re-elected unless "the present lease system be abolished or amended, so as to put the convicts under the absolute control of the State."

This so aroused the people of Georgia to the

TRUE CONDITION OF THE CHAIN GANG,

that Mr. Atkinson was re-elected, and demand made for legislation. When the State Assembly met, a law was made, which came into operation on April 1 this year (1899), which provides that all convicts in future must be worked under State control, with a code of rules for uniform treatment in every county and camp, with a thorough system of inspection by State-appointed officers under the direction of a prison commission board, to be at once elected. The Prison Commission Board was immediately formed, consisting of three able and experienced gentlemen, who at once grappled with the difficulty, and in their first report, issued in 1897-8, a very excellent scheme is put forth, which will, I believe, be a final settlement of a knotty problem in a business way; and, when once accomplished, will relieve the State for ever from dependence upon lessees and private individuals, for the care, maintenance, and punishment of her convicts. A large prison has already been erected at Atlanta, fitted up on the most modern principle, and land taken for the erecting of even a larger one a few miles outside of the city.

The following is from the above-named report:—"Already the State has made rapid strides in the matter of prison reform, and will, after April 1 next, be in actual control of all of its convicts, removing them from every possibility of mistreatment, besides having established the foundations of a system which, if properly built upon, will for ever settle the convict question of Georgia."

Under this new régime, every provision is made for separating the sexes and class of convicts, with attention to their comfort, diet, and housing; and I would be delighted to see their camps having the same spiritual advantages as are now given to the State and county prisons throughout the United States generally, which I consider to be in advance of our own country. Ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers, having an interest in the spiritual well-being of the convicts, are at all times welcomed to visit the prisons. I am glad to find that the Prison Commission Board is quite alive to this need, and will doubtless shortly deal with it.

New York Notes.

MR. D. L. MOODY preached in the "Glad Tidings" tent on Saturday night (Aug. 26), and on the following day he addressed two immense audiences in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. The large building was filled both morning and afternoon. Before he commenced his sermon in the morning, he asked the congregation to join him in prayer that "God may send the right man to this pulpit," which he described as "the most important in America." He spoke eulogistically of the late Dr. John Hall, and, later, in his prayer, thanked God that he was privileged to stand and speak in that pulpit "where the holy man of God had preached the pure Gospel for so many years." His subject was the "sureness" of the prophecies of the Scripture, and he declared that the so-called "higher criticism" had not been able to contradict its teachings upon a single point.

A CURE FOR BAD TEMPER.

Speaking in the afternoon on God's power to deliver his children from the dominion of sin, Mr. Moody remarked: "A lady once said to me, 'I have not so much control over my temper now as I had five years ago. Don't you think that's a great misfortune?' 'Misfortune?' said I; "I think it's a sin!' 'Can you tell me how I can conquer it?' 'Yes, I can.' 'How?' 'Every time you get angry with anybody, just go straight to them and apologise for having done so, owning up that it was very wrong of you to talk as you have been doing, and asking their forgiveness. I think you will find, when you have made about a dozen of such apologies, that you will be about ready to go out of the bad temper business.'"

A few minutes later he told a pathetic little story of a very old gentleman, who had to undergo an operation in a hospital, and he knew that there was considerable doubt felt as to whether he would ever leave the operating-table alive. His trust, however, was in God, and when he entered the room, and had inquired of the surgeons whether everything was ready for the operation, he just knelt down before them all, and said aloud:

"Now, I lay me down to sleep,
I pray, Thee, Lord, my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray, Thee, Lord, my soul to take."

Dr. L. G. Broughton, from Atlanta, Ga., also preached in the "Glad Tidings" Gospel tent. He has considerable courage. When the mayor of Atlanta so forgot the dignity of his office as to get drunk, the doctor denounced him from his pulpit, and so worked upon the City Council that it requested the offending mayor to resign. That gentleman, however, promised immediate and permanent reform, and will probably refrain from repeating the offence without first taking precautions to prevent the matter from coming to Dr. Broughton's ears. The Council's request was thereupon withdrawn. A much more risky thing, though, so far as the Doctor's personal safety and future were likely to be concerned, was his fearless denunciation of the lynching of the negro, Sam Hose, a few weeks ago.

Sunday, August 26, was the climax day of the great Ocean Grove Methodist Camp meeting. It was estimated that at least 1,000 people were at the "Sunrise meeting," beginning at 5.45, and a large banner bearing the inscription "In the beginning God," was raised at that time. The love feast in the Auditorium at 7 a.m. was attended by about 10,000 persons, and it is not a matter of surprise, therefore, that it was somewhat protracted because of the number of those who desired to testify. Bishop Fowler, "the silver-tongued orator of the Methodist Church," preached at 11 o'clock, hundreds being turned away. The collection amounted to about 3,000dols. In the evening, Bishop Fitzgerald preached to an audience estimated at 20,000 persons on the beach.

ROGER MARTIN.

Among Freed Slaves.

MISS C. M. S. LOWE writes: "I enclose extracts from a letter I have received from a Canadian lady, who has given up her home and friends to devote herself to the help of freed slaves in South Carolina.

"May it please God to bless that which you have already printed in THE CHRISTIAN on the sad, sad subject."

[A LETTER FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.]

How I should like to see you and talk of our work, and the change from cowed slaves to the self-respecting free men. No one believes it who has not seen it. Half-clad, speaking a "patois" we could not understand, unable to count ten, morality utterly unknown, they knew only two things—how to raise cotton, and that the "Lord Jesus" loved them, the only comfort of their misery. I wish you could see them now; the white-washed cottages in their small farms of corn and cotton (they saved their first money to buy land); their quiet, respectable fathers; the happy well-dressed children, laughing along their way to school. They have a young men's debating society and a temperance society with over a thousand members.

Twelve women's societies meet once a week, numbering from 50 to 100, attend to the sick, form plans for keeping the young people straight and keeping whisky out, and encourage each other in pureness of life. These and the Sunday school, with the normal class I am training for teachers, and what help I can give to the sick and old, keep me pretty busy. The race has been much belied for political reasons. I find them industrious, grateful, eager to improve. I said to a crippled man of eighty, "I suppose you will need help this year."

"No, no, Missus, got my own crop, corn, potatoes 'nough. If you could let me have little sugar now and then, that's all I bother you for."

He had sat on a stool, hitching it along the rows, and so planted and tended his little crop, his neighbours ploughing it up in the spring, and carrying in the harvest. Not much idleness there! One boy of sixteen had only one leg, but walked down to school every day (four miles) on a peg of home manufacture. I proposed giving him a prize, but his coloured teacher objected. "He went to sleep in school often—a bad example." "Roger," I said, "do you work at all in the fields?" He opened his eyes in astonishment. "Why, yes, Miss Ellen, I do my task every day. What mustn't I work for?" I did not wonder he slept. It is really considered a disgrace for anyone on the island, man or woman, not to work—that is, to go out with the hoe and do their share.

Boulogne Bullfights.—Rev. James Wilson, the English chaplain at Boulogne, writes to a correspondent in England: "I have not heard of half a dozen resident English being at the bullfights. London, Folkestone, Brighton, and Hastings are responsible for its success by sending so many trippers here on Saturdays and Sundays, bringing the worst type of English to this town, who not only support bullfights, but other vices. The remedy lies on the English side of the Channel in suppressing the cheap trips on Sunday, and the Sunday League, which seems to be a league to break the Sabbath. We have no power over the French authorities. Our flock is warned to abstain from such places, but we have no power over trippers. The English residents are horrified."

Mission to Lepers.

SINCE 1874, when this Society commenced its work on behalf of the outcast lepers and their children, there has been steady progress in its operations, until, at the present time, it is working in fifty-three stations in India, China, and Japan. It is impossible to state the number of homeless sufferers who have been sheltered, comforted, and converted during this period; but when it is stated that at the end of last year as many as 4,000 lepers and children were being wholly or partially supported by the Society, it will be easily inferred what an unspeakable boon its work has brought to these suffering people.

As a class, the lepers are specially responsive to the Gospel message. It is not surprising that their hearts should readily open to the teaching of those who have shown them the only kindness, and given them the only shelter, they could find on earth. So great has been the spiritual blessing upon the work that there are some 1,500 Christian lepers in connection with the various stations of the Society. As a work of philanthropy, it may well be questioned whether the sum of £5 can be expended so as to effect more real good, than in providing a homeless leper with food and clothing and Christian teaching. For the small outlay of £4 a year, a child of leprous parents can be provided for and educated in one of the thirteen homes for untainted children, now supported by the mission.

These gratifying results are made possible by the hearty co-operation of the missionaries of eighteen other societies, who usually do or supervise the work, financed by the Mission to Lepers. One of the Society's own missionaries is Miss Reed, who, notwithstanding that she has been herself has done for nine years, and is still doing, a devoted and successful work amongst her fellow-sufferers in the asylum at Chandag in the Himalayas.

OVERTAKEN WITH THIS MOST TERRIBLE DISEASE,

A letter recently to hand from Mr. T. A. Bailey (one of the Society's honorary secretaries in India) tells of blessing on the work at Poladpur, in the Bombay Presidency. In an interesting and touching account, he says:—

"All the lepers, or as many as could, had assembled by the roadside to greet us; and to see them standing there in their white clothes and shining faces, was most touching. We stayed talking to them for a little, and they stood gazing at us with their faces lit up with joy; and then we had to say good-night, and come away. The whole scene made a great impression upon me, especially when, just as we started, they all broke into a hymn of praise to God. I wish that some of those who maintain that missionary work is no good, and say that these people are as well off without Christianity, could have been with us two years ago, and seen those people holding back and refusing to accept Christ, and been with us the other day as fifty-five of these, who had been baptized, were witnessing for Christ. I gave them a little talk as best I could in Hindustani; and when I told them of the loving sympathy which some of the friends in England have for them, and how some of the poor people in England sacrifice their own comforts to send help to them, some of them fairly broke down, and there were many moist eyes."

In this, and the neighbouring asylum of Pui, upwards of fifty baptisms have already taken place this year, but we regret to say that owing to the lack of funds many destitute have been turned from the doors. The committee are desirous of commemorating the Society's semi-jubilee by a special fund of £2,500. It is proposed to devote this to the erection of new or enlarged asylums, in Purulia, Trevandrum, Raniganj, and other places where they are urgently needed. In these and other centres, hopeless sufferers are looking for relief to the only quarter from whence it can come—through the medium of Christian missions.

Communications respecting the work may be addressed to Mr. John Jackson, Organizing and Deputation Secretary, Exeter Hall, W.C.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Trains.

THIS week we are going to have a talk about trains. I expect some of you have been very interested in watching your parents search the time tables to fix on a train to take you off on your holiday. At last the day arrived; you went to the station, where everybody seemed to be jostling everybody else; the porters rushed to and fro with their trolleys and shouts of "By your leave"; and you wondered if you would ever find the right train. But at last you did, in you got, bang went the door, the whistle shrieked and away steamed the train, past the smoky town, on through meadow and valley, on and on, until it set you down at your destination.

I think that is very much like your life. You are on a journey, it may be a long or a short one; but some day you will come to the end and have to stop.

But what was it that made the train go at all? What force, what motive power dragged it along? It was the steam, and if it had not been for that you would still be waiting at the station, and never have had a holiday at all! That, too, is like your life. You want some power to help you to live it in the best way possible. "The love of Christ constraineth us." Let your life be full of his love.

A train also needs a driver who knows the road well. Jesus has lived our life and knows its temptations and dangers. "He was in all points tempted like as we are." But He conquered; so may you, for He will help and guide you, if you ask Him.

But there are other ways in which your life resembles a train. You must have wheels and lines to go along. God knew you would want these, and there are four wheels, which, if fastened firmly to your life, will help you to keep along the right lines. They are: Love, Truth, Temperance, and Purity. And mind you keep them constantly at work, or they will get rusty! God has given you the Bible to tell you which lines to go along, so that you have no excuse for going the wrong way.

Then a train must be supplied with a strong brake, so that it can draw up quickly when danger is ahead. The brake to your life is Strong Will, and you must ask Jesus to help you to put it on very firmly when temptation is near.

What else is there about a train? Well, there are the passengers, and it would never do to forget them! Those that get into the train are like your thoughts, those that get out are like your deeds. There is a text which says, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he;" and when you get older you will know how true this is. If you admit only kind, pure, beautiful thoughts, they will then get out as kind, pure, beautiful deeds. In proportion as your life is full of the right passengers, you will have no room for the wrong ones.

The train needs a guard, and so do you; and his name is Duty. Be sure you wait until he waves his flag for you to start. If you ought to do your lessons, and you are tempted to play instead, see what the guard Duty says. If you have to choose between something difficult and something easy, ask his advice.

We stop at all sorts of stations on our way through life. That holiday train took you to Pleasure station, and you are meant to go there sometimes; only don't make the mistake that some people do, and stay there too long. There are the trains that take you to school, and your fathers and brothers to business, and you will all alight at Work station.

By and by, you may have to go through the Tunnels of Sorrow and Pain, but if you take with you Faith and Courage, you will get through safely, and presently find yourself at Peace station. Up the Hill of Difficulty you must go, but if Jesus Christ rules your life, you will be able to overcome your difficulties. On the way up you will stop at Friendship station; loving hands will be stretched out to help you, and at the top is the station of Reward.

My dear young friends, you are journeying through the village of Youth; you are rushing along at full speed, and soon you will reach the city of Manhood and Womanhood; by and by you may enter the town of Old Age. The train will slow down then, and soon will reach the last station of all—Home. All these can be made beautiful as you journey through them if your life is cleansed by the blood of Christ. Then, whether you are a short or a long time in reaching the Home station, if you love Jesus, you will be able to help others to be good and true. Will you, each one of you, ask God to make you his happy, loving child, at home, at school, at play; and, by and by, you will be able to go out into the world and work for Him there.

There is one way, however, in which your life differs from a train, and that is that you never make a return journey. No return tickets are issued. You can only live out your life once, so you must make the most of your time, and use every opportunity; and then when you reach God's Home station you will be so glad that you have loved Him; that you have tried to go along his lines; and that you have helped others to love Him, too; you will hear his words of love and praise, and you will receive a crown of life which fadeth not away.

KATE HOPKINS.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 193).

Let us learn the lesson of the wheels mentioned above. The following "Searcher" will help us:—

LOVE.

1. How did God show his love to us? (1 John iv.).
2. How do we prove our love to God? (John xiv).
3. Find a chapter in 1 Cor. which is about charity, or love, and say five ways in which love may be shown.
4. How are we to treat our enemies? (Matt. iv.-vi.)
5. Who was the disciple to whom Jesus said, "Lovest thou Me?" What answer did he give? (John).

TRUTH.

6. Who said, "I am the truth"? (John xiii.-xv.).
7. What shall be the reward of the truthful man? (Ps. xiv.-xvi.).
8. Who was the first man in the Bible who told a lie, and what was it about? (Genesis).

TEMPERANCE.

9. How is wine described in Prov. xx.?
10. Who were the people who said, "We will drink no wine," and what was their reward? (Jer. xxxiv.-xxxvi.).
11. Who was the first owner of a vineyard? Did he make good use of it? (Genesis).

PURITY.

12. What is promised to the pure in heart? (Matt. iv.-vi.).
13. In the Epistle of Paul to the Philippians, how does he refer to purity?

(Children under ten do any four; under thirteen, any six; under seventeen, any ten.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 192).

1. Matt. xxiv. 42.
2. 1 Cor. xvi. 13.
3. Rev. iii. 2.
4. Mark xiii. 33.
5. 1 Peter v. 8.
6. Matt. xxv. 13.
7. Jesus Christ (Mark xiii. 32-37).
8. Eze. xxxiii. 2-10.
9. Isa. xxi. 12.
10. Isa. lxii. 6, 7.
11. Ps. cxxvii. 1.
12. Mark xiv. 38.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Ralph, Ernest and Dora* Aldwinckle, Jenny Almond, Violet Ashworth*.

B—Hannah Bridgman, Evelyn, Maud, Sylvia and Dorothy Barrett, Gertrude Bush, Ella Berryman, Violet Braun, Edith Banks, Rachael Blumenthal, Esther Bobroff, Gladys Bartlett, Phyllis Boyd, May and Gordon Bligh*, Leonard Browne, K. Carey-Brenton.

C—Edith*, Mabel, and Ida Cole*, David* and John Colville*, Oscar, Katie, Guy, and Philip Cross, Gladys Clark, Kate and Kitty Cope, Rodis Constantinides, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Edith Chevalier, Elizabeth Clarence, Mary Coward, Bessie Cheale, George Cary.

D—Stanley Drew, Ruth Dawson*, Mabel De Rusett*, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree*, Lucy Davidson.

E—Benjamin Elsmore.

F—Maud and Vincent Fleet, Sarah Finkelstein*, Francis Field.

G—Philip and Gershom Green, Kathleen Gough*, Mary Gover, Rose and Esther Goodman*, Clarice* and Bertie Gate, Irene Gough.

H—Nellie Hatchett, Walter and Beatrice Harland*, Dorothy* and Evelyn Hewer*, Francie and Florence Hoyte, Mary Hinton, Hetty* and Eric Hill, Gordon House, Betsy Holik, Gertie Hayward, Elizabeth and Mary Hooper.

J—Betty Jacobs.

K—Gertrude Krambach, Stanley, Max* and Eva Kalb*, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley.

L—Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Blanche Lindup*, May, Henry, Edward and Sidney Law, Annie Levine, Annie Lipschitz, Cecilia* and Georgina Lichtenstein, Gertrude Lambert, Rosie Langton.

M—Emily Maddox, Mabel Morris, Marie Meek, L. Morice, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin*.

N—Mary Neligan, Valeria and Eleanor Noel, Leah and Dora Niels.

P—Daisy Pym*, Kathleen Pincott, Ethel Palmer, Ruth Pledger*, Polognia Daws*, Walter Puhnell*, Katie* and Leonard Picknell, Evelyn, Mildred and Hattie Peters*, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry*, Mary Plumb*, Lilian Pearson, Margherita Perlman, Kathleen Pasley*, Daisy Phillips.

R—Mary and Kate Rosenbloom, Maud Rosenberg*, Ethel Rowe.

S—Enid Southwell, Amy Stileman*, Douglas*, Kathleen and Edith Shepherd, Joseph Stevens, Flora, Esther and Frank Simmons, Evelyn Steed*, Dora and Lizzie Simons, Margery Smart, Douglas Stevens, Mary Sowden, Solomon Stockfish, Annie Shelley, Laura Standen*, Florence Smith, William Sadler.

T—Frank Thompson, Naomi Torff, Rachael and Rebecca Tushinsky.

V—Kenneth Vining, Rosetta Viccars.

W—F.* and Madge Wilson, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Agatha Ward, Florence Wild, Sarah* and Annie Wood*, Joanna Wolnitzer, William, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Delphie Wells.*

Z—Sophia Zaxitsky.

No. 191.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Enderby Anderson, Lestock and Mabel Adams, William Aston, Irene Ashdown*.

B—R. G. and Eva* Browne, John Benger, Mabel and Cecil Bailey, Lucienne* Brabaudes, Ernestine* Buhl, Susette* and Mary* Beck, James Barker, Mabel Birney, Teresa, Frank, Avory, and Lilian Binckie, Stanley, Lily*, and Gordon Boxer, Robert Brotchie, Lindsay and Leonard Browne, Dorothy Benson, Ernest, Gladys, C. Dorothy, and Edward Bates, Hannah Bridgman*, Charlie, Alan and Maggie Banks, Catherine Barber, Allen Baker*, Ashley Bowker*, Lilian Butler, Emily Britton, Dorothy Berry, Sylvia and Maud Barrett.

C—Bessie Cheale, Duncan Campbell*, George Crawford, Dorothy Clarke, Maggie*, Jessie* and Walter Carter, Katie* and Minnie* Chubb, Ethel Craigie, Daisy M. Clarke, Katie Clarke*, Susie Cumbers, K. Carey-Brenton, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Isabel* and Charles Candlin, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, David* and John* Colville, Oscar, Guy, Katie and Philip* Cross, Alice Cady, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Violet and Mai Davidson, Vera Dickinson, Violet, Ivy, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Marie Denizot*, Esther Dickson, Gordon Duncan, Marjory* and Dorothy Dyke, William Dilly*, Agnes and Catherine Darke, Constance Devenish-Meares, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree.

E—E. and Miriam Ecroyd, Maud Eddey, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Agnes*, Lewis, Maggie* and Flossy* Fullarton, Jeanne Faucon*, Louise Filhol*, Mabel, Bessie, Kate* and Maggie Fletcher, Olivia Ferguson, Kitty Fausset*, Laurence, Herbert and Richard Farmer, Helen Forbes, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Mary, Bessie and Blanche Freeman.

G—Frank and Alfred Gibbs, Winnie and Dorothy Grove, Colin, Margery and George Graham Brown, Edith Grieve, Jack, Edith* and Margaret* Gray, Gracie Grout, George*, Mary* and Effie* Graham, Daisy*, Mary* and Alfred Greenacre, David Gardiner, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Ruth Hinder, Freda Hunton, W.* and E. Hopkins, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Georgette Hoffman*, Dimple and Muriel Hare, Kathleen Hughes, James Henderson, Theodora Hill*, Ella Hake, Stanley* and Francie* Hoyte, Dorothy Harris, Lottie and Rosetta Hamilton, Deenie and Edith Holms, Bessie Hope, Violet Holford*, Ethel Hutchings*.

I—Daisy Iredell, Ami and Isabel Inglis.

J—James Jackson, Lizzie Johnstone*, Betty Jacobs, Emily Jeynes, Kate Johns*.

K—Lily and Prada Kinvig, Eva, Max and Stanley Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Flossie Key, Isa., T., Alex.* and Agnes* Kay, Philippa*, Dorothy* and Grace* Kerr, Jeanie Kyle.

L—C. Livingstone-Learmouth, Cecilia* and Georgina Lichtenstein, Edith and Nellie Lockhart, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh.

M—Winifred and Christina Marshall, Dora Muir, Dora Marples, Abraham and Bella Mack, Edith and Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Charlotte Millar*, Margaret, Dorothy and Daniel Morris, Adelaide Moore, J. and Barbara* Maconchy, Annie, Daisy and Nellie Mackenzie, Margaret Macphee, Howard*, Evelyn and Gwendoline Meir, Olive* and Lois Mewburn, Frank Meader*, Evie Miller.

N—Edith Nash, Peter Nicholson.

O—Eva and Maude Oakes, Katie and Sidney Oliver.

P—Vera and Daisy Petrides, Daisy Phillips, Geoffrey and Clarice Peach, Alice Powdrill, Laura Pratt, Walter Perryman, Dorothy Patten*, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Ruth Patient, Edith Purkiss, Ernest Pearce, Jessie, Willie, and Eddie Palmer, Laura Percy.

R—Marion and Gussie Rosch, Kate Rosenbloom, Lorimer and Rita Romanes, Aileen, Winnifred, and Marjorie Roberts, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Elsie Ridewood*, Isabel Roe.

S—Evelyn Shaw*, Bessie*, Edith, and Minnie* Shepherd, Maude, Lettice, and Violet Sall, Lucy and K. Soltau, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Ada Stevens, Bertha Stocker, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons, Herbert Stuart, Ronald Studd, Dorothy*, Francis*, and Helen Stalker, Gladys, Undine*, and Gwendoline* Shaw, Nannie Sturrock, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Mary Symon, Ivy, Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Binford Sellwood, Marie Stuart, Bessie Symes, Constance Schaeffer, Bessie Scantlebury, John Smith, Frank Sutton, Violet Salvesen, Kathleen and Elsie Slark, Mildred*, Constance* and Gertrude* Scott.

T—Olive Tritton, Frank Tomkins, Frank Thompson, Winnie* and Arthur* Taylor, Florence Turner, Sarah Tyson, Alice Truelove, Marjorie Tracey, Louie Tibbits.

U—Queenie Upton.

W—Pringle Wilson, Fred. and Helen Webb, Sarah, Rachel, Georgina and James Wilson, Ronald Watson, Bertie Walls, William Wheeler*, Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Connie Wood*, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Rosamond Woodgate, Ellie and Nora Wyatt, Violet, Louisa and Arthur Walker, Mary Ware, Mary Wood Leonard Wall.

Z—Sophia Zaxitsky.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 185.—Alice Stone* (S. Africa), Janet Garrett* (S. Africa). No. 187.—Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada), Dora Wallace No. 188.—Jean and Eliza Scott (Canada), Frank and Vera Sjöström (U.S.A.), Dora Wallace (Canada), Nettie, Kate*, and Will Thomson. No. 189.—Vera and Frank Sjöström (U.S.A), Nettie, Ina, Will and Kate Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

FLORENCE TURNER, DIMPLE HARE, GLADYS BARTLETT, ALICE STONE (S. Africa).—I am glad to welcome you as new "searchers," and trust the study will prove interesting and useful.

LOUIE TIBBETS, FREDA HUNTON.—Many thanks for the flowers and heather so kindly sent.

EDITH GRIEVE.—Thank you for your interesting little letter. I am glad you enjoyed your holiday so much.

KATIE OLIVER,—You are improving, but your paper is not quite neat enough for a "star."

FRANCIE HOYTE.—I am sorry you have hurt your wrist, and hope it will soon be quite right again.

FLORA and FRANKIE SIMMONS.—It was very kind of you to send me your photographs. I like them very much.

FANNY STILEMAN.—I am sorry you are ill, and hope you will soon be quite well again,

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchison, King's Cross, Sept. 15, Blackheath, Sept. 30; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Dersingham, Norfolk, Sept. 24-26; Boys' Brigade Mission, Bolton, Sept. 30-Oct. 6; Rev. S. M. Warner, Tewkesbury, Sept. 18-23; Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Y.M.C.A., Dartford, Sept. 17-24; Mr. W. Tye, with caravan at Framlingham; Mr. E. P. Rowe, with caravan, Wickham Bishop, near Witham; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Aspley Guise, Bedfordshire; Mr. Frank McLaine and Mr. W. Drake, with caravan, Lingfield. Annual Meetings for Reports of Seaside Work will be held in London, at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on October 5, 3 and 6.30. Y.M.C.A., Manchester, Oct. 16; Hope Hall, Liverpool, Oct. 17; Church Institute, Bradford, Oct. 18; Shaftesbury Hall Y.M.C.A., Leeds, Oct. 19; Southport, Oct. 20; Central Hall, Bolton, Oct. 24.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending September 23.

Sun., Sept. 17	Mark	ii. 1-19	Thurs., Sept. 21	Mark	vi. 12-25
Mon., " 18	"	iii. 1-17	Fri., " 22	"	vii. 1-11
Tues., " 19	"	v. 1-14	Sat., " 23	"	vii. 12-22
Wed., " 20	"	vi. 1-11

Dublin Christian Convention.—The twenty-sixth annual Christian Convention is to be held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, in the last week of September. The proceedings will commence with a conversazione on Monday evening, 25th inst., to be followed by a public meeting, at which Capt. R. Wade Thompson, J.P., will preside. Three meetings will be held each day following until Friday. Among the speakers will be Revs. W. H. Griffith Thomas, A. J. Palmer, Dr. C. H. Waller (late Highbury College), T. T. Matthews (L.M.S., Madagascar), Peter Thompson (East London Mission), Henry Montgomery and James Ervine. Special facilities have been granted by the railway companies. The secretary is Mr. H. B Dawson, Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

(1.83)

Home Missions.

"And ye came unto Me."

MANY readers of The Christian having taken a deep interest in the work of the Church Army missioners in the prisons of England and Wales, a brief account of some of the work may prove interesting. During the last half-year, the writer has spent four months visiting sixteen prisons, and meeting with some 11,000 men, women, and lads, serving sentences ranging from three days to imprisonment for life.

Every day services are held in the prison chapel, as well as in the hospital, and throughout the day the missioner visits prisoners in their cells. These interviews between missioner and prisoner are absolutely private, no warder or other person being present. The missioner greets the prisoner cheerily, giving him a hearty shake of the hand. They have a little talk, and then the Word of God is read, and kneeling together, missioner and prisoner join in prayer.

That many prisoners have, through God's grace, been converted, changed lives, both inside and outside of the prisons, bear ample testimony. One dear fellow, whom I first met in his cell two years ago, is now a Sunday School teacher in London. Another whom I met in a convict prison, is now a member of a church choir, and, week-day and Sunday, is working faithfully and zealously, both indoors and in the open air, trying to win souls for Christ. Another I met in a different convict prison has now for some time been an EARNEST WORKER FOR GOD IN LONDON.

In the case of prisoners undergoing long sentences, the missioner is privileged to write letters to, and receive letters from, them. Here is an extract from a letter received from a convict: "I am not writing to you about myself, but to tell you about a fellow-prisoner who will be discharged in a few days, and who intends coming to you. His name is ——. I must tell you first why I take an interest in him. Well, when I came to this place some two years ago, I was put to work in the same party as ——. Now, I am twice that lad's age, and after a very chequered career, have been, by the grace of God, brought to know and love the Master, and am trying, in a very weak and imperfect way truly, to live a life consistent with this love and knowledge, and this has made me act somewhat different to most around me—quieter, perhaps, kinder and more patient, I hope.

"Anyway, the laddie was attracted to me in some way, and, at the time, he was going on in a very erratic way, getting into trouble for all all sorts of breaches (trivial in the main) of the prison rules. Well, the upshot was, he gave me an opening, and I spoke a few earnest, kindly words to him, and he promised me to try and keep out of trouble in prison; and he has faithfully kept his promise, at first not very successfully, and I could not help a smile on his return to his work, after undergoing his punishment, to see him fairly ashamed to look me in the face; but I always took the first opportunity of saying, 'Never mind, try again.'

"Some months ago, I was removed from that party to work in the shops at a trade, and so had no opportunity, or very rarely a chance, of seeing him, but I noticed he soon was wearing his "class;" and for some time now he has been wearing his "first class," which I was much pleased to see. I think I have said enough to show you the reason I am writing this letter. I have spoken to the chaplain about him, and I have no doubt he will advise him for the best. The laddie is going out into the world full of resolutions, and, I am afraid, trusting entirely in his own strength to keep them, and I know from bitter experience what that means. I have made him a subject of earnest prayer for a long time now; and, oh, Captain ——, if you can only lead him to give his life to the Master! He is a rare little fellow to work, and I am persuaded in my own mind, if you can find him work with some firm, kind-hearted, Christian man, who will bear with his waywardness patiently, there is the making of a good man in him.

"I have years to stay here yet, and you know you kindly promised to come and see us again, and conduct another mission. When you do come, you can tell me the result; you need all your time and pennies for the work. There are a good many here who constantly pray for the success of that work, and that God may bless you, and surround you with a band of enthusiastic workers, is the prayer and wish of yours very respectfully and thankfully——"

Through the kindness of a well-known clergyman in the West End of London we were able to co-operate in sending the "laddie" abroad, and we have since heard from him that he is in an excellent situation and a member of the local Y.M.C.A. He is full of gratitude that he has been enabled to make an ENTIRELY FRESH START IN LIFE.

The Church Army missioners have, of course, one definite aim in all their work in connection with prisoners and ex-prisoners, viz., to bring the individual soul to an effectual knowledge of the Gospel of the Lord, and no effort is considered to have accomplished its purpose so long as it falls below that standard. Oftentimes when the bread-winner is in prison, the wife and children are undergoing the severest privation, and in such cases the missioner provides means for alleviating the distress until the bread-winner's return.

Two homes have been established by the Church Army in London for first offenders alone, and the Society has sixty homes and other institutions in the metropolis, into nearly all of which prisoners are received direct on their discharge from prison. This regular mission work is carried on in the prisons of England and Wales entirely at the expense of the Church Army; but the committee and the prison missioners themselves have no manner of doubt that the means needed for the work will be forthcoming. W. R. D.

Church Army, 130, Edgware Road, W.

Y.M.C.A. Programme for the Twentieth Century.

THE Young Men's Christian Associations have, through their National Council, agreed to inaugurate the work of the approaching century on the lines of the following programme:—

District Organization.—Attention to be directed to the more efficient organization of the several district unions, and to the placing of the work of each union under the supervision of a district travelling officer.

Specialized Work.—Greater attention to be given to forms of effort specially adapted to meet the needs of different classes of young men at present unreached. To this end, to extend the work of the different prayer unions and kindred agencies to the larger centres throughout the country; and to attach these different works, when formed, as auxiliaries of the Y.M.C.A.

Boys' Work.—It is believed that the development of work for boys may prove to be an invaluable preventive agency.

City Organization.—Work in the larger centres to be developed so as to provide branch organization, particularly for young men of the artizan and working classes; also to provide for the more effective organization of Bible teaching, and of the education and physical departments.

Colonial.—The appointment of a deputation secretary to visit and help forward the work in British Colonies and dependences.

Foreign.—The extension of the work and provision of workers for Egypt, Palestine, Hong Kong, the ports of China and Japan, and elsewhere.

National Staff.—The appointment of an officer to carry forward and develop specialized forms of effort; and provision for a considerable development of the publication of the Council's work.

To provide for the training of secretaries, and for bringing qualified workers into the field.

To endeavour to secure a fuller measure of financial support and co-operation from the churches; and with this object, to present memorials to the official bodies representing the different churches.

The Friends and Sacerdotalism.

IN a circular letter to fellow-members of the Society of Friends, Mr. Henry Hull Warner says:—

At no time since the rise of our Society has the need of our teaching been more manifest. At no time has a protest against the paralysing power of the priestly caste been more necessary.

In many places elaborate music, outward show, and worldly pomp, have led a number away from the influence of the simple truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Children and young people have been, and are being, lured by sensuous services, back once more to the deadly doctrines of the Romish Church, and the evil practices of Popery—practices that have sapped the moral fibre of all nations which have made these things part of their religious systems, and driven them to premature decay.

The idolatrous Mass, the adoration of sacramental bread and wine, the degrading fiction of priestly absolution, have again been brought back to us. The sacred privacy of our English homes has been invaded with the iniquitous Confessional by men who teach others to address them as Father confessors, claiming power to forgive sins and set penance. In many cases all this has been done in direct opposition to the wishes of large bodies of worshippers. Their feelings have been outraged and their hearts have been filled with bitterness and grief instead of joy, thanksgiving, and praise.

In many a country village the only place of worship is in the hands of a sacerdotalist. Sermons are preached and services conducted in a manner which irritate and pain rather than gladden and edify. Spiritual life is deadened, and large numbers of our fellow-men are lapsing, nay, are indeed being driven into indifference.

In order to counteract this influence and to carry the blessed Gospel message to these dark spots in rural England, the National Protestant League has, in connection with the Church Association (14, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.), sent out mission vans, each in charge of a colporteur-evangelist. Ten of these are now travelling throughout the country. Two hundred pounds a year would enable a van (now idle) and an evangelist to go forth with the Gospel message. Funds are urgently needed to carry on the good and necessary work now being done by them.

Country Towns Mission.

THE Sixty-second annual report speaks of much encouragement during the year. The fifty missionaries in connection with the society are labouring in a number of towns and villages, and from two or three of the districts the reports speak of exceptional blessing. Reference is made to the growing need for faithful teaching in many country places. A letter from a clergyman, who has been recently appointed to a country parish is quoted, in which he says: "The darkness and heathenism and semi-Romanism of many of our villages is terrible, and I see it is for these places that your missionaries are chiefly intended. May God own and bless their work abundantly."

The committee are sure that the work of the society is helping to supply the lack which exists. By its system of house-to-house visitation, many thousands of people are seen each year and dealt with individually about spiritual things. God's Word is read, and prayer offered whenever possible. The sick and aged and those unable to attend any place of worship are especially cared for. The report states that the secretary has visited many of the stations during the year, and has found it cheering to observe the hearty welcome the missionaries receive on their rounds. He has also conducted some of the meetings held in cottages and farm-houses, and has learned what a boon these often are, particularly in out-of-the-way places.

The report will be sent on application to the Secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

The Seaside Camp for London Working Boys.—During the past hot summer we have been enabled to give a holiday to hundreds of tired and hard-working lads. Such a work as this—affording a week's holiday for 6s. (including fare) to London lads with slender earnings, but of respectable character—should not be allowed to flag for want of necessary funds. Address Mr. F. A. Bloxham, Northumberland Chambers, Charing Cross, S.W.

Evangelistic.

Triumphs at Doncaster Races.

Campaign by the Open-Air Mission.

ON Saturday afternoon, September 2, a selection of our evangelists met at King's Cross en route, and by Monday nearly all the appointed speakers had joined our forces. On Saturday evening we held our first service in the market-place, amid a motley crowd of marketers, pleasure-seekers, and gamblers. Profound attention and stillness, with evidences of the Spirit's working, were unmistakable among the large and almost immovable crowd.

Sunday, and each succeeding morning, was begun by a prayer meeting in the house of Dr. A. Christy Wilson, a very valuable local helper. Here we committed ourselves and our cause to the Lord, with the inward assurance—

"GO IN THIS THY MIGHT."

On the Lord's day we were stationed close to the entrance of the racecourse, both morning and afternoon. Large audiences of young men gathered, and real interest was manifested. Our congregations sat or stood round us, while large numbers reclined against the wooden railings which formed the enclosure. An evening service, in the heart of the town, was continued for more than two hours, during which hundreds heard the Word, and many seemed transfixed by its power. From this most solemn gathering it was difficult to break away, but extreme physical weariness compelled an adjournment.

On Monday afternoon and evening we visited the Port of Goole, Mr. Barry Wake's birthplace. Hundreds crowded round under a central lamp-post, and a starry night of glorious splendour must have witnessed, as we verily believe, the decision of many for Christ in that important maritime centre.

Tuesday was the first race-day, and, after a service in the market-place, we early advanced to the racecourse, where, amid great throngs of mammon-worshippers, we heralded the tidings of salvation. Soon the blessing came. One young fellow listened earnestly the whole time, and, being spoken with at the close,

KNELT AMONG THE RACECOURSE THRONG, and gladly yielded himself to the Saviour's powerful call. His name and address were taken, and his case, with many others, will be earnestly followed up.

That evening, two simultaneous meetings were held in the town, and at each God sealed his Word in the conversion of souls. At the one conducted by myself, in Station Road, there seemed at first no inclination to listen, and the crowd was small. Suddenly the tide turned, anxious faces pressed round us, the Spirit's power was manifested, the solo, "Be in Time," went home to many hearts; and finally we dropped on our knees in the street, and, amid a thrilling scene, six precious souls gave themselves up to the Saviour, two of whom had been backsliders. Surely heaven rejoiced that night! Wednesday was and, despite showery weather, thousands upon thousands poured into the town and on to the racecourse by every conceivable route and conveyance. Soon we were on the field again, and, amid the dense masses of the ungodly, the worldly, the dissipated, and the desperate, we resumed operations. Hour by hour we toiled on, singing, praying, warning, inviting, that we might by all means save some. At times the listeners were few, and then again a crowd would gather, while all around a large audience sat in carriages and drags, including a party of soldiers, who were addressed by Major Cox. Finally, "Marked Testaments" were offered to the anxious, and the racecourse again witnessed the strange spectacle of men at prayer on bended knee. Surely prayer was heard! One young man, who had joined heartily in the singing, confessed anxiety of soul, and has since been written to in the confident hope that he, too, will ere long begin to shine for Jesus.

"THE GREAT ST. LEGER DAY;"

How can we further recapitulate this daily record of toil and triumph amid scenes of sin, of drunkenness, of gambling, and of ruin? Every day saw its own special victory, and

ALMOST EVERY SERVICE WITNESSED CONVERSIONS.

It is a joy to say this, because all over the kingdom praying hearts have pleaded earnestly that God would not withhold this blessing. He is faithful that promised, and abundantly answered prayer.

The distribution of literature every day was enormous—60,000 choice publications in all being given—the crowds being met at the Obelisk and other vantage points on their return from the excitements of the turf in the early evenings. Of sober countenances there were many, and of despairing and desperate faces not a few. If the official race-card of the Great St. Leger for 1899 did not display so famous a show of horses as usual, the found 25,000 hands open to receive a copy after the Great St. Leger was run. It was effectively printed in two colours, and worded in so striking a manner as to secure the curious attention of the most careless passer-by. Copies can be had of the secretary.

"CORRECT CARD" OF THE O.A.M.

Old men and youths accepted the "Marked Testament," the usefulness of which has been proved a hundred times in this campaign alone. We feel that we owe a deep debt of gratitude to Mrs. Stephen Menzies for compiling it. Best of all, many of these anxious ones accepted Jesus, some boldly declaring for the Lord; others, in tears, kneeling on the bare ground; and, in one notable instance, a man in middle life, after attending all our meetings and counting the cost, surrendered on Friday, the last day.

One evening—that of the great St. Leger—seventeen brethren and sisters took part, and a record has been kept of their addresses, truly notable for variety, interest, and spiritual power.

With a thankful heart I close this record. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." To the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have helped to make this great campaign possible, by their financial assistance, we tender deepest gratitude, seeking continuance of prayer for more such expeditions as this, and for power to witness wherever the Lord shall send us, in winter as in summer.

FRANK COCKREM (Secretary).

Open Air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Strand.

Racecourse Mission Campaign.

ACCORDING to the testimony of the local ministers of the various churches, and friends who loyally supported us, this year's mission was signalized by greater spiritual power than any of its predecessors. Local friends rejoiced to welcome us, and expressed a hope that we might long be spared to continue the work.

Our band of workers numbered thirty-six, besides a party of ladies who met each morning to mark the Gospel portions. The campaign began, as usual, on Sunday with a united prayer meeting. In the afternoon an open-air meeting was held in the show ground. At six o'clock the London contingent conducted the service at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, where the first fruits of blessing were received. Later on we adjourned to the market-place, where we had a well-sustained meeting.

Each morning we began with a Bible reading and prayer meeting, conducted by the secretary, excepting on Wednesday, when Rev. W. Bell, Wesleyan minister, took that part. These meetings were characterized by much spiritual force. The personal dealing and distribution of the Gospels were greatly owned of God, and many backsliders and professing Christians were convicted of sin, and in a number of cases they assured our workers that they would never again attend the races.

The meetings in the market-place nightly, which were attended by an increasingly large crowd, numbering from 800 to 1,000 persons, were simply indescribable. From 7.30 to 9.30 and 10.0 p.m. the fire was kept up, followed by prayer meetings. Here is a seeker on his knees, surrounded by a band of praying men, also on their knees, with about 200 people in the attitude of prayer.

Ben Alberto, the converted tipster, created no small stir amongst the racing fraternity, and his faithful testimony was owned of God to many of his old associates, who congratulated him and wished him "good luck," &c. Brother Herbert Leng, the racecourse minstrel, was greatly helped of the Lord, and his bright Gospel songs, many of which are his own composition, were much appreciated. One gentleman bookmaker, on learning that our brother was a business man, and had come down at his own expense, was deeply impressed at that kind of religion.

Mr. Howard Green, whose bag bore the words, "Ye must be born again," was asked by another bookmaker whether he really believed it. A helpful conversation ensued, in which he pressed Mr. Green to dine with him, saying he should have the best bottle of wine that money could buy, over which they could discuss this important question. "You stick to it, my dear sir," interposed another gentleman. "You are right."

AFTER MANY DAYS.

"I heard you speak in the market-place two years ago, and it has never left me. I was prevented from coming to the races last year, but I've managed it this year. Directly I came into the town I inquired whether you were to be here, and was glad when I heard that you were expected." After some fencing upon the subject of his salvation, came this question: "Is it not possible for a man to sin his day of grace away?" And, "I am that man; I know there is no possible chance of my ever being saved." We could not get through with him. He attended all the meetings on the course that day, and in the market-place at night, and his face was a picture.

Seeing him in the crowd on the Thursday night I sent him my card, asking him to favour me with an interview. This he granted, and at the close of the meeting we went to a friend's house. I shall never forget that night's conflict. That he was hopelessly lost he was convinced, and his environment was such that he could never become a Christian. Till long after eleven o'clock we were reasoning the question out, by the aid of God's Word, in agony of soul; and who can express the joy felt when the Holy Spirit fell upon him and enabled him to surrender his all (and it was an all), and to cry out, "Lord, I can do nothing, absolutely nothing! If I am to be saved, Thou must do it, Lord! Help me!" And here the strong man wept. "I will trust Thee," he continued, "cost me what it will." Then came the calm assurance.

The next morning found him at the prayer meeting, and again his soul found relief in praise to God, while an indescribable joy filled us all. He spent the day with us, and gave further evidence of the undoubted reality of the work of God in his soul.

Had this been the only case, it would have been worth the whole mission; but I thank God it was not the only one by many. Another case was of a young man who, being in the town on business, was attracted by our meeting; and, in the course of conversation with one of our brethren, he said, "Up till now I have been a passive Christian; but, after such a meeting as to-night, I shall go back home to work for God."

Another case:—A man who was converted last year came to our meeting to testify to God's keeping power; but time and space forbid our relating all the wonders of His Grace.

A WORKER.

MR. WILLIAM DAY, who also visited Doncaster Races, writes that, as usual, his Gospel banner aroused considerable attention. A man who (as he afterwards said) was intending to commit suicide read the texts on the banner and was much affected. He subsequently engaged in prayer, and left the course rejoicing in the Lord.

London Tent Evangelization.

A week's mission has been held in the great tent in Clapham Road, by Messrs. Frank and Bewley Weaver. Commencing on Sunday, September 3, the meetings were replete with interest each evening; numbers entered the inquiry room, and there found peace through believing. Undoubtedly our brethren have laid the foundations of a revival, for which hundreds are daily praying. The week-night gatherings have an average attendance of a thousand or more. The tent has not suffered permanent damage from the recent storm, the little inconvenience resulting from the inrush of water has been overcome, and the floor of the tent is now in better condition than ever. W. W. M.

"Sand" Services for Slum Children.

Amid the Christian activities of to-day, I should like to draw the attention of your readers to a novel method of attracting and instructing the "little ones" of our slums.

While visiting an aggressive curate in a North London parish, I was invited to take part in a "London Sand Service." On reaching the place of rendezvous, I was touched by seeing a large number of children arranged and seated on an open gravel space, the "tinies" in front and the elders in the rear. The hymn sheets being distributed, the children read simultaneously the hymn chosen—verse by verse—which was then sweetly sung. I was struck by the silence maintained during the prayer, and by the texts attached to the various objects sent up for the little lessons, which were made so simple and bright that the eager little faces gave evidence of sustained interest. The addresses were interspersed with short, bright choruses, which the children learn at each meeting, and which they sang with evident enjoyment. As the service proceeded a number of adults gathered round, the address bringing tears to eyes which appeared strangers to such emotion. Could not such gatherings as these be multiplied in suitable places, thus bringing the good tidings to thousands of children and parents who never enter either Sunday school, church, or mission hall? and would not such a work commend itself to many who have not entered as yet the fields which are already "ripe unto harvest?"

A Lover of Children.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

The interest created by the erection of the great tent in the crowded thoroughfare of the Mile End Road has in no way diminished, but as time wears on increases. During the past month, on several occassions as many have been turned away as were inside. Mr. Winter's Orchestral Band is no doubt a great attraction. The sweet and melodious strains of the stringed instruments wafted along the canvas walls of the entrance, and bursting out into the wide side-walk, attracts the passer-by, and he is led by curiosity to wend his way into the tent. By this means hundreds have come under the sound of the Gospel who would otherwise never have been reached.

Some of the roughest characters of the neighbourhood have thus been induced to attend the services. This is most cheering. To be the means of doing something that will bring a few hours' sunshine into the dark lives of many of the denizens of the East End is worth living for, but what can be said of those who are toiling day and night to bring not only temporal blessings, but the Gospel of the grace of God, within reach of those whose lives at the best of times are hardly worth living? Such work is Christ-like. Mr. W. D. Dunn, one of the Evangelization Society's Scottish evangelists, has had a month's work of the most encouraging kind. His earnest, manly, outspoken addresses, have been owned and blessed by God, both to saint and sinner. While the tent meetings have been crowded, the Great Assembly Hall has been well filled on Sunday nights. During the month the Jubilee Singers assisted on Sunday evenings by their singing.

The good done by this work can never fully be recorded, and often cases are heard of just promiscuously. On Sunday week one of the workers accosted a gentleman at the back of the hall, and asked him if he was a Christian. He replied, "Yes," and then informed his questioner that he came from one of our large seaport towns—that he had come to see the work that had done so much for a man he knew. He then related how a man in his employ had robbed him without his knowledge and left. Some years afterwards he received a letter from him with five five-pound notes, explaining how he had robbed him, and the result of having been converted to God in Charrington's Great Assembly Hall had induced him to make restitution, and to hope he would forgive him. Thus the workers are encouraged from time to time by having God's truth literally fulfilled. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto Me void."

South London Christian Union.

That useful organization, the South London Christian Union, held its anniversary gatherings on Monday last in the "Victory" tent at Peckham Rye. The meeting-place was happily chosen. The tent is just now the scene of much revival blessing, while the Union is well known as a sturdily aggressive body whose evangelistic efforts have time and again conduced to the initiation and support of soul-saving work.

The afternoon conference, at which Mr. Alfred Holness, president of the Union, conducted the proceedings, was well attended, the capacious canvas tabernacle being almost full. On the platform were a large number of well-known evangelists, in addition to representative ministers of various denominations.

After Pastor Sawday had engaged earnestly in prayer, Mr. Holness traced the rise and progress of the Union, and emphasized its usefulness in binding together ministers and congregations in a warm bond, not only of Christian fellowship, but of evangelistic zeal.

Mr. Henry Varley spoke characteristically on our Lord's second coming, expressing the opinion that the divine event was close at hand. Dwelling on the glorious results that would accrue to humanity on the manifestation of the Kingdom of Christ, Mr. Varley said that at Bethlehem the angels sang the message of "peace on earth." The world, however, rejected its Saviour, and there followed, instead of peace and joy, nineteen centuries of war and wrong. The present time sees Europe an armed camp, and the nations in such a condition as must arouse a sense of horror. Christ must surely come—He would come to supply the world with its greatest need, a competent Ruler. Diverse governments and separate interests, too, tended to strife, but, united under the one supreme and beneficent King, all nations would do his will on earth as it was done in heaven. The prospect of the imminent coming of the Master rendered the outlook most blessed. Mr. Varley added some timely and pungent remarks on the unhappy social condition of the masses, and the contempt for religion and morality manifested by the great European governments. He concluded by urging his hearers to remember that their body is the palace of God; and if they would but allow Him to reign therein, they would thereby bring about

A MILLENNIUM IN MINIATURE.

A strong belief in the nearness of the Lord's coming, asserted Mr. Varley, did not tend, as some argued, to slackness of effort, but was highly stimulating to the Christian worker. Let them, one and all, pray and work for the extension of the kingdom, remembering the command, "Occupy till I come."

Rev. J. Flanagan, of St. George's Hall Primitive Methodist Mission, Southwark, followed with a vigorous address; first pathetic with an appeal for more widespread and earnest labour in "the dark kennels of Metropolitan vice," and then brightly reminiscent with pithy stories of revival days. The solo, "Ten Thousand Thanks to Jesus," fervently sung by Madame Annie Ryall, and prayer from Mr. Leonard Weaver, brought this helpful meeting to a close, and the company adjourned to the public tea.

In the evening, the tent was densely crowded, members of the Union rallying from all parts of South London. The gathering was one of marked enthusiasm and spiritual liberty. Mr. A. Garstin, who presided, gave an address descriptive of revival work in various parts of London and the provinces, adding cheering news of a day's services in a country village, where, in spite of much difficulty in overcoming the inert opposition of deadness and unconcern, blessed results were seen in a number of conversions.

Pastor Ewing, speaking on the Union, expressed satisfaction that people who differed in their views of Christian truth could come together in that way. It was good for them to learn of the difficulties, labours, and struggles of others—to find out the beauties of each other's characters, instead of ascertaining what weaknesses there might be, and then publicly announcing them. Moreover, they were not only working in the unity of fellowship, but for the salvation of souls; and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit gave them the highest authority for their work. Let them remember, too, Mr. Ewing pleaded, the value of united prayer. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." For the interposition of Providence in poor fallen France and the Transvaal, for distressed humanity everywhere, let them, the representatives of many churches, offer up their earnest supplications.

The meeting was helped by much and vigorous congregational singing; everybody was thoroughly at home. If a person, or twenty persons, felt like saying "Hallelujah" they could, and did, do so, for the breezy unconventionality which is a marked characteristic of these meetings sets an audience entirely at ease. This freedom doubtless goes far to account for the presence of so many who seldom attend a church or chapel. Mr. W. R. Lane gave a forcible address to Christians, founded on incidents in the career of Mark, tracing the evangelist's chequered experiences from the first time his name is mentioned in Scripture until the final reference to him as "profitable for the ministry." Mr. Lane especially commented on the fact that, instead of settling down in despondency, he evidently regained lost ground, and was ready to take his place by his old leader and colleague in the prison cell. With homely illustrations and pathetic touches, Mr. Lane went on to make a general appeal for personal reconsecration.

Although the evening was waxing late, scarcely a person stirred as Mr. Bewley Weaver rose to speak. He addressed his remarks to the unconverted, taking as his text, "There was no room for them in the inn." Describing himself as "a son of the soil," his father a collier, and his mother a Lancashire factory lass, Mr. Weaver quickly secured the attention of the many working people present. Home thrusts respecting national and personal sins were followed by an endeavour to impress the pleasure-loving and frivolous who found room for athletics, for the bicycle, for theatre and ball-room pleasures, but "no room for Jesus." The story of the dying girl-votary of fashion and the dance, passing away, without hope, in the presence of her father and of Mrs. Richard Weaver, was affecting in its sadness, and when the moment came for pressing the audience to decide for Christ, a number gave evidence of their desire to depart, there and then, from the ways of iniquity, professing to venture their all upon the Saviour! So, amid renewed signs of blessing, these anniversary meetings concluded, and the Union embarks upon another year's work, encouraged and invigorated.

Mr. William Forbes gave addresses last week at the Presbyterian Churches at Longsight and Brunswick Street, Manchester. On Saturday he held a tea meeting at Morecambe for women dancers engaged at the Winter Gardens.

Mr. Richard Hill has conducted a series of evangelistic meetings in a tent at Hawick, N.B., with blessing. One of the speakers was an evangelist who had been converted under Mr. Hill's speaking in the same town twenty-five years since.

Mr. Arthur Klein has closed a month's special mission in the large tent of Gordon Evangelistic Mission in Aberdeen, and his faithful preaching of the Gospel has been blessed in awakening and leading sinners to Christ. He also conducted Bible readings daily in the Y.M.C.A. hall, and these proved most helpful to many of the Lord's people.

The tent mission conducted at Ringwood, Hants., by Mr. Henry Bray, of the London Evangelization Society, concluded on September 10. The earnest, faithful messages of salvation have been much appreciated. Christians have been strengthened and stimulated to greater zeal for souls, and precious souls have professed to have been brought into the joys of pardon and peace with God.

One of the Evangelization Society's tents, under the charge of Mr. Goudie has been pitched during the summer at Epping and Thornwood Common, and subsequently at Harlow and Ongar. It is now at Loughton, where the work, both among Christians and the unconverted, is being blessed. Indeed, the record at each place visited is of a cheering nature, many souls having been won for the Master.

Mr. W. J. Orsman reports a gracious revival among young people in connection with the work at Costers' Hall, Hoxton. Many professed conversion, among them being a number of the children of godly parents belonging to the Mission. Especially memorable were the services conducted by Mr. Harry Taylor, of Philadelphia. In the afternoon Sunday school, and the evangelistic meeting at night, about eighty stepped forward in response to the invitation, and claimed Christ as their Saviour.

A Gospel tent mission has recently been held at Bromham, Wilts., conducted by Mr. C. B. Joliffe, of the Evangelization Society. Christians of various denominations co-operated, and the meetings were well attended, especially on Sunday evenings, when scores of persons had to stand outside. A tea was held to mark the close of the mission. It was largely attended, and subsequently an impressive meeting was held. We believe that during the mission sinners have been awakened and believers strengthened.

Under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association a very successful tent mission has been just concluded at Perth, N.B. The tent was pitched on the South Inch, a park famous for the great revival gatherings of 1859. Addresses were given by the Rev. Mr. Houston, Cambuslang, Rev. Mr. Bissett, Lochee, Mr. Alexander Fraser, and others. From the beginning the people came in large numbers, and many had to listen outside the canvas. Christ was lovingly presented in his fulness and power to save. Much good has resulted in the spiritual quickening of believers and the ingathering of a good many, principally young men and women. To God be all the praise. J. A.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. Monro Collings.—Sept. 18-27, Feltham.
Gipsy Smith.—Sept. 16-25, Mansfield; 30-Oct 9, Bromsgrove.
Rev. Hugh C. Wallace.—Sept. 28-29, Crescent Church, Liverpool.
Mr. Leonard Weaver, Gospel Tents, South London, until further notice.
Mr. John Coates, with Gospel Tent, Cranham, till end of September.
Mr. Ben Alberto.—Sept. 17, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.
Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Sept., Park Hall, Barking; during Oct., Belfast.
Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Sept. 17-Oct. 2, Pollokshields, "The Hawthorns," Bramley Hill, Croydon.
Rev. D. M. Cameron.—Till Oct. 14, Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road; Oct. 15-Nov. 5 Glasgow.
Mr. Jno. T. Matrer.—Oct. 1-8, Beeston, Notts; 15-29, Sutton-on-Craven, Yorks; Nov. 5-16, Dartford.
Mr. James Sprunt.—Sept. 17 and 24, at 7, 21 and 28, at 8, Shirley Hall, Enfield; Oct. 1-13, Baptist Church, Milton Street, Chester.
Mr. W. R. Lane.—Sept 16-24, Bristol; 30-Oct. 9, Bilston; 14-23, West Bromwich; 28 Nov. 6, Coventry; 11-20, Dudley.
Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Till Sept. 18, Belper; 23-Oct. 2, Liverpool; 7-17, Morley; 21-30, Todmorden; Nov. 4-13, Leamington.
Rev. Thomas Cook.—Sept. 17, Blyth; 24, Harrogate; Oct. 1, Fleetwood; 8, Halifax; 15, Hoyland; 22, Sheffield; 29 Birmingham.
Mr. J. S. Harrison.—During Sept., Folkestone Road, Walthamstow, Sundays and Thursdays; Oct., St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays.
Mr. Charles Inglis.—Every Sunday during Sept. at the Polytechnic, Regent Street; week nights till Sept. 16, Clapham Tent; 19-23, Battersea Tent; Oct. 1-16, Dorking.
Weaver Brothers.—Till Sept. 15, the Tent, Troy Town, Peckham Rye; 17-29, Carlisle; Oct. 1-13, Hartlepool; 15-27, Scarborough; 29-Nov. 10, Woolwich.
Mr. Newton Jones.—Sept. 23-28, Woolwich Baptist Tabernacle; 30-Oct. 9, Congregational Church, Pickering, Yorks.; 14-19, Holly Park Wesleyan Church, London, N.
Mr. Henry Thorne.—Till Sept. 18, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; Sept. 24, 27, and Oct. 1, Brunswick Chapel, Bristol; Sept. 26, Chippenham; Oct. 7 to 16, Warrington; 21 to 30, Greenheys, Manchester.
Borough Baptist Mission.—Sept. 17-28, Mr. E. P. Telford; Oct. 8 and 9, Mr. J. S. Harrison; Nov. 12-24, Weaver Brothers.—Mr. J. Manton Smith is to recommence his work, after his recent prolonged illness, by a mission here, beginning Dec. 31, continuing to Jan. 8, 1900. It is hoped that all who sympathize with him in his trial will pray for blessing on these meetings.
London Tent Evangelization Committee's Arrangements.—American Tent, Lavender Hill, close to Clapham Junction Station; till Sept. 17, Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. Jas. Gracie; 18-23, Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. Chas. Inglis. Meetings on week-nights at 7.30: Sundays 11 a.m. (men only), 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. The Victory Tent, Troy Town, Peckham Rye; till Sept. 15, the brothers Weaver, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker. Meetings as at Lavender Hill. The Great Tent, High Street, Clapham Road, close to Clapham Road Station; till Sept. 16, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker. Meetings on week nights at 7.30 p.m., Sundays 3.30 and 7.30 p.m.
Mr. Arthur Klein is now open for calls to work. Address, Glasgow; 22-Nov. 6, North Shields.

The Bermondsey Settlement.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to announce through your columns that we have vacancies here at present for two or three additional residents? I should be glad to correspond with any young men about to settle in London for professional or business pursuits, or as students, who may be willing to reside in an institution like this.

The neighbourhood is exceedingly healthy; it is within easy reach of both the City and the West End, and is specially convenient for Guy's, the London, and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals.

Those who come to us have an opportunity of engaging in the very extensive Christian and philanthropic work carried on by the settlement, and of thus acquiring most valuable insight into many urgent social problems; while the conditions are such that neither their ordinary pursuits, their health, nor even their ordinary comfort are interfered with. I shall be happy to furnish full particulars to any who write to me, addressing to the Bermondsey Settlement, London, S.E.—Yours faithfully,

A. Scott Lidgett, Warden.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on monthly meetings at Ipswich, September 21. Speaker, Rev. Charles Inwood.

On behalf of a sixteen days' mission, Sept. 17-Oct. 2, by Mrs. Baeyertz, in Kinning Park Free Church, Glasgow.

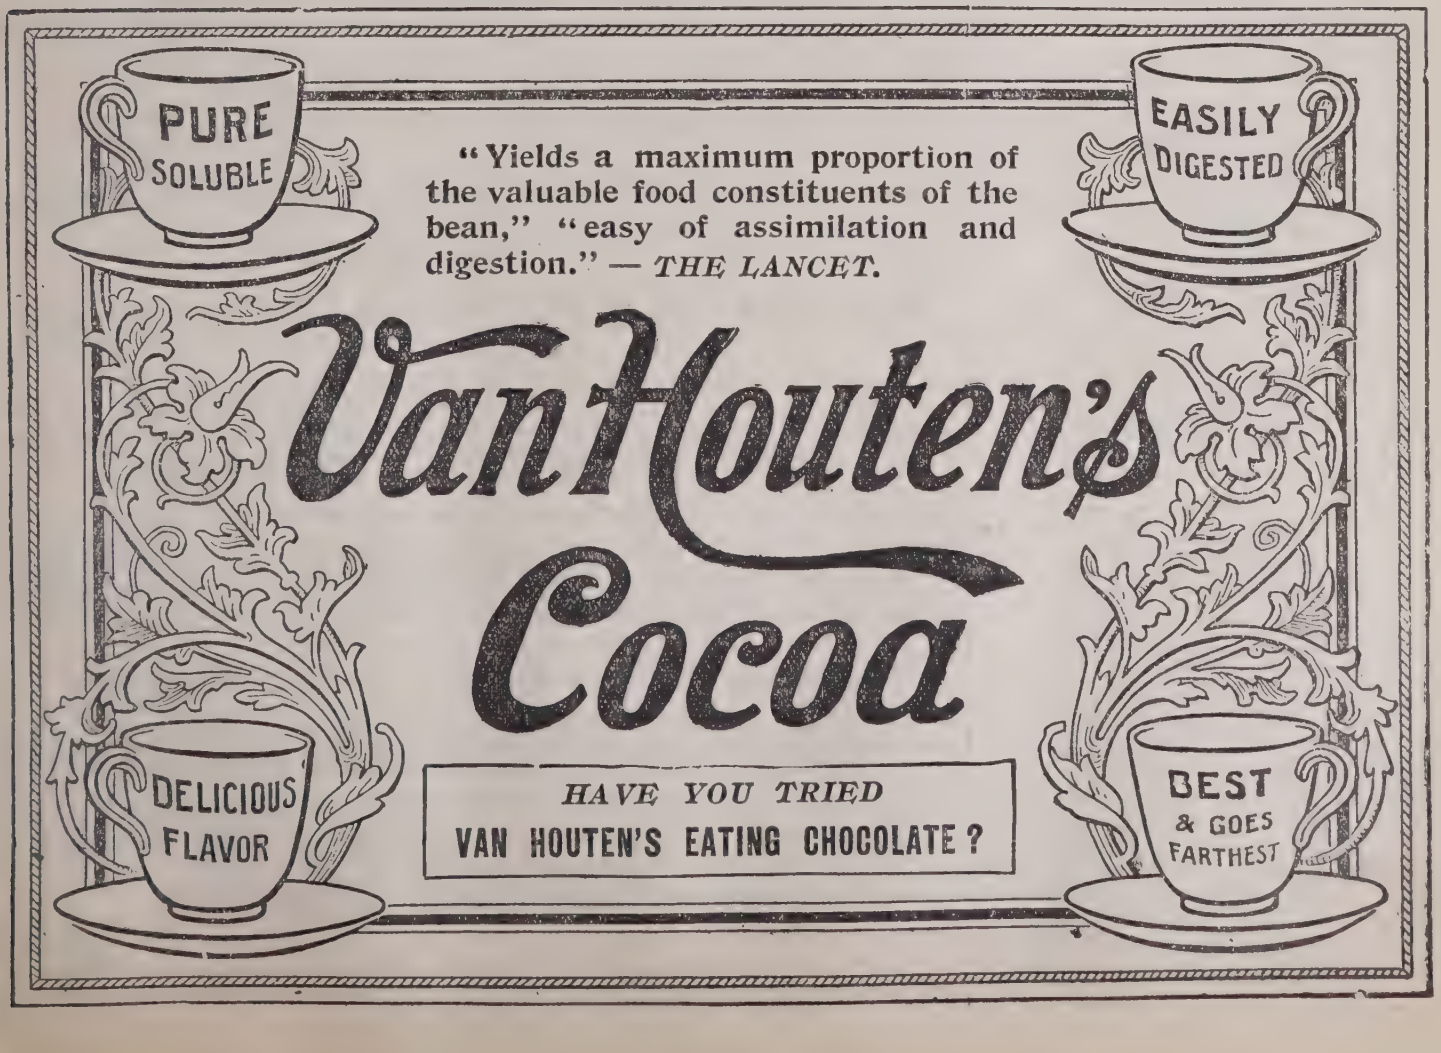
For blessing on the special autumn campaign at the Tabernacle, St. George's Cross, Glasgow.

For the Bayswater Convention, Oct. 30-Nov. 4, that it may be the occasion of a mighty spiritual work throughout the metropolis.

For a sixteen days' mission at Jarrow, continuing until Sept. 26, conducted by Herbert R. Francis, that the Spirit of God may fill the speaker and convince the hearers.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—The third party of trained emigrants this year from the National Waifs' Association (Dr. Barnardo's Homes) left Paddington on Monday morning last for Bristol, whence they sailed in the evening in the Arawa (Messrs. Elder, Dempster's Dominion Line) for Quebec. The party numbered 229, and consisted of 128 boys and 101 girls, all of these having been carefully trained in the homes.

Obituary.



Rev. A. C. Richings.

At the age of seventy-nine, Rev. Alfred Cornelius Richings, for thirty-four years vicar of Boxmoor, has passed away. He was a clergyman of the evangelical school; broad-minded and tolerant, but deeply earnest and tenacious in his convictions. He was a most approachable man at all times, and his generosity was unbounded. Boxmoor is a large and scattered parish, and the living is a comparatively poor one. The rev. gentleman spent yearly, for Church and parochial purposes, much more than the value of his stipend. Notwithstanding his rather frail health, he was an indefatigable worker, his mind and energies being ever directed to furthering some good cause. As a preacher he was plain and simple, very direct and earnest in exhortation.

Rev. E. O. Williams.

Rev. Edward Osborne Williams, a former Leeds vicar, who resigned his living in 1888 to take up missionary work under the China Inland Mission, died at Paoning, on June 30, of typhoid fever. He was in his forty-fifth year. His first curacy was at Ilkley, where he remained until his preferment to the vicarage of St. Stephen's, Burmantofts, Leeds, in 1881. His work in Leeds was attended with considerable success, and he was greatly beloved, not only among his parishioners, but throughout the city.

He went to China, under the auspices of the China Inland Mission, along with Mr. Cassels, now the Bishop of Western China. Mr. Williams came to England on furlough in 1897, and left again after a stay of eighteen months. It was only on May 5 last that he reached his destination, where he and Mrs. Williams were welcomed with great rejoicing. A week or two after arriving home at Paoning he was seized with the illness which resulted in his death. He leaves a family of six sons, and his departure is mourned by a large circle of friends.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, September 11th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

	£	s.	d.
Famine South Russia—A.C.C., 6s.; Scotia, 5s. ...	0	11	0
Mr. and Mrs. Innes-Wright's Work, Nepaul—A. McK.	1	0	0
North Africa Mission—J.C.F., 5s.; M.R., 5s. ...	0	10	0
West Indian Hurricane Distress—E. D., 5s.; E.T., £1	1	5	0
Y.M.C.A., Lyons—M.S.	1	1	0
Miss De Broen's Work, Paris—Amico, £20; Alpha, 10s.; C.R.A., 10s.; C.S., Aberdeen, £5	26	0	0
China Inland Mission—M.R., 5s.; M.M.P., 3s. 6d.	0	8	6
Moravian Missions—Y.Z., £1; Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.	1	10	0
Y.W.C.A., Rome—Alpha	0	5	0
Distribution French Gospels (Mr Pope)—Alpha ...	0	5	0
Hurricane W. Indies (Rev. S. Sunderland)—Alpha...	0	5	0
Ludhiana Medical School—Alpha	0	5	0
S. American Evangelical Mission—C.F.C.	0	5	0
Tibetan Pioneer Mission (Miss Taylor)—Contribution from Keswick Convention	5	0	0
Congo Balolo Mission—M.M.P.	0	3	6
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission—M.M.P.	0	3	6
Church of England Zenana Missions—M.L.	10	0	0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—M.L.	5	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India—M.L.	10	0	0
Deacon Abraham's Work (Orphanage, &c.)—M.L. ...	5	0	0
Aintab Orphanage—M.L.	5	0	0
Sabrevois Mission, Canada—M.L.	5	0	0
McAll Mission—Miss L., 2s. 6d.; C.S., Aberdeen, £5	5	2	6
Rev. J. C. Fillingham, Kingston, Jamaica—E.W. ...	0	10	6
African Institute, Colwyn Bay—Anon	5	0	0
Rev. J. Smith's Work, Ahmednager, India—E.T.A., Hastings	0	5	0
Soldiers' Home, Winchester—M.S.	2	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.; (Emigration)—S.G., £10; C.S., Aberdeen, £5	15	10	0
Day in Country Fund—A.U.P., 10s.; F.A.E., 5s.; M.M., Belfast, 5s.	1	0	0
Flower Girls' Mission—M.L., £5; (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday) A.M.S., £1; Thankoffering, 5s.; Anonymous, £1; F.S., 5s.; F.A.E., 5s.; S.A.S., 10s.; In Memoriam, T.T.B., £1; E.T., 10s.	9	15	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—J.C.F., 5s.; M.L., £5 ...	5	5	0
National Council, Y.M.C.A.—M.S.	3	3	0
Ragged School Union—M.L., £5; (Day in Country)—Scotia, 5s.	5	5	0
London City Mission—M.R., 5s.; M.L., £25 ...	25	5	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—M.R., 5s.; F.S., £1 ...	1	5	0
Mission to Hop-pickers (Rev. J. Burnham)—B.C. ...	1	1	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—Y.Z.	1	0	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—Y.Z.	1	0	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—Y.Z., £1; E.C., £1; E.F., £5; (New Testaments)—In Memoriam, £1 ...	8	0	0
R.N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—Y.Z.	1	0	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—M.L., £5; (Sick Poor Holiday)—Anonymous, £1; F.S., 10s.; (Children's Holiday Home)—E.T., 10s.	7	0	0
Mr. Fegan's Homes—Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.; (Hop-pickers)—Alpha, 2s. 6d.	0	12	6
Dr. Stephenson's Homes—Alpha	0	2	6
Rev. J. W. Atkinson's Holiday Fund—B.	0	2	6
Carter Home for Destitute Boys, Clapham—F.S. ...	0	5	0
Mr. Charles Cook's Work, (Foreign Prisons)—A.L.G. and C.L.G.	0	10	0
London Society Promoting Christianity Among the Jews—M.L.	10	0	0
Irish Church Missions—M.L.	10	0	0
Missions to Seamen—M.L.	10	0	0
National Blind Relief Society—M.L.	10	0	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—M.L.	5	0	0
Friendless and Fallen—M.L., £5; Marina, £5 ...	10	0	0
Field Lane Institutions—M.L.	5	0	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—M.L.	3	0	0
Army Scripture Readers' Society—M.L.	5	0	0
R. N. Scripture Readers' Society—M.L.	5	0	0
Church of England Scripture Readers' Society—M.L.	5	0	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—M.L.	5	0	0
National Refuges and Ships—M.L.	3	0	0
Evangelization Society—M.L.	2	0	0
French Protestant Mission, Bayswater—M.L. ...	1	0	0
Railway Benevolent Association—M.L.	1	0	0
Christian Community (Holiday Fund)—M.L. ...	1	0	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—C.L.M.T.	1	0	0
Friedenheim Home for Dying—Thankoffering, M.J.S., 10s.; M.A.T., 2s. 6d....	0	12	6
Kensit Crusade—T.H.	5	5	0
Rev. T. Connellan's Work—M.A.T.	0	2	6
Total	£276	17	0

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Convalescent Home for City Workwomen (Miss M. Reynolds)—Reader of The Christian (Nottingham), 8s.; Ditto (Clonmel), 5s.; A.T., 2s. 6d.; F.W.R., 4s.; A Friend (Dunbar), 8s.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—G., 5s.; C., 5s.; T.H., £1; J.M., 10s.; J., 2s. 6d.

Church Association.—The 1s. edition of Mr. Walsh's "Secret History of the Oxford Movement" will be ready at the end of this month. New matter has been added, and it will be more complete and contain more information than any previous edition. 100,000 copies are being printed, and the Church Association appeal for help in sending copies to certain classes of persons, according to the special interest of donor. They suggest sections of the ministry, the professions, &c. For such purposes, they are offering to supply the 1s. book at 9d. per copy, and will be happy to prepare an estimate of the cost of supplying any separate class if application is made to them.

(1188)

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Estd.] [1835.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

The Profits are divided solely amongst the Assured; already divided, £5,400,000.

Claims Paid Nearly - £10,500,000.
Invested Funds Exceed £5,250,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at minimum cost, with provision for old age. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignificant rate of interest on his payments.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C. ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary & Secretary.

New Court Chapel,

Tollington Park, N.

Rev. C. I. SCOFIELD, D.D.

(From Mr. D. L. Moody's Church, Northfield, Mass.),

WILL PREACH ON SUNDAYS, SEPT. 17 and 24; OCT. 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29.

SERVICES COMMENCE AT 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m.

Dr. SCOFIELD will also conduct Wednesday evening Services, at 7.30 p.m.

SUBJECTS:—

Sept. 20.—"The Three Laws of Spiritual Healthfulness."
" 27.—"Thankfulness"—Harvest Festival.
Oct. 4.—"The ordering of Spiritual Emotions."
" 11.—"The Unconscious Spiritual Life."
" 18.—"Christ's Philosophy of Prayer."
" 25.—"Doubts and other Ghosts."

ALL SEATS FREE ON WEDNESDAY EVENINGS.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

Instituted 1685.

President ... ... Sir George Williams.
Treasurer ... ... F. A. Bevan, Esq.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN.

This Home, situated in a most charming part of Epping Forest, which has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year over 500 were taken for one or two weeks and over; 3,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to the Office of The Christian, or to the Secretary, 25, Brighton Road, Stoke Newington, N.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

PLEASE REMEMBER

THE

1,100 BOYS & GIRLS

OF THE

Childrens' Home & Orphanage.

Very little Help comes in the Summer.

Remittances should be addressed to

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, Bonner Road, N.E.

The London Tent Evangelization Committee

APPEAL FOR FUNDS

FOR

THE LONDON TENT CAMPAIGN,

The Purchase of Tents, Seats, &c., and incidental expenses.

IMMEDIATE ASSISTANCE NEEDED.

The Lord is marvellously blessing the Gospel in the three large Tents, great numbers deciding for Christ week by week.

Your very earnest prayers are asked for God's blessing on the Missions now being held in

The Great American Tent at Clapham Road.
The Victory Tent at Peckham Rye.
The Great Tent at Lavender Hill.

Treasurer—A. GARSTIN, Esq., Queen Square, E.C.

Secretary—G. R. WILLIAMS, 21, Greyhound Lane, Streatham, S.W.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission

STAR HALL (ANCOATS), MANCHESTER.

"The promise of the Spirit through faith." Gal. iii. 14 (R.V.).

HOLINESS CONVENTION.

TUESDAY, Oct. 10 to 15, 1899 (six days).
PRAISE MEETING, MONDAY, Oct. 16th, 7.30 p.m.

Speakers:

Rev. A. ALLAN, Hull.
Mr. J. B. BAYLIFFE, Star Hall.
Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, Salvation Army.
Mr. HORACE E. GOVAN, Faith Mission.
Rev. G. C. GRUBB.
Mr. E. C. MILLARD.
Rev. J. K. NUTTALL, Liverpool.
Dr. C. I. SCOFIELD, U.S.A.
(Mr. Moody's Pastor.)
Rev. THOS. WAUGH.
(Wesleyan Connexional Evangelist.)
And Several Foreign Missionaries.

Mrs. and Miss CROSSLEY, Conveners.

Trams from Piccadilly every few Minutes.
Accommodation for Visitors remaining throughout the day.
MEETINGS—SUNDAY, 7, 11, 3, 6.30.
WEEK-DAYS, 9, 11, 3.30, 6 and 7.30.
Secretary—Mr. E. TROWBRIDGE, to whom application for Rooms may be made.

"Salvation is of the Jews."—John iv. 22.

Donations and Subscriptions are earnestly solicited to the General Fund of the

LONDON SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONGST THE JEWS,

the Evangelical Church Society for the preaching of the Gospel to the Jews at home and abroad. Address:—SECRETARIES, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

174 MISSIONARIES are employed at 49 Mission Stations; 24 of these Missionaries are in Holy Orders and 82 are Christian Israelites.

THE SOCIETY HAS MISSION CHAPELS OR MISSION ROOMS in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Amsterdam, Jerusalem, Warsaw, Hamburg, Paris, Rome, Constantinople and Tehran

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.—Many Editions of Scriptures and numerous tracts have been issued by the Society; it translated the Old Testament into Hebrew, 1823; the New Testament into Hebrew, 1817; into Yiddish, 1821; the Liturgy into Hebrew, 1837; and the Pilgrim's Progress into Yiddish, 1844.

MISSION SCHOOLS.—London, Jerusalem, Safed, Damascus, Isfahan, Teheran, Constantinople, Bucharest and Tunis.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—Hospitals at Jerusalem and Safed, into which many Jews and Jewesses are admitted annually. Dispensaries at London, Liverpool, Leeds, Manchester Birmingham, Hebron and Damascus.

ITINERATING WORK is carried on in hundreds of cities, towns and villages in England, Europe, Asia and Africa, which are visited every year by the Society's Missionaries.

INDUSTRIAL AND OTHER HOMES.—House of Industry, Enquirers' and Female Enquirers' Homes, Jerusalem.

AT THE SMALL COST OF
TEN SHILLINGS ONLY
A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Joint Treasurer.

PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.
THE OLDEST SOCIETY

Which has for its object the union of all Protestants in maintaining the Scriptural principles of the Reformation against Ritualism and Romanism.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Apply for a copy of the Illustrated Monthly Paper (sent post free to all applicants who are readers of this paper) to the SECRETARY, 430, Strand, London.

BRITISH SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE JEWS, 96, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, BLOOMSBURY, W.C.

A Most Urgent Appeal for £2,000.

Offers have been made by the Treasurer and another friend of £100 each in the hope that seven other friends of Israel would come to our immediate help.

We need at once £900 to pay the Salaries of our Missionaries and meet the Working Expenses. THE LORD GUIDE AND PROVIDE.

Some of the Work done by the British Society.

1.—It has 24 Missionaries and many Voluntary Helpers, all engaged in spreading the Truth of the Gospel. 2.—It has Mission Stations in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. 3.—It has Medical Missions. 4.—New Testaments, portions of Scripture, and Tracts in various languages are distributed. 5.—The Gospel is preached in Mission Halls, and from house-to-house.

6.—It has Homes for Poor Aged Hebrew Christians.

We trust you will send all the help you can, and as soon as ever you can.

ROBERT GREER, Esq., Treasurer.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Rev. JOHN DUNLOP, General Secretary, 96, Great Russell Street, London W.C. or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.), its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers, gladly received.

Home Secretary: REV. ARTHUR N. JOHNSON, M.A.

MRS. MEREDITH'S PRISON MISSION.

Summer, and the consequent falling off in private subscriptions, compels us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. Will you, therefore,

PLEASE HELP US

in this, our time of need?

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron—
Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the DUKE of SAXE-COBURG and GOTHA, K.G.

Increased FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of the Missions to Seamen to several new ports, including Calcutta, Wellington New Zealand, Cape Town, and Hamburg, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations. A further extension of the work amongst seagoing men in the great Port of London is about to be made by opening a Seamen's Institute opposite the Board of Trade shipping office, at the Victoria Docks, whilst other urgent appeals cannot be responded to owing to lack of funds.

The Society maintains one hundred and seventy-seven Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in sixty-nine seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-seven Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and Eighty-eight Seamen's Churches and Institutes are in daily use, winter and summer.

Expenditure in 1898, £39,407 16s. 9d.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Offertories, Drawing room Meeting Collections, &c., are earnestly asked for to maintain the existing sailor work and to extend it to other ports. They should be sent to COMMANDER W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

£6 6s. and £6 16s. 6d. SWISS TOURS

Fare includes Return Ticket to Geneva or Grindelwald Second-Class on the Continent and Seven Days' Accommodation.

Lectures by DEAN PIGOU, PROFESSOR SHUTTLEWORTH, DR. LUNN, Etc.

For full particulars, apply—
Secretary, 5, Endsleigh Gardens, Euston, N.W.

THE HERALD OF MERCY

An Illustrated Evangelistic Periodical. Eight Quarto Pages, One Halfpenny Monthly. An admirable Magazine for general distribution.

THE HERALD OF MERCY

is useful for Loan Tract Societies, and can be cut into separate leaves, each illustrated and complete in itself, for distribution. It is also eminently suited for LOCALISATION. Terms and full particulars for this, on application to the publishers.

THE HERALD OF MERCY

may be had in quantities, or will be sent post free every month, at the same rates as THE REVIVAL—see next column ☞—or assorted packets of the two Magazines can be had.

NEW ISSUE.
THE REVIVAL

is an eight-page Monthly Journal (price One Halfpenny), containing current intelligence of Revival Work, accounts of the Revival of 1859, Revival Hymns, extracts from Finney's Writings on Revivals, and other similar matter.

THE REVIVAL

Twelve copies of current issue will be sent post free for sixpence. A reduction on quantities for distribution through any Bookseller or direct from the publishers, as follows:

100	Copies 2/6 net,	Parcel post 6d. extra.
500	„ 10/10 net,	Parcel post 1/6 „
1,000	„ 17/6 net,	Parcel post 2/10 „

THE REVIVAL

will be sent post free every month at the following rates:—

Four Copies per Month,				2/-	per Annum.
Eight	„	„	„	4/-	„ „
Twelve	„	„	„	6/-	„ „

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS

For SCHOOL ROOMS, MISSION HALLS, HOSPITALS, &c. A LIST of SEVENTY LARGE TYPE TEXTS, Size 31 in. by 20 in., Printed in Blue Ink, Price 3d. each, WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION to the PUBLISHERS, MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

An Anglican Papacy (?).

Sir,—I cannot help thinking that you fail to appreciate the true inwardness of the so-called Lambeth judgment. It is a curious circumstance that the Church Association people should scorn it more than Lord Halifax. Why is this? Surely because it is an attempt to fix up an Anglican Papacy.

The great need of the Church of England is Church law, administered in Church courts. The Church should know nothing of irresponsible Papal methods; and if this judgment is obeyed, as you would appear to desire, "our condition will indeed be as bad as that of any abject Roman Catholic people." There is a good deal more involved than the mere matter of incense.—Yours truly, X.

September 8, 1899.

False and Pernicious Teaching.

Dear Sir,—Protestant England has been alarmed by the advance of ritualism. But is it not time that a warning note were sounded as to a more invidious attack upon the cardinal doctrines of Christianity, nay, upon our blessed Lord Himself?

Ritualism and sacerdotalism are open in their attacks—a child can detect a ritualistic "service." But there is nothing visible in a church or chapel to proclaim the presence and teaching of the Broad Churchman or downgrade minister. What is that teaching? What does it lead to? Does it teach that unconverted men are "dead in trespasses and sins," that "ye must be born again," that our Lord Jesus Christ is "the mighty God," that He "died for the ungodly," that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God," that "without shedding of blood there is no remission."

If it sneers at or opposes these truths, surely it is for Christians to show that they have no fellowship with preaching more dishonouring to God and more pernicious to the souls of men than the most injurious rubbish of ritualism.—Yours faithfully, Nemo.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

The Association at Lyons, France, is doing a good work in the midst of very difficult circumstances. There is very little local sympathy; and, although they now have an excellent property in good location, they depend upon outside help to keep up the work. The treasurer is Mr. B. Perrier, care of Union Chrétienne de Jeunes Gens, 3, Rue Vauban, Lyons, France.

The Kottayam Association (South India), which was formed in September, 1892, with twenty members, has since then greatly increased in strength. Till October, 1897, the meetings of the Association were uniformly held either at C. N. Institution or the C.M.S. College. At that time the local Pastorate School was, with the kind permission of the Church authorities, opened as a reading-room. The meetings have since then been held in this place. But the importance of possessing a hall of its own at a more central place has all along been felt by the committee. For this purpose a sum of not less than £350 will be required, towards which £43 has been collected. Any help will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Rev. J. Palmer, West Camel Rectory, Ilchester, Somerset.

Last Wednesday, in the presence of a large gathering of friends, the memorial-stones were laid of the handsome new building which is to be erected for the Cardiff Y.M.C.A. Alderman Daniel Lewis, J.P., presided. The first stone was laid by Sir George Williams; and others were placed in position by Mr. John Cory, J.P., D.L. (president of the local Association), and Alderman Richard Cory, J.P., who are munificent contributors to the scheme. The Revs. J. Williamson, M.A., J. Baillie, and Owen Watkins, and Alderman W. J. Trounce, J.P. (deputy Mayor), also took part in the proceedings. Mr. T. M. Heywood entertained a large company to tea, after which Mr. Richard Cory took the chair at a public meeting, when an address was given by Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council. The new building will cost £15,000; £7,000 was realised by the sale of the old Association premises, and a further £5,000 has been already subscribed—£1,000 of this amount being contributed as the outcome of Wednesday's proceedings.

Temperance Notes.

Rev. Thomas Evans, the well-known Indian missionary, says: "The drink deluge is advancing year by year in India. The great majority of the European residents indulge, and thus set a sad example before the heathen, but it is some comfort to know that at least 90 per cent. of our Indian missionaries are total abstainers. There is at least one mission in India wherein the rule is that no convert can be admitted to communion who makes use of strong drinks or narcotic drugs.

. . . . . .

"Our great difficulty with the drink question in India is the Government, which has a complete monopoly of all strong drinks and drugs; and in order to increase the excise revenue the pushing system is in full force, the excuse being that the coffers of the State need to be kept full to meet the ever-growing demands for larger revenue. As in England, so in India, the monetary profit is the tap-root of the evil, and as long as this root continues there is but poor chance of reformation in drinking habits of the people of any land.

. . . . . .

Mr. Isaac Hoare, of Tottenham, an enthusiastic teetotaler, has just been celebrating the fortieth anniversary of his total abstinence pledge by a family meeting of sons and sons-in-law, daughters and daughters-in-law, grandchildren, &c., all having followed the old man's example of total abstinence. He is now sixty-nine years of age, and still follows the occupation of brickmaking.

. . . . . .

The Daily Telegraph recently drew attention to the devices to which a number of publicans find it necessary to resort in order to attract customers, and mentions the case of a publican at Brynmawr who distributes pipes on a Saturday night, and a fortnight later awards bottles of whisky to the owners of the two which are coloured the best.

. . . . . .

Rev. Madison C. Peters says:—"In the city of New York are 7,000 saloons, or one for every 200 people. These are hotbeds of vice-breeding places of crime. With the exception of a few Germans, they are kept by low, illiterate, blasphemous, obscure men, full 50 per cent. of whom are ex-convicts."

. . . . . .

The Chief Constable of Wigan has warned licence-holders against the practice of gaining custom by occasionally placing three-penny pieces in pint pots of beer. The Mayor of Wigan deprecated the practice, and hoped the publicans concerned would cease to offer such inducements.

. . . . . .

"Off" licensed houses were recently declared by Supt. Borlase, at Windsor, to be a nuisance to the public, as men assembled near them, bought beer, and drank it outside. The police, too, were often unable to detect breaches of the law at these places.

Personalia.

Rev. G. T. Bailey, of Leyton, is in sorrow through the death of his son Percy, aged sixteen. Friends in many quarters, who esteem Mr. Bailey personally, and for his excellent work as pastor and teacher, have expressed sympathy with him in his sad bereavement.

Mr. Henry Varley has in a great measure recovered from his recent illness. He was able to conduct both services in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last. The word was with power, a number of persons professing conversion at the after-meeting in the evening.

We understand that a marriage has been arranged between the eldest daughter of Rev. William Adamson, vicar of Old Ford, London, E., and the Rev. Sydney Gould, M.D. The ceremony will take place at Old Ford Parish Church, on Wednesday, September 20, at noon. Both the bridegroom and bride are connected with the Church Missionary Society.

The deacons of the Metropolitan Tabernacle have again arranged for the birthday of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, September 30, to be celebrated by placing at his disposal gifts for use in the work of God. Last year the sum of £735 3s. was handed to him for this purpose, and he expects to be in the vestry, together with Mrs. Spurgeon and Pastor and Mrs. Sawday, from three o'clock until half-past eight on the date named.

Rev. Philip Norton, secretary and missioner of the Worcester Tract Society and Daily Prayer Union, has just returned from a tour in the United States. Speaking of his work, he says:—"I preached in fifteen churches (including some of the richest and poorest), and enrolled a large number of members of our Society. Also, I conducted a twelve days' mission at St. James' Church, Atlantic City, and spoke at a gathering of New York clergy."

Church Notes.

Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones has returned to Welshpool, after a successful tour in Australasia.

Rev. Richard J. Bond, vicar of St. James's, Keyham, Devonport, has severed his connection with the English Church Union.

Rev. R. Wood, of Scarborough, sailed in the Oceanic on Sept. 6 for New York. He is to engage in a twelve months' evangelistic tour through the United States.

Rev. T. Napoleon Smith, of Tetbury, has accepted an invitation to Grafton Square Baptist Church, Northampton, and expects to commence his ministry there on October 1.

At the forthcoming Church Congress, the Dean of Canterbury will read a paper on "The Possibilities of a Better Understanding Between the Church and Nonconformity in the Future."

On the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland, the Queen has appointed Rev. Thomas Nicoll, D.D., to the Chair of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of Aberdeen, vacated by the death of Professor David Johnston.

At a meeting of the U.P. Presbytery in Edinburgh, Rev. Thomas Anderson, moderator, it was agreed to hold a conference on the state of religion and the need of revival, as recommended by the Life and Work Committee of the Synod.

Much regret is felt that Rev. Thos. J. McClelland, who went out about three years ago as a Methodist missionary to Barrackpore, is obliged to return to Belfast, owing to repeated attacks of fever and an injury to his head, received in a carriage accident.

The Irish Mission of the Presbyterian Church is doing good work by means of its lantern and musical services, its colporteurs, and its Irish-speaking agent; and it is finding access in a remarkable way to the Roman Catholic population in the south and west.

The General Missionary Committee has approved of plans for a new native church at Aliwal North, South Africa, to seat 800 persons, and to cost £2,000. Half the amount has been guaranteed by the Aliwal North Church, and Rev. J. Msikinga, a native African minister, is in England endeavouring to secure an additional £1,000.

In resuming his ministerial duties at St. Andrew's, Aigburth, Archdeacon Taylor, in the course of his sermon, counselled resistance to the pseudo-Romanism movement of the present century, which, he remarked, naturally led to the resuscitation of that clericalism which had been the curse of every nation where it had obtained.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union of England and Wales, attended the annual meeting of the Welsh Baptist Union, and submitted for adoption the report of the joint committee as to the Century Fund. The report was adopted with acclamation, and Mr. Shakespeare was thanked for his visit and address.

The congregation of Avenue Road Chapel, Shepherd's Bush, where the late Rev. Charles Graham so long preached, has given a call to Rev. C. H. Marsack Day, at one time of West London Tabernacle. Mr. Day has accepted the call, and will begin his ministry in Avenue Road on the first Sunday in November.

About 750 Friends and others have signified their intention to attend the "Summer School" at Birmingham, and a programme of able speakers has been arranged. The reverent spirit pervading the gatherings, and the clear teaching of fundamental truth, must have happy and far-reaching results in spreading the kingdom of God.

Memorial-stones were laid on Tuesday of a new Primitive Methodist Church in Bowes Road, Harrogate. The buildings will include, in addition to the church, a schoolroom, lecture-hall, vestries, and caretaker's house. The Church will provide accommodation for 550. The total cost is estimated at £3,250, of which £1,152 has already been raised.

At a meeting of the Paisley U.P. Presbytery—Rev. Principal Hutton, moderator—Rev. W. A. Walton criticised the recent action of the Town Council in taking into their hands the management of the annual races. The Council, he said, were thus publicly identifying themselves with an institution which was fraught with great moral hazards to the community.

In connection with the Congregationalist Twentieth Century Fund, a number of young people's demonstrations are being organized, to be held during the coming winter. It is also intended to set apart the afternoon of Sunday, Nov. 5, in all Congregational Sunday schools as a time of thanksgiving for the blessings of the century that is now drawing to a close.

A family named Welsh, that have left the Roman Catholic Church in Limerick and become Protestants, have been the subjects of a great deal of annoyance and persecution from their former co-religionists. Their house has been on various occasions attacked by a riotous mob, and on a recent date the windows were broken and the inmates had to fly for their lives.

Toplady Hall, which has been built in conjunction with the Whitefield Memorial Church, Tottenham Court Road, and is the first of the buildings to be completed, has been opened for worship. The hall will be used for the usual services until the new church is completed in November, and as a mission hall, lecture hall, Sunday-school, and for other purposes connected with Church work.

At Southwell Diocesan Conference, to be held at Nottingham on October 24 and 25, the following subjects are selected for discussion:—"The Cry of the Villages;" "Church Courts;" "Wage-earning Children;" "The Decrease in the Observance of Sunday as a Day of Rest and Worship;" "Chaplains to Workhouses and Institutions;" "Mission Rooms: their Place in the Church's System."

The Bishop of Stepney, writing on "East London," says: "Rents in Whitechapel are steadily going up, as if it was a really fashionable part of London, and on several occasions working men with good wages, coming up from the country, have tramped up and down for days before they could find a house at all, and have had to put their wives and children in the workhouse for a week or two before finding room."

From the report of the Irish Evangelical Society and Congregational Home Mission, it appears that twelve months ago the Society was in a state of bankruptcy. Loans amounted to nearly £700, and arrears to £950. The sympathy of English Congregationalism was enlisted, and, thanks to the personal labours of Revs. W. J. Woods and Andrew Mearns, the sum of £1,500 was subscribed, and a new impetus given to the work.

Under the will of the late Mr. Francis B. Soudan, of Coleraine, a local preacher for many years, and an earnest Christian worker, the sum of £150 each has been left to Methodist Home Missions, the Methodist Orphan Society, Methodist Supernumerary Ministers' Fund, Derry City Mission, and Belfast Central Mission; while the residue of his estate goes to erect cottages in Derry for poor or infirm members of the Methodist Church, and to pay the occupant of each of these cottages the sum of 4s. weekly.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WE hope none of our readers, and especially the younger ones, will fail to peruse the graphic account of the great Irish Awakening, given on page 16. We firmly believe and earnestly pray that, by whatever means, God will once more, ere long, arouse our country to a sense of its spiritual need, as in the memorable years gone by.

This is the way we like to hear of The Christian being used. A reader of many years' standing writes:—

I send them out to Messina to a Christian friend, who in turn gives them away to others, praying that seed may be sown in that priest-ridden country.

We shall be pleased to forward names and addresses of workers abroad to any of our readers who would like to minister to them in this manner.

The constant alternation of prospects presented by the Boer situation is bewildering in its rapidity, and varies so much from day to day that it is impossible to forecast the probabilities. The last Boer despatch, however, undoubtedly creates a very serious situation. The British proposals seem to be finally rejected, and our Government is considering the next step which will almost certainly determine whether there is to be war or not. Doubtless our officials find reasonable cause for irritation in the prolonged delays that have been caused by the Transvaal authorities, and by the suspicious attitude in which our proposals have been received. But we must not forget that the Jameson raid is a painful historical fact, calculated to make any people distrustful. We should, therefore, exercise special forbearance.

Further, if our claims are just, why should we wish to enforce them with cannon and sword rather than submit them to arbitration? Surely, having so recently taken a prominent part in the Peace Conference, we can afford to set a practical example in this direction. We earnestly look, even yet, for a peaceful solution, without the shedding of blood.

The Christian workers of Aldershot have, through God's goodness, won a notable victory at the licensing sessions, only seven out of sixty-five dancing licences having been renewed, and an infamous public-house, which has been a pit of perdition for many years, having lost its licence. As a great military centre, the town is cursed with houses of the worst character, "necessary evils," said one of the counsel who was engaged upon the case—"necessary evils to keep the streets clear of prostitutes." As if the harbourage of the houses did not fill the streets. The evil is well known to such workers as Miss Bidgood, who presented a memorial, signed by 400 mothers and women, praying the magistrates not to renew facilities for tempting young girls and young soldiers; and to Rev. W. E. Sellers and the rest of the Nonconformist Council who united to put it down as far as possible. The evidence, especially that given by a girl of seventeen, and by another of nineteen, was shocking; yet worse things have been kept back. May God strengthen the hands of his faithful people in Aldershot to continue all their good work and brave fighting!

One of the perils of the religious situation in Wales at present is the tendency of Protestants to rest on their oars under the impression that their principles need no further enforcement. There is some reason for this attitude on the ground that nowhere has the Protestant faith more thoroughly implanted itself. At the same time the Nonconformist bodies, and all who have the welfare of evangelical religion at heart, have need of a warning word. Following in the wake of the Ritualistic movement, which has made very serious inroads in the larger towns, the Romish Church is taking heart, and making a determined attack on the Principality. Its latest step is the translation of a complete Mass Service or Prayer-book into the vernacular. It has been ably done, and it shows that the Romish Church means business even in the land of Christmas Evans and John Elias. This last effort should awaken the leaders of all the churches to renewed watchfulness, and unceasing education of the young in the faith to which their fathers bore so splendid a witness.

Certainly a better feeling seems to be gaining the ascendancy amongst the sacerdotal clergy as to the wisdom of submission to the Archbishop's recent decision. At St. Alban's, Holborn, and All Saint's, Evesham, the condemned practices will for the present be suspended. The disposition is spreading at least to bow to the spiritual authority of the Church officials. But we fear that the spirit that underlies this submission will never bring about a permanent and satisfactory settlement of the controversy.

From Bombay comes the intelligence of a great anti-Protestant drift amongst the Established clergy there. A protest is being made against this attempt to Romanise "the wives and families of officers and men, as well as the army of India." It appears that the army chaplains are the principal offenders. Those who should be supremely loyal to the truth of Christ's Gospel in our great Indian Empire are chiefly guilty of this spiritual perversion. The Indian Government, if it would, could soon check this dishonourable movement in favour of a bastard Christianity.

The clergy, who have introduced it (Ritualism), are all chaplains receiving Government salaries. They are, therefore, directly amendable to any rules laid down by the Indian Government. The majority of buildings in which these gentlemen have introduced Ritualistic illegalities are Government buildings. But no one in authority has had the courage to intervene.

An opportunity is afforded the Secretary of State for War to promote the cause of Protestant truth in the appointment of a successor to Rev. Dr. Edghill, who is about to retire from the position of Chaplain-General of the forces. Dr. Edghill's sympathies have been with the Sacerdotal party, and we believe that a majority of the Army chaplains have similar tendencies. Evangelical teaching and influence will make strong armies as well as powerful nations. It is above all things necessary that the religious teachers of the men in our Army should set before them the simple verities of the Gospel without any sacerdotal taint. A Chaplain-General is needed who can point the land forces of the realm to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world, rather than to the confessional and the mass.

While the Roman Catholic journals are cheerfully proclaiming "advance all along the line" for their Church, the Rome correspondent of the Morning Post unfolds the seamy side of the present condition of affairs at the Vatican. The Pope is unable to keep from interfering in the political affairs of the nations, and the line of conduct enjoined by him on his followers in various European countries is far from being appreciated and obeyed by them. His advice to all is to support the governments formed by history and the popular will. The Carlists in Spain and the Royalists in France find this principle too distasteful to follow, and so there is almost open rebellion against the influence of the Pope in matters of political principle. The financial straits of the Vatican are, futhermore, resulting in the increased power of the rich confraternity of the Jesuits, who, in return for a guiding hand at headquarters, are showing themselves willing to supply the deficiency. Altogether this inner picture of affairs suggests an ominous future for the Romish Church.

In the Cork Daily Herald there has recently appeared a pastoral letter from Cardinal Logue, devoted entirely to commending the system of lotteries which is largely practised at bazaars for Roman Catholic purposes in Ireland. The Armagh Roman Catholic Cathedral will benefit by this latest specimen of religious gambling, immediately under the patronage of the Pope and Cardinals. The various prizes are described in most attractive language, and include "a landau and pair of well-bred chestnut carriage horses," and "a magnificent pair of Cobalt vases of Sèvres porcelain." Other valuable things are enumerated, for some of which Cardinal Logue makes himself personally responsible. While the promoters of this bazaar-lottery endeavour to allure would-be but doubtful speculators by the announcement that we "feel that we can count upon the sanction, the blessing, and the co-operation of his Holiness," must not such a flagrant defiance of the law as this pastoral advocates be subject to heavy penalties?

The following description of music-hall songs from the Morning Herald is a bold utterance for a daily paper, but its language is none too strong. It deals with a crying evil, intensified of late by the plan adopted at some halls of "two shows nightly," each being a shortened performance which the proportionately reduced prices place within the reach of any children of tender years who can scrape a few pence together. If anyone doubts the truth of our contemporary's statements, let him listen to what is sung by even Sunday-school children returning from a "day in the country," in defiance often of all endeavours of the teachers to stop them.

They glorify the basest passions of men; they deride honour and purity; elevate drunkenness to a grace of life, profligacy to a virtue. The "patriotic" songs—senseless, cowardly, selfish, an insult to every foreigner that may be present—are a by-word among us. There is no wit, no humour, grace, daintiness, poetry, or even mere prettiness of sentiment, to be found in any of these effusions.

But they are sung in the streets—they are the only songs the children of London seem to know. What notions they put into childish heads; what sordid principles; what mean and miserable ideals! The children of London know no songs that they ought to sing; they pick up the ignoble, despicable views of life that float round them, and who can estimate the effect of these views, taken in conjunction with their environment, upon thousands of children whose homes are in the slums, the miserable back-streets of our city?

A correspondent of the Manchester City News, in a signed letter, tells the following story:—

A little lad, with pinched face and poorly clad, came out of a public-house in London Road with rum "for his mother" in a teacup. Within a yard he drank some, and in another twenty yards tasted again, and gave a little girl some. The writer prevented two other children from having a taste, and no doubt the mother would have thanked him, not perhaps for preventing young children from drinking raw spirits, but for safeguarding her rum.

If this case may be taken as a fair sample of what is occurring in thousands of instances every day, it shows the existence of a most powerful agency for the production of the love of drink and the habit of drinking at an early age. The boy said that he was nine years old and the girl five, though they both looked younger, as the puny slum children often do. The conditions of life in the slums are not conducive to vigorous childhood, and, if they are supplemented by spirit-drinking, the prospect of seeing a healthy city population grow up is not bright.

We are glad to see The Lancet is interesting itself in the question, and hope its influence will be felt on behalf of reform.

The pernicious system adopted by some publicans of giving sweets to children should be abolished, and the age at which drink is supplied definitely raised. In many of the American States it is a criminal offence to supply intoxicants to a minor. Why can we not have such a law? For the children's sake we demand it.

A London paper, some time ago, said that the Board Schools were responsible for hooliganism, a statement more recently buttressed-up in another paper by words like these:

The flabby, invertebrate teaching, which has in many schools displaced the solid, incisive precepts of our grand old Church Catechism, is destructive of all spiritual and moral authority, cuts at the root of genuine piety, undermines loyalty, patriotism, respect for parents, and propagates the idea that allegiance is due only to majorities.

An article in the Schoolmaster of last week disposes of the accusations by some effective statistics. Facts and figures are given, showing that the rowdy classes are recruited from 70,000 children in London, who get practically no school education at all, and by 50,000 others, who get so little that it is impossible to expect any moral results from it. The true remedy thus does not seem to lie in less, but rather in more, Board School education, where the unsectarian religious teaching is, in the majority of cases, conscientiously and ably given.

The dictum of scientists, as voiced by Sir William Crookes in his newly published book on the Wheat Problem—that the world's wheat supply is within measurable distance of being exhausted—is one that probably need not cause much anxiety. If it were unreservedly true, it would mean practical eclipse and extinction for the Caucasian races to whom wheat is the staff of life. The promise, however, is that "seed-time and harvest shall not cease while the earth endureth." Faith in the providential care of the Creator does not, of course, exclude a wise economy, and the use of every scientific means of enlarging the natural supplies of food. As a matter of history, it is wonderful how steadily scientific research has been directed and overruled so as to supply the ever-enlarging wants of the race.

Meanwhile, we have once more arrived at the season when we can rejoice over the blessings of a bountiful harvest. The glorious summer sunshine has been stored up in abundant supplies of fruit and cereals. On the whole, the supply of food for the winter will be considerably above the average. For this great blessing we must utter heartfelt thanks to the Giver of all good, and having "first given ourselves unto the Lord," consecrate our gifts to his service, according to our means.

Sir Michael Foster gave a modern form to an old idea when, in his address as President of the British Association, he said:

It is not so much the men of science who make science, as some spirit, which, born of the truths already won, drives the man of science onward, and uses him to win new truths in turn. It is because each man of science is not his own master, but one of many obedient servants of an impulse which was at work long before him, and will work long after him, that in science there is no falling back.

Socrates used to say that his "demon," or spirit—the term was meant in a good sense—gave him his thoughts. Elihu said: "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." The spirit that forces men along from age to age, that is causing them to search out the mysteries of nature, and thus to possess themselves of eternal truths, is not "born of the truths already won," but rather guides the souls of men into truth.

At the British Association meeting, a valuable paper was read by Mr. Henry Higgs on the Consumption of Wealth, in which wise words were uttered on the subject of waste among the working classes. The advent of the factory system has increased the employment of women and girls away from home to such an extent that many of them now marry with a minimum of experience, and are, therefore, in a measure, innocent agents of inefficiency and waste in household expenditure. The increase of wages, and the better diffusion of wealth, therefore, which is a feature of modern life, have not had their rightful result in a wider enjoyment of life's blessings. How to minimize this preventible waste is one of the most pressing problems of social life. No doubt something can be done to perfect the lessons in household management given in our elementary schools, and every encouragement should be given to adult women to attend the evening classes provided in many centres. Those who have any influence among the working classes should use every effort to increase a belief in the value of thrift and foresight.

Doubtless there is such a thing as "the tyranny of the organ." Too often the instrument, which ought to be only an accompaniment, and thus an aid to worship, becomes the dominating noise, which drowns every voice, and prevents many from being used at all. The vagaries performed on it, its loud bursts, its unaccountable runs up and down, its whispers, its imitations of every sound made by man or by nature, are an unspeakable distraction and hindrance to worship. Of course, all organists are not equally thoughtless, but the abuse of the instrument in hymn, in chant, and in anthem is a real grievance, not to mention the "voluntaries," which often constitute an outrage on quiet, devout feeling.

The Case of Dreyfus.

Reflections for Ourselves.

WHILE we heartily sympathize with the deep indignation so universally expressed on account of the wicked condemnation of Captain Dreyfus, let us be careful lest we ourselves become unjust. The action of the man of business in Chicago, who sought out six Frenchmen in his employ and summarily dismissed them, is similar in kind, if not in degree, to the crime of the five unjust judges at Rennes—the condemnation and injury of the innocent.

By finding "extenuating circumstances," the five judges stultified themselves; but if this qualification had not been insisted on by one of the five, the sentence would probably have been still more inhuman. If the four had not accepted it, the one who insisted on it would perhaps have joined the other two, and have rendered any verdict impossible. This would have involved a new trial, through which, probably, Captain Dreyfus would not have lived. God makes the wrath of men to praise Him, and overrules their mistakes and sins.

The judges who formed the Court-Martial were placed in a very invidious and difficult position—they were subjected to a test so searching that it could not do otherwise than make manifest what manner of men they were. It speaks well for France that there were two who proved themselves men with courage to be true at all costs, and at the peril of their lives.

Nor did they stand alone. Amongst the powerful voices raised for righteousness was that of M. Emile Zola, a name disgraced in English estimation by some of his books, but lifted high by his conduct in this case. And with him stood no inconsiderable number of brave and honourable men, including M. Scheurer-Kestner and Colonel Picquart.

What an opportunity was lost by the one who went so far as to insist on the "extenuating circumstances," but did not go far enough to vote for his acquittal! Now his name is numbered with a dishonoured five instead of an honoured and honourable three. It was illogical, indeed; but it was good even to that extent to prevent an utterly savage and inhuman sentence. But the good is the enemy of the best.

It is unspeakably sad that France herself is the one exception to the condemnation of the miscarriage of justice which has taken place. But if for a few generations Jesuitism should gain the upper hand in England; and if, as a reaction from its misrepresentation of God and of his Christ, infidelity and Atheism should abolish these holy names from our school books, then England would be as France. And if we should add to this the infamy of a Press largely unprincipled and false, then public opinion in England might be as fanatic for the evil, and as indifferent to the good, as it appears in this case to be in France.

Inspired precepts for individuals apply equally to nations. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye that are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." Not in any pharisaic spirit, as if we were holier than they, but in a spirit of meekness and self-judgment, should England and other nations think of France—considering that if we had been placed under the same influences, and in similar circumstances, we should have come through these testing times no more blamelessly than she.

Taste v. Truth.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR, Lewisham.

WHEN a young nation is slowly building up its life in domestic and public institutions, the good and he wise men who direct its enterprises are areful, above all things, to insist upon the ecessity of truth as the foundation of whatver is proposed. In order to secure this, nany discussions are held, and many propoitions considered; but it is truth that true eaders always seek. A nation that grows n any other way carries in its life, from the eginning, corruptive elements, which in due ime will spread like a gangrene throughout he body politic, and eventually cause its leath.

At the commencement of a strong people's areer, the life which they express is almost of ecessity rough, rugged, and destitute of olish. The early days are days of the uarry, the hammer, the trowel, and he spade, in both the material and he moral spheres. But when the nation s established, it begins to cultivate "taste," nd seeks to express it in every department of s life. Houses are embellished with attractive rnaments, public functions are elaborated, tate exhibitions are surrounded with all that an dazzle eye and fancy, and the personal life f the individual seeks to polish itself by means f a generous culture. This is the order of a ation's life—all history affirms it—

TRUTH FIRST, AND AFTERWARDS TASTE.

The simple history of religion bears this ame mark, and this same order. When our ord founded his Church, he utterly ignored he religious "taste" of his day; and, in place f an elaborate ritual, performed in sacred laces by specially-appointed priests, He rdained a simple society of believing souls, very member of which was equally a priest, ith common right of access to the Father; nd any two of whom, in any place whatsoever, might command his Presence. In the arly Church no attention whatever was paid o the "taste" of the time. With it almost very Apostolic action was continually in conict. It was truth only that the early Church built pon: truth about the Person of Christ; truth bout the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; truth bout the real relation of the soul to God; and, e it noted, truth in its simplest and most ugged form. But, the Church once firmly stablished as a visible institution, "taste" egan to assert itself; adaptations of pagan eremonies, awe-inspiring and grand, were dded to the simplicity of apostolic life and ractice; pagan ideas came over with the eremonies, and the worldly Church gave herelf over to spectacle, to melodious sound, and o the odour of sweet spices, until at length he last relic of the "simplicity which is in hrist" vanished for centuries. It was a

TRIUMPH OF TASTE OVER TRUTH.

Now let us guard ourselves against injustice. here is no necessary antagonism between ruth and taste. There is a true and a holy taste" implanted within us by our Creator, hich we suppress at our cost. The love of he beautiful is no crime, nor even a fault. Vith the profoundest reverence a Christian ay truly say that our good Creator has exibited perfect taste in the ordering of the life f his universe; not a discord—not an inarmonious blend anywhere. We are created n his image, and when in our breasts we iscover a liking for the most beautiful, the ost tuneful, and the most tasteful, let s thank God for so precious a gift. Morever, if a person's soul is tasteful in a true manner, he will inevitably seek to express the feeling of his soul in the best possible way. And this is only natural. Further, such a soul cannot limit its expression of "taste" to created beings—it must include God. The worship of God being vocal as well as mental, a tasteful soul will offer to Him the best of which the human voice is capable, firmly believing that our best is infinitely below what his Majesty deserves. "Taste," therefore, if simple and utterly free from pride, is an offering worthy of creatures which have derived their gift from God.

Frequently persons, who, through fault or misfortune, lack culture, are foremost in denouncing those who deem it just to offer to God their finest human qualities and acquirements. It is to assume. Let each offer to God his very best of every kind that he possesses.

AN UNJUST ATTITUDE

Having said this, the way is now clear to protest solemnly against a growing tendency—even amongst many Christian people—to prefer "taste" to truth. "Taste" is not to be excluded, if it be sanctified; but if it form the foundation of much of our life, then alas for that life! No one can deny the very patent fact that a large number of young people, in particular, have within recent years renounced a simple worship and an evangelical ministry in favour of an external worship which appeals to the senses, and which is often associated with puerile superstition. Not long ago the writer asked the eldest of three sisters why they had left an evangelical ministry in favour of an ornate ritualism elsewhere. Speaking for the three of them, the young lady said: "Oh! it was more to our taste. Of course, we don't hear the Gospel now; but the singing is simply lovely!" And this, alas! is by no means a rare case. Similarly, there are people who will leave a poor, struggling church, in favour of some well-filled building, where there is less to do.

THEIR TASTE TRIUMPHS.

In London there are thousands of religious gipsies who spend their Sundays in travelling to hear some popular preacher or other; while the Church of God in their own neighbourhood, to which by all ties they are pledged, never beholds them, or receives assistance from them. Taste again.

In handling Christian doctrine the same spirit prevails in many. If the Incarnation, or the Divinity of Christ, or future retribution displease them, they do not hesitate quietly to renounce these truths, and to retain what pleases them. Taste prevails, and is their sole guide. Thus it would be easy to multiply illustrations of this folly which is so common in our time.

The tendency of our age is all in the direction of lightness, and, for the majority, of want of thought. Men take their principles, their religion, and their doubts at second hand; and the preacher, or lecturer, or book that possesses the greatest fascination has the best chance of being received by our generation, independently of what is taught. To be with truth through personal assimilation means, most surely, at first an intellectual parasitism, and afterwards intellectual and moral atrophy.

RELIEVED OF FIRST-HAND ACQUAINTANCE

To follow our "taste" in religion is easy enough, for the field of selection is, unfortunately, most ample; but to follow the truth and a good conscience in the sight of God has never been easy, and never will be. Yet that path is the only one that leads to God, since God is truth. The strong souls of past ages cared nought about the popular taste, and frequently they did violence to their own feelings and inclinations, in order to make a clearer path for the progress of truth; they had received the truth as a precious heritage, and they guarded their treasure even unto death. Had the strong and noble martyrs in the days of "Bloody Mary" been content to follow the religious fashion which prevailed, they would have saved their physical lives; but in doing that their souls would have withered, and we, their sons, would have been immeasurably poor. Men who preferred the stake, the dungeon, and exile, to the questionable honours offered by a degenerate age, laid a foundation which all future builders thereon are in honour bound to respect.

The Christian, however, grateful as he is for all that martyrs and confessors have wrought for him, and for the inspiration which they offer him, passes through all their ranks until he reaches his Master. It is to Him that the Christian is pledged. It is his truth that he holds in trust for the salvation and the illumination of men. Face to face with the Sovereign Master, nothing is of consequence to the true Christian save the Divine love, the Divine commission, and the Divine approval. Whatever he must instantly and permanently reject with indignation. Truth, considered in the light of its Author and of its beneficent or fatal consequences, must dominate all else. If the exercise of "taste" is consistent with fidelity to truth, well! But, if the two collide, an honest soul has but one thing open to him. We owe it to our LORD to be true above all things, and we owe it to the coming generation to offer them, unsullied and unharmed, the "deposit" which we have received at the hands of God.

CONTRADICTS OR OBSCURES THESE

To our taste, if it be normal, let us be faithful if we can; but to truth we must be faithful until our last hour, unless we deliberately court the malediction of that Saviour and Master whose greatest severity is reserved for unfaithful stewards.

Seeking the Saviour.

Seeking the Saviour, and seeking his fold,
Safe in his bosom the lambs will He hold;
Nothing shall harm them, as sweeetly they rest,
Ever rejoicing, and evermore blest!

Seeking the Saviour, his presence to find,
Leaving the world and its follies behind;
Flowers may blossom, but flowers will fade—
Sunshine of Jesus yields never to shade.

Seeking the Saviour, his friendship to know,
Taught by his Spirit as onward I go,
Following on in the track that He trod,
Strong in the faith of the children of God.

Seeking the Saviour, his service to share,
Willing the cross of affliction to bear,
Ready for Jesus a message to give,
Dying to self, for my Saviour to live!

Seeking the Saviour, nor seeking in vain—
Way of salvation, how simple and plain!
Perfect redemption, with nothing to pay;
Jesus to honour, believe, and obey!

Finding the Saviour, what riches are mine—
Life everlasting and glory divine!
Loving and tender to all in his fold—
The half of his goodness hath never been told!

Clevedon, Somerset. Wm. Kitching.

Who are the Priests?—Every humble man and woman that knows the power of Jesus Christ in his own soul, to purge and cleanse him from dead works, is appointed to serve as a priest unto God. We offer prayer unto God, knowing that it ascends to heaven like sweet odours before the throne; we offer praise, believing that "whoso offereth praise, glorifieth God."—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Resurrection and Priestly Assumption.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

OUR former paper has shown how completely the New Testament excludes human priesthood in any sacrificial or sacerdotal sense. The resurrection of Our Glorious Lord is the absolute and unanswerable proof of this fact. We may here state that any system of thought, any hypothesis or religious theory, which either denies or ignores Christ's resurrection, is and must be false to Christianity. God has provided in his Holy Word a defence and antidote against every phase of error. As at the time of the Reformation the unscriptural doctrine of justification by works, taught by Rome, was successfully overthrown by the Scriptural doctrine of justification through faith in Christ Jesus alone, so at this time the great truth of Christ's resurrection overthrows and excludes all the assumptions of the Greek, Roman Catholic, and Sacerdotal priesthoods.

It was said of Our Lord, "He taught them as one having authority, and NOT AS THE SCRIBES;" so, in the weight, light, and authority of his glorious resurrection, priesthood does not and cannot exist. The Holy Ghost has distinctly shut priesthood out from the New Testament. It is worthy of careful consideration that the Apostles, Peter and Paul, were used by the Holy Ghost to of the priestly idea in any sacrificial or sacerdotal sense. This statement their epistles to the churches abundantly confirm. There is not an allusion in the New Testament to any sacrifice offered by the Apostles. Repetition of sacrifice in any form is not taught. In connection with the fact of sacrifices which had been common among the Jews, the letter to the Hebrews, after naming "the sacrifice of praise," in chap. xiii. 15, distinctly emphasizes a new meaning to the term, and shows what would be grateful to God in the striking words, "But to do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (16).

DESTROY THE LAST VESTIGE

Writing to all believers, Peter says: "Being born again—not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever." He then adds: "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby;" and again, "Ye are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." The nature and character of these "spiritual sacrifices" are clearly defined in the words that follow: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." The whole Church, or company of believers, is here referred to. Neither Paul, Peter, James, or John had any pre-eminence as priests, or personal official superiority amongst the great company of "the royal priesthood." All were "royal priests," all capable of offering "the sacrifice of praise," beside which there is no other that the members of the body of Christ could offer to God. The idea of priestly position for Peter, Paul, or any of the Apostles, seeing that Christ had redeemed his people, and risen from the dead in proof that all who believe in Him are accepted, justified, and glorified, is monstrous.

Let the words be carefully pondered, "A royal priesthood." Clearly the Apostle is speaking of the whole Church. These were all fellow believers, and there is not a particle of reference to priests or need for further sacrifice. The whole assembly is here referred to. Their position is membership in "the general assembly and Church of the Firstborn." Their work was not to offer any fresh sacrifices for sins, but to show forth God's praise in that He had, by the death of his beloved Son, blotted out and put away their sins. The work of the royal priesthood is to offer "THE SACRIFICE OF PRAISE." Praise is not a sin-offering sacrifice. At the sin-offering altar blood—the life of the victim—was given. Praise sacrifices belong to those who are united in resurrection to "the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." To Him who, in relation to his Ecclesia, is "the first-born of many brethren."

In the wonderful letter written to the Hebrews at the instance of the Holy Ghost, the same truth

IS RESOLUTELY MAINTAINED.

Having shown that the "only begotten of the Father" had by Himself purged our sins, and in resurrection triumph "sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high," the appeal again is to every believer. The whole company of the royal priesthood are thus instructed: "By Him, therefore, let us offer unto God THE SACRIFICE OF PRAISE continually, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks unto his name." The contrast, observe, is between the many sacrifices involving the death of bulls, goats, and calves: and the one continuous sacrifice of praise, which never ceases, and should flow on from the heart and tongue of all believers. These know that, because of Christ's infinite sacrifice once offered for sins, there is not, neither can there be, other sacrifice. It is his resurrection which gives the ground, cause, and reason for the ceaseless sacrifice of praise. Mark! It is not a sacrifice (one of many), but "THE SACRIFICE (par excellence) of praise." There is but one sacrifice that we can render to the Blessed God. It is "the sacrifice of praise. To offer "the sacrifice of the Mass," in the face of Christ's resurrection, is priestly profanity and

SIN OF THE FIRST MAGNITUDE.

What an insult to the Lord and his resurrection triumphs is this caricature of sacrifice performed by the Roman Catholics, and called "the sacrifice of the Mass!"

Whether the individual believer is in question, or the entire assembly of the Church of Christ, now that He has died, any other sacrifice offered to God than that of praise is, in the light of Christ's resurrection, religious blasphemy, and in direct opposition to the Word of God. If priests are needed in order to the expiation of sins now, or if they must be sought unto in order to forgiveness, confession, and access to God, then the New Testament is false. You cannot get away from the position. If these men are priests, then Christ has not died, neither has He risen from the dead. If, on the other hand, Christ has died and has risen from the dead, and the New Testament is true; then these men are false, and their awful lie is against the emphatic testimony of the Holy Ghost. Both positions cannot exist. They are mutually exclusive, the one of the other. If any man affirms that he is a priest, he denies the truth of the New Testament. He cannot be a priest in any sacrificing sense and recognise the truth of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Hence the constant appeal of these priests to the Fathers, to the Church, to tradition, to the Roman Catholic Missal, and the Prayer-book, in order to obtain even a shadow of authority for priestly position and assumption. These false priests cling, like drowning men, to the rotten plank of so-called "Apostolical succession," in order to sustain an ecclesiastical position which, if it were true, would overthrow the integrity of the New Testament, and, by implication, deny the fact of the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. The position is narrowed to a single issue. If Christ has risen from the dead, then sacrifice for sins has been offered, and cannot be offered again; and, therefore, priestly name or office in order to further sacrifice is a blasphemous pretence.

The New Testament, from beginning to end, knows nothing of priestly name or office. Paul a priest! No, indeed, "an apostle," "a servant," "a minister." Peter a priest! No, indeed, "a servant," "a minister," "an apostle," "a bishop or overseer." John a priest! No, "his servant, John." Timothy a priest! No, "a good minister of Jesus Christ," "an evangelist."

The risen Christ gave to his Church "some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints to the work of ministering;" but mark it well, there is not one word about any priest in the list of Christ's gifts to his Church. Priests represent false and corrupt church systems which the Lord Jesus Christ never fashioned, and of which He never was the Head. Notice the character and conduct of the great majority of the men who are imbued with this priestly idea. They assume professional caste and class. They affect religious superiority to, and lordship over, their fellow-men. "Stand by, for I am holier than thou," is their cry.

The truth is that we need here also the resurrection test. If any believer truthfully affirms, "I was crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me;" then is he "dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God in Jesus Christ our Lord." All these are risen with Christ, and their life is hid with Christ in God.

This is the Divine test, and there is no other. The proof is PARTNERSHIP IN HIS RESURRECTION.

God's salvation is through faith in Christ Jesus. All who have been quickened together with Christ are alive unto God in Him. Eternal life does not mean continuity of being only. Eternal life means the possession of Christ. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Let us at this point recapitulate some of the facts and consequences which belong to what the Apostle well calls "the power of his resurrection." Christ's resurrection from the dead gives absolute proof of his Divinity. It shows that sins, sin, enmity, guilt, judgment, and penalty, have been put away and abolished for ever, so far as all believers are concerned. Verily Christ in his resurrection has not only justified his people, but all these evil conditions are declared to have passed away. All were antecedent to resurrection. His resurrection completes the Gospel of God. It proclaims a new condition, and reveals a new sphere. His resurrection is the revelation of a new life, whose source is God in Christ, whose sphere is the right hand of the majesty in the heavens. The world, the flesh, the devil, and the priest are alien to this sphere. They could not come thither. All things are of God in this resurrection scene of right and triumph. "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

Studies in Zechariah:

ZECH. IV.

(Continued.)

IT is easy to see what comfort this vision brought to the handful of exiles amid those blackened ruins. It seemed as nough mountain ranges of difficulty stood etween them and the accomplishment of their reat undertaking. But, now, they learnt that t the best they were only the channels and nstruments; and that God was prepared to ccomplish the results they sought. It was not o be by their might, nor power, but by his pirit, pouring into and through them with in-xhaustible fulness, as the oil poured into and rough the golden pipes from the two olive rees.

We are often menaced by apparently insur-nountable difficulties, which extort from us ne groan, "O great mountain!" At other mes we are oppressed with a sense of our mpotence, and of the weight and weariness f life. How can we be always good? How bey the heavenly vision? How last? We re told that Daniel continued unto the first ear of Cyrus. Ah, this patient endurance and ntinuance in well-doing! If we are to live or twenty, thirty, or fifty years from now, in world in which the shocks, perils, and emands will certainly not diminish as the oming of the Bridegroom draws nigh, shall we e able to endure to the end? Will not the mp expire before the gust which shall precede ne grey dawn of Advent? The outward man ecays; will the inward man be always re-ewed?

These thoughts attracted me to a conversation ith the wick of my lamp. For long it had erved my purpose, silently ministering as I ead beside it. I felt ashamed that I had not efore noticed its unobtrusive ministry. I aid to the wick:—

"For the service of many months I thank nee."

"What have I done for thee?"

"Hast thou not given light upon my path?"

"Indeed, no; I have no light to give, in roof whereof take me from my bath of oil, and ee how quickly I expire. Thou wilt soon turn om me, as a piece of smoking tow. It is not that burn, but the oil with which my texture saturated. It is this that lights thee. As for ne, I simply mediate between the oil in the stern and the fire on my edge. See this lackened edge. That slowly decays, but the ght continually burns.

"Dost thou never fear becoming exhausted? ee how many inches of coil remain! Wilt hou be able to give light till every inch of this slowly charred and cut away?"

"I have no fear so long as the supply of oil oes not fail, if only some kindly hand will emove, from time to time, the charred margin, rimming me, and exposing a fresh edge to the ame. This is my two-fold need: oil and rimming. Give me these, and I shall burn to ne end."

"I thank thee, gentle teacher," I said, as I urned away; "thou hast greatly encouraged e. I, too, shall endure, so long as I abide in im, in whom God has stored the measureless esidue of the Spirit; and so long also as the ivine hand, with delicate thoughtfulness, uses he golden snuffers, removing the débris and ecay, pruning that I may bear fruit; piercing the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, that may enter into his rest."

Some among us appear to think that the oul can accumulate a stock of grace, in a crament, a convention, or a night of prayer. ut this is at variance with the teaching of the wick. It accumulates nothing. It has no stores. From hour to hour it is always on the edge of bankruptcy, but always supplied. So should we live—at every moment giving all we have, but never doubting about the supplies of the future. Bear pain for one moment at a time; there is patience enough in Jesus for the next moment. Do your Christian work with as much energy as though each service were your last. You cannot exhaust God, and your work is to be, not in your might or power, but by his Spirit.

Moment by moment I'm kept in his love,
Moment by moment, I've life from above;
Looking to Jesus! till glory doth shine,
Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine.

There is also a warning for us all implied in this vision, to which we must give heed. We must very carefully abide in Christ, that He may abide in us; always recognising his royalty, which calls for obedience; always resting upon his priesthood, which reconciles us to God. In obedience and faith the bond of fellowship is perpetually maintained and strengthened. Every time we do as our Prince bids, though it contradict the strongest desires of our nature; every time we resort to our Priest, there is an accentuation of that fellowship which draws his nature into ours.

Forgive me if I return to this thought again and again. It has become so precious an emblem of my relationship with my Lord, to think of the union between the wick and the limitless supplies of the olive tree. Hour after hour the oil climbs up the wick to the flame, and thus insensibly the grace of the risen Lord passes through the medium of our faith into the radiant beauty of a life on fire with God. O fire of God, thou shalt burn on us for evermore, and our spirits shall be thy candles, because we have learnt to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man, and Christ dwells in our hearts by faith.

We must expect that Christ will use his golden snuffers. Let us not flinch from them. When He seems sacrificing some vital, necessary part of our nature, He is only cutting away the black, charred, burnt-out débris. Trust Him. That piece which He has cut away was smoking badly, and spoiling the testimony of the rest. It was better for it to come off; but He thinks so much of this work, that He will use only golden snuffers. Can you not trust the hand that holds them? It bears the nail-print of Calvary.

Beware, also, that nothing chokes the golden prizes of obedience to his kingliness, and trust in his priesthood, else the entrance of the golden oil will be arrested. They may soon become stopped by neglect, inattention, or disuse.

Do not weary of the slow advance of your life to Christian perfection. This is the day of small things; of the foundation-trench rather than the top-stone; of the testing of line and plummet, rather than of shoutings of "Grace, grace unto it." But be of good cheer; the seven eyes of the Lord are upon the worker and work. They run to and fro throughout the whole earth; but they return to rest in loving interest on the progress of his work. He will perfect that which concerneth you; He cannot forsake the work of his own hands.

Grace all the work shall crown
Through everlasting days;
It lays in Heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves the praise.

Police Institute.—The City of London Christian Police Institute, Sussex Place, Leadenhall Street, E.C., is now open from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily. A mid-day prayer meeting is held from 12.30 to 1.30, and every evening has its programme of Bible or educational classes, and social gatherings of various kinds.

"These Forty Years."

EXPECTED AND ENJOYED.

A SCOTTISH lady writes: "The Christian has been a great help and blessing to me for thirty years. Every week I look for it as one expecting the fellowship of a Christian friend. When read, I pass it on to others."

A FRIEND AND TEACHER.

"I join in grateful testimony for blessings received through The Christian. It has been a real friend to me in spiritual teaching, and hints as to Gospel work.

"John Verrall.

"People's Mission, Townsend Street, S.E."

IT STRENGTHENS FAITH.

"We take great interest in perusing its contents every week. We find much in it to strengthen our faith. I value the paper, too, on account of the records it gives of so many lives consecrated to the Lord for the good of mankind. "Sophia Prout.

"Grange."

A HELP IN TROUBLE.

"Many a word of cheer and comfort it has brought me, and when my heart had been most dead to all but trouble, it has brought me into touch again with the Master's work and his workers, from whom personally I am so much cut off. "Mary Gorges."

FROM A WORKER AMONG THE CHILDREN.

"I have been a reader of your excellent paper from its very start; and, as one who has laboured for the conversion of the children all these years, I desire to thank you for the space you have constantly devoted to the work among 'the little ones.'

"Glasgow. "Alex. Mackeith."

A HEARTY ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

"I am glad to join in thanksgiving for the years of your good service in the cause of Christ, and truth, and purity. I well remember buying The Revival in the sixties, as a young man just entering upon business pursuits in London, conjoined with voluntary Christian work. The Christian is the only weekly of any sort that I have consistently read ever since.

"Wm. Chorley.

"N.E. London Gospel Missions."

A GENERATION OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

"I have abundant cause to be thankful for The Christian—formerly The Revival. When, thirty-three years ago, the Lord called me to found the House of Rest for labourers in his harvest field, a brief statement, sent to its pages by someone unknown to me even to this day, brought sympathy and encouragement from the Lord's people; and the same has followed me all these years.

"Charlotte Mason.

"Finchley Road, St. John's Wood."

OLD MEMORIES REVIVED.

"My brother and I were brought to the Lord in 1858, and we were just in the glow of our spiritual childhood when your valuable paper appeared. We read it together and prayed over it, other young men joining. We were so stirred by the accounts of revival work in Ireland, that we went into the villages to tell what the Lord had done for our souls. After that I laboured in various parts, and memories of those days have been awakened by recent testimonies in The Christian. The Lord has my thanks for all his grace and mercy towards me. "S. Pyall Diprose.

"Cwmbran, Mon."

FROM AN ORPHANS' FRIEND.

Though many papers have been taken for a time and then discontinued, the beloved paper, first known as The Revival and since as The Christian, has been warmly and continuously welcomed week by week in not only my own home and family, but in the Orphans' Home here, and all its country branches since their first opening. I can never forget how you kindly opened the pages of the paper for notices of orphan work in its early and struggling days, and gave your help and sanction without waiting to see it succeed! Some of your first words of cheer and God-speed have come back to me in times of straits and trial, and have helped me over some of life's rough paths, while the records given in your paper of God's faithfulness to others, and of his work in all directions, have been inspiring to faith and hope. May you long be spared to carry on the paper on the good old lines of teaching and of succour, and be more and more used by God to be an upholder of the truth as it is in Jesus, and a helper of the poor and the oppressed.

C. Sharman.

20, West Square, S.E.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 24. 2 Kings xxiii.

THIS was a noble reign, since the Word of God was the rule of the king's behaviour. He bound himself by a covenant to walk according to the Lord. It is well to have such times in our individual lives, when we surrender ourselves definitely to do God's will, and to put away from us whatever is a matter of controversy. Our only danger is lest we continually repeat this act. So perpetually people fall into the mistake of giving themselves again and yet again, forgetting that when once a soul has given itself, God has definitely accepted, so that a second and third giving are needless and unreasonable. You cannot give the same article to your friend more than once. It is therefore a misconception to speak of re-consecrating ourselves, though we may often remind ourselves of the blessed act of consecration, when we first awoke to recognise that we were not our own. Remember also, that, good as it is to yield ourselves to Him, it is still better to acquire the holy art of receiving, from his fulness, grace for grace.

The account of Josiah's reforms is sad reading, for it indicates how far Judah had gone aside from the simplicity and purity of its first love. The land was reeking with the abominations of the ancient Canaanites, and it must have required a very strong hand to deal with the far-spreading roots of idolatry. What strong vested interests must have resisted the royal iconoclast! But everyone was compelled to recognise his single-hearted purpose, and he died amid universal regret. It is beyond controversy that a man who chooses to be the organ of God's will, and has no other purpose than to do it perfectly, is able to achieve apparent impossibilities, and wins for himself, at last, universal respect and love.

MONDAY, September 25. 2 Kings xxiv.

The sin of Manasseh, as we are told in this chapter, brought about the captivity of Judah, even though it was followed by the reign of the good Josiah. Those are very ominous words: "The Lord would not pardon." If we apply them to our individual life, they seem to teach that there is a limit beyond which sin cannot go without awakening the scourge and sword of severe punishment, even in the case of God's children. Sin may be forgiven again and yet again; but, if it becomes persistent and inveterate, it may be necessary to burn it out by very drastic measures.

The story of the captivity of Jehoiachin is told in detail by Jeremiah, whose pages cast a flood of light on the politics of the time. It is necessary also to notice the successive stages of the captivity, because they give us successive starting-points from which to count the times of the Gentiles—times which are running out in our days, and, as they do so, are preparing for the restoration of Jerusalem.

It is striking to notice that God speaks of Nebuchadnezzar as his servant: "I will send unto Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, my servant" (Jer. xxv. 9, xxvii. 6, xliii. 10). All the events and agents that come into our lives are intended to subserve the Divine will; all things obey our Father, and He is using them to effect our eternal welfare. Are you in captivity? Bound to a trade, a partner—a condition of life which holds you back from the more congenial conditions which you would fain choose—do not look on these apart from God; but dare to believe that all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. All things work—the Divine energy; all things work together—the Divine management; all things work together for good—the Divine benevolence.

TUESDAY, September 26. 2 Kings xxv.

Imagine the overcrowded city; its meagre measure of wheat, lentils, and spelt, dealt out day by day; the necessity for perpetual vigilance against the besieging parties; the sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, lying by scores in the inner chambers, broken like earthen vessels; the women refusing the nourishment for which their babes cried; the ravage of pestilence. Ah, Jerusalem, who stonedst the prophets and didst shed the blood of the just, this was the day of the overflowing fury and wrath of Jehovah!

Then the vain effort to escape; the long line of fugitives stealing silently through the king's private garden, cherishing the hope of reaching the plains of Jericho, before being discovered by the Babylonians, in the teeth of Jeremiah's reiterated words to Zedekiah: "Thou shalt not escape, but shalt be taken by the hand of the King of Babylon." Then the night, in which the wild fury of fire engulfed temple and palace, public building and dwelling-house.

Finally, the indignity to the king; the march of the fugitives to their distant home; delicate women and little children forced to travel for more than thirty days through the inhospitable wilderness, manacled, and urged on by spear-point or scourge.

Last of all, the city, sitting solitary, which had been full of people, watched over by the yearning gaze of Jeremiah, the patriot prophet. The brief rule of Gedaliah brought a gleam of light, a transient relief from the long monotony of disaster and sorrow; but transitory, indeed, for it was soon obscured by his murder and the downfall of order and authority.

It is a bitter story, but it teaches that God will not brook sin in his own. With the froward He shows Himself froward. If a man turn not, He will whet his sword.

WEDNESDAY, September 27. 1 Chron. i.

Certain names shine out of this chapter as particular suns and planets from the mass of stars in the midnight sky. Adam, Enoch, Noah—these are familiar to us. But it is noticeable that the sons of Ham and the sons of Esau receive as much attention as the sons of Shem; from which we learn that no human life is counted by God unworthy of his regard, or of a place in his book. Each is necessary as a link in the great chain, or as part of the foundations of the structure on which He has been engaged through the ages. For each, Jesus tasted death; for each, there is mercy and forgiveness; and for each, possibility beyond the reach of mortal vision.

Chapters like this resemble the gravestones in a cemetery, of which the inscriptions are almost destroyed by the lapse of time and the effect of weather. And yet, as we behold them, we realize that here brains thought, hearts beat with love, bodies were buoyant with strength, the amenities of life were fulfilled. These names are now little more than names to the ordinary reader, though to the student full of interest. There was a time when each stood for intense vitality, and each life here represented was the object of the solicitude and the training of the Eternal Spirit.

Your lot may be inconspicuous, your work obscure, your name unknown; but you are a distinct object of the thought and care of God, who loves you with a special and everlasting affection.

Each of us has a special place in the love and thought of God! "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

THURSDAY, September 28. 1 Chron. ii.

These genealogies were kept with religious care, because there were occasions when the people of Israel were called upon to declare their pedigrees (Num. i. 18). If they could not show their fathers' houses, whether they were of Israel, they were condemned to lose their privileges (Ezra. ii. 59-63). The only resort for those who were unable to establish their descent from the holy stock was the verdict of the Urim and Thummim, which gave God's direct answer.

With ourselves, men are apt to be proud of their genealogical trees, and to glow with enthusiasm over their high descent. But the serious question arises, Are we equally careful of our Divine pedigree; that we have been truly born again: that we have become children and, therefore, heirs: that we are able to prove our Divine sonship? How often into a court of justice some unlettered man has come, bringing an old Bible, with its list of names on the fly-leaf; or a bundle of dusty documents, which have proved beyond doubt his right to far-spreading acres. Can we do as much as to the incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading heritage, reserved in heaven? Are we sure that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life?

Directly the soul trusts in Christ, it receives the right to call itself a child. There is no doubt about this, even though the rush of expected emotion is not forthcoming (John i. 12). But, best of all, the Spirit witnesses with our spirits, that we are sons. Because we are sons, God sends forth the Spirit of his Son. Ah, how wonderful is this—that the very Spirit, which dwelt in the heart of Jesus, and made Him what He was during his earthly life, is literally within to form Christ there!

FRIDAY, September 29. 1 Chron. iii.

This chapter is very important. It furnished Matthew with the genealogy of Christ, as the Son of David. His Gospel begins with the words: The book of the genealogy of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham; and then proceeds to trace his descent through the line of the kings, as it is given here. Matthew does not quote all these names, because he desires to compress his list into three divisions of fourteen each, only giving general landmarks which indicate the current.

As one glances down this list, remembering that these names represent the ancestors of our Lord, the mind is arrested by its motley character. Think, for instance, of Bathsheba and Ahaziah, of Manasseh and Amon. So many and so divers were the types of humanity which contributed to the making of his wonderful human nature, although it was sinless and unique—unparalleled in human history. But did not this enable our Lord (speaking after the manner of men) to be the Son of Man? He was able to understand all men, to read their inner thoughts, to interpret them to themselves, to help them to know God, to pray for and redeem them, because each human life could awaken chords in his nature which responded immediately. We speak these words with all reverence, never forgetting that He made man, and was God over all, blessed for ever; but neither can we forget that He was made of a woman, and that two Evangelists carefully cite his pedigree. He is the true ladder, standing amid the broken fragments of men, by whom we may arise to God.

SATURDAY, September 30. 1 Chron. iv.

The list of names is broken by two or three interesting items. From out of this chapter comes the cry of a woman's anguish, who bare Jabez with sorrow (9). But out of her grief there came a noble life. It is so often thus. Out of the night, the day; out of the bitterness, the joy; out of the dark grave, the resurrection hope. The fourfold prayer of Jabez might well serve for our daily use. To be blessed as God only can bless; to have an ever-enlarging sphere of opportunity and usefulness; to know that God's hand is ever with us, upholding and helping in all that we put our hand to; to be kept from evil—what more is necessary to a happy and honourable career?

It is pleasant also to get a glimpse of the weavers of fine linen, and of the potters (21, 23). God's Word makes mention of honourable trades and handicrafts with careful interest, because all may be engaged in them for his glory; and there is a common interest between Himself, the great Fabricator, from whose hands the raw material must always be furnished, and the clever brains and hands, which work up beautiful and useful products. How good would it be if it might be said of each of us, in the best sense, that we dwell with the King for his work! However busy we are, let us always dwell within sight and call of our King.

Here are also the conditions of a happy personal and home life (40). The land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable. We need width, room to expand and grow; quiet, for it is only as the soul is sheltered from the rush of worldly engagement, the constant fret of anxiety, that it can realize its true consummation and bliss; peaceable, because only in the inner stillness can God's voice be heard, or his face reflected.

A Strange Tea-Drinking.

WHEN Richard Trevor left college and entered his father's firm as junior partner, he brought with him eager purposes for improving the condition of the large number of men employed in their extensive ironworks. At Cambridge he had, happily for himself, got into the best "set," regarding it not so much from a social as from a moral standpoint—young fellows who were sensible enough to find the truest enjoyment of the life that now is, by linking it with the life that is to come, and with the loyal service of Him who can indeed teach his followers to make the best of both worlds.

So Richard and his companions, never having headache in the morning as a residuary legacy from wine-suppers overnight, were ready for vigorous mental efforts during the day; and their leisure being divided between athletics and the philanthropic and Christian work which now takes so conspicuous a place in the best type of University life, they were happy and jolly, as those will surely be who have a conscience void of offence towards God and man, and who "save their life" for all pure joy by "losing it" in the discipline of generous self-sacrifice.

Best of all, Richard had a vitalising belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour, and in his new position in the works he desired, above all else, that the men should be helped to habits, not only of sobriety and thrift, but of godliness.

Mr. and Mrs. Trevor were worthy, well-meaning people who had freely given to their son the advantages of education that had been denied to themselves, and were exceedingly proud of him as "a perfect gentleman," and altogether "a wonderful young fellow." But they could not but think some of his ideas impractical and impossible. Nevertheless, he was allowed a free hand in all his schemes, and he worked eagerly in the establishment of benefit societies, temperance clubs, a Band of Hope for the children, and even a Sunday school, in which he himself taught.

There was opposition, of course, and some discouragement, but the more thoughtful and serious among the men gave thankful co-operation. Soon came a proposition from some of them that the out-building, used for a Sunday School, should also be utilised for a mission service on a Sunday evening. Richard was delighted, and threw himself heartily into the plan, but his father demurred. "Your mother and I have always found the parish church good enough for us, Richard, and I think it might do for our workpeople as well. I do not like innovations—they are DANGEROUS, MY BOY, DANGEROUS!"

"But, father, the men will not go to the church; and if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, then, you know, Mahomet must go to the mountain."

Mr. Trevor did not know, but Richard's remark sounded clever, and as usual he had his way, and a simple, earnest service was conducted by himself, or by any lay help that he could secure; and very soon conversions took place, and men and their wives became new creatures in Christ Jesus. Perhaps there is no passion that grows with a keener appetite than the passion for saving souls, and Richard Trevor soon became so thoroughly possessed by it that he was continually on the alert—by prayer and effort—to bring one and another of the men under Gospel influence.

But in one direction he was utterly baffled, and that too by a man in whom he took a special interest, for he was one of his father's oldest servants, and a most competent workman, but so stolid and unapproachable as to set all friendly advances at defiance. Richard found, from sundry pitying remarks let fall by the men, that Jim Haigh's wife was a poor manager, and his home life uncomfortable, and the fact that, in spite of this, he was not at all given to public-house visitation, gave him a strong claim on his young master's sympathy.

But, try as he would, Richard could get no nearer to Jim, and all his invitations to the mission service met with an almost surly refusal. At length his intense concern for Jim prompted him to bold measures.

"Now, look here, Haigh," he said one Saturday at pay-time, "I want you to come to-morrow night to hear a friend of mine who is taking the service, and I've been thinking that it would be pleasanter for you to have company, so I will look in at your house to-morrow afternoon; and, if your wife will give me a cup of tea, we can go together afterwards."

Jim smiled a strange, perplexed smile as he glanced at the well-dressed man before him, and pictured him as a guest at his table; but he was manifestly touched by the brotherliness of the proposal, and in an unusually softened voice he mumbled something about his house and then he slouched away without further remark.

NOT BEING FOR THE LIKES OF GENTRY,

This was not encouraging; but, nothing daunted, Richard presented himself next day at the door of Jim's cottage, which was easily distinguishable from its neighbours by a general aspect of untidiness and neglect. I am sketching from life in telling of his comfortless reception by the palpably ashamed husband and the slatternly wife. But Richard Trevor's kindliness and courtesy won the day, and all the womanliness of Mrs. Haigh's nature was roused to do honour to the unwonted guest. But the entertainment was a severe test to Richard's powers of adaptation.

The tea was spread, without cloth, on a not over-clean table. The bread and butter, in huge hunks, was, to say the least, not tempting; but by far the most unlooked-for feature of the repast was that one very large mug, filled with tea, had to do duty as the only drinking vessel for the whole party, which included several children! Fortunately, it was passed first to the guest, who took an ample draught, which he made an excuse for not repeating when the receptacle was replenished and handed to him again.

But that meal, repellant as it was to fastidious tastes, was the turning-point in Jim Haigh's life. My informant, who personally knew the circumstances, told of Jim going that night to the House of God in company with his self-invited guest; and very soon afterwards both he and his wife received the Saviour Himself into their home. And then followed such a complete and blessed reformation in their domestic life that now Richard Trevor, or any other gentleman, might take a meal there without a single shock to any sense of propriety.

Tynemouth. M. C. France.

Evangelistic "Rally."—In connection with "The London Tent Campaign," it is proposed to hold a two-days' evangelistic "rally" at the Great American Tent, situate in High Street, Clapham, adjoining Clapham Road Station, on September 26 and 27. The subjects proposed for consideration are: "Incentives to Christian Service," "Conditions of Success in Christian Service," and "Present and Future Rewards for Christian Service." The evangelists who are labouring in the London Tent Campaign (including Messrs. Henry Varley, Leonard Weaver, W. R. Lane, Charles Inglis, Van de Venter, with many prominent servants of Christ) have promised to take part. Christians are cordially invited to be present. Meetings each day at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 7 p.m.

The Late Miss Cusack.—Some Romanist papers recently announced that the late Miss Cusack "died in the Roman Catholic faith." Rev. J. G. Gregory, incumbent of Christ's Church, Leamington, refutes the statement in the Converted Catholic (New York), saying:—"I know that some Roman Catholic papers have asserted that Miss Cusack returned to the Roman faith before she died. She did no such thing. I attended her on her deathbed. I was with her when she died, and I buried her, being assisted in the service by Rev. Mr. Pargiter, the vicar of St. Paul's, Leamington, who also knew her. . . . The Roman Catholics tried hard to get her back, taking advantage of what they thought might show a growing weakness of mind under pain and suffering of the body; but they were deceived. She treated them kindly and courteously, but did not yield an inch so far as I saw evidence. . . . Miss Holmes, a Protestant, and I were alone with her when she died. That which you want is the straight declaration that she died a Protestant. This I can confidently make."

Bible-School Proposal.

IN view of the interest aroused by the lectures of Professors White and Newell, the following letter from Mr. Forlong, of New Zealand, will be read with interest:—

Dear Sir,—As an old London preacher, let me in your columns express my joy at the idea of pure Bible Classes, open especially to young evangelists and Christian labourers. Professor White's classes may prove a splendid preface. Allow me to suggest what occurs no doubt to hundreds of practical men.

The Bible, and the Bible alone, must be the iron rule; but historical works and Hebrew and Greek concordances ought to be found in the large hall or room at all times, and many English concordances, of course.

A curious circumstance induces me to be particularly anxious about such a school or college. Before leaving London, about twenty-one years ago, a wealthy gentleman called upon me and proposed spending, with another friend, some thousands upon such a college in Brighton, if I could undertake to begin it and establish it as an undenominational college, open to whomsoever will, upon the understanding that a most loving reception be given to all. No denomination was ever to be referred to, if possible—only Scripture, carefully, and, if possible, very accurately expounded; and those present at certain meetings were to be encouraged to hand in texts or papers for consideration at a future time; and all students encouraged to hand in their own written expositions, and candid consideration given to all.

Some readers will be old enough to remember the

LARGE UNDENOMINATIONAL MEETINGS

in various parts of London about 33 or 35 years ago, one or two in Bayswater and Notting Hill every week; one, by the late Mrs. General Campbell, close to Belgrave Square, and attended by many of the nobility, barristers, and professional men, and by leading preachers of various denominations, men like Capel Molyneux and the Hon. Baptist Noel, one or two well-known Presbyterian ministers always present, and others.

Preachers and preaching laymen, &c., generally sat round a large table in the centre of the very large drawing-room, conversing aloud. We always knew the subject, because an Epistle or a Gospel was continued week after week; about forty listeners or more present. No opinions were encouraged. If a mistake in this respect occurred, some one politely intimated that "texts" were our rule, and I never remember a single sharp discussion. Two or three seniors calmly and politely led, without appearing to interfere at all.

One weekly meeting was in my own house in Notting Hill, and all denominations were invited there also; and I am anxious to impress upon friends, now moving for Bible study, that a wise and prayerful elder will find no difficulty whatever in preventing unpleasant discussion. The presence of three or four denominations is an advantage, not the reverse.

But if the reading-room receives any theological works whatever, and allows extracts to be read, it will be impossible, absolutely impossible, to refuse receiving and quoting

VERY UNDESIRABLE BOOKS.

My experience is not against denominations, so-called—their names are alarming to some; Bible readers and lovers, although they are called denominational names, do not attach much importance at all to their own names. We had frequently many elderly English clergymen with us, men of energy and zeal; but I never found any denomination whatever not amenable to loving kindness, firmness, and courtesy. I do repeat the fact: the presence of very many denominations is a great advantage in a Bible school.—Yours truly, Wanganui, N.E. Gordon Forlong.

(1209)

The Irish Revival of 1859.

[Rev. James Gibson, D.D., in the United Presbyterian Magazine, gives an account of the great revival in Ireland in 1859, from which the following extracts are taken.]

THIS great movement originated in the Irish Presbyterian Church, but rapidly extended to the other evangelical communions, though to but a limited degree among the members of the Episcopal body. Beginning in County Antrim, it spread to Down, Derry, and parts of Donegal, Tyrone, Armagh, Cavan, and Monaghan. It also reached Dublin and parts of the south. Those who were, for the most part, influenced by the revival were people of Scotch descent—people therefore characterized by native shrewdness, intelligence, and solidity of temperament—more phlegmatic than fervid, although with hidden fire beneath a somewhat frigid exterior; not easily roused, however, to enthusiasm, and still less given to fanaticism.

In external organization and activity the condition of the Irish Presbyterian Church had, for a good many years previously to 1859, been one of increasing prosperity and growth. Large funds were contributed for ecclesiastical purposes, and much attention was devoted by Church Courts to education, the state of religion, and Sabbath observance. Open-air preaching, also, was more largely engaged in than formerly, and Sabbath schools and prayer meetings were multiplied and increasingly well attended.

At the same time, however, the friends of spiritual religion deplored that it did not appear to flourish throughout the community, or the Church, as they longed to see it do. All the more did they pray and labour for a better state of things; and signs began to multiply of a stirring of the dry bones. The tidings of the Revival in America in 1858 excited much interest. As was most natural, the blessing came first in the district which had been most assiduously prepared for it—the wide rural parish of Connor, in the centre of County Antrim, which had long been ministered to by a succession of FAITHFUL EVANGELICAL PASTORS.

In the year 1857 three youths, who had been only recently converted, established a prayer meeting in a neglected quarter; and here an evident work of grace speedily began, and spread all around. Cases of deep concern, followed by a saving change, became frequent; a chastened, expectant spirit fell upon the community; meetings for prayer were multiplied and attended by constantly increasing numbers; men's tongues were loosened to pray and exhort; and many professed to have been made new creatures in Christ Jesus.

A great impulse was given to the work locally by the personal dealings of the converts with their relatives and neighbours; and from town to town the movement was spread by the visits and addresses of those who had been changed. The churches everywhere were thronged, and in unwonted numbers people began to ask what they must do to be saved. The general features of their experience were—strong convictions of sin, of the terrors of the law, and of the lost and helpless state of the soul; an apprehension of Christ as the Saviour, and an earnest desire to be found of Him; fervent and unceasing prayerfulness, followed by closing with the offer of salvation, and intense joy and peace.

Ere long, however, a strange and startling element appeared to fix public attention on the work. Carried away by the intensity of their emotions, people began not merely to cry out for mercy, but to fall down as though smitten to the ground by an invisible hand. This happened to multitudes, not merely of women and children, but of strong men. Many of these cases were purely hysterical, or the result of sympathy, and had no connection with genuine spiritual distress; but in the great majority the normal experience was as follows:—During the delivery of an address, not at all of itself of an exciting kind, would be heard "a very peculiar cry," followed shortly after by a number of others in different parts of the meeting; and soon the whole audience would be divided into awe-struck groups around persons prostrate on the floor, or supported in the arms of the bystanders. The eyes would at first be closed, or, if open, would seem to be gazing far away; moaning or loud cries would be emitted from the labouring chest, and the arms would be tossed wildly about. A fierce struggle appeared in some cases to be raging between the soul and Satan, whose personality was intensely realized; but more generally there were heart-rending confessions of sin and appeals for mercy. This was followed, suddenly or after an interval of hours or days, by great peace and joy, the face shining with an unearthly radiance, and the mouth being filled with rapturous expressions of praise and fervent appeals to all around to come to Jesus. Occasionally the experience of the "stricken" ones was of a terribly harrowing kind, comparable to nothing but the demoniacal possession in the New Testament.

It was not at heated and excited meetings only that the prostrations occurred; they often came upon persons when alone, in bed or at their daily pursuits, in the market, on the highway, children at school and

MEN AT THEIR GAMES.

Nor were they confined to the humblest or most illiterate class, though the majority, especially of the severest cases, belonged to that category; but, without being actually "stricken," not a few "men of education and business talents, and women of refined mental culture, were brought to weep and lament over their unbelieving hearts, and eventually had their sorrow turned into joy." A saving change, says another witness, came upon "persons of all ages, from three-score-and-fifteen to ten years of age—persons of all degrees of intelligence, from the best educated to the most ignorant—persons of very different physical constitution, from the most intrepid and resolute men to the most timid and nervous female among us—and persons of every state and character, from the most amiable and blameless to the most profane and reckless in the community.

From the first the ministers discouraged excitement, and warned their people against regarding the prostrations as a means of grace. They also took energetic measures to put down some of the extravagances that here and there appeared, such as cases of deafness, dumbness, blindness, sleeping, marks on the body, visions, and prophesying. It is on record that "the sermons most blessed to the conviction and conversion of souls were not those which are naturally most alarming—such as God's wrath against sinners, the danger of eternal torments, &c.; on the contrary, they were those which spoke of a Saviour's love, of the Father's unmerited mercy, of the Spirit's gracious influence, of the joys of the righteous, and of the glorious inheritance of heaven."

Quite apart from its physical concomitants, however, the Revival season was a very remarkable one. In one district of County Antrim, says the minister, "for about six weeks almost all agricultural operations, and, indeed, every kind of secular employment, were suspended, no man being able to think of, or attend to, anything but the interests of his soul.

NIGHT AND DAY

the sound of praise and prayer never ceased to float upon the air. An overwhelming sense of awe and terror held in check the boldest sinners; and thousands seemed to feel as if the end of all things was at hand."

A vast improvement in the public morals was also directly traceable to the Revival. Drunkenness became comparatively rare. In Connor, "of nine public-houses two were closed by the conversion of the tenants, and a third for want of trade; and the remaining six sold less altogether than had previously been sold by one." There was also throughout all the districts affected by the Revival a great diminution of committals for offences connected with drunkenness, of the number of poor-house inmates, and of the amount required for poor-rates. For, about a year after the Revival began, repeated testimony continued to be borne by the judges of assize to the marked change it had wrought upon the moral condition of the community.

"From Brahm to Christ."

REV. WILLIAM ROBINSON, of the L.M.S., Salem, South India, has given the Christian Church a poem of a high order in his "From Brahm to Christ" (2s. 6d. Andrews, 5, Farringdon Avenue, E.C.). The volume has an illustrated title-page, which reminds one of some of the charming title-pages of 300 years ago, and the printing is pleasant to the eye. The poem is based on fact, is illumined by intimate personal knowledge of Hindoo life and thought; and describes, with keen insight and deep sympathy, the progress of a soul from heathen darkness to Christian light and life.

Twelve years ago (says the author) a Fakir came to me when I was in camp at the village of the Flowery Foot. He came secretly, and requested me to tell him the difference between El, Elohim, Yaveh, Allah, Devan, and other designations of God. He was a linguist, and a seeker after truth. He yielded to the attractive love of Christ, and became satisfied with the graces of the perfect Life. The Epistles and the Revelation of John were his delight and his constant meditation. He was mystical, and could not tell clearly why he became a Christian; but a Christian he was in temper of mind and in abounding labours.

In his Fakir dress he marched and preached over a large part of India. He could not fit himself into the ordinary routine of mission work, but he wore himself out by exhausting labour, and not long since he entered into the joy of his Lord.

The author has attempted with great success to reproduce his Indian theme. Now and again the Occident, rather than the Orient, is reflected on the page, but that is seldom. The modes of thought, the forms of expression, the feeling, the sunshine, the atmosphere—all are of the East, and help to interpret that world to us. Missionaries of this order—who, while holding the truth as it is in Jesus, know how to allow for difference of race—are the men everywhere wanted.

But to the poem itself. A band of young men—one, at least, full of generous enthusiasm and sincere desires after a higher life, counselled by a holy man—start for Benares, where they see the sights and partake in the rites of the devout from India's utmost bound. The secret worship in a temple hidden in a grove, "when drops the evening star," brings a shock to one, who, "with hands before his eyes close shut," runs from the accursed thing, followed by cries of "traitor;" and at last, falling exhausted, is carried by two soldiers to a hospital, whore he is tended, and "no questions asked of race, or lineage, or caste." Inquiring why, "the sister" answer, "For his sake." Now he has lost caste, and is everywhere cut off: his effigy is burnt, and its ashes scattered by the winds. By saving the life of a child, his heart is turned from austerities to love, and, through the teaching of a missionary, "there crept God's peace into my heart." From this point the poem swells out into all the joy and triumph of Christian faith—the language, the thought, the simile, worthy of the high theme. John's vision of the New Jerusalem and Paul's Quis separabit supply the inspiration of some lofty stanzas. The victory of Christ, "Lord of the ages," is celebrated in one of the finest missionary hymns we have ever seen. In the closing stanzas the influence of death, and all that death means to the believer in Christ, is traceable; and therein we think we see the meaning of the dedication of the poem, "To L. R. in undying memory." The last lines are a tender prayer:

Stay with us, Lord, and let thy face
Beam on us; night is nearing.
Through its dark shadows may we trace
Thy look of love—aye, cheering
The heart of all who trust in Thee
On restless earth, on angry sea,
Waiting for thine appearing.

Naples Sailors' Rest.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes writes: "Capt. Alex. McLeod, of the mission ship, St. Paul, reports that, as a result of giving a Bible to an Italian, about forty persons meet together in a house for Bible study."

The Leper's Friend:

MISS MARY REED.

TO have had a quiet table talk with Miss Mary Reed, who had come down to the Lucknow Conference from her distant outpost at Chandag, was one of the memorable episodes of my recent tour in India.

With strong, sweet face, deep-set eyes, full of soft light, a voice low and melodious, manner, quiet and unobtrusive—it did not take long to recognize that this woman, of perhaps forty years, had learnt some of the deepest lessons in the school of pain.

She was born in Ohio, in a little town bearing the curious name of "Crooked Tree." Converted at the age of sixteen, she felt led to devote herself to missionary work, and sailed for India in 1884, in connection with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was appointed to Cawnpore, and spent five years of exhausting labour there, visiting the zenanas, training native women, speaking and singing in the open air, where the people congregated.

It became necessary, however, that she should return to the United States to undergo a surgical operation, which was successful; but a strange tingling sensation remained in the forefinger of her right hand. A curious white spot also appeared on her cheek, low down near the ear. One day, when still in the hospital, a voice seemed to whisper to her, "You have leprosy; you must go back to India, and devote the rest of your life to work among the lepers." At the moment, also, the Saviour's voice seemed to whisper that He had chosen her to glorify Him by ministering to the lepers of India.

It is said that there are half a million of lepers in India. They are to be met with, begging, in almost every city. With wasted feet, swollen limbs, decayed extremities, and obliterated features, they thrust themselves upon the passer-by, asking for alms. Here is a sightless sufferer; he was once a child, could laugh and play; but disease came upon him with its direful hand, his family shrank away from his touch, and presently drove him forth to beg in the streets, or starve to death. Christian love is gathering these poor creatures into hospitals, and caring for them with marvellous tenderness, and it was to such that Mary Reed felt herself called to devote her life.

So great was her anxiety to avoid giving needless pain, or to raise difficulties about returning to India, that she confided her terrible secret to three persons only, a physician in Cincinnati, another (a specialist) in New York, and a faithful nurse. These admitted that her impressions were correct, as did also two noted physicians in London, and one in Bombay. Not daring to kiss her good-bye to her mother, she tore herself away from the home circle, and hurried back to India, with these words on her lips:—

> No chance has brought this ill to me;
> Tis God's sweet will, so let it be;
> He seeth what I cannot see.
>
> There is a need-be for each pain;
> And He will make it one day plain
> That earthly loss is heavenly gain.

This abiding in the will of God, sure that it is good will, sure that He will not leave her soul in Hades, nor suffer his child to see corruption, but that He will ever show her the path of life, is very characteristic of this sweet and noble woman, who, though the Father chastens her, reckons steadfastly on his unaltering love. To a lady with whom she travelled when in Europe, and who was then unacquainted with the nature of her malady, she said, with quivering lips, "My Father knows the way I go, and I am sure it is the right way." And on another occasion, "I am returning to India under conditions in which no other missionary ever returned."

On reaching India, she went at once to Pithora, near which is the Leper Asylum on the Chandag Heights, among the Himalaya Mountains, connected with the Mission to Lepers in India and the East, of which our friend, Mr. John Jackson,* is the Organizing Secretary, and with which the name of Mr. Wellesley Bailey has been so long identified. Chandag is nine days distant from the nearest railway-station, situated on rising ground which commands a rich and beautiful valley, dotted with villages, and laid out in fields of rice and wheat. At that time the office of superintendent happened to be vacant, and Miss Reed was appointed to it, and at once commenced her Christ-like ministry. Soon after her settlement there, a friend says that she received a little card of pressed ferns, gathered near her mountain home, with Miss Havergal's words at the back:—

> Alone, alone! Yet round me stand
> God's mountains, still and grand!
> Still and grand, serene and bright,
> Sentinels clothed in armour white,
> And helmeted with scarlet light.
> His power is near,
> I need not fear
> Beneath the shadow of his throne,
> Alone, alone! yet not alone.

Below these lines were written the words, "Mary Reed, in India till the end of life."

The asylum grounds, covering some sixty-six acres, are enclosed by a low stone wall. Within the enclosure are the stone houses of the men, surrounded by garden plots; and fifteen minutes away are those of the women. There is also a hospital, with dispensary attached, a newly finished chapel, and Miss Reed's little bungalow. The remainder of the ground is reserved for grazing and farming. There is more leprosy in this beautiful mountain resort than in almost any other part of India. Miss Reed says: "I am told that within a radius of ten miles there are more than 400 patients who ought to be here in the asylum." It is, however, very difficult to overcome their fears. They cannot understand why so much should be done for them, except for some sinister motive, which would bode them harm. So little can they appreciate the disinterested love of Christ! Miss Reed said, if I remember rightly, that she had about fifty men, and between thirty and forty women under her care. Many of them are far gone in disease, and her nature still shrinks instinctively from some of the more repulsive forms, though she never betrays it.

A great cry of sympathy and prayer went up when it was known that Mary Reed was a leper; and in answer, to use her own words, the disease has been "wonderfully holden." Writing in 1897, she said: "I am conscious of its presence within, and have been especially so during the last few months; but I feel the power of God upon me in holding me quiet. There are days when the external symptoms are aggravated and more noticeable. Then, again, they recede. What I pass through in my experiences no one knows. God has enabled me to say, not with a sigh, but with a song, 'Thy will be done.' I see not trouble and sorrow ahead, but the joy of telling out among the heathen that our Saviour has power to save to the uttermost.

> "I am dwelling on the mountain,
> Where the golden sunlight gleams!"

It would be a great pleasure to me if these words moved some to pray for this sweet Christian woman in her work among the lepers, or led to gifts being sent to assist her or the Society for which my friend, Mr. Jackson, has renounced his business that he may serve it more effectively. God bless them both; the one beneath the shadow of the mighty Himalayas, the other in the streets of London, or the cities and towns of Great Britain, collecting funds.

F. B. Meyer.

*Mr. Jackson desires us to add that he will have ready on October 1, an illustrated volume containing Miss Reed's life and letters, with introduction by Rev. F. B. Meyer. Price 2s. 6d., from the Mission to Lepers, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Lord's Prayer.

CHRIST teaches us in this prayer to look to God as:

(1) Our Father, in the spirit of holy reverence. "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." Children.

(2) Our King, in the spirit of earnest allegiance. "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Subjects.

(3) Our Benefactor, in the spirit of prayerful dependence. "Give us this day our daily bread." Suppliants.

(4) Our Lawgiver, in the spirit of humble confession. "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us." Sinners.

(5) Our Guide, in the spirit of conscious weakness. "Lead us not into temptation." Followers.

(6) Our Deliverer, in the spirit of "fear and trembling." "Deliver us from evil." Captives.

Our All-Glorious Eternal Lord. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever, Amen." Worshippers.

S. E. Burrow.

"In His Steps" in Bulgaria.—Pastor J. A. Tonjoroff recently completed an evangelistic tour in North Bulgaria, in which he was welcomed by the Protestant mission workers, and was used as a means of inspiration to the labourers in the field, and of the salvation of the unsaved. He is now anticipating a tour through another section of the country, and in order to procure funds, as well as for the good work likely to be accomplished thereby, he has translated "In His Steps." He still needs, however, £10 with which to publish it. Address: Pastor J. A. Tonjoroff, Philippopolis, Bulgaria.

(1211)

The Mind of a Ritualist.

Mechanical v. Spiritual.

SOME months ago we called attention to an instructive correspondence in the Record having an important bearing upon the modern Ritualistic movement. The discussion has been in progress since January last, and at length it has come to a close. Men of various schools have spoken their minds with the utmost frankness; and, with few and insignificant exceptions, the controversy has been distinguished by becoming charity and courtesy.

As we indicated in April last, Rev. W. Hay Aitken raised a point of great interest when he maintained that Sacramentalism is mechanical, and inconsistent with the true spiritual theory of the Church of Christ. The mechanical, theory was shown to assume "that God has been pleased to attach the powers of the Holy Ghost to certain mechanical acts accompanied by the recital of particular formulæ, so as to produce consequences of a distinctly supernatural order, whenever these mechanical conditions are complied with. The foundation on which the whole Ritualistic system rests is the dogma of than which no fancy of the magician can be more rigorously mechanical. Upon this assumption, neither proved nor provable, the whole fabric is built; and, if it prove baseless, equally baseless is the whole system that it supports."

'APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION';

In the course of the discussion, some have seemed prepared to admit the mechanical theory, and there has not been wanting a measure of casuistical pleading by way of defence. The correspondence has been closed in a comprehensive letter by Mr. Aitken. Dealing with Canon Gore's assertion, that the sacerdotal theory is, in its essence, social and not mechanical, Mr. Aitken says:

"I am inclined to think he means to convey the idea that this theory has to involve what seems to me mechanical, because otherwise the great social object of the Christian dispensation could not be attained. If this be his meaning, I must meet it with a most emphatic counter-statement, and affirm that the mechanical system of ecclesiasticism, so far from contributing to the development of social and fraternal relations in Christendom, is, on the contrary, their deadliest foe.

"In this world of imperfect knowledge, many men must needs have many minds. This need not, however, entail personal estrangement, nor even ecclesiastical division, so long as reasonable play is permitted to the human understanding, and men are not tied down by the iron fetters of an ecclesiastical uniformity, and constrained to accept the dogmas of their priests. But as soon as, by a quasi-mechanical process, a priest caste has been called into existence, the broad and comprehensive union of spiritual fellowship begins to give place to the capricious limitations of professional dogmatism.

"The mechanical theory of the Christian ministry is not fraternal, but fratricidal. It is this that has drenched the Christian world with

A PERFECT DELUGE OF BLOOD.

It is this that kindled the fires of Smithfield, and offered to heaven the ghastly holocaust of St. Bartholomew's Day. It is this that shuts High Churchmen off at this moment from all religious co-operation with other denominations, while it equally cuts the Romans and the Greeks off from all spiritual fellowship with them. If Christendom presents to-day the appearance of a house divided against itself, it is the mechanical theory of the priesthood more than anything else that has to be thanked for it.

"It is true that Christ formed a visible society, and, therefore, I believe in the outward Church. But it is also true that Christ formed an inward and invisible society, which is one, because it is pervaded by a common life; holy, because it is composed of those who are washed and sanctified; universal, because all who belong to Christ, whether in heaven or earth, belong to it; Apostolic, because it accepts Apostolic doctrine and spiritual fellowship, and has, under God, been called into existence by the labours of Apostolic men.

"These two societies, the one external and, as we say, ecclesiastical, and the other visible only to the eye of God, but spiritual and eternal, are spoken of, and thought of, as one by New Testament writers; the sad necessity of carefully discriminating the one from the other not having yet arisen. The two never were conterminous, are not so now, and never will be.

"There was a Judas in the embryonic Church of the Apostles; there was a Simon Magus, who had neither part nor lot in the matter, in the primitive Church of 'The Acts;' at Sardis there was a flourishing Christian Church, visible to the human eye, but only a few names that really belonged to Christ. Let us test Canon Gore's theory of union by the very text that he quotes, and where are we landed? 'We being many are one body, for we are all partakers of the one loaf.' What does this mean? Canon Gore, if I mistake not, would say, 'It means that so soon as certain words are said and acts done by a duly ordained priest, the Body of Christ is present on the altar, all communicants are partakers of this, and therefore they are one body. But what does this involve? It involves that spiritually-minded Churchmen are one body with, and therefore one with, unspiritual and godless Churchmen, who, from some base motive, partake of the same feast; while there is no such provision for their spiritual union with spiritually-minded and saintly Methodists, Independents, or Baptists, although with these they may have as much spiritual fellowship as they have little with such members of our own body as I have referred to.

"What a tissue of anomalies, paradoxes, and inconsistencies the whole system is! The moment that one begins to examine it carefully, like a house of cards, it all falls to pieces, and that just because it is founded on this fallacy—the mechanical theory. In contrast to this, interpret this passage in harmony with what I have ventured to call of the Sacraments, and all difficulties vanish. Christ Himself is the living bread that came down from heaven, and He has instituted the Eucharist in order that we may feed on Him by faith. All who do thus feed on Him are necessarily one, because they are partakers of a common element. We feel sure that our fellow-Christians of other bodies are one with us, because there is in them the same life and nature that through Christ has been imparted to us. We know, we feel, that we are one in spirit, one in Christ, although we are ecclesiastically separated from each other; and, therefore, we cannot doubt that they are partakers of the one bread, the one body, although their sacramental feast may lack the presence of a regularly ordained minister.

THE EVANGELICAL THEORY

"Is there anything friendly to true social relationship in the existence of a priest caste? That the Church should delegate the authority that belongs to her to her chosen ministers would seem to be a necessary condition of social life. But the existence of a priest class, armed with certain mysterious prerogatives, must have a tendency to create 'lords over God's heritage;' to supplant the idea of Christian brotherhood, as it is doing, by the theory of ecclesiastical fatherhood (it is quite common now to hear of 'Father This,' and 'Father That,' in spite of our Lord's distinct prohibition of the title); to emphasize the distinction between the clerical element and the lay in the Church, to check the sympathies that should weld these into one, and thus to create jealousies and suspicions between them. Why should it not be quite possible to believe in the continuity of the visible Church and of its ministry, without accepting the mechanical theory of 'Apostolical Succession'?"

International S.S. Lessons.

October 1, 1899.

JOY IN GOD'S HOUSE.—Ps. cxxii.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 1.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

IT will be well to get the scholars to be interested in this ancient hymn book. Let them compare it with their own S.S. Hymn Book. The songs were written by different people—David, Solomon, Moses, priests or ministers—and were meant to be set to music. The book contains 150 songs of praise, or hymns, and is divided into five parts, each part ending with a benediction and Amen. See closing verses of Ps. xli., lxxii., lxxxix., cvi., and cl. (Let the scholars find and read these.) More than 100 of the Psalms have titles telling who wrote them, why written, how to be sung, what musical instrument is to be used. (Find and read some titles.) See Ps. lx. Michtam means "a golden poem;" Maschil means "a choice ode." The name of the tune is often given, as, for example, Ps. xlv. set to the tune "The Lilies." Some psalms are alphabetical, each verse beginning with one letter of the alphabet. Ps. cxix. has eight verses, each beginning with a letter in the Hebrew alphabet. Ps. xiv. and liii. are nearly alike. Ps. lxx. is part of xl.

SONGS OF ASCENTS.

Fifteen Psalms are thus called the "Songs of the goings up" (Ps. cxx.-cxxxiv). They were sung by those who went up to Jerusalem three times a year to worship, and most likely some were composed for the 200 singers to chant as the exiles returned from Babylon to Jerusalem. (Recall previous lessons). The Psalm which forms to-day's lesson is one of these. Can you not imagine the excitement and joy of these Jews, especially when they got near to Jerusalem. How loudly the boys would sing, those who were going up for the first time; as Jesus did when he was twelve years old. We can quite fancy this was sung at the dedication of the New Temple, of which we have been learning lately.

EXPLANATORY. (Read Ps. cxxii).

Verse 1. A joyful summons we are glad to obey. (Ask for some invitations the children get and are glad to accept). Are we glad when called to go to God's house? If not, why not? (See Ps. lxxxvii. 2; Isa. ii. 2, 3; Jer. l. 5).

Verse 2. A shout of delight at finding themselves standing within the gates joining with the throng of worshippers. "We have really got here," the children would say.

Verse 3. Describe Jerusalem, its situation, Mount Moriah, Mount Zion, the natural trenches on three sides, its walls and grand buildings, the temple towering in the midst. (Show a picture.)

Verse 4. How many tribes were there? After whom did they take their names? Why did they go? For a testimony to God and his religion, to offer praise and prayer, and bring offerings (Deut. xvi. 16, 17).

Verse 5. See Deut. xvi. 18. "Great David's greater Son."

Verses 6, 7. Peace and prosperity go hand in hand. Tell of the horrors and desolations caused by war. The name Jerusalem means "The habitation of Peace." Jesus gives true peace (John xiv. 27).

Verses 8, 9. True religion is not selfish. We want our companions to enjoy what we enjoy. We pray for others as well as for ourselves.

LESSONS.

Joy, the result of true religion. So much in the Bible about joy. God likes his children to be happy. We are so glad we have such a good God and such a dear Saviour, that we rejoice to be able to worship Him and give Him praise. We should go to God's house with hearts full of gladness, and then the services will be bright. Sin brings sadness, all joy when the sin is washed away. Has Jesus cleansed away my sin? Let us invite others to go and worship God, and so make them glad. Jesus always went to God's house.

TEXTS ABOUT GOD'S HOUSE (2 Chron. v. 13, 14; Ps. xcv. 6; Joel ii. 15, 16; Mark xi. 15-17; Acts xvi. 13; Heb. x. 25).

TEXTS ABOUT JOY (Neh. viii. 10; Ps. xvi. 11; Eccles. ii. 26; Isa. xxxv. 2-10, lxv. 13, 14; Matt. xxv. 21; John xv. 11; Gal. v. 22; 1 Pet. i. 8.

Other Lands.

Amanda Smith's Orphans.

IT was at the foot of the Rocky Mountains that I first saw Amanda Smith. We were spending a few days at Colorado Springs. One day, in passing the Methodist church, we stopped to read the notices. Mrs. Smith was announced to speak in a series of meetings.

"Let us hear my coloured friend," said my husband: "I have known her for years. The first time I met her was at a conference held in Lord Mount Temple's grounds. She is a true daughter of the King."

We entered the church. By the strange laws of mental association, I have never been able since to disassociate Amanda Smith's name from flying bonnet-ribbons and a dark, genial face wreathed with smiles. I see her pacing up and down the platform while relating the story of her conversion. She gesticulates, she jumps, and occasionally stamps with her foot. "The devil? Of course he is not a mere influence." She knows the fiend pretty well. He had been at her heels ever since the Holy Ghost began to strive with her. He attacked her in the kitchen; he pursued her into the scullery; he tempted her at the washtub; but, thanks be to the Lord—here her voice rises to a jubilant shout—he was turned out pretty soon. And the speaker, as if wishing to illustrate her victory, makes a significant motion with her body which cannot be mistaken. This natural effusion of a soul free from bondage, so simple and childlike in her fervour, had the refreshing effect of a mountain-brook bubbling down the rocks.

A few days later, we met Amanda Smith at Pueblo, holding meetings and collecting money for an Industrial Orphan Home for Coloured Children, which she was about to open in the neighbourhood of Chicago, as soon as the necessary sum of 5,000dols had come in. When asked how she had been led to undertake the work, she told us that after the Great World's W.C.T.U. Convention in London, during which time she had been labouring with Miss Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, great fatigue came over her. She thought of rest and of taking life easier in future, when a question flashed across her mind: What have you done to HELP YOUR OWN PEOPLE?

The next moment brought the suggestion: "Start an orphanage." "Start an orphanage!" echoed her heart. She knelt down to ask for guidance, and rose from her knees with the assurance: "If you ask anything in my name, I will do it." A great hurry then came over her. She felt as if she could not wait, but had to get her ticket and go straight home to begin her work. "It was Satan worrying me, but I asked the Lord to take the hurry out of me, and He did."

On her return to America, in 1895, Mrs. Smith made her project known to several friends of hers. An appeal was made in The Christian Standard for contributions; but the money did not come in "a-rolling," as Amanda Smith expected. She received just enough encouragement to justify her faith, and to teach her patience. When experienced business men drew her attention to the difficulties and heavy responsibilities of such a work, her heart sank within her. Could she have been mistaken after all? She opened her daily guide, a little text-book, and read: "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love." Another time her text was: "Be not slothful, but followers of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises." Thus armed, she felt equal to the tests of faith, though they were sharp at times.

When we bade good-bye to Amanda Smith, she was in possession of half the needed sum. A building had been already bought, but she was determined not to open it until she could do so free from debt. Somewhat handicapped by the accompaniments of creeping age, rheumatism, influenza, &c., yet steadily moving forward, she had, after four years of hard labour, the joy of seeing

HER HEART'S DESIRE REALIZED.

The Home was opened in July, and, notwithstanding the drizzling rain, a large assembly was present, and many kind things were said about the founder by friends, both coloured and white. Rev. L. N. Moyer, a white minister from Chicago, spoke of his knowledge of Mrs. Smith's efforts during the past years, and that she had taught him a lesson of faith by her simple way of talking with God. "I am connected," said he, "with an orphanage that has had vastly more publicity than this one, and has men of high standing to back it; but it is struggling and feeble, and has not a dollar toward buying a building, while this one is free from debt. The Methodists cannot accommodate 1,000 children in all their orphanages, while the Catholics care for 3,000 in Chicago alone.

When Amanda Smith was called upon, the audience rose to its feet and gave her the Chautauqua salute with handkerchiefs and cheers. "I haven't words to express my gratitude," she said; "I've been a-wishin', wishin', wishin' for a beautiful bright day to dedicate this home; but my well is low, and my cistern is low, and so I've been a-praying the Lord to send rain; but I didn't mean for Him to send it to-day, not to-day!" And then she went on to thank the people for having come all the same; and, after telling them the story of how it came to pass, she concluded: "And now I am come to stay with you as long as you'll let me, and to train little boys and girls into good men and women. I expect to take girls only from two to ten the first year to get my hand in, and as fast as possible I'll enlarge the work, and hope to have a kindergarten, and all the good things some day, and perhaps a farm. I haven't the heart to exclude any poor little child of another race if they come, but my object is to care for my own race. Oh! God has been so good, so good, so good." And the happy woman sang one of her old-time songs at the request of the chairman. Let us heartily wish her God-speed. W. M.

To "Regions Beyond."

THROUGH Divine blessing we shall this month complete our twenty-seventh year of missionary labour. During this period 1,018 men and women have been trained in our various missionary colleges, from which they have scattered throughout the world, in connection with our thirty societies, to "preach the Gospel to every creature." Over thirty have left this year for work in Asia, Africa, and South America.

We were led last session, not only to continue and augment the work in Peru, but also to found a new movement in needy Argentina, where we are locating six missionaries. Eight brethren and sisters have been sent to the Congo, three of whom returned for the third time.

Forty-six workers are now engaged in connection with the Balolo Mission, which is the only effort put forth by the Church of Christ to reach the millions of heathen inhabiting the vast region contained by the horse-shoe bend of the Congo. We are thankful to record that fresh indications of spiritual promise encourage us in this difficult enterprise, which is being steadily prosecuted in spite of many obstacles and dangers.

The annual expenditure of the union, on all accounts, is now over £25,000, and we are exceedingly desirous of closing the financial year, at the end of the present month, clear of all liabilities. The former sympathy and practical assistance of your readers lead us to hope that they will continue their valued co-operation in this blessed service. While we at home enjoy so many privileges, is it not well to redouble our efforts to sustain those who, in distant lands and amidst many privations, are seeking Christ's "other sheep"?

H. Grattan Guinness, M.D.

Harley House, Bow Road, London, E.

Inebriates in India.

THERE is no human being in so pitiable a plight as the inebriate; despised by his fellows, loathed by himself, a mental wreck, a moral suicide, cast out from the earth, and refused admittance to heaven, who does not feel like making an effort to save him? A correspondent writes:—

India is full of these moral wrecks. The young civilian, away from the sweet influences and restraints of home, in his isolated professional station, and the lonely planter on his jungle-surrounded estate, are sorely tempted to drown their home-sickness and ennui in soda and whisky. In the city, too, temptations gather thickly around the feet of the assistant or clerk fresh from the homeland. Demons in the form of men and women dog the steps of sailors and soldiers, and lure them to ruin and death, to delirium and suicide. Some of these are helpless, hopeless, careless wrecks, who only beg a few pieces, or an old coat to exchange for a glass of native liquor. Some are anxious to reform, but cannot stand alone. I fully believe many of these can be saved if there is a proper home into which they may be received. In numerous cases the means of support would be gladly given by Christian relatives. Besides the classes mentioned above, the Eurasian, the native Christian, alas! and the Hindu communities supply abundant material on which to work.

For those who wish to come, we desire to furnish a haven of refuge, of rest, of sympathy; a place where no demon tempter may come, where good food and wholesome drink can be had, and where help and hope will be made prominent.

We shall depend upon no nostrum for a cure. We shall seek Divine help to restore the lost will power, to recover the lost hope, to eradicate the unnatural craving, to restore the shattered nerves, and, if possible, to help the weak ones to an experimental knowledge of Him through whom he can do all things.

Those undertaking this work are largely those whose business and joy it is, like their Lord, to seek and save the lost. We shall not wait for great things. If we cannot begin large, we shall be content to begin small. We confidently appeal to all Christian men and women, especially to British Christians, whose ward India is, and who are responsible for her welfare, as no others are, to help us. If India has sowed largely to Britain in carnal things, surely it is right that India should reap of her spiritual things.

Rev. F. W. Warne, Calcutta, India, is treasurer of the committee; Mr. John M. Lawrin, Woodstock, Ontario, representing the work in Canada and United States.

Native Boys at Poona.

IN the presence of the present and prospective suffering in a large section of India, God has pressed home on our conscience those words, by which we have been deeply searched in other years: "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, 'Behold, we knew it not,' doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? and shall not He render to every man according to his works?"

Having been permitted to begin our labours as weak and unworthy heralds of the Gospel of our Lord in India, in 1872, God has been pleased to give us some experience of his goodness and power among the suffering poor of this land. After a lengthened furlough in America, we returned last year, locating in the Poona district, with a desire by God's will to do what we could for the Christian training of orphan and destitute native boys. For more than eight months this has been a daily prayer with us, that God would show us his will and open the way for us to do the work for native boys, for which we believe He has called us again to this land.

Our desire is to have a Christian Home and Colony of at least 400 native boys, in which the first object will be to teach and preach Christ and the Word of God; and the next great object to give practical industrial training, and the whole work to be managed on the basis of native simplicity and economy. Address: Rev. Albert Norton, 89, Civil Lines, Poona, India.

Bohemia—Past and Present.

By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

BOHEMIA, which to most English people is only a name, is an interesting country in the centre of Europe, where the Bohemian language is spoken, where Bohemian traditions and aims overtop, to its busy and prosperous inhabitants, those of all the other countries included in the great Austrian Empire to which it belongs. Here the name of Huss still recalls to millions the national struggle for civil and religious liberty, and fires the enthusiasm of a people in whom the love of freedom has proved to be unquenchable.

Its capital, Prague, long the active centre of an independent monarchy, is a noble city, containing, with its suburbs, 250,000 people. While I write of it, I hear the roar of the traffic in one of its crowded thoroughfares, which might, as far as the attractiveness of its aspect is concerned, be a superior street in Brussels or Berlin.

It is situated in a broad and very fertile valley, where the River Moldau winds among lofty, well-wooded hills, with its vast palace (a memorial of former royalty) crowning the highest part of the city, with many fine public buildings, sixty churches, an ancient university, and a modern Museum of Natural History and National Antiquities of noble proportions. Prague is far from being a decayed relic of the past; yet it is one of the oldest cities on the Continent, and its chief Jewish synagogue the oldest synagogue in Europe.

Narrow, lofty, and Gothic in style of architecture, this venerable building has been used for Jewish services for no less than thirteen centuries. Standing in the crowd of men who filled it on the MORNING OF THE JEWISH SABBATH,

a few days ago, I heard a discourse from the Chief Rabbi, who was dressed in a striped garment, eastern in its look, edged with silver fringes. His subject was the inalienable privilege of the Jewish people as the children of the Most High. God was their Father, he said, and would as surely protect and support them as an earthly parent would the son he owned and loved. There was no impressiveness or earnestness in the delivery, and no appearance of interest in the congregation. They had doubtless heard the same thing often before, and regarded the statement rather as an antiquated dogma than a doctrine of practical importance.

In a neighbouring synagogue the service was a musical one, led by a Rabbi with a strong, melodious voice, accompanied by the rich tones of an organ; the women in the gallery, as well as the men and boys below, taking part in the responses. Except at times when the congregation was moved by the volume of harmonious sound, there was manifest listlessness and indifference; and at certain parts of the service, conducted by the Rabbi alone, the men, who all wore their hats (according to Jewish custom), engaged freely in conversation on ordinary topics.

Near at hand, in the same Jewish quarter, is an old Jewish graveyard crowded with many thousands of monumental headstones, covered with Hebrew characters, standing or lying in every position, jammed together, four or five or more, on almost every grave. In its comparatively small space they told me there were 12,000 monuments. The with three synagogues, are left to this day without a Christian missionary to point them to the true Messiah. Bohemia, where the Reformation was crushed by prolonged and cruel persecution, is a Roman Catholic country, though once Protestant, and a land of Protestant martyrs. I saw the other day the old house where John Huss lived nearly 500 years ago; and his friend and fellow martyr, the Reformer, Jerome, belonged to this city of Prague, and took his name from it. England should feel a special interest in the Reformation movement started by these men, who both derived their doctrines from Wickliffe. Some years ago I visited the town of Constance, in Switzerland, and stood in the old hall and church in which their trial and condemnation took place; and here, in the National Museum in Prague, I saw a collection of the iron-bound flails and spiked clubs with which the peasants defended themselves against their Catholic oppressors in those Hussite wars in which the redoubtable Zisca never lost a battle. All through the thirty years' war which succeeded the Hussite struggle—and, indeed, for more than three centuries—Bohemia was the battle-ground of merciless, contending forces. The war waged by Rome against the population of this once Protestant country was one of extermination.

5,000 JEWS IN PRAGUE,

In 1617 Bohemia had 732 cities, 34,700 villages, and a population of more than 3,000,000. Twenty years later, in 1637, there remained 130 cities and 600 villages, and the population was reduced to under 800,000. The Jesuits, unsatisfied with the of the whole Protestant population, attempted to destroy every vestige of the Bohemian language and literature. One Jesuit boasted that he had burned 60,000 volumes with his own hand, and throughout this period the cost of burning Bibles appears as an annual charge in the Bohemian Budget! In spite of all this repressive action, to-day the people of this land are more Bohemian than ever in their language, literature, and sympathies, and even among the German part of the population there is a movement of separation from the Church of Rome, which has assumed large proportions.

SLAUGHTER OR BANISHMENT

About 10,000 are said to have come out lately from that church, chiefly on political grounds, taking as their animating watchword the cry, "Los von Rom." In Bohemia and Moravia there are now over 70 Reformed congregations, with more than 110,000 members. Quite a number of the pastors in those churches have received their education in Protestant and Presbyterian Scotland, where much sympathy has been manifest with the Bohemian cause. The Roman Catholic is still the State religion, and Protestant services can only be conducted under repressive and BURDENSOME RESTRICTIONS.

For the last twenty-five years the American Board has carried on an admirable and successful mission under the management of Dr. Albert W. Clark. He is at present the sole missionary of the A.B.C.F.M. in Prague. This mission, through the blessing of God, has raised up twelve churches in various parts of the country, with a membership of 854 persons, for the most part converted Romanists. It has seven native preachers, three evangelists, a number of Bible women and colporteurs, Sunday school, rescue and reform work, and 3,500 adherents.

The Y.M.C.A., established in 1886, has twenty-nine branches, twelve of which are under the direction of Dr. Clark. It was my privilege last week to address the delegates of the Y.M.C.A. assembled in Prague in one of Dr. Clark's mission-rooms, and I never met a more apparently earnest body of Christian men. I preached last Sunday morning and afternoon in two other of Dr. Clark's mission-rooms, which were crowded with serious and attentive congregations. Signs of deep, responsive feeling were evident in these services, in which my addresses were translated by the native pastor, Mr. Bily, who studied several years at Barmen, and subsequently learnt English while residing as a student at Harley House. The has given three valuable helpers to the Bohemian work in the United States, where there are many thousands of Bohemian emigrants. It has circulated 150,000 copies of the Scriptures, and tens of thousands of Gospel tracts. A large and beautiful collection of hymns, many of them translated from our most popular Gospel hymns, and set to native or English and American airs, has been prepared. The congregations I addressed last Sunday sang sweetly and heartily from this hymn-book.

AMERICAN MISSION AT PRAGUE

I do not think I have seen any mission work for a long time which impressed me more favourably than that which is so ably conducted by Dr. Clark. The patience and wisdom needed for its prosecution have been considerable, and the prospects of the future of the work are bright. But, after all, how small is the work done in Bohemia compared with the needs of its 5,000,000 of inhabitants! The population is as large as that of Ireland, and in a hopeful state, as visibly emerging from the superstition and bondage of centuries of Papal oppression. May this land of martyrs become once more the home and centre of Christian truth and life!

Prague, September 12.

Prisons in America.—III.

County Prisons.

By Mr. T. M. WINTLE.

THE condition of the county prisons has been a source of anxiety to many earnest, thoughtful men, who are interested in Prison Reform; and prison conferences have been held in various States, papers read and discussed, and publicity given to the abuses in local and county prisons. It has been shown again and again that no effort was made to separate juveniles from adults, and that novices went out with the knowledge of accomplished criminals, wanting only the practical experience, which they would soon obtain.

Able-bodied men are allowed to congregate in the corridors and prison yards, loafing about, whistling, singing, reading the newspapers and novels, smoking and chewing tobacco, with little or nothing to do from one meal time to another. Under these conditions the moral deterioration is serious, as it is well-known that, when prisoners are unemployed, they first grow restless and unhappy, and become addicted to habits by which the whole nervous system ultimately breaks down. Besides, it is impossible to keep such prisons sweet and clean or properly ventilated, the cells and corridors being continually occupied. But the publicity given to the existence of this blot on the prison system public opinion has expressed itself decidedly against the worst features of the system, so that they are fast disappearing; the old-fashioned log shanty is giving place to massive stone buildings; and the indiscriminate association of prisoners, detention without work, instruction, or discipline, are by degrees becoming things of the past. But the county prison system will never be effectually remedied until it is entirely separated from politics, and placed upon a foundation where no politician can touch it for his own use. Prison and other public appointments are strong factors in the local politics of the United States.

HAS BORNE FRUIT;

But there are striking exceptions, of which the County of Suffolk Prison, Boston, is a notable example. Mr. James Gerrish, the master, has occupied the same honourable position, with credit to himself and satisfaction to the city, for twenty-three years, with the result that he has established at Deer Island a model prison, second to none in the country. The whole island (197 acres in extent) is occupied by the prison. It is reached by a Government steamboat, and is about thirty minutes' run down the river from Boston. There were, on our visit, 1,062 prisoners confined there (859 men and 203 women), of whom ninety per cent. were either Irish or of Irish descent.

This prison is as nearly perfect as science can make it. Each cell has a good-sized ventilator, and the entire front of the cells is made of iron work. The hospital, workrooms, gas works, power house, and piggery are excellently arranged. A new fire-proof cell-building, 325ft by 60ft, has recently been erected for well-behaved first offenders. There are five double tiers of fifty cells each, making a total of 500 new cells, each 8ft by 8ft by 5ft.

The old system of bathing in tubs and baths has been supplanted by circular shower-baths. Long experience has convinced Mr. Gerrish that dark, solitary cells are far less to be desired than those moderately lighted. Here, as generally in the prisons visited by us, the diet is good, and plenty of it, the authorities believing that a man is less likely to be influenced for good if he is insufficiently fed.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Story of a Pigtail.

I WONDER if any of you have ever made a sacrifice for the Lord Jesus as great as that made by a Chinaman living at Hankow, a city on the great Yang-tse River? The story I am now going to tell you I read in a book called written by Mrs. Little; and though the book is meant for grown-up people, it has got so many beautiful pictures that it would interest even the youngest of you.

"INTIMATE CHINA."*

In many parts of China, as I expect you know, small feet are thought very beautiful; indeed, it is considered quite a disgrace for a woman to have feet of a natural size. A full-grown woman has often feet no longer than three inches, and very sad it is to see her tottering about on these little deformities. Chinese mothers bind the feet of their little girls to prevent their growing, and it makes one's heart ache to think what these poor children suffer in order that, when they grow up, they may have "lily feet." As the Chinese become Christians, they learn that it is against God's law to deform their bodies, the temples of the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. vi. 19); but it is often very hard for them to stand out against the national custom.

The Chinaman, about whom Mrs. Little tells us, was a Christian, and of course knew it was wrong to bind his little girl's feet; but, as his wife would do it, in spite of all his entreaties, he sent his daughter away from home to an American Mission School. There her feet were unbound, and when she came home she was able to walk, and had nice rosy cheeks, unlike most Chinese girls, who can only hobble with a stick, and whose faces are pale, because they are in such pain. The good father was so pleased to see his child so well and healthy; but after a time he noticed that she was walking worse and worse every day, and he therefore knew that his wife must have begun to BIND THE CHILD'S FEET ONCE MORE.

At first he had not the courage to remonstrate; he had done it so often, and with no result, that now, for the sake of peace, he held his tongue. But the neighbours noticed, too, and were quick to see that he was not behaving as a Christian should. "A nice one you are to talk," they said; "you, who are seeing your own daughter lamed before your eyes!" The taunt stung him. He knew that he was an "apostle of Christ" (2 Cor. iii. 3) to his fellow-countrymen, and that if he was to win others to his Master, there must be nothing inconsistent between his professions and his life. So he went to his wife and told her she must unbind their child's feet, for not only was the girl becoming lame, but God's work was being hindered.

His wife replied, as often before, that she would unbind, not only her daughter's feet, but her own too, if he would cut off his pigtail; a thing which she, of course, believed he would never do, for a Chinaman's pigtail is his glory. "Do you mean what you say?" he asked her; and when she had assured him seven times in succession, and each time more vehemently than the last, that she meant what she said, he quietly took up a pair of scissors and cut off his queue. There it lay, the long glossy coil, like a black serpent on the ground, and soon the whole neighbourhood was astir with excitement.

HAD THE MAN GONE MAD?

Even the missionary to whom the pigtail was brought could at first hardly believe that the act had been done in soberness.

But no, our Chinaman was both sane and sober. "It is true it is contrary to the law of the land," he said; "but it is better I should offend against that than offend against my God." You will be glad to know that his wife unbound both her own feet and her daughter's, and thus he had the happiness of knowing that his sacrifice was not in vain. No true sacrifice ever is; but we do not always see the results of right-doing at once, any more than we see directly the results of wrong-doing. Sooner or later an action always bears its fruit. The Chinaman laid his pigtail at the feet of Christ, and may there not be something which the Master requires of us?

The holidays are now over, and a new school year is beginning; and perhaps the Lord Jesus is saying to many of you, "Put your whole heart into your lessons; don't be afraid of being called a milksop, bookworm, blue-stocking, or saint. Don't shirk your work, for you don't know how I may want the knowledge I am letting you have the chance of learning now." Moses "was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22), and Paul in the learning of the Jewish rabbis (Acts xxii. 3), and both of them were used by God as mighty instruments for the advancement of his kingdom.

I am sure you must all wish to be used by God; but, if so, you must obey his commands. Perhaps He has not yet asked of you any great sacrifice, as He did of the Chinaman; but at any rate He does want you to pay attention in school hours to your lessons, for perhaps it may be those tiresome French verbs or puzzling sums that some day He will use in his service.

MARGARET A. ROLLESTON.

* 21s. Hutchinson & Co.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 194).

Find the following, and complete each clause:—

1. Upon a rock (Psa. xxxviii.-xli.).
2. In green pastures (Psa. xx.-xxiv.).
3. The little hills (Psa. lxii.-lxv.).
4. The great mountains (Psa. xxxiv.-xxxvii.).
5. Showers that water the earth (Psa. lxx.-lxxiii.).
6. Still waters (Psa. xx.-xxiv.).
7. A strong tower (Psa. lviii.-lxii.).
8. Barley harvest and wheat (Ruth).

9. How are God's judgments described? (Ps. xxxiv.-xxxvii.).
10. Give three uses of a tabernacle (Isa. ii.-v.).
11. Give three verses that remind us of harvest time (Psa. lxii.-lxv.).
12. When was the promise of harvest made? (Gen. vi.-ix.).
13. Who offered the first harvest thanksgiving? (Gen. i.-v.).
14. When will the last harvest be, and who will be the reapers? (Matt. x.-xv.).

(Children under ten do any three; under thirteen, any seven; under seventeen, any eleven.)

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 193).

1. 1 John iv. 9, 10.
2. John xiv. 15.
3. 1 Cor. xiii.
4. Matt. v. 44.
5. Peter (John xxi. 15, 16, 17).
6. Jesus (John xiv. 6).
7. Psa. xv. 1, 5.
8. Cain (Gen. iv.).
9. Prov. xx. 1.
10. Rechabites (Jer. xxxv. 6-19).
11. Noah. No (Gen. ix. 20).
12. They shall see God (Matt. v. 8).
13. Phil. iv. 8.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Dora, Ernest, W. and Ralph Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, Jenny Almond.
B—Edith Banks, Rachel Blumenthal, Esther Bobroff, F. R. and Muriel Bailey, Hannah Bridgman, Dorothy Sylvia, Evelyn and Maud Barrett, Gordon and May Bligh, Mary* and Susette* Beck.
C—Rodia Constantinides, Bessie Cheale*, George Cary, Mabel Cole, Ada Chenyen, Sophie Cohen, Kathleen Carey-Brenton*, Lydia Cleary*, Carl* and Kitty* Cope, Mary and Willie Charles, Daisy M. Clarke, Kate Cope, Eleanor Chance, Minnie Chubb, Ida Cole*, Daisy, R., and Jack Clarke, Elizabeth Clarence, Edith Chevalier, Mary Coward.
D—Irene Duke*, Vera Dickinson, Willie Davies, Ruth Dawson, Stanley Drew*, Dorothy and Ralph Daintree, Nellie Dowsett*, Pologhia Daws.
F—Kitty Fausset, Sarah Finkelstein, Vincent and Mabel Fleet, A. Fewster*.
G—Rose and Esther Goodman, Constance and Kenneth Gabbett, Alice Goad, David Gardiner*, Daisy*, Mary* and Alfred Greenacre.
H—Theodora Hill, Dorothy Harris, Mary and Elizabeth Hooper, Beatrice Hastings*, Nellie Hatchett, Hetty Hill*, Willie Hooper, Ella Hake, Jennie Holmes*, Eric and Mary* Hill, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer.
I—Alice Ingberg, Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving*.
J—Kate Johns*, Alicia Johnstone, Betty Jacobs.
K—Maurice Kalinsky, Eva, Max and Stanley Kall, Lily and Brada Kinvig, Nellie Keeley.
L—Annie Levine, Annie Lipschitz, Georgina and Cecilia* Lichtenstein, Sidney, Henry and Edward Law, Arthur Lamb, Rosie Langton, Arthur Llewellyn, Gertie Lambert, Blanche Lindup.
M—Mildred and Dorothy Morgan, Winifred Marshall, Mabel Morris, Arthur and Grace Morice, Miriam Marston, Mabelle Mounstephen*, Marie Meek, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Emily Maddox*.
N—Leah Niels, Edith and Emily Nash, Eleanor and Valerie Noel.
O—Olive Oxley.
P—Laura Pratt, Margherita Perlmann, Kathleen Pincott, Daisy Phillips, Gladys and Ethel Palmer, Myrtle and Melbourne Perry, Edith Purkiss, Evelyn, Hattie, and Mildred* Peters, Mary Plumb*, Walter, Kate, and Leonard Picknell, Lilian Pearson, Ruth Pledger, Alice Palmer.
R—Aileen and Marjorie Roberts, Kate and Mary Rosenbloom, Alice Reid.
S—Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Dora and Lizzie Simons, Margery Smart, Lucy and Kenneth Soltau, Kathleen and Douglas Shepherd, Fanny Stileman, Frank and Esther* Simmons, Solomon Stockfish, Ronald Studd, Wheldale and Lily Stanley, Joseph Stevens, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Amy* Stileman, Mary Sowden, Mary and Alan Symon, Constance Scott*, Laura Standen*, Annie Shelley.
T—Annie Torff, Frank Tomkins.
U—Queenie Upton.
V—Edwin and May Vickers.
W—George and Annie Willis, Rosamund Woodgate, Louise and Joanna Wolnitzer, Charles and Amy* Wingrave, Douglas Wilkinson, Winifred Wise*, Florence Wild, Connie*, Annie* and Sarah* Wood, Madge and Frank* Wilson, Agatha and Ella Ward, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Edith, Edward and J. W. Wheeler.
Y—Gladys and Maurice Young.
Z—Sophia Zaxitsky.

No. 192.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—William Aston*, Enderley Anderson, Florence Abbott.
B—Dorothy Butcher, Dorothy Benson, Edward, Dorothy and C. Godfrey Bates, Maggie*, Charlie and Alan Banks, Allen Baker, Catherine Barber, Lilian Butler, Susette and Mary Beck, Mabel Bailey, Eva Browne*, James Barker, Lily* and Gordon Boxer, R. G. Browne, Ernestine Buhl*, Lucienne Brabandes, Mabel Birney.
C—Dorothy Clarke, Minnie, William and Katie Chubb, Susie Cumbers, Walter, Maggie* and Jessie* Carter, Dorothy Cooper, Cicely Craven, Duncan Campbell*, Ethel Craigie, Alice Crang*, Daisy Clarke, Katie Clark, Eleanor Chance*, George Crawford, Mabel and Isabel* Candlin, Beryl and Gladys Calvert.
D—Violet Dodsworth, Marjory and Dorothy* Dyke, Harold Davis, Agnes and Catherine Darke, William Dilly*, Marie Denizot, Esther Dickson, K. Winnie de Russet*.
E—Miriam and Edward Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*.
F—Hyacinth FitzSimons, Blanche Freeman, Olivia Ferguson*, Helen Forbes, Bessie*, Kate*, Maggie, Mabel* and Eva Fletcher, Lewis, Maggie*, Agnes and Flossy Fullarton, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Bessie and Mary Freeman, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon.
G—Evelyn and Grace Gulston, Gracie Grout, Jack and Dorothy Gray, Christopher Golding, Kenneth and Constance Gabbett, Margery, Colin and George Graham-Browne, Thomas Groombridge, Mary Glass, Dorothy and Winnie Grove, D. Gardiner, Mary*, George and Effie Graham, Frank Gibbs, Edith Grieve.
H—Dorothy Harris, Kathleen Hughes, Ella Hake, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Ethel Hutchings, Edith Holms*, Bessie Hope*, Freda Hunton, Theodora Hill*, Ruth Hinder, Georgette Hoffman*, Rosetta and Lottie Hamilton, James Henderson, Helen Hunter.
I—Nellie Irving*, Daisy Iredell, Isabel and Ami Inglis.
J—Alicia and Lizzie Johnstone, Sinclair Jackson.
K—Brada Kinvig, Isa Kay, Grace and Philippa Kerr.
L—P. Langley, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh, Arthur Lamb.
M—W. C. Mallinson, Dorothy and Daniel Morris, Charlotte Millar, Christina Marshall, Dorothy and Winnie Mace, Dora Muir, Mabel Mountstephen*, Ada Macnutt*, Lewis MacGregor, Gwendoline*, Evelyn and Howard* Moir, Bella Mack, Hilda Medill, Dora Marples, Sydney, Dorothy and Mildred Morgan, Winifred Marshall, Adelaide Moore, Olive* and Lois* Mewburn, Hedley Meader*, Harold Marrable, Daisy*, Annie and Nellie Mackenzie, Margaret Macphee, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Kathleen McClure*, T. and Barbara* Maconchy, Evie Millar.
N—Amy and Maude Nottage, John, Cissy and Peter Nicholson, Lilian and E. Nash.
O—Eva and Maud Oakes.
P—Louie, W. M. and M. Penny, Phyllis Pigers, Gladys and Isabel Phipps, Ruth Patient*, Winnie Page, Laura Percy*, May, Daisy and Vera Petrides, Geoffrey, Clarice and Percy Peach, Alice Powdrill, Edith Purkiss, John Pearce, Eddie, Jessie, Willy and Ada* Palmer, Walter Perryman.
R—Marion Brock Richards*, Gussie and Marion Roach, Aileen, Winifred and Marjorie Roberts, Marjorie Rainey, Nora Read, Elsie Ridewood*, Jessie and Elmina Roe, Lorimer and Rita Romanes, C. Alice Reid, Gwennie Ravenhill.
S—Lucy Soltau*, Ronald Studd, Nannie Sturrock*, Frank* and Emma Sutton*, John Smith, Helen*, M. and Dorothy* Stalker, Dolly Salt*, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Kathleen Slark, Rosetta, Ivy and Muriel Sherwin, Evelyn*, Gwendoline* and Eric Shaw, Violet and C. R. Salvesen, D. D. Stanier, Marie Stuart, Gertrude Scott*, Lily and Wheldale Stanley, Betty Stocks, Binford Sellwood, Herbert Stuart.
T—Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Arthur and Olive Taylor*, Marjorie Tracey*.
U—Queenie Upton.
W—Sydney Wisdom, John Wilkinson*, Rosamond Woodgate, George Willis, Georgina, Rachel* and Sarah Wilson, Kenrick, Queenie and Ernest Wakeford, Robert Weddell, Charles Wingrave, Violet and Arthur Walker, Helen and Fred Webb, Douglas Wilkinson, Bertie Walls.
Y—Gladys* and C. Maurice Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 175–176.—E. Selby Little (China). No. 178.—E. Selby Little, T. Alan Hogg (China). No. 181.—Christine Pearson (Tasmania). No. 183.—Graham Pearson (Tasmania). No. 186.—Alice Henderson (Jamaica), Daisy McArthur, Cuckoo and Minnie Lister, Alice Stone (S. Africa). No. 187.—Alice Stone, Alice Henderson. No. 188.—Lottie, Rotha and Ivan Ss. George (Canada). No. 189.—Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 190.—Ina, Nettie and Kate* Thomson (Bulgaria). No. 191.—Olive van Millengen (Constantinople).

Uncle Tom's Cots—G.E.P., 4s.; Children's Meeting, Shiloh Hall, 8s. 6d.; Articles Sold—S., £1; Razors Sold, £1 15s. Total, £3 7s. 6d.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Blackheath, Sept. 30. Winchester, Oct. 8; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Dersingham, Norfolk, Sept. 24-26; Rev. S. M. Warner, Tewkesbury, to Sept. 23; Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Y.M.C.A., Dartford, to Sept. 24; Mr. W. Tye, with caravan at Framlingham; Mr. E. P. Rowe, with caravan, Wickham Bishop, near Witham; Mr. H. Lewis Ingram, with tent, Aspley Guise, Bedfordshire; Mr. Frank McLaine and Mr. W. Drake, with caravan, Lingfield; Mr. Macfarlane, Ash Prior, Bishops Lydiard, near Taunton, with Camp, to Sept. 29; Mr. C. Harrison, with caravan, Horley, to Sept. 30. Annual Meetings for Reports of Seaside Work will be held in London, at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on October 5, at 3 and 6.30; Y.M.C.A., Manchester, Oct. 16; Hope Hall, Liverpool, Oct 17; Church Institute, Bradford, Oct. 18; Shaftesbury Hall Y.M.C.A., Leeds, Oct. 19; Southport, Oct. 20; Central Hall, Bolton, Oct. 24.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending September 30.

Sun., Sept.	24	2 Chron.	ix. 1-12	Th., Sept.	28	2 Chron.	xiii. 1-18
Mon., ,,	25	,,	ix. 20-31	Fri., ,,	29	,,	xiv. 1-15
Tues., ,,	26	,,	x. 1-16	Sat., ,,	30	,,	xv. 1-15
Wed., ,,	27	,,	xii. 1-14

Mission to "Hoppers" in Kent.

THE workers in this Mission have, during the past few weeks, been going in and out amongst the pickers in the gardens by day, and in the villages by night.

The friends of the Bible Flower Mission will be glad to learn that their labours have not been in vain in the Lord.

As one of the missionaries was visiting a garden in Goudhurst, and going from bin to bin, one of the home-dwellers said to him, "You are the man who gave my daughter a ticket with a scent bag on it, are you not?"

"What do you mean?"

"You know—a lavender bag, with a text on."

"Well, what about it?"

"Oh, sir, it proved a great blessing to my daughter. She learnt that text, took it to bed with her, and she has got it yet."

"What was the text?"

"Behold, now is the accepted time. Behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. vi. 2).

The girl requested her mother to buy her a Bible, and, when she subsequently met the missionary, she gave an intelligent, straightforward account of her acceptance with God.

Other cases of conversion have given cause for similar gratification. For all this blessing on the work, the workers desire to praise God.

J. CROZIER, London City Mission.

(1215)

Home Missions.

Literature for Lighthouses.

THE Hon. J. Howard Angas, of South Australia, has paid for 1,000 copies of Mr. G. H. Pike's shilling brochure "Living Lighthouses: the Story of Two Brothers" (published by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster), for distribution among the lightkeepers of Great Britain, Canada, and Australasia. The two brothers referred to are two late members of the Angas family, viz., William Henry Angas, and George Fife Angas, the latter being father of the Hon. J. H. Angas, and "the founder of South Australia," who died at the age of ninety in 1879. These two brothers were greatly interested in the spiritual welfare of British and foreign sailors, and William H. Angas renounced the most brilliant worldly prospects to labour as the unpaid pioneer missionary of what is now the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

As was the case with his father before him, the Hon. J. H. Angas is president of that Mission. The distribution of Christian literature among the lightkeepers has been carried on for some time past, on behalf of the Society, by Miss L. E. Holden Pike (Winchmore Hill, N.), and it is hoped to extend the area of distribution in proportion as funds are subscribed for the payment of working expenses. From time to time numbers of letters have been received from the lightkeepers, and perhaps the best encouragement to go on with the work comes in the hearty appreciation of what is done for them on the part of the men. Postage alone is a considerable item.

As regards "the two brothers," their life-story is one in which persons associated with the sea are likely to be interested. The missionary died of cholera in 1832, apparently in the prime of life and at the height of his usefulness; the other brother also had a very adventurous life; and after being brought to what looked like the verge of ruin, he came to be regarded as a Christian father in the great Colony he founded.

Dublin Medical Mission.

NOTHING reaches the hearts of those in sorrow or difficulty like sympathy and kindness. Our Lord "went about . . . preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people." Thus the above Mission has found an open door amongst the poorest and most degraded in the city.

With deep thankfulness we can tell of what the Lord hath wrought in our midst. During the past year we have had many more cases of poor, "fallen" girls attending the mission. Some have been helped to new surroundings, so that they may live different lives, and we trust have yielded themselves to the Saviour. A young widow, who had been led astray, turned in her sorrow to the Saviour, and is now rejoicing in a knowledge of sins forgiven. Many other interesting cases come under our notice.

A Roman Catholic woman, who lay ill in her miserable home, exclaimed, as our nurse told her eternal life was "God's free gift," "I never heard that before." Another said she had "no one to tell her trials to." She was pointed to the Lord, and soon after said: "I tell them all to Jesus now, and it makes it so much easier."

A young Scotchwoman, who had just lost her husband, told us how she thanked God for the Mission, for she had learnt there to trust the Lord, and He had been her strength and stay in her time of sorrow. He had sent her friends and money, and supplied all her need!

We ask for prayer that this coming winter may be one of increased blessing, both to workers and patients.

(1216)

Many of our subscribers have gone "home" to receive their reward; and their places not yet having been filled, our income is not sufficient for present needs. We would gladly extend the work to another part of the city if the necessary means for doing so were forthcoming.

(Mrs.) E. Edith Figgis, Hon. Sec.
Hawthorn, Sidney Parade, Dublin.

Evangelization Society's Tent Work.

MR. JOHN WOOD, the hon. secretary of the London Evangelization Society, writes: "You will, I am sure, be interested to hear something of our tent work, which, for the present season, is now rapidly drawing to a close. Owing to the very long spell of dry weather, we have probably never had a better year than this; and we have been encouraged to hire two exceptionally large tents in the North of England; these have added somewhat to our expenses, and our balance at the present time is very low.

In May last, we estimated the cost of the tent work at £3,000, including purchase, repair, hire and fittings, with salaries, travelling and other attendant expenses. This estimate has proved rather under than over the mark.

Large numbers of our correspondents speak of great blessing accompanying the work, and in some large centres of population we hear of very many souls being brought into the kingdom of God's dear Son,—how many we dare not attempt to say. Sixty evangelists have had the privilege of taking the missions in fifty-three tents, thirty-nine of which are our own property, fitted with seats and all accessories. Eleven tents have been used in Scotland, nine being under the direction of Mr. Mitchell.

It is too early at the present moment to state the number of tent missions that will have been taken during the season; but it will be between 200 and 300, the number of meetings reaching several thousands.

The young people and children have not been forgotten. In England and Scotland a children's service at six has very often preceded the service for adults at 7.30 or 8, and many a young heart has been touched by the Word of God. Some of our evangelists are very gifted in speaking to children.

Our conviction is daily strengthened that wherever the Gospel is faithfully, prayerfully, and lovingly preached to the unconverted, the same Holy Spirit, who has blessed the message in the past, continues to do so in the present. Experience proves this.

We rejoice to record that God has recently strengthened our ranks by the addition of some young men who are already qualified for the work, and full of promise for the future; so that whilst we have several veterans who are nearing the end of their evangelistic career, there are others who, by God's grace, will be likely to take their places.

We have a special request for a large circular tent, to hold two thousand, for the North of England next year. This would cost, with seats and all accessories, at least £300. Densely populated districts in the North are open to our evangelists, both for summer and winter work, and our operations are only limited by a small income.

Further information would gladly be given on application to 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

The Women's Protestant Union.—The organizing secretary, Mr. G. W. Lonsdale Barraclough, writes to invite our readers' attention to the annual "All Day of Prayer," which will (D.V.) take place on Thursday, the 28th inst. Meetings will be held at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 7 p.m., in the drawing-room, Exeter Hall, and addresses will be given by Madame Rozas, Miss Soltau, and Mrs. Arbuthnot. All Christian men and women, who can possibly do so, are requested to unite in waiting upon God. To any who may, by reason of distance or any other cause, be unable to meet with these, but who would like, either privately or in local gatherings, to follow the programme as to subjects, &c., Mr. Barraclough will be glad to forward a copy on receipt of stamped addressed envelope. Address: 82, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E.

The Margate Cripples' Home.

AT a well-attended meeting recently held at the Parochial Hall, Margate, in furtherance of the claims of the Ragged School Union Holiday Home at Margate, Alderman Treloar presided. Letters expressing regret for non-attendance were received from the Vicar of Margate and others. The report of the Home by the hon. secretary, Miss Jones, gave an encouraging account of the year's work, reference being made to the large number of cripple children who were hidden away in poor rooms in London, in many instances not far away from such a centre as the Bank of England. The Home had received 266 children during the year, who had returned to London much improved by the change and rest of a Christian Home. But the work had been carried on under unfavourable circumstances. The house occupied was not suitable, as regarded the accommodation it afforded, there being no garden or playground. A new home was in view. A cot cost £15 a year.

Rev. J. Piper, of Holloway, referred to there being 6,000 poor cripple children in London, and asked what would be their hard lot in such days of competition unless something was done for them. Under Paganism, they might have been despatched as useless; but it was different under Christianity. Mr. Holness spoke of the dark and the bright side of a cripple child's life, as he had himself observed it. There was not much value in work unless it was prompted by high motives.

Addresses followed by Dr. Scatliff and Mr. J. F. Shorey; and the former, as hon. surgeon of the Cripples' Holiday Home, showed the need which existed for another house. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, said that a sum of £1,500 would be required for the new Home, and a friend had lately called at their London office to give £500 towards the enterprise. It was not an experiment in which they were engaged, but a tried service, and they wanted to make the Cripples' Home a permanent institution of Margate. The people of the town would give their help, and he appealed to them to do so.

Y.M.C.A. Work at Reading.

THE members of the Church of England Y.M.C.A. at Reading were recently invited to a social gathering at Cintra Lodge, the residence of the esteemed founder and president, Mr. Martin Hope Sutton. A large and representative company responded to the invitation.

After tea, Mr. Sutton addressed his guests, expressing his thankfulness at being able once more, in spite of his advanced years, to meet so many friends. They had much for which to thank God and to take courage, and to determine by his grace to maintain those principles on which their Association was founded, and on which, he trusted, it would ever be continued. They could do that without being in any way exclusive, wishing God-speed to all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ and endeavoured to serve Him, whether they were members of the Church or Nonconformists.

As he, Mr. Sutton went on to say, was nearly eighty-five years old, he could not expect to have the privilege of addressing them many more times. Should that evening be the last on which he might say good-bye to them, he did not think there would be anything in that fact to make him or them sad; but he would urge them, if they needed urging, to attend to the "one thing needful," because it was as true of the youngest present as it was of him, that they knew not what a day might bring forth. A friend of his, when dying fifty-two years ago, said "What a pity it is that the people of God do not work more for Him while they have the opportunity!" He wrote those words down at the time, and had kept them before his eyes ever since; and he would leave the message as a parting word to all present. The first, the primary thing, was to make sure that they themselves were on the Rock, which was Jesus Christ; the next, to seek what they could do to serve God during their day and generation.

Kennington Cross Mission.—This organization maintains a much needed mission work in a poor district of London. A number of useful institutions are carried on at the hall, the workers being members of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. There is a deficit on the year's working, and the treasurer, Mr. P. J. Ling, 23, Upper Kennington Lane, asks for financial aid.

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD historic pleasure fair, one of the largest of its kind now held in the country, took place on Monday and Tuesday last week, and the attendance was as large as ever. Rev. C. J. Casher and Mr. Wheelhouse were in charge of the Bible stall. It may be mentioned that Mr. Wheelhouse presided at this stall in 1869, in which year he disposed of Bibles, &c., to the amount of £50. A similar work has been carried on ever since. We thank God for the unbroken testimony.

Rev. W. J. Hutton has been succeeded at Wesley Memorial Church by Rev. W. Bradfield, of Leicester; and on Sunday and Monday there were special gatherings to welcome him. Mr. Bradfield preached twice on the Sunday, and spoke at the meeting on Monday. Work in the villages will have his special attention, and he urged the labourers to "expect great things from God, and to attempt great things for God." We wish him a successful ministry in the best sense of that word.

The summer convention of the Oxford and District Christian Endeavour Union was held this year at Wallingford. The greatest interest was manifested. Rev. J. Robertson, M.A., took the chair. At the afternoon session a paper was read by Mr. Alden on "Our Reading," and some helpful suggestions were made. Exception, however, might be taken to the advice that "the old commentaries should be read sparingly." Perhaps the very best course of reading for some of us would be a few months devoted to the old Puritans. At the evening meeting, addresses were given on "The aims and objects of the Christian Endeavour Union," and on "The Christian Endeavour in China." Dr. Stevens was able to report a membership of 10,000 in China, and prophesied, as a result of their influence, a great and unprecedented coming of the Chinese people to Christ in the near future.

The Corn of Wheat:

John xii. 24.

"I am the Bread of Life,"
The Corn of Wheat that "fell
Of purpose" into furrowed ground,
To multiply and swell.

"I am the Bread of Life,"
Heaven's bread-corn crushed and bruised,
That henceforth rich supplies might be
O'er all the world diffused.

"I am the Bread of Life,"
The one essential good;
For giving and sustaining strength,
The necessary food.

"I am the Bread of Life."
Men toil, their bread to earn,
With eager minds; so must I be
The soul's supreme concern.

"I am the Bread of Life;"
And they who eat of Me
Have tasted food to make them wise
Throughout eternity.

"I am the Bread of Life;"
And they who on Me feed
Shall live by Me in every sense—
In thought, and word, and deed.

Winifred A. Iverson.

The Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise. — Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, writes to say that "scarce a day passes but what we receive numerous appeals from open-air workers, or Christian working men assailed by ungodly companions, for free grants of our anti-Infidel tracts to distribute, more than three hundred of which have been made during the past few months; but we are now absolutely without funds, and, therefore, quite unable to continue these distributions, as our stock of tracts is exhausted, and we are without the means to reprint. And this, too, at a season when the need of the work is greater than ever, inasmuch as a fund of £5,000 is being raised at the present time for the purpose of disseminating all over the country atheistic literature, and £3,000 of this amount has been subscribed by sceptics in the course of the past few weeks. Communications to W. R. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross Road, London, W.C.

Evangelistic.

The Gospel by the Sea.—1.

HOW much is England, or rather Great Britain, indebted for the free proclamation of the Gospel in the open air? On village green, with scarce a hundred hearers, as well as Royal parks where thousands can be gathered, in lowly courts midst London slums—surroundings none too pleasant—or on her sea-girt shores, may be heard the music of that Gospel which has so long preserved her as the pioneer of civilization and the evangelist to the world.

"As Moses raised the serpent up,
The wounded Jews to spare;
So Christ, the sinners' only hope,
Is preached in open air."

I am moved to these reflections by things which have happened this summer, wherein I could tell of some folks who, having never attended any indoor services, have been blessed of God through the Divine institution of out-of-door services; and of others who, having been taught that to enter any other church outside the Roman meant sure damnation, have implicitly obeyed, but who have been surprised into the Gospel whilst listening to it in the open air, and savingly converted by the simple story which proved to them "the power of God unto salvation."

Quite recently three most distinct cases like this have been seen; in one instance of a lady who was brought up in a convent, who knew nothing of the Bible, but who was drawn, night after night, to listen to the truth as it is in Jesus, and who, almost without the help of any human agency, came out boldly for Christ; and, despite the hostility of relations, and the threatenings of the priest, is still standing firm amidst much persecution. For these converts we ask the sympathy and prayers of the readers of The Christian.

But to my subject of "The Gospel by the Sea." Over and above the many glorious services on the sands arranged for by the Children's Special Service Mission, at many of our sea-side resorts, may be seen a real live Gospel service, where local friends, often assisted by visitors, conduct a meeting throughout the season.

On a beautiful Sunday evening this summer, in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A. at Penzance, a meeting was begun on the Esplanade by a few brethren. Thousands were promenading up and down, and amidst the stillness of the evening, and as the rosy tints of the setting sun were reflected on the picturesque Mount St. Michael in the distance, the crowd grew, till a vast audience stood,

"In that cathedral as boundless, as its wonder;
Whose quenchless lamps the moon and stars supply;
Its choir the winds and waves, its organ thunder,
And its dome the sky."

Darkness had set in before the meeting closed; but there was work to do for soul-winners, for many were under deep conviction of sin. I look back with pleasure to that meeting; and believe there are few more favoured spots for the uplifting of our blessed Lord, than the Esplanade at Penzance.

Sauntering along the front at Brighton one Sunday afternoon, I saw a band of workers on the beach who, with harmonium and platform, were soon at work gathering the people. There was the right ring about them, and though their grammar was at fault their doctrine was sound; and one felt glad to "stand by" and "lend a hand" if needed. Presently a speaker of another calibre was introduced, who announced his subject as "The four greatest preachers in the world," and who speedily divided his address as follows:—

"The heavens declare the glory of God."
"The earth declares the goodness of God."
"The Church declares the grace of God."
"And Christ declares God Himself."

I opened my eyes! You were bound to listen! The man was a born orator, to say nothing of his scholarship. A few opening words on astronomy simply put, materially added to the crowd, until top-hats and frock-coats in large numbers could be seen on the promenade above, their wearers evidently interested in the sermon on the shore. On went the speaker to his second head, proving by the revolving of the earth on its axis, and its circling in its orbit, the goodness of God in sending us the seasons in their due course.

Then came the declaration of the Church, and saint after saint was produced to add their testimony to the grace of God, till, closing with a magnificent address on the dying, risen, and ascended Saviour from the words: "He that hath seen ME hath seen the Father," the speaker quietly picked up his hat, and, mingling with the crowd of fellow-visitors, was soon lost to the astonished audience, who wondered where he came from, and where he had gone to.

"Well, I never!" said one of the humble workers (sotto voce). "That's what I calls opening their mouths with a jam tart first, and puttin' the Gospel down arterwards."

Brighton also has a favourite spot for open-air preaching—viz., the Electric Railway Stand, near the Aquarium, the proprietor of which allows the use of the place to two different bodies of Christians on the Lord's Day. At three o'clock in the afternoon, and again in the evening, may be seen an attentive audience gathered round a band of singers and preachers. Here it has often been my privilege to take part in the meetings; and, though the audience is never a very large one, by reason of its position, yet the Gospel is always intelligently put by our brethren, and the claims of the coming Lord clearly enforced; and not a few have been gathered in from this service by the sea.

Whilst at Cromer a week or so ago, I heard of good meetings being held at Sheringham-on-Sea by Major Cox; but was sorry to find that the children's services were not allowed on the beach at Cromer, but that the vicar had arranged for them to be held in a private garden, to which the children were invited.

Of the good work I have seen at Ramsgate and Yarmouth I cannot now speak, but am reminded that some years ago two members of one family, who were visiting Yarmouth, were converted in the open air. The following year found the same family at Ramsgate, and drawn to the open-air meeting I was conducting on the sands, I had the joy of pointing another to the Saviour who had saved his two sisters at Yarmouth.

Chas. Cook.

Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

I WRITE to ask the prayers of the readers of The Christian for Divine blessing on the Evangelistic Campaign, which begins in Glasgow on October 1, and goes on for a period of six months.

The occasion of it is the semi-jubilee of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, which was founded in 1874, while Mr. Moody was in our city, and whose directors thought that Glasgow needed, and was ripe for, a combined aggressive movement on a larger scale than had ever been attempted before.

All the denominations and Christian organizations of the city were appealed to, and have responded so heartily, that a combined effort, such as has never, I believe, been attained in this country, is the result.

The city and suburbs, with its population bordering on one million, has been divided into nine districts, with the ministers and Christian workers in each district as its committee.

Somewhere about one hundred missions of a fortnight's duration for adults, and nearly an equal number for children, have been arranged for, and evangelists, ministers, and laymen of all denominations are being secured to conduct these missions.

Will those who unite in prayer for Glasgow at this time remember particularly the visitors who are undertaking this part of the work, which is specially meant to reach those who at present have no connection with any of our churches? The first fortnight of the Mission is to be devoted to Christians, believing, as the directors do, in the Divine order of blessing given in the promise: "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." Alex. Mackeith.

The Gospel at Totnes Races.

STILL the wave of blessing is flowing. With the baptism we received at Doncaster still resting upon us, we whizzed away by the midnight express to Newton Abbot, our Devonshire headquarters, arriving there early on Tuesday morning last. The races last two days, the attendance being from 20,000 to 25,000 people, and in the main very select. Our party consisted of eight, including Mr. G. Bishop, the president of the Y.M.C.A., and Mr. Jose, the secretary. The distribution of Gospels and other literature was the order of the day, and, as usual, afforded many opportunities of personal dealing.

One of our workers gave a Gospel to an elderly man, and as he took it he burst into tears. "What's that?" said a gentleman to whom I gave a Gospel of St. John. "Read it," I replied. "What must I do to be saved?" read one thoughtfully; and straightening himself up, added: "Sir, I would give anything to know that I was saved." Whereupon I preached Jesus to him, and left him with the promise that he would seek the Lord.

On Wednesday night, after returning from the races, a meeting was held at the Clock Tower, a very gracious influence resting upon us. Wednesday being the fair day, we visited all the shows and stalls in the morning before going to the racecourse. I gave a Gospel to a racing man who was sitting opposite me in the carriage on the homeward journey. On taking it, he replied, "I had one of these given to me last week at Doncaster, and, if I am not mistaken, you are the gentleman who gave it to me. I was wondering where I had seen you." We reminded him of his responsibility, and that evidently the Lord was speaking to him in a singular manner.

Since our return from Doncaster, I have received two letters testifying to the blessing received by two gentlemen, and of the conversion of a third, who was there from West Hartlepool, for whom, says the writer, "we, at West Hartlepool, have been praying for eighteen months." O. L. Heatley,

Secretary Racecourse Mission.

St. James's Hall, Royal Road,
Kennington Park.

The London Tents.

Peckham Rye.

MESSRS. WEAVER BROTHERS were engaged in preaching during last week in the tent on Peckham Rye. There were overflowing congregations, and many professed conversion. After the present week, the tent will remove to Nine Elms.

Clapham Road.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been labouring in connection with the tent at Clapham Road, the largest of all, seating 3,000 people. On Sunday week the tent was crowded, many people listening from outside. During the following days the evangelist preached nightly. Large congregations assembled, and the inquiry rooms were filled with men and women seeking the Saviour. It was the joy of the workers to see many confess Christ. The present is the last week of the work. Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. Inglis are preaching, and the closing meetings will be held on Sunday next.

Lavender Hill.

During last week, Mr. Henry Varley preached daily here; and on Sunday he conducted three services with much encouragement. In the morning he addressed a meeting "for men only," at which there was a large attendance—it was computed 1,700. In the course of his labours, Mr. Varley was rejoiced to hear of many entering upon Zion's way. The proceedings as a whole impressed him much; and he has expressed the conviction that Christian workers in London are now seeing the early stages of what may prove a great revival, or work of God, that will take hold of the Metropolis in a manner not paralleled by any recent experience. This word, by one who speaks from wide experience, may well prompt earnest prayer for God's continued blessing upon evangelistic effort.

Mr. and Mrs. Bustin will shortly be open to conduct evangelistic missions. Mr. Bustin has spent some years' labour in mission work in Bermondsey (which he does not propose to relinquish entirely), while his wife, better known as Madame Annie Ryall, has rendered good service by singing the Gospel. Their address is 13, Priter Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

Charles W. and Annie M. Goddard have held a week's mission at the Friends' Mission Hall, Trafalgar Street, Brighton. The mission was felt to be a good time, and during the week some professed conversion, while several testimonies were heard acknowledging blessing received. From Brighton, the evangelists travelled west for work at Clevedon, Weston-super-Mare, and Bristol.

Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelization Society (Scottish branch), has just concluded a three weeks' mission at Grangemouth, with great acceptance. The tent was well filled every night, and on Sunday evenings was packed. Mr. Galletly's addresses were telling, and the Mission was remarkable for blessing. Christians have been revived and quickened, while many have professed to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour. L.

A tent mission has recently been held at Aldeburgh, Suffolk, conducted by Mr. A. E. Knight, of the Evangelization Society. The Gospel was preached with great earnestness, and the message of salvation blessed by God in rousing some who were "dead in sin" to "walk in newness of life." The mission closed with a tea in the tent, about 120 being present. Believers have been built up, and Christian workers stimulated.

Mr. John Elliott is conducting a tent mission at Southall, Middlesex. The tent, a circular one, and capable of seating five hundred persons, is pitched in the market square. At first it was taken to be a circus, and children came asking for tickets for "the show." Attendances have increased nightly, and the attention paid to the Gospel message has been most cheering. We ask the prayers of God's people for continued blessing. E.

A mission has just been held in the Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester, by Mr. Henry Thorne. A number of persons professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and there has been a manifest quickening in the Church. Rev. J. M. Dryerre, the pastor, was one of the delegates to the Congregational International Council now pending in America; but, desiring to be present during the mission, he returned the free passage ticket placed by a friend at his disposal.

A helpful tent mission, which was brought to a close on Sunday last at Hillmorton, Rugby, has been conducted by Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. Christians of the various places of worship have co-operated in a spirit of love and unity. The evangelist's faithful preaching, under the Holy Spirit's power, has been the means of leading a number to yield to Christ, while Christians have been stimulated. The meetings have been well attended, and on Sundays the tent has been crowded. J. Ivey.

The New Forest Gipsy Mission is still doing good service among the tent gipsies, who resort to the New Forest in large numbers during the winter months. We have been much encouraged in this work of late by seeing spiritual results, and we endeavour to give the Gospel a practical turn by assisting the sick, aged, and very poor. All kinds of left-off clothing, as well as material to make into under garments for the boys and girls, we shall be thankful to receive. Parcels should be addressed: Mr. G. R. Shaw, missionary, Totton Station, S.W.R.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Gipsy Smith.—Till Sept. 25, Mansfield; 30-Oct.9, Bromsgrove; 14-23, Burton-on-Trent; 28-Nov. 6, Marylebone.

Rev. Hugh C. Wallace.—Sept. 23-29, Crescent Church, Liverpool; Nov. 14-20, Belfast.

Mr. John Coates, with Gospel Tent, Cranham, till end of September.

Mr. Ben Alberto.—Sept. 24, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Sept., Park Hall, Barking; during Oct., Belfast.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till Oct. 2, Pollokshields, Glasgow 22-Nov. 6, North Shields.

Rev. D. M. Cameron.—Till Oct. 14, Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road; Oct. 15-Nov. 5, Glasgow.

Mr. Jno. T. Mateer.—Oct. 1-8, Beeston, Notts; 15-29, Sutton-on-Craven, Yorks; Nov. 5-16, Dartford.

Mr. James Sprunt.—Sept. 24, at 7, 21 and 28, at 8, Shirley Hall, Enfield; Oct. 1-13, Baptist Church, Milton Street, Chester; Nov., Sundays and Thursdays, Bignold Hall, Forest Gate.

Mr. James Wharton.—Sept. 24 and 28, Bruce Grove Hall, Tottenham; Oct. 1-8, Mr. Fegan's Home Hall, Holland Street, S.E.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till Sept. 24, Bristol; 30-Oct. 9, Bilston; 14-23, West Bromwich; 25-Nov. 6, Coventry; 11-20, Dudley.

Rev. F. C. Spurr.—Sept. 23-Oct. 2, Liverpool; 7-17, Morley; 21-30, Todmorden; Nov. 4-13, Leamington.

Rev. Thomas Cook.—Sept. 24, Harrogate; Oct. 1, Fleetwood; 8, Halifax; 15, Hoyland; 22, Sheffield; 29, Birmingham.

Mr. J. S. Harrison.—During Sept., Folkestone Road, Walthamstow, Sundays and Thursdays; Oct., St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Sunday, Sept. 24, the Polytechnic Regent Street; week nights, Sept. 19-23, Clapham Road Tent; Oct. 1-16, Dorking.

Weaver Brothers.—Till Sept. 29, Carlisle; Oct. 1-13 Hartlepool; 15-27, Scarborough; 29-Nov. 10, Woolwich.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Sept. 23-28, Woolwich Baptist Tabernacle; 30-Oct. 9, Congregational Church, Pickering, Yorks.; 14-19, Holly Park Wesleyan Church, London, N.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Sept. 24, 27, and Oct. 1, Brunswick Chapel, Bristol; Sept. 26, Chippenham; Oct. 7 to 16, Warrington; 21 to 30, Greenheys, Manchester.

Borough Baptist Mission.—Till Sept. 28, Mr. E. P. Telford; Oct. 8 and 9, Mr. J. S. Harrison; Nov. 12-24, Weaver Brothers.

Rev. John Mitchell.—Oct., Keynsham; Nov., Everton-on-Avon.

Mr. John Elliott.—Till Sept. 24, Tent meetings at Southall.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough.—Sept. 23, 24, Teddington; Oct. 1-13, Barnsley; 15-20, Barrow-in-Furness; 22-27, Otley; Nov. 5-17, Sunderland.

Mr. James Eyres.—Oct. 7-16, Willenhall (Free Church Council mission).

Irish Gospel Tent.—Seven Sisters' Road, South Tottenham (near St. Ann's Road Station), Evangelistic services, week-nights, 7.30 p.m.; Sundays, at 3 and 7.30 p.m. Children's meetings, Mon., Wed., and Sat., at 6 p.m., Mr. R. Spragg, and others.

London Tent Evangelization Committee's Arrangements.—The Tent, Lavender Hill, close to Clapham Junction Station; Sept. 21 and 22, Mr. Chas. Inglis and Mr. Leonard Weaver; 23 and 24, Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. and Mrs. Baker, blind singers (close of mission). Meetings on week-nights at 7.30; Sundays 11 a.m. 3.0 and 7.30 p.m. The Victory Tent, Troy Town, Peckham Rye; Sept. 21-23, Mr. Van de Venter, Mr. and Mrs. Grove, and Miss Goddard; 24, Mr. Henry Varley. Meetings as at Lavender Hill. The Great American Tent, High Street, Clapham Road, close to Clapham Road Station; Sept. 21, Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. Gracie; 22, Mr. Russell Hurditch; 23, Mr. G. H. Lord; 24, Mr. Van de Venter; 25, Mr. H. Varley; 26-27, two day's evangelistic rally (11, 3, 7); 28, Mr. H. Varley; 29, Mr. Leonard Weaver; 30, Mr. Van de Venter, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker. Meetings on week-nights at 7.30 p.m., Sundays 3.30 and 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Arthur Klein is now open for calls to work. Address, "The Hawthorns," Bramley Hill, Croydon.

Impending Famine in India.

WE learn by telegram that Lord George Hamilton has been sounding a warning note to England about the drought now prevailing in India. It is officially reported that the season this year is much the same as that of 1876, the year before the great famine in South India.

Last year the plague desolated the country, and the prospects before us clearly indicate that we may expect a famine in the land very shortly, attended, most probably, with an outbreak of cholera. The distress amongst a population living from hand to mouth, as they do in India, will then be most appalling, so I trust you will allow me to appeal to friends at home to send us any help they possibly can.

I shall be very glad to receive subscriptions sent direct to me or through my agents, Messrs. Grindlay and Co., 55, Parliament Street, London; or Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., of Madras; and any money sent to me shall be applied for the relief of the poor and needy by the clergy of all denominations, without reference to creed, caste, or colour.

J. F. Fischer, General R.E.

Bangalore.

[We have received other communications emphasizing the fact of famine already existent, and appealing for help. We hope to give more particulars next week.—Ed.]

Work in Spain.—The work of the Figueras Mission at Llansá, in the province of Gerona, is meeting with much blessed success. The Rector is quite desperate at the progress of the Gospel, and says he means to leave the heretical place, for the people will not attend Mass. The mission premises have become too small; and, apart from that fact, a change of landlords will oblige them to quit in October. There being no place to let in the town, there is no alternative but to build a hall and schools, which will cost, including site, £1,200. Pastor Lopez Rodriguez is now in England, hoping to raise the necessary funds. Unhappily, he has been suffering with throat trouble since reaching this country, and in consequence has been incapacitated for the work he hoped to do. He expects to return to Spain in October. Subscriptions should be sent either to the hon. treasurer of the Mission, Major-General Battersby, Listoke, Guildford; or to Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, Figueras (Prov. Gerona), Spain.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, September 18th, 1899.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

	£	s.	d.
Famine S. Russia—F.D., £1; G.C.F., £5; R.O.M., 2s. 6d.	6	2	6
Soldiers' Home, Cairo—J., Florence	1	0	0
Soldiers' Home, Alexandria—J., Florence	1	0	0
Soc. Relief Persecuted Jews—J., Florence	1	0	0
Persecuted Stundists—J., Florence	1	0	0
Italian Evangelical Church—A.S.B.	1	0	0
Wynberg Christian Training School, &c., Mussooree—A.S.B.	1	0	0
China Inland Mission—S.N., £5; Num. vi., 24—26, £1 0s. 7d.; M.Y., 10s.; E.E.K., 2s. 6d.; M.E., 10s.	7	3	1
Church Missionary Society—G.C.F., £2; (Famine E. Africa)—S., 2s. 6d.	2	2	6
British and Foreign Bible Society—G.C.F., £2; T.I.C., 10s.	2	10	0
Figueras Mission, Spain—G.C.F.	1	0	0
Armenian Relief Fund—G.C.F., £1; S.C., Knitting, 4s.	1	4	0
Miss de Broen's Work, Paris—A.P., 5s.; M.E., 5s.; Inasmuch, 10s.	1	0	0
West Indian Hurricane Relief—Miss E.W., £5; Pollie and Tom, 5s.; S., 2s. 6d.; M.E., 10s.	5	17	6
Rev. J. Smith's Work, Ahmednager—M.G., £2; E.B., 1s.; (Scholarship)—Mrs. C.J.H., £5; Alpha, £5; H.A.T., £5; S.S., £5	22	1	0
Friends of Armenia—S.	0	5	0
Salvation Army, Neuilly—R.	1	0	0
Tibetan Pioneer Mission (Miss Taylor)—Matt. xxviii., 18, 19, 20	1	1	0
Tibetan Mission Band (Mr Polhill Turner)—Matt. xxviii., 18, 19, 20	1	1	0
Pundita Ramabai's Work—R.O.M., £1; (New Rescue Building)—Miss R., £1; A Friend, 3s.; Miss F., 5s.; Mrs. D., 5s.; Mrs. R., 5s.; A Friend, 10s.; Mrs. L., 10s.; Mrs. L., Southport, 15s.; Miss S., £5; Mr. T. P. B., £100; Mrs. S., £5; Mrs. A., 10s.; Berachah Meeting, Preston, £1 19s. 6d.; Miss T., 10s.	117	12	6
Work Among Priests in France—M.E., 5s.; (Home) F.C., 10s.	0	15	0
Late Pastor Chiniguy's Work—M.E., 10s.; (Family) —Conscience, £1	1	10	0
Port Elizabeth Seamen's Institute and Mission—Alpha	0	2	6
Evangelical Church, Monaco—Alpha	0	2	6
Work in Westphalia—Alpha	0	2	6
Mr. Fellowes' Work, Buenos Ayres (Tracts)—Alpha	0	5	0
Regions Beyond Mission Union—Anon	5	0	0
Evangelical Continental Society—T.I.C.	0	5	0
S. American Mission (Mr. Grubb)—M. A.R.	0	2	6
Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque—M.E.	0	5	0
Signor Capellini's Work, Rome—M.E.	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Wall's Work, Rome—M.E.	0	10	0
Hospital for Insane in Bible Lands—M.E.	0	10	0
Barcelona Protestant College Hospital—M.E.	0	10	0
Spezia Mission—M.E.	0	10	0
Mission to Lepers of India, &c.—M.E.	0	5	0
Work at Evian les Bains—M.E.	0	5	0
Pastor Lecoat's Work, Brittany—M.E.	1	0	0
Deacon Abraham's Orphanage—M.E.	0	10	0
South Spanish Mission—M.E.	0	5	0
Mr. Witte's Work, Brazil—M.E.	0	5	0
Blind Chinese (Mr. Murray)—M.E.	0	10	0
Sailors' Rest, Port Said—M.E.	0	5	0
Miss Procter's Schools, Lebanon—M.E.	0	5	0
N. Africa Mission (Miss Smith)—Rev. i. 4, 5, 6, £13; (Rent)—Rev. i. 4, 5, 6, £7; (M. Rolland)—Rev. i. 4, 5, 6, £5	25	0	0
Flower Girls' Mission (Home)—R., 10s.; (Blind and Crippled Children's Holiday)—Thankoffering M.J.S., 10s.; J., Florence, £1; H.G.M., 10s.; R., 10s.	3	0	0
St. Giles' Christian Mission—G.C.F., £2; S.S., 5s.; Women's Holiday — M. L. C., 5s.; Children's Holiday—In Memoriam, A.M.M.L., 5s.; G.H., 10s.	3	5	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—G.C.F., £2; T.I.C., 10s.; (Emigration), A.S.B., £8; H.A.T., £5	15	10	0
Dr. J. A. Spurgeon's Memorial Home of Rest for Ministers, &c.—M.S.	2	2	0
Uncle Tom's Cots—(See page 21)	1	12	6
Jewish Work, London City Mission (Holiday Fund)—Friends	0	3	0
George Yard Mission (Day in Country)—Union S.S., Crieff	0	5	0
London City Mission—G.C.F., £2; S.S., 5s.; Selbourne, £1	3	5	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—G.C.F.	1	0	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—G.C.F.	1	0	0
N. Soc. Prevention Cruelty to Children—G.C.F.	1	0	0
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—Pollie and Tom	0	5	0
Mrs. Wilkes' Rescue Work—Pollie and Tom	0	5	0
Friendless and Fallen—Pollie and Tom, 5s.; N., 5s.; Alpha, 2s. 6d.	0	12	6
Country Towns Mission—R.	0	10	0
Open Air Mission, Ireland—R.	0	10	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—R., 10s.; M.Y., 10s.; Rev. i., 4, 5, 6, £10	11	0	0
Stockwell Orphanage—R.	0	10	0
Dr. Stephenson's Homes—R.	0	10	0
Mrs. Meredith's Mission (Prison)—R.	0	10	0
R.N. Mission Deep-Sea Fishermen—N., 5s.; (Labrador)—M.E., 10s.	0	15	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—Prov. iii. 9	10	0	0
Children's Fresh-air Mission—W.S.A.	2	0	0
Day in Country Fund—N.D.R.	0	10	0
Rev. T. Connellan's Work, Ireland—M.K.	0	5	0
Kensit Crusade—M.K., 5s.; M.A.R., 2s. 6d.	0	7	6
N.E. London Gospel Mission (Lancing)—Alpha	0	2	6
Tramcar Scripture Text Mission—Alpha	0	2	6
Tracts for Hop-pickers, Hampshire—Alpha	0	5	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—E.B.	1	0	0
London Tent Campaign—R.O.M.	0	3	6
Rev. David Baron's Work (Jews)—M.Y.	0	10	0
Tower Hamlets Mission—M.Y.	0	10	0
Met. Tab. Colportage Association—Love	1	1	0
Connemara Orphanage—M.E.	0	5	0
Protestant Alliance—M.E.	0	10	0
Mr. Toye's Home for the Fatherless—M.E.	0	5	0
Barbican Mission to Jews—M.E.	0	5	0
Total	£281	2	1

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Trinitarian Bible Society—Bournemouth, £1.

Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews—Matt xxv. 40, £1.

African (Congo) Training Institute—Sympathy, Liverpool, 7s. 6d.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—H.Y., 5s.; F., 5s.; L., 5s.; W.L., 10s. 6d.; A.H.L., £1; S.H., 2s. 6d.

Kensit Crusade and Wickliffe Preachers' Fund.—The committee thankfully acknowledge—Dowager Countess Castle Stuart, £10; Right Hon. Lord Grimthorpe, £10; Mrs. Ward, 5s.; Anon., Gravesend, 10s.; John C. Rodgers, £5; R. Rains, £3; Miss J. Davies, £3; Mrs. Pritchard, 10s.; L. and E.P., £1; J. B. Sorrell, jun., £5. All amounts acknowledged by John Kensit, secretary, 18, Paternoster Row.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

President - - - - THOMAS SPURGEON.
Vice-President - - - - CHARLES SPURGEON.
Treasurer - - - - T. H. OLNEY.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN

And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON

No votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS

A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, F. G. LADDS, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS. Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

MRS. MEREDITH'S PRISON MISSION.

Summer and the falling off in private subscriptions compel us to again ask the kind help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN.

258 women were steadily employed last year.

260 Gospel Meetings were held.

Many are obtaining situations, and are living lives of sobriety and industry.

The help of annual subscriptions is urgently needed, or any contribution, however small.

Cheques and P.O.'s may be made payable to Mrs. Meredith's Institutions, and crossed "London and South-Western Bank," Stockwell Branch.

Office—143, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W.

PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.

THE OLDEST SOCIETY

Which has for its object the union of all Protestants in maintaining the Scriptural principles of the Reformation against Ritualism and Romanism.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN. Apply for a copy of the Illustrated Monthly Paper (sent post free to all applicants who are readers of this paper) to the SECRETARY, 430, Strand, London.

"I WAS AN HUNGRED; NAKED; IN PRISON."

Eight Days' Missions conducted regularly in the Prisons of England and Wales by a special staff of Church Army Prison Missioners. Many stories can be told by these missioners of lives changed, and a new world opened out to prisoners and ex-prisoners. Men, women, and lads received direct from Prison into the Society's Homes. Special Homes for First Offenders. Help is given in cases of necessity to the families and dependents of those in prison. 72 HOMES, &c., in London and in the Provinces, from Newcastle to Plymouth, for helping those who have "fallen by the way" to help themselves, without distinction of creed.

Chaplain, Pentonville Prison, writes:—"Your labour homes are simply invaluable."

Chaplain, Durham Prison, writes:—"Your work is sound and invaluable."

Chaplain, Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, writes:—"I believe the Church Army to be doing an immense amount of good, and to be the right thing in the right place."

FUNDS and OLD CLOTHES of every description urgently pleaded for.

Central Staff almost wholly unpaid.

BANKERS: BARCLAYS.

REV. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Sec.
Church Army Headquarters, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

AT THE SMALL COST OF

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY

A Blind or Crippled Child

CAN BE SENT BY THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION TO THE

Pretty Holiday Home at Clacton-on-Sea for a Fortnight's Change

It is difficult to fully realise what a boon this Sea-side Holiday is to these poor neglected and suffering little ones.

Who will share in the privilege and joy of this effort for the Great Master?

Monetary help is urgently needed.

JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, SEKFORDE STREET, CLERKENWELL, E.C.

Treasurer:
F. A, BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P.,
54, LOMBARD STREET.

THE SICK POOR

Both ADULTS and CHILDREN are aided by the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Will you help even ONE of the

HUNDREDS OF WEAKLY LITTLE CHILDREN

who urgently need, and are waiting for, the benefits of a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME,

Or of the numerous SICK and DESTITUTE MEN and WOMEN who equally need a

FORTNIGHT'S STAY AT OUR CONVALESCENT HOME?

FUNDS ABSOLUTELY INADEQUATE.

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., a/c St. Giles' Christian Mission

Letters to the Editor.

Village Churches.

DEAR SIR,—Apropos your statement in The Christian of August 24, re the poverty of village churches dependent on a "Lay Ministry," are not the better class of laymen greatly at fault for this state of affairs, so generally lamented at the present day?

As a lay preacher of some experience and approval, how oft have I had to feel the neglect of our village stations by those who profess the same communion! It seems a law amongst this class that a layman is not worth the trouble of going to hear, and so the congregation is denied the moral and material assistance it so greatly needs, to keep up anything like the character of an active and aggressive church.

Besides, what encouragement has a "Layman" to study and laboriously prepare for Sunday engagements, when there are so few to preach to, and that number principally made up of the least intelligent? All "lay preachers" are not brilliant, and perhaps some few obtrude their presence in a position to which they have no special call, but this applies, I think, equally to the ordained ministry.

To see, as I continually do, some of the richer "laymen" coming into the town churches, some even driving in cabs, &c., and leaving the churches in their own neighbourhoods, is galling and disappointing in the extreme. No small wonder that there is such a lack of interest, and, of course following, a great lack of spiritual fruitfulness.

Whilst one deplores so much the widespread teaching of error from the clerical standpoint, still I feel the indifference of laymen to the glory of Jesus Christ and the welfare of souls in their own particular districts, to be one of the prime causes of the poverty of so many of our village stations.—Yours in the bonds of the Gospel,

GEORGE SWANSBOROUGH.

10, Dudley Road, Tunbridge Wells.

A Surgical Shock.

SIR,—When Professor Ruskin said that the wealth of a country depended upon the number of good men and women in it, he voiced a sentiment which appealed to all who rank goodness before fame or mammon. A goodness that excludes mercy towards the "lower creatures" must assuredly be a pretence. Science places itself, and rightly, on the side of goodness; but the science which, under the mantle of "scientific research," practises on the pain of helpless animals exposes itself to doubt. That doubt is emphasized when exponents of this science declare that their sole object is the prosecution of knowledge, for the sake of knowledge. One receives, then, a shock of honest doubt when reading the introduction to "An Essay on Experimental Research and Surgical Shock;" an essay awarded a sought-for prize in America in 1897, and written by a professor of well-known standing in that country. According to the introduction, "148 animals have been subjected to experiments." The "complete records of each experiment" are given, and a "sufficient number of tracings to serve as illustrations."

Indebtedness to an eminent English professor is acknowledged for many valuable suggestions, and for permission to perform the first sixteen experiments in his laboratory in London.

It is difficult to read this essay without reflecting upon the grave moral harm which it is likely to exercise upon aspirants for surgical honours. One cannot suppose that junior students are devoid of desire to succeed. Emulation is a factor in human composition. Curiosity is another. Students, eager for knowledge and keen for possible preferment, reading this essay and recognising the fame acquired through it and through the researches which made it possible, will naturally seize opportunities for engaging in similar researches. The moral element is thus early poisoned, more especially when certain organs and functions are concerned, and animals are experimented upon in pursuit of knowledge and renown; a knowledge sometimes declared to be of no service to mankind—a renown built up upon maltreatment and death. Curiosity, too, is gratified at moral cost.

How is it possible for the student of science to maintain in himself a high moral tone, when science degrades itself so far, when the very basis of morality, the sense of oneness with all created things, receives such shocks from professional hands?—I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

E. HAMMOND.

Social Purity Alliance, 18, Tothill St., S.W.

The Unique Inspiration of Holy Scripture.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will have seen in various newspapers notices of the "Friends' Summer School," just held at Birmingham. It has been a time of very great social pleasure to the hundreds of attenders, owing largely to the admirable organization and princely hospitality of the Friends who are resident at Birmingham, and doubtless much spiritual good has resulted also to many.

But, at the same time, it is only due to some sections of the Society of Friends that the religious world should not assume that the Society as a whole, is prepared to accept some of the strange statements about the Holy Scriptures made by leading speakers at the Birmingham gathering. For there was manifested a disposition to reject, or explain away, certain Biblical statements which happened to contradict the views of some of the lecturers. Thus, one of them stated that our Saviour's command to "baptize all nations into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," contained in Matt. xxviii. 19, was probably not genuine! Another influential speaker held that St. Paul's positive statement (1 Corinthians xi. 23-24) that he had received of the Lord the command, "This do in remembrance of Me," was a mistake, and that it was probably only a fancy,

DERIVED FROM A DREAM!

Now, really, one may deny every fundamental Christian principle to be of Biblical sanction, if this most dangerous and unwarrantable way of treating Holy Scripture is to be tolerated. Yet many of the Friends seem to approve it!

Then, further, even the estimable, learned, and witty Professor Rendel Harris is reported (in The Friend journal) to have stated that "there were two opposite sets of people, one of which held that there were only the four Gospels of the Bible; and the other that the four were only a survival of an almost infinite number which had been written. The reasonable critic would, he thought, be found "between these two extremes." This remark was made in connection with the reading of an "Apocryphal Gospel," believed to be of about the seventh century after Christ.

Now, whilst there were, unquestionably, other histories than "The Four Evangelists" (as stated in St. Luke i.), yet it is most important to bear in mind, and to state clearly, that the books written by known Apostles, Evangelists, and Prophets, stand in a unique position, apart from all other religious literature, inasmuch as they were written, in general, "by eye-witnesses and ministers of the Word. And, further, they were written by men specially qualified and authenticated by the Holy Spirit; as it is solemnly stated in Hebrews ii. 4—"God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost."

The Friends' Summer Schools, both of Scarborough and Birmingham, were arranged by a very intelligent body of Friends, who, for the most part, represent what may be termed the "advanced party" in the Society; and although most estimable persons, yet their views are not shared by many other of their fellow members.

For, both at Scarborough and Birmingham, the Old Testament was more dealt with than the New, and to a great extent in sympathy with that "Higher Criticism" of which it is not a characteristic that it teaches that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," or that the Old Testament is mainly to be regarded as typical and declarative of Christ.

In brief, the Incarnation and the Cross have been too painfully absent from, or at least not specially prominent in, these "Summer Schools." They are ostensibly organized to improve and revive the Quaker ministry. But unless they give prominence to the Incarnation, the Cross, and the Great Sacrifice, they must necessarily fail in the very first essentials of a Christian ministry.—Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM TALLACK.

Brecon Soldiers' Home.

IN connection with the above home a great deal of unpretentious, but most useful, mission work is carried on. A number of meetings have been held for railwaymen, their wives and families. House-to-house visitation, aided by systematic distribution of the Scriptures, tracts, and Gospel booklets, has been followed by most cheering results. Soldiers and their families have also been visited, and many of the recruits are heartily glad of the Soldiers' Home, with its pleasant room, and quiet read or chat. A children's meeting is held weekly, and, in addition to other helpful arrangements, meetings for prayer and studying the Scriptures are held regularly. The mission, which is now in its third year, is undenominational and deeply spiritual. The motto of the Home is "Jesus only"; and his glory, and the highest welfare of those dear to Him, are the objects aimed at. Funds are needed to carry on this work—so necessary in a depôt centre where young lads are undergoing the transformation from quiet country surroundings to the stir and excitement of military life. Books and tracts, also, would be thankfully acknowledged by the honorary superintendent, Miss T. Wilkinson. I am glad to say that Miss Wilkinson, and her sister, have rendered great service to the town by assisting to commence and maintain open-air meetings. At these largely attended gatherings various gentlemen have given us Gospel addresses, with a simplicity and power that blessed the eager hearers.

D. DEVOIR THOMAS.

Central Noon Prayer Meeting.

SOME helpful words on the place of Prayer in Revival were spoken by Mr. HENRY VARLEY at the gathering at Aldersgate Street, E.C., on Monday last. Mr. Varley, commenting on Luke xi. 1-13, alluded to some of the temptations of evangelistic workers, and pointed out the dangers of placing confidence in huge attendances, and resting satisfied with popular praise, instead of relying implicitly on the blessing of God, and prayerfully looking for conversions.

A number of interesting testimonies were subsequently given. Mr. THOMAS PAYNE spoke of open-air and indoor evangelistic meetings in Virginia, amongst both white and coloured people. In spite of the passion of many for the almighty dollar, and for other forms of worldly satisfaction, there had been a spiritual awakening. Mr. CHARLES COOK referred to the conversions of a Roman Catholic lady and of an actress of a popular London theatre, through hearing the Gospel preached in Hyde Park. The actress had manifested her sincerity by cancelling her engagement. Pastor D. M. CAMERON, as a South London worker, bore testimony to the character and extent of the tent work at Lavender Hill and Clapham; and Mr. LEONARD WEAVER announced that, owing to the sympathetic efforts of a local clergyman, land had been secured for a tent at Nine Elms, where the Vauxhall Water Company had not only voted the use of the ground, but were having it levelled and prepared for the reception of the tent.

The Y.M.C.A.

NEW associations are beginning work this autumn at Redhill, Poole, Boscombe, Barnstaple, Tonyrefail, Rhondda Valley; Tredegar, Mon.; Abersychan, Mon.; and Egremont, Liverpool.

The ceremony of fixing a memorial tablet, in connection with the new premises of the Woolwich Y.M.C.A., was performed by Mr. T. A. Denny, in the presence of a large number of members and friends, on Saturday afternoon, 16th inst.

An united conference of the North-Eastern and North-Western District Unions has been held at Carlisle. A large number of delegates attended from the various association centres, and the proceedings were encouraging. The Bishop of Carlisle welcomed the visitors to the city, and response was made by Sir George Williams (who was his lordship's guest) and Mr. H. Crawford Smith, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire, opened a practical and helpful discussion upon the subject: "The Greatest Need of our Associations." In the afternoon Mr. W. Hind Smith, of Exeter Hall, introduced the question of "The Y.M.C.A. Programme for the Twentieth Century." In the evening a public meeting was held.

About Books.

A second edition is issued of Rev. Geo. Everard's clear and helpful volume of short sketches for young people, entitled Edie's Letter. (1s. 6d. C. J. Thynne.)

Nightly Notes and Morning Memories, by George R. Wood (1s. 6d. Marshall Bros.), is a little book of great value. Christian people will find instruction and stimulus in the pages.

Mountain Tops with Jesus is the title of a series of "Calls to a Higher Life," by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D. (1s. Nisbet.) The well-known Brooklyn preacher is always worth reading. In these pages he is singularly gracious and helpful.

A series of thoughtful and stimulating expositions by Rev. J. H. Jowett of Birmingham, have been collected from the pages of the Sunday at Home, and published in book form with the title, Meditations for Quiet Moments. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

A very instructive little work is The Jews and their Evangelization, by Rev. W. T. Gidney, assistant secretary of the London Jews Society. (1s. nett. Student Volunteer Missionary Union, 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.) The book is one of a series published for the use of College Missionary bands, and it is calculated to interest and enlighten Christians generally.

A work of varied attractions, The Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland: Its Origin, Development, and Present Position, has been written by H. W. Oldham, secretary for London of the British College Christian Union and Medical Prayer Union. (1s. B.C.C.U., 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.) As a chapter of modern religious history, this story possesses a unique interest. The list, given at the end, of officers and executive members of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, along with other tabular matter, will make the book immediately serviceable to young people desirous of associating themselves with the great Student Christian Movement.

Dr. H. Clay Trumbull has written a singularly useful book, Border Lines in the Field of Doubtful Practices. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). Good counsel is timely for old as well as young, but these pages are specially designed for the young. They deal with customs and practices that have been much debated; and, in the language of studied moderation, they inculcate sound and true views on the drink question, tobacco-smoking, theatre-going, and the dance. Other subjects having relation to life and godliness are also discussed in a manner that indicates this as an admirable book to place in the hands of a young man about to face the world and its many allurements and snares.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke's book, The Gospel for an Age of Doubt, continues to discharge a helpful ministry. We welcome a sixth edition, revised, with a new preface. A companion and complementary volume is The Gospel for a World of Sin. In the words of the author: "The message of the first book was this: Christ saves us from doubt, because He is the revelation of God. The message of the second book is this: Christ is the revelation of God, because He saves us from sin." Both these works are full of thought, which will be useful to theological students, and of service to a wide circle of discerning readers. Dr. Van Dyke would lead home the wanderer, and guide the perplexed; and though not always approving his positions, or following his divergence from time-honoured emphasis in doctrinal statement, we are glad to recognise the substantial worth of his singularly readable books. (5s. each. Hodder & Stoughton.)

A book specially suited for distribution to village folk at the present time is THE VILLAGE CARPENTER AND THE WAY OF SALVATION, by A. P. Gwilym. (Paper 6d.; cloth 1s. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, E.C.)

Many will read with interest THE LORD'S SUPPER: A Historical Study from the Standpoint of the Society of Friends, by John William Graham, M.A., principal of Dalton Hall, the Owens College, Manchester. (3d. James Clarke & Co.)

An address to the women of Great Britain, AGAINST VIVISECTION, by the Countess of Seafield, has been published by Edwin Cook, Fulham Road, S.W. (1d.) It is an earnest appeal to the gentler sex to act against this iniquity.

"THE WONDER OF JESUS," is the title of an interesting little tract (Stevenson & Co., Edinburgh. 1d.), treating on the intense interest of the Master in those among whom He laboured, as evidenced by such phrases as "He marvelled," &c.

MR. W. H. T. GAIRDNER has prepared a little volume of great utility—HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS (chapters i.-viii.). It is one of a series being issued for the use of Bible circles. (6d. net. Bible College Christian Union, 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.)

Rev. T. P. Stevens has issued, in the form of booklets, six in number, a series of Bible readings, given in Bovingdon Church, Herts., on "FOUNDATION DOCTRINES OF SPIRITUAL LIFE." Beginning with "Ruin and Redemption," and ending with "Rest and Reward," they deal with the various stages of Christian experience. (Brackett, High Street, Hemel Hempstead.

"Scott's Emulsion proved beneficial in strengthening our baby. It has also helped her in cutting her teeth."

MARGERY ALICE YEATES.
(From a photograph.)

There are many properties in Scott's Emulsion which are beneficial to children when cutting their teeth. The hypophosphites of lime and soda, for instance, are an aid to digestion, food for the nerves, and of great assistance in forming the growing skeleton structure of the body. The cod-liver oil also has a favourable effect upon digestion and helps to supply vitality. The glycerine prevents fermentation and assists in the steps toward the final absorption of the oil. Consequently, when these facts are considered from a medical point of view, it is easy to account for the splendid effects of Scott's Emulsion upon teething babies.

We emphasize especially this point in the following letter:—

"42, Atlantic Road, Brixton, S.W.,
"November 28th, 1898.

"Dear Sirs,—I have much pleasure in stating that Scott's Emulsion has proved very beneficial in strengthening our baby. Being very weak in the back, at the age of nine months she could not sit alone on the floor, but after one or two bottles of Scott's Emulsion, she was able to support herself. It has also helped her in cutting her teeth. It has also worked wonders with her chest. It is very amusing to hear her say 'More, more,' showing that the Emulsion is palatable, as well as nourishing.—Yours very truly, (Signed) G. YEATES."

Bless the babies; they all love Scott's Emulsion, and they seem to know intuitively that it does them good. After taking a few doses of Scott's Emulsion they stop their worry and fretting, and go to sleep and grow. They get fat and strong, and are all curves and dimples. Believe the truth of the statements of those who have tried it, and then try it yourself.

You can obtain a sample of Scott's Emulsion by sending threepence to cover postage to Scott and Bowne, Limited, Manufacturing Chemists, 95, Great Saffron Hill, London, E.C., and mentioning this paper. All chemists sell Scott's Emulsion.

Temperance Notes.

CALIFORNIA is the one state in the American Union which allows liquor shops to be open all day and all night, Sundays included.

. . . . . .

Brewers in the North of London are said to be buying up grocers' shops with off-licences, in the hope that the licensing justices may eventually grant a full licence.

. . . . . .

The Prime Minister of the Province of Manitoba says that as the Canadian Parliament is hindered by Quebec from enacting general prohibition, he will support a law allowing each province to enact total prohibition—which his province desires.

. . . . . .

An offer by a firm of brewers at Darlington to give seventy-five square yards of land in order to widen the street, if a full licence were granted for an extension of the premises, was refused on the ground that there was no necessity for a house of the kind in the locality.

. . . . . .

For some years past no new licence has been granted at Liverpool, whereas many have been extinguished. At the Licensing Session, which closed last week, the same policy was pursued. The Bench refused to renew thirteen full licences, and in four of the cases there was no application to renew. Two 1869 beer-house licences were refused, and in one case there was no application. In the case of six off-licences there was no application. Thus the total number of licences in the city is reduced by twenty-six.

. . . . . .

A return has just been issued as a Parliamentary paper of the number of victuallers', beerhouse, and other licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors, the renewal of which was refused in 1898 by the justices of the peace in England and Wales. The number of licences refused in the counties, as distinct from the boroughs, was seventy-five. Against these refusals there were eighteen notices of appeal to quarter sessions, and in eleven cases the appeals were allowed. In boroughs there were eighty-eight licences refused, and out of forty-five appeals twenty-four were successful.

. . . . . .

The autumn meetings of the Women's Total Abstinence Union are to be held at Southampton, Sept. 24-27. The series includes public meetings in Southampton, Bournemouth, Shanklin, Sandown, &c., in addition to a Conference, and drawing-room meetings at Lord Radstock's, the Deanery, and other places, meetings of the Deaconesses and Nurses' Leagues, and Sunday services in various churches and mission halls. The Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, as president of the Southampton Society, gives a reception to the delegates and friends on the evening of the 25th.

. . . . . .

Free trade in liquor sold by retail was established in France in 1880, and the result has been an enormous increase in liquor shops. In 1850, according to M. Dostre in the Revue des Deux Mondes, there were 350,425, and in 1880 the number had risen to only 356,863. In 1894, however, fourteen years after the alteration in the law, the number of these establishments had risen to 451,000, and they number to-day 500,000. They are most numerous in the department of Eure, where, it is alleged, there is one liquor shop for every three adults. "In other words," M. Dostre says, "one elector in four passes his life in pouring out alcohol for the other three." The consumption of brandy has increased fourfold since 1850.

The late Mr. Francis Peek.

THIS well-known philanthropist passed away on September 11. As an active member of the first elected School Board for the City, he will long be remembered for his earnest endeavours to promote religious education. His munificent gift for the foundation, in perpetuity, of "the Peek Prizes" for Biblical proficiency, was an illustration of his interest in this direction. He was chairman for many years of the Howard Association, and strenuously advocated a number of social reforms, among which may be especially named the boarding out of pauper children and their individualizing treatment. His work on "Social Wreckage" treated of this and kindred topics, and he wrote many papers in various reviews and magazines on philanthropic subjects. He was an attached member of the Church of England, and a liberal supporter of its interests.

(1222)

Church Notes.

The venerable Dr. John Paton will attend the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance at Washington as a delegate from New South Wales.

Rev. C. S. Rose, late of Coggeshall, is shortly leaving England to take charge of the Baptist cause, Charters Towers, Queensland.

The Sunday School of Rye Lane (Peckham) Baptist Church has decided to support Mr. F. J. Shipway, an old scholar, for mission work in China.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada have resolved to raise £200,000 during the next two years for consolidation and extension work in the Dominion.

It is stated in the Birmingham Post that Lord Beauchamp, Governor of New South Wales, is taking a Bible class in the parish in Sydney in which the Government House is situate.

Rev. E. Palgrave Davy will close his ministry at the Gorse Lane Baptist Church, Swansea, on October 1, having accepted an appointment under the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

Although the Bishop of Liverpool has derived much benefit by his prolonged rest and change at Lowestoft, he has been strongly advised not to attempt any diocesan work for the present. He will spend a few days in Liverpool, about the end of this month, prior to leaving for the Lake district.

During the Feast of Tabernacles, the churches in East London are making special efforts among the Jews. The rector of Whitechapel, in conjunction with the rector of Spitalfields, is making arrangements for a series of special evangelistic services, and prayers for the conversion of Jews will be offered in a large number of churches.

Dr. R. S. McArthur, of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, who has lately been in Cuba, tells of the changes wrought since January 1, when the Americans took possession. Bull-fighting and cock-fighting have ceased, marriage laws have been revised, sanitary conditions have been vastly improved, and a system of public schools is being organized.

Rev. J. Macpherson, of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, has, although in his eighty-fifth year, now launched a church building scheme at Chorlton, near Manchester, with great enthusiasm. Mr. Macpherson has held the most prominent offices in the Connexion, having been editor, principal of the college and President of Conference.

At a conference held at Horton Lane Church, Bradford, of ministers and leading members from all the Congregationalist churches of the district, Rev. Henry Varley presided, and Mr. James Rutherford, the organizing secretary of the Twentieth Century Fund, gave a statement regarding the methods to be adopted in raising the money. It is proposed that Yorkshire shall contribute 100,000 guineas towards the total of 500,000 guineas.

Liverpool Wesleyans hope to establish new mission buildings, including a hall, as a suitable headquarters for the mission work carried on by Rev. Charles Garrett, and by means of which so much goodwork has been done amongst the poorer classes of the city. The special commission appointed by Conference to visit Liverpool, and advise on the situation, is to consist of the president, ex-president, and other well-known ministers.

In the workhouse chapel at St. Asaph a brazen cross and a pair of candles are placed on the table at which the speaker stands when addressing the inmates. The late Mr. Thomas Gee, who took his turn on the rota of ministers to hold services at the workhouse, was in the habit of taking down these symbols, which he regarded as ritualistic furniture, before he commenced the service. Mr. Boaz Jones recently followed suit, and as a result the Board of Guardians has been asked to interfere.

The Cyprus Dukhobortsi in Canada are in a state of pressing need. A Russian lady writes to the clerk of the Dukhobortsi Committee: "Has —— written to you about the desperate position of the Cyprus party in Canada? A week ago we received a letter. They had food only for two weeks, and nothing more but bread. If they do not have help they will starve. Scurvy is spreading among them. I cannot help crying, thinking about them and knowing nothing what to do! It is a heart-breaking story." Some small amounts have been sent to the colony to meet the most urgent needs.

An important meeting of Congregationalists has been held in the Central Church, Winnipeg, to meet the English and Eastern Canadian missionary delegates, and to discuss plans for extending the work of the church. After an earnest discussion a resolution was adopted expressing the view that the time was ripe for a forward Congregational movement in Manitoba and the North-west, advising the immediate purchase of sites for churches in four or five centres, and a search for suitable men to enter upon the work in these places. It was also resolved to organize a missionary committee.

The Waterford and Lismore Diocesan Council have passed a resolution that they, "in bidding farewell to our beloved Bishop, on this, the last occasion of his episcopal presence amongst us, desire to convey to him our sense of the heavy loss we are sustaining by his resignation. And also to place on record our sincere appreciation of all the noble qualities which for twenty-seven years have marked his honoured episcopate, his spotless character, his unvarying sympathy, his courtesy and hospitality, his gentle rule, and, above all, his earnest piety and bright example, which, to so many who have felt his influence, have 'allured to brighter worlds and led the way.'"

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. W. H. Langworthy, chaplain to the Lambeth Workhouse, was proceeding towards that institution to minister to a dying inmate, when he suddenly reeled and fell to the ground. On being picked up he was found to be dead.—Rev. J. A. Simpson, of Bonnethill Free Church, Dundee, where he built up a large working-class congregation. He was an earnest evangelist and an indefatigable pastor. — William Harkness, a respected elder of Park Presbyterian Church, Highbury. Until his retirement, a year or two ago, Mr. Harkness was chief Government analyst at Somerset House.—St. John's Presbyterian Church, Hartlepool, has just suffered a serious loss through the death of the senior elder, Mr. R. C. Black. — Mr. John Livingstone, the brother of Dr. Livingstone, the famous explorer. Sixty years ago Mr. Livingstone went to Canada, where he carried on business as a chemist. Mr. Livingstone, who was the senior of his brother by two years, bore a striking resemblance to the great explorer.—Mr. Robert W. Gibling, a tradesman of Manningtree, and Wesleyan circuit steward, was driving with a boy in his employ, when the horse was alarmed by a passing train. Both were thrown out of the trap and killed instantly.—Rev. R. J. Williamson, Baptist, of Teddington, at the age of forty-one. He has been a great sufferer for several years, owing to lung trouble and bone disease, which caused him to undergo several operations, including the amputation of his right foot and right arm.—Rev. C. J. P. Eyre, at St. Leonards, in his eighty-sixth year, formerly a well-known London clergyman. He was ordained in 1838, and from 1842 to 1857 was in charge of the parish of St. Mary, Bury St. Edmunds, whence he was appointed to the Rectory of St. Marylebone. He retired to St. Leonards in 1882.—Mr. Howard Bowser, J.P., of Glasgow, an honorary member of the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, and a liberal supporter of movements connected with the Baptist Denomination.—Rev. W. Gibson, for forty years vicar of Tilty, Dunmow, Essex, aged seventy-three years. He was a consistent Evangelical all through his ministry, and a loyal clergyman of the Church of England.—At Aberdeen, Mr. Robert Ogilvie, LL.D., her Majesty's senior Chief Inspector of Schools for Scotland. While resident in Aberdeen, Dr. Ogilvie was an office-bearer in Rubislaw Parish Church.

Notices.

Applications for Tracts.—Rev. Edwin Moore, Methodist minister, St. George's Bay, Newfoundland (against Romanism); Mr. John Kent, Trewithen, St. Teath, Camelford, Cornwall; Mr. J. Spare, St. Breward, Bodmin; Mr. Jno. Mason, Collingwood Street, Wigan; Corporal C. C. Purchase, Station Pay Office, Barracks, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Samuel S. Parkes, Middleton Cowling, via Keighley, Yorkshire; D. H. Ritchie Swaddon, Standburn U.P.M. Church, Candie Cottage, Avonbridge, N.B.; Mr. A. Sivelard, Y.M.C.A., 67, High Street, Wandsworth, London, S.W.; F. G. Carter, 19, College Road, Walthamstow, London, E.; J. W. Harvey, Post Office, Tillingham, near Southminster, Essex; I. Jones, 10, Steelworks Terrace, Ebbw Vale, Mon.; G. Ferris, Greywell House, Cinderford, Glos.; Mr. Isaac Male, St. Teath, Camelford; Mr. John Sleeman, Delabole R.S.O., Cornwall; Mr. J. Morrison, Mayade, Slvieneman Mountains, Killcoo P.O., co. Down, Ireland; Miss Rooney, Forpany, Killcoo P.O., co. Down, Ireland; Mrs. Aston, 36, Bethel Street, Norwich; Sister Ada Carless, The Saint's Rest, Coton Hill, Stafford.

Communications Received with Thanks—L.G. W.B. J.H.W. Z.T.V.P. E.S. W.A. J.J. T.S.H. S.E.G. J.E. E.S. W.H.J. G.S.M. Miss B. E.F.B. W.G.P. S.B. O.L.H. J.O.H. M.H.S. B.C.M. C.E.F. S.M.T. B.J. S.B. T.J.S. F.R.H.S. E.S. M.S. J.L. M.B. M.J.B. W.T. W.H. E.A.G. G.W.L.B. W.O.M. S.E.B. P.C.W. A.M. D.B. C.V. G.H. H.L.H. P.J.L. G.R.S. M.H.A. G.S.O. A.S.D. F.W. F.M.G. W.O.M. A.E.B. W.O. H.S.N. J.I. W.K. D.J.T. T.M.M. W.B. G.S. H.J.H. J.H.T. R.W. J.F.T. A.M. J.M. M.A.M.W. G.R.K. W.W.S. H.R. T.P. F.P. M.C. F.G.T. J.W. E.C. C.C. E.C. J.S. A.E.W. M.L.B.D. Mrs. F.K. R.D.S. C.E.E. Mrs. C. A.C. G.L. A.J.V. F.E.P. V.M.C.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a ten days' mission, to be conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness in the Public Hall, Barking Road, Canning Town, commencing Sept. 23.

For blessing upon the Convention, to be held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, in the last week of September.

For blessing on a special mission, to be held at Callander, N.B., the first fortnight in October, conducted by Mr. C. Roger, of the Evangelization Society, with Mr. F. Hutchins, from London, to sing the Gospel message.

For a tent mission at Sholing, conducted by I. H. Cooke, of Evangelization Society, which commenced Sept. 20.

Personalia.

Rev. A. R. and Mrs. Cavalier have returned to England from their deputation tour in Australia, in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, the Scottish evangelist, occasionally undertakes special missions for the Evangelization Society, but (contrary to a reference in our last issue) is not actually connected with the organization. Mr. Dunn commences his winter campaign on October 1, at Leith.

Mrs. Grace Soper, widow of the pastor of that name, who was well known in home and foreign spheres of labour, has sustained another sad loss, by the death of her little daughter, Ivy Vera. "Sorrow upon sorrow" has been Mrs. Soper's lot; she has lost husband, mother, and child in fourteen months!

Rev. J. Gordon Watt has been appointed by the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society, to be Editorial Superintendent, in succession to the late Rev. Dr. William Wright. Mr. Watt, who was educated at Aberdeen, Oxford, and Berlin, is a graduate of the two first-named Universities. Since 1896 he has served the British and Foreign Bible Society as one of its secretaries.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is in the midst of his Northfield extension work. He has already visited Toronto, Montreal, and Rochester. His prospective arrangements are as follows:—September 20-22, Pittsburg; 24-26, Atlanta; 28-29, Kansas City; October 1-6, Chicago; 8-10, Baltimore; 12-14, Boston; 15-17, Philadelphia; 18-20, Brooklyn; 21-24, New York. He hopes to sail for home October 25, on board the s.s. Majestic.

Legislation against Cigarette-smoking.—In a report to the Foreign Office on the trade of San Francisco, Mr. Consul-General Pickersgill says:—"The excessive indulgence in cigarette-smoking by boys of tender years has become a habit as general as it is pernicious; and, in order to remove this menace to the health of the growing generation, measures to restrict the sale of cigarettes have been adopted by the authorities in many of the towns of the State. An ordinance prohibiting the sale of cigarettes within the city limits of Oakland, and the smoking of tobacco in that form by minors in public places, came into effect in October of last year. A similar law was passed by the authorities of the town of Alameda a few years ago. It is hoped that these measures will help to check the spread of this habit."

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

MR. VARLEY'S articles in our columns on Christ's resurrection and its sublime significance, have been read with pleasure and profit by many. Next week we hope to publish an additional paper from the same vigorous pen, on another aspect of the great theme. Among other things, Mr. Varley shows that, Christ being risen, there is no room for a priest to intervene between man and God. With "a Great High Priest, passed into the heavens," we need no man-constituted mediator. Christ's people may by faith follow their Divine Forerunner with boldness into the very presence of the God of grace and glory.

The "pardon" of Captain Dreyfus practically annuls the Rennes verdict. For the government of a country to pardon a man rightly convicted of treason, in the face of one of the properly-constituted courts of the nation, would be an act of suicide. That President Loubet has dared to do so, indicates a belief that the verdict was against the evidence. The vast wave of world-wide indignation roused by it has clearly, in spite of the violent tone of the French Press, penetrated far into the heart of the people, and the threatened boycott of the Exhibition gave the President an opportunity of taking his stand on the side of justice. Captain Dreyfus has accepted his release under protest that it is only an instalment of justice, and in his pregnant manifesto said: "Freedom, without honour, to me is nothing." The horde of perjurers, forgers, and tyrants who have tried to undo him have rejoiced too soon over the verdict. Their troubles are probably only beginning, and the end is not yet.

It is a scathing revelation of the true inwardness of the state of clericalism in Rome that, amid the almost universal indignation with which the Dreyfus verdict was received even there, the only party which did not condemn it was the priestly party. In France, the Army and the Church are joined in an unholy league, and it has been left to such agnostics as Zola and his friends to voice the slumbering conscience of the nation against this unspeakable iniquity. M. Renault, one of the leaders of the anti-Protestant campaign, in a scurrilous pamphlet, Du Peril Protestant, which is being widely disseminated, is for another St. Bartholomew. He says, "It was St. Bartholomew that saved France." The best friends of that unhappy country feel, on the contrary, that but for the practical annihilation of the Puritan party during that unholy massacre, the present shame that has fallen upon her would never have come to pass. The degenerate condition of religion in France is due more to that terrible cause than to any other.

A correspondent, writing from Scotland re the Dreyfus verdict, reminds us that the Protestants of France have been all along on the side of justice, and that a wholesale denunciation of the French means a condemnation of the innocent with the guilty. We have ever paid our tribute to the minority who have not allowed themselves to be carried away by popular passion and prejudice. The innocent ever have to suffer with the guilty; and to call for a halt in the present movement of public feeling, because the good are smitten with the bad, is equivalent to saying that a criminal must not be punished because his innocent family will suffer in the process.

Our correspondent well says, "France needs to-day heroic Christians," and quotes James Russell Lowell's lines:—

Though the cause of evil prosper, yet 'tis truth alone is strong;
And albeit she wanders outcast now, I see around her throng
Troops of beautiful tall angels, to enshield her from all wrong.

In the sweeping away of the moral miasma which affects their country to-day, the Christians of France have a task which will call for sacrifice and suffering. But in the heroic service to which they are called, they may find encouragement in the truth of Lowell's song. God is on their side — and "one, with God, is a majority." While we are doing all in our power to impress upon France the abhorrence with which we regard the recent perversion of justice, we shall be continually remembering in sympathetic prayer the minority, who, against great odds, are battling for the truth and right.

Whilst we are condemning the sentence passed at Rennes, it may be just as well to take to heart at least two lessons for ourselves. First, let not the military power get the upper hand of the civil. A nation ruled by martial customs and martial law is lost. This comes to pass when, as in France and Germany, it is made a nation of soldiers; the military idea takes precedence of all else, and is miscalled patriotism; and woe to any one who does not bow down to the iron image. Second, that the system of licensed espionage by accredited men should be abolished. How far such a system obtains under British rule we cannot say; but we know that a large sum is voted every year for secret service money. As recently exposed, the spy system is nothing but a system of lying and cheating, and every decent Government should sweep it away. Telling the truth is a better defence.

Is there not serious confusion of issues in these sentences from the Review of Reviews?

The men of the Oxford Movement have been the agents of a great spiritual revival in a very lethargic and Erastian Church. They have done in this century what Wesley and Whitefield did in the preceding century. They have done a good work. If, as a reward for their solid services, they crave liberty to burn candles in daytime and swing censers of incense in church, why not humour their little foibles?

We wonder what lives of Wesley and Whitefield Mr. Stead has been reading, for all that we know of point to a different conclusion. Take these points: 1. W. and W. make nothing of ritual; the Oxford men make much of it. 2. W. and W. were catholic and inclusive in their sympathies; the Oxford men are Roman Catholic and exclusive. 3. W. and W. preached the new birth; the Oxford men insist that you must be in their church. 4. W. and W. co-operated religiously with men of all churches; the Oxford men will co-operate with none. 5. W. and W. laboured to make a nation of real Christians; the Oxford men want to make a nation of Churchmen.

Why should the High Church party contend so strenuously for incense and processions, and yet declare them to be of no essential moment to salvation? Mr. Stanton declares he has got rather tired of incense, and would rather fumigate with brown paper! Yet we are threatened by the Church Times with a repetition in due time of all the contention and turmoil of the past over this needless accessory of worship. They say of Mr. Stanton and his friends:—

We do not doubt the wisdom of their decision. But let there be no mistaking its meaning. This is no surrender; it is only a choice of the battlefield. Until further notice there will be no censing. At the proper turn of affairs it will be resumed. In the meantime there is fighting to be done. The Archbishops have taken their stand upon the Act of Uniformity. Their interpretation of it is probably unsound; the authority they attribute to it cannot be allowed. The first attack should, therefore, be upon the interpretation. For this purpose we must make our way to the Law Courts.

Cannot Christian ministers find something to do for the salvation of the lost more in harmony with their calling than contesting over matters that are of "no essential moment"?

We have never been able to understand the clamour of the High Church party for spiritual rule in the Church, and the scorn and contempt with which they speak of bishops and archbishops who do not obey their command. A week or so ago it looked almost as if they were all going to fall into line, and as if the bishops had carried the day. But in a few days the bishops were spoken of as men who had "constituted themselves Popes in their dioceses," and we were cautioned against any feeling of joy on account of the supposed submission.

It is perfectly clear that some of the Bishops do something more than tacitly approve of confession. An ex-ritualist, in a communication to a contemporary, relates some of his experiences. Amongst them he affirms:

A chaplain of one of our bishops heard my confession in his private room in the palace . . . . This was at my ordination.

We can scarcely believe that the Bishop's chaplain in the episcopal palace would have heard the confession of a candidate for holy orders without either the knowledge or the approval of the Bishop. More than once attention has been called recently to the fact that candidates for orders have been encouraged to confess before ordination. It may be true that the Bishops do not "enforce" the confessional, but every encouragement and facility seem to be offered by them for its practice.

There is certainly some ground for the position taken up by the City Press in regard to the approaching meetings of the Church Congress. Its contention is that a place should be found in the programme for discussion on the City churches. How to render them of more practical use than, in some cases, they actually are, would, no doubt, provoke a debate that might lead to the adoption of some practical measure. From the very nature of the case, it is impossible for many of these churches to have congregations of any size. The people are not in the City on Sundays to fill them. But something surely should be done to utilise the waste of power there is every Sunday in many of these churches. A mere handful of people cannot justify the principle of laissez faire.

The choir at Westminster Abbey has been enjoying a holiday, and therefore the congregation must sing, or there would have been no singing at all; and they did sing, and well, too. A reporter says that it was impossible to resist the impression that the congregation felt no need of guiding voices, and that their singing was to them a real and intense pleasure. During "holy-week" the congregation at St. Paul's sings without organ or choir to aid it; and we never heard anything more delightful than the way in which it sang to "Rockingham" Watts' universal favourite, "When I survey the wondrous cross." Of course, an organ and a choir ought to be an aid to congregational singing, not a substitute for it; but there is no denying that they are too commonly regarded as the latter. Leaders are apt to assume too much and followers too little. Praise in the heart will generally guide the voice.

The Rome correspondent of The Times has written a lengthy and interesting account of the struggle which has been carried to a temporary conclusion between what is called "Americanism," in the Romish Church, and Jesuitism. The former name covers an attempt made by Father Hecker to democratize the Catholicism of America. He argued that the time had come to substitute the active and manly virtues of self-respect and self-reliance for the ecclesiastical virtues of "submission and passive obedience." So long as his teaching was confined to America, where it won many converts, being based on the principle that every man may and must enjoy a direct and immediate relation to God, he enjoyed the patronage of the Pope. But in time this teaching began to emerge on this side of the Atlantic also, and the Jesuits immediately took alarm, and they set to work to obtain the Papal denunciation against it. Last January, the Pope addressed a letter to Cardinal Gibbons, the leading prelate in America, totally condemning the tenets of Father Hecker, and denouncing those who continued to follow them.

Thus the Jesuits have, for the time, triumphed over "Americanism," which has received its ecclesiastical death-blow. The future of Roman Catholicism in the United States will now be watched with interest. The Civilta Cattolica, the leading Jesuit organ, declares that everyone who henceforth advocates these doctrines of self-reliance, and the right of every man to direct communion with God on his own account, is "a rebel and a traitor." Will those who have left Protestantism for Romanism under the influence of Father Hecker continue in the Church which has repudiated the very essence of the teaching which drew them over? There is no room for individual liberty of conscience in the Romish Church. It must be independence or submission. In a country based on the fundamental principles of freedom, such an alternative must surely end in the ultimate decay of Romanism, which, driven to its last defences, always means Jesuitism.

(1236)

Hitherto the Government of India has carefully abstained from allowing the ecclesiastical question to be raised in regard to the common use, by any Protestant denomination mustering a sufficient number of adherents, of the churches built by Government funds for the soldiers. Now a strenuous attempt to restrict such buildings for Anglican services only is being made. We are sorry to see that Dr. Welldon, whose broader sympathies were well known in this country, has, since being made Bishop of Calcutta, delivered himself of the opinion that, by the act of consecration, these churches are "separated for ever" to the Episcopal services. It is a pity that ecclesiastical differences should be introduced into religious work among our soldiers, especially in the presence of the heathen, and seeds of bitterness sown in relationships that have hitherto been free from them.

A correspondent in The Standard gives a remarkable account of the plan of campaign recently drawn up by all the Spanish Catholic Bishops' at a conference, dealing with the religious situation in that country. "Liberalism," by which is meant freedom of thought and faith, is, in their view,

> "The source of all the sin and evil in Spain." Religious toleration must be reduced to the extreme limits allowed by the constitution, and anti-catholic teachings and books not approved by ecclesiastical authority must be forbidden, while all academic degrees and official education must be Catholic. All ecclesiastics must be free from the jurisdiction of the civil courts. Catholics are reminded that if they only vote in all elections for the candidates duly approved by the Bishops there will be no chance of liberals and democrats being returned.

Here is a programme that is not only thoroughly characteristic of Romish tactics, but one that if successful will completely stifle the last chance of progress in unhappy Spain.

It is a sign of the times that Scotland is being threatened with increased Sabbath desecration. Already Sunday trains, cars, and concerts are realities, and efforts are constantly being made to secure greater facilities in these directions. Happily, there has been a successful measure of resistance to these baneful encroachments upon the sanctity of the Lord's Day. There seems, moreover, little fear that the churches and the religious organizations in the great centres mean to resist these innovations à outrance. We are glad to find, too, that the corporations of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee are firm in their opposition. On all sides strenuous efforts are being made to secularize the day. We have every hope that Scotch Puritanism will not yield, without a struggle, one iota to those who would intrude upon Sabbath observance. The battle must be fought by loyal hearts and true in the name of Christ our King.

Two new theatres, both imposing and handsome structures, have been opened at Richmond and Balham. There has been quite an outbreak of theatres in the London suburbs within the last few years, and what will be the moral and spiritual effect of them it is not difficult to say. They will not increase the desire to hear or to keep the Word of God; they will not strengthen the spirit of devotion, or help to improve our prayer meetings; they will not induce our young men and young women to become followers of Christ and members of his Church; they will not subdue the fever to be rich, or diminish the stress and strain of life; and they will not aid in solving any of the urgent problems of the day, nor even bring us into a mood to tackle them.

On the other hand, mission workers assure us of the deteriorating influence manifested in the children and young people among whom they work, for which local theatres are responsible; for the plays produced cater in turn for every taste, refined and vulgar, high-minded and base. City managers, who at first feared loss of patronage, now admit that the suburban theatre is creating an ever-increasing class of playgoers. Even Christian parents who always avoided the more central playhouses are, too many of them, guilty of the egregious folly of taking their families to these suburban centres of demoralization.

That the education of the people is a great national blessing, is proved by the testimony of the Commissioners of Prisons. Our Board Schools are bearing much "moral" fruit at least. There is "a great and progressive decrease in the number of sentences for serious crime." Whereas, before Mr. Forster's Education Act became law, the proportion of the population sentenced to penal servitude for serious crime used to be from 9 to 13½ per cent., only 2½ per 100,000 of the population were thus committed in 1898. These statistics are most encouraging. But there is work for the elementary school teacher in abundance, so long as it is true that 20 per cent. of prisoners can neither read nor write. In 1870 it was nearly 34 per cent.

Christian workers have not left the migratory hop-pickers to themselves this autumn. No waifs and strays in the community need more the kindly help and sympathy that Christian philanthropy can give than these itinerant families. It is computed that in all not fewer than 8,000 of them have found their way into the parish of Paddock Wood, where Rev. A. Havergal Shaw ministers. And he is not alone in the service of mercy, both to body and soul. The Christian Mission to Hop-pickers, and the London City Mission, have each sent their welcome agents. The Church Army van is doing excellent work. A food tent is erected, where the wants of the body are supplied, while a medical mission treats the suffering and sick. A short Gospel service is held preliminary to the doctor's examination of the patients assembled. It is sincerely to be hoped that these combined efforts of Christian love will be so blessed by God, that numbers of these moral outcasts will be sought and found, to the glory of Jesus Christ.

Yorkshire farmers have made an interesting experiment towards the solution of the Social Question. The higher wages offered in the mining and manufacturing districts have there, as elsewhere, steadily drained the country population into the towns. But the farmers in question refused to sit down and bewail their lot as inevitable. They boldly raised the rate of agricultural wages. Speedily the labourers began to come back, and it was found that it was possible to meet the extra expense by the extra profits which ensued. There has consequently been less depression in the farming neighbourhoods in Yorkshire than in the districts where wages were lower. It would be well if these other districts followed this good example. The depopulation of the country is one of the greatest problems, socially and religiously, that confronts us just now. Anything that tends to bring the labourer back to the soil is a national benefit, and is well worth a little enterprise and courage on the part of agricultural employers.

The Church's Opportunity.

WAR threatens us; with mysterious, horrible swiftness its dread shadow spreads over our land and empire. Many say there is no remedy—that it must come. Now, what if just here peace should be secured by Christians of both lands? What if this crisis should prove to be the Church's opportunity? Could not the Christian Church, awake and united, soon silence the clamour for war, and build up a new bridge of justice and confidence between Boer and Briton?

How? By proclaiming continually that the greatest British interests at stake are justice and mercy. By declaring against unnecessary war as infinite crime, and by sternly demanding the clearest and weightiest proofs of its necessity. Even then it must be shown that everything has been tried as a means of averting it—not forgetting arbitration. By reproving the heartless flippancy and blind passion with which many talk and write of war; and by ceaseless, and united, and special prayer.

This will make war impossible. Our greatest danger is the silence of the true Church of Christ. The voice of the Church, pleading for righteousness and brotherly consideration, would work a miracle of good.

One thing more. Let the Church here join hands with the Church there, and so make two bands of peace-makers. Why not form at once two peace committees — one in Great Britain, and the other in South Africa—of leading men and women of the Evangelical Church of Christ. The South African Committee, headed by such as Rev. Andrew Murray, could speak for the Boer side; and the Home Committee for the British. Thus, in less than a week, the two peoples would be brought together in the best way, and on their best side. So the followers of the Prince of Peace would gloriously rebuke war, and secure peace.

Eastbourne. JOHN PEARCE CLARK.

A Grand Reception.

"THIS Man receiveth sinners" (Luke xv. 2), not that they may remain sinners, but that He may pardon their sins, justify their persons, cleanse their hearts by his purifying Word, preserve their souls by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, and enable them to serve Him, to show forth his praise, and to have communion with Him.

When Jesus receives sinners, He has not some out-of-doors reception-place—no casual ward, where he charitably entertains them as men do passing beggars; but He opens the golden gates of his royal heart, and receives the sinners right into Himself. Yea! He admits the humble penitent into personal union, and makes him a member of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. There was never such a reception as this!

He is still receiving sinners. Would to God sinners would receive Him!—C. H. Spurgeon.

"The Pure in Heart."

WHO are they who have a faith,
All-believing,
Rest receiving,
Trusting all the Master saith?
"The pure in heart."

Who are they who have a hope,
Bright and healing,
Heaven revealing,
As with earthly loss they cope?
"The pure in heart."

Who are they who have a love,
Comprehending
God, and bending
To his lowest sons who rove?
"The pure in heart."

J. H. WALLER.

Walking in Darkness.

Isaiah L. 10, 11.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

SOME very good people may answer this question by saying, "Yes, it is a dark hour with me, and I would be thankful to get some light." This is not strange. Those who love God and whom God loves are not always prosperous; He never promises constant sunshine to any of his children. A very righteous man in olden times said, "He hath set me in dark places." Hard as it is to believe, yet it is a revealed truth that whom God loves He chastens, and oft-times it is probable that He does it because He loves them. Chemists do not throw sand or gravel into their crucibles; it is only the ores which contain gold or silver which are subjected to the heated furnace. Hot fires often make very bright Christians.

Some of my readers may be passing through very dark hours of pecuniary adversity. Their business has suffered badly, or their incomes have dwindled almost to the vanishing point. Gloomy times these may be to you, but I hope that they are not too dark for you to keep or for you to read your heavenly Father's precious promises. For your comfort, let me assure you that while I have known hundreds of Christians to be badly demoralized by prosperity, I have rarely known one to be spiritually damaged by adversity. Sharp blizzards are very apt to drive a true Christian under the safe covert of Christ Jesus. When his worldly assets run low, his heavenly assets appreciate. Christian courage shines splendidly in the dark; and a stout heart chants the brave old song, "although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of my salvation." It is very uncomfortable to be poor; but grace is not graduated by income, and the man who has a clear conscience, and the Lord Jesus within him, and the atmosphere of love all around him, and the glories of heaven before him, is one of the Lord's millionaires.

THE STRAIGHT ROAD OF INTEGRITY,

To those who are suffering sore bereavements, it is a great comfort to know that the

DARKNESS AND THE LIGHT ARE BOTH ALIKE

to our heavenly Father. In that piquant and powerful story, "A Window in Thrums," the good Scotch mother, after her boy had been taken away, said, "Aye, but that day he was coffined, I found it hard to say 'Thou, God, seest me.' It's the text I like best noo, though, and when Hendry and Leeby is at the kirk I turn it up often, often in the Bible. I read frae the beginnin' o' the chapter, but when I come to 'Thou, God, seest me,' I stop. It's no' 'at there's ony rebellion to the Lord in my heart noo, for I ken He was looking' down when the cart ran ower Joey, and He wanted to take my laddie to Himsel'. But just when I come to 'Thou, God, seest me,' I let the Book lie in my lap; for ainee a body's sure o' that, they're sure o' a'." And we may be equally sure that the all-seeing God makes no mistakes. He sees just where to give and where to take away.

Not only sore losses and bereavements bring the Lord's people into dark places, they are often involved in deep perplexities as to the course they ought to pursue. When we have light it is easy enough to no one need go astray at high noon. Then we can walk by sight. Faith is trusting God to lead us in the dark. Prayer is often the cry of the soul in the darkness to an unseen Saviour; and lo! He appears to us in the fourth watch of the night, walking as over the billows, and speaking to us the assuring words, "It is I; be of good cheer; be not afraid." Wonderful guidances and providential openings often come to us in these seasons of perplexity.

WALK IN THE LIGHT;

"He that walketh in darkness and can see no light, let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." This is something very different from an occasional touch of the Almighty hand. It means to lean on the everlasting arm with the perfect assurance that the arm will never fail us, nor ever mislead us.

To all my readers who are learning hard lessons, or enduring severe chastenings, or working out difficult problems in God's school, I would say, Gird up your loins, and keep the strong staff of faith well in hand.

TRUST YOUR GUIDE

in the dark. You are safer with Him in the midnight than without Him in the noonday. "He will not suffer thy foot to stumble." Why you have been brought into such dark hours, you know not now; but you will know hereafter. Part of the delightful discoveries in heaven will be to find out what was strangely mysterious to us on earth.

Push on cheerfully, and imitate that pilgrim in Bunyan's allegory, whose song in the darkness revealed him to the other pilgrim who was journeying near him. If sorrow camp with us over night, joy cometh in the morning. It is not a very long way to heaven after all, and the hard pulls, sharp conflicts, and dark hours on the road will make heaven all the brighter.

Meek souls there are who little dream
Their daily strife an angel's theme,
Or that the rod they take so calm
Shall prove in heaven a martyr's palm.

Romanism and Criminality.

THE following letter from Dr. Horton, appeared in The Times last week:—

"For Mr. Britten's satisfaction, and because of the importance of the subject, I venture to send the exact reference to the Tablet, where 25 per cent. of our criminals were stated to be Catholics. The date was February 12, 1898. The statement is on page 239.

"And because of the importance of the subject, if not for Mr. Britten's satisfaction, may I call your attention to the fact that this connection between Catholicism and criminality is not confined to this country?

"For example, Mr. Heylyn Hayter, the Government statistician of Victoria, in his report for 1885, stated:—'In proportion to their numbers in the community, the Roman Catholics supplied nearly two and a half times as many arrested persons as the Protestants, . . . and the Roman Catholics committed for trial were nearly twice as numerous as the Protestants.'

"As to America, Father Walter Elliott, of New York, declared in the Catholic World of September, 1890:—'Three-fourths of the public paupers, and more than half the criminals carried to prison, are, by baptism and training, members of our Church. . . . The Roman Catholic chaplain asserts that, of six or seven thousand women brought every year to prison, more than 80 per cent. are Catholics.'

"I will not tax your space to examine the causes of this unmistakable connection between Catholicism and criminality. If, however, it is not accidental, but essential and deeply rooted in the Catholic conception of sin, in the Catholic doctrine of penance, and in the Jesuit ethics which now pervade the Roman Church, it is only right that the public mind should be instructed.

"It is the boast of Cardinal Vaughan that his Church is gaining ground in England at the rate of 800 converts a month. In his Stockport address he ventured to treat his propaganda as the means of saving the country religiously and socially. The facts that I have cited do not dispute that Romanism is making advances in this country; but they cry aloud, in unison with the course of events in France, that the advance of Rome means national degeneration and decay."

A Philanthropist's Will.—Among the societies benefiting under the will of the late Mr. John Holt Skinner are the following:—Evangelization Society, £500; Edinburgh Medical Mission Society, £500; Soldiers' Institute at Woolwich, British Syrian Schools, the Country Towns' Mission, Soldiers' Institute at Gibraltar, London City Missionaries' Home at Ventnor, Endell Street Medical Mission, Endell Street Convalescent Home, Monthly Tract Society, Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute, Devonport Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth Sailors' Rest, and the Ryde Y.M.C.A., each £250; Church Pastoral Aid Society, £2,000; Moravian Missionary Society, £500; Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, Society for Promoting the Due Observance of the Lord's Day, and Ryde Y.W.C.A., each £100; and to Miss Perks, for the benefit of her Soldiers' Home at Winchester, £200. The residuary estate will ultimately benefit the following:—the Congo Balolo Mission, the China Inland Mission, the North Africa Mission, the Church of England Zenana Society, and the London City Mission, £2,000 each.

Dreyfus at Liberty.

As all the world now knows, Captain Dreyfus was liberated on Wednesday, the 20th, and proceeded by train to Carpentras. With his brother, he was accompanied on the journey by M. Jules Huret, who contributed to the Figaro a most interesting article, filling no less than six columns.

He writes in the present tense, and his description is often wonderfully graphic. His first impression of the man is just portrayed:

The trains moves off at 8.58. I am seated facing Captain Dreyfus; I never remove my eyes from him for an instant. I am surprised at the effect he produces on me.

I expected, whatever my sentiments as to his case, to find myself confronted by a being who awakened no sympathy. He had been described as a haughty and disagreeable person, with a raucous voice and an eye wanting in frankness. I had imagined him hard, mistrustful, gloomy, and, if not bearing hatred, at least bitter, and I own that I was ready to forgive him all those things. I find before me a being with fine regular features, with a calm and pleasant expression. His rosy face would give him an appearance of extreme youth if the top of his head was not absolutely bald, and if the hair on each side was not quite grey. This being is enfeebled by anæmia, and all the blood there is left in him has gone to the head, the last refuge of his prodigious vitality. His neck is thin, his hands are long and bony, the knees are pointed like nails through the blue cloth of his trousers. His chest is hollowed, his entire body is like that of a vanquished being, were it not for the energy of the mouth, the square jaw, and the will expressed in his look. His eyes are blue, a charming and mild blue, limpid and clear. Far from shunning one's gaze, he fixes his eyes on you with assurance behind his eyeglasses, and yet this is the man who has been represented as a monster of hypocrisy, of whom a scoundrel has said that he sweated treason.

The Captain's attitude of mind toward the chief instruments in his persecution is very remarkable. He bears no malice, and puts the most charitable construction possible upon their actions. In reply to the question: "Do you think it has been an error or a conspiracy?" he said:

"I think that at the beginning, up to the time of the Court-martial of 1894—that is to say, towards the end of the investigation—they believed, at least, the majority of the persons connected with it, that I was guilty. But at the Court-martial it was different. I am certain that from that moment, as they felt they had made a mistake, they were afraid of being accused of carelessness, and they accumulated against me all kinds of machinations. The proof of this has been given by Captain Freystätter. They provided, behind my back, documents that they knew were false in order to secure my condemnation."

Other items in the conversation reveal this more fully:

I asked Dreyfus: "What impression did General Mercier's depositions make upon you?"

"He is a wicked man and a dishonest man," said Dreyfus; "but I do not think he is conscious of the extent of the evil he has done. He is too intelligent for me to be able to say that he is irresponsible, but if he is mentally conscious he is morally unconscious. He is a man without moral sense (amoral)."

"And Esterhazy; what do you think of him?"

In quiet, measured accents, speaking with some slight hesitation, like a savant propounding a hypothesis, he replied:—"I think he is a swindler, a chevalier d'industrie, who has swindled his country—it is not even his country—just as he swindled his cousin and his tradesmen, but without in the least realizing that he did so much harm as all that. He wanted money; that was the motive."

As to his future movements he said:—

"I want to live alone with my wife and children. Henceforth my children will be my greatest joy on earth. The elder, it seems, remembers me; the girl was only a few months old in 1894, so I do not know her. I did not wish to see them at Rennes, in order not to leave the sad impression of the prison on their young minds. A child's imagination should not be clouded. But I am going to see them with great joy in two days. I want to bring them up myself in common with their mother. I shall supervise their instruction and education, because I am opposed to boarding-schools."

His friends will not be surprised to hear that the excitement of reunion with his family has caused a degree of nervous collapse.

(1238)

Work Among Men.

By Rev. J. E. WATTS-DITCHFIELD.*

If work amongst men is to be successful, visiting must be done regularly and systematically. Every opportunity must be seized. Saturday afternoon and a night in each week should be kept clear for this purpose. A visit to twenty or twenty-five homes is calculated to do more good than many of the meetings which occupy our time night after night. It is no use our desiring to gain influence amongst men if we only visit their houses in their absence. Influence is not obtained in that way. The match must be applied to the fire if it is to be lighted, and clergy and men must get to know each other, if they are to work together, and if influence is to be gained. But the visit must be paid by a man to a man.

The day has gone by for the "parson" in our large towns to do as he likes simply because he is the "parson." The man becomes the parson in a way which gives him the greatest power and influence. He must, however, sink the parson in the man. And, when he visits, he must invariably leave behind in the vicarage all airs of superiority.

In visiting the poorest room he should be as considerate for the feelings of its occupants as if he were visiting her ladyship in her mansion. It has become the fashion to visit among the poor, and to consider that the poor man's home is not his castle; but such action never produces good results.

TO TAKE ONE'S HAT OFF, and to bow to the occupants, are simply matters of courtesy which we should never dream of forgetting when visiting in Belgravia; but sometimes they are forgotten in Sticking Alley.

Never make notes in the homes of the people. If, as often happens, the wife or child comes to the door, ask for the father. "Please tell your father that, if it is not inconvenient, I should like to see him a minute or two." Courtesy always pays. And when you see the man, if it is for the first time, it is well to have something definite to say. A man does not care to be brought to the door to see a stranger about "nothing in particular." Have some definite object—a card about the service, and a special reason why, that Sunday, he should try and come. Or we may introduce to good effect the sick club, or reading-room, or the thrift society; or, where the man is young, the cricket club or gymnasium. Anything to break down reserve.

When we knock at the door, we know not who is behind it. We know not the temperament or disposition of the inmates, or the circumstances which surround them. How can we approach such work in our own strength? If anything will lead the Christian worker to prayer, it will be the realization of the responsibility of pastoral visitation. A visit in the home should never be paid without leaving behind a purer atmosphere. If we get the smallest chance, let us seize the opportunity of engaging in prayer. Is a little child sick? How soon we gain our object by saying, "Well, mother, shall we just kneel down and ask the good Father to bless the little one?" What mother could resist such an appeal?

The door once opened should be entered again and again. Follow up such visiting. A great deal of visitation does not pay because of its

LACK OF "FOLLOWING UP."

When once a door is opened, never let it be closed again until the family is won to God. People do not expect a clergyman to visit over and over again in their homes without any effort to bring them to Christ. Many and many a time, on speaking directly to a man about his soul, I have been surprised to find how he had been longing to be spoken to.

But we must try and speak privately. A man will not stand being directly talked to before others. If you find it impossible to secure such privacy in his home, either ask him or write to him to call upon you, and, in the quiet of the study, gradually lead the conversation in the right channel. Think of the trouble a doctor takes to bring his patient through the valley of the shadow of death. Admiral Hunter, on being court-martialled for the loss of his ship, through endeavouring to save a drowning sailor, is reported to have said: "The life of one of the meanest sailors is worth all the ships in the Navy." And one soul is worth the trouble, and more than the trouble, of a lifetime.

Never give any man up as hopeless. "Until he found it," the shepherd went on: and so must we. If ninety-nine efforts fail, we must try one hundred. Wherever you meet a man, speak to him. I make it an absolute rule to bid every man "good-day" whom I meet in the parish, whether I know him or not. In this way I never pass a man by who has been to the service on Sunday. To shake a man by the hand on Sunday and pass him by unnoticed on the Thursday is disastrous.

THE MAN REMEMBERS YOU, and he expects you to remember him. This habit also gets men who do not come to the service gradually to regard you with a friendly feeling, and does great good.

I remember; on one occasion at Holloway, overtaking a man as he walked along, and, after a smile and a "good-day," gradually leading on to the question whether he had yet been to the service. "Are you Mr. Watts-Ditchfield?" said he. "Yes." "Then," with an oath, "I've lost a bob!" "Why, what do you mean?" Then it came out that he had only moved into the parish two days before, and, in the public-house the night before, had accepted a bet of a shilling that, before a week was out, I should have collared him.

Follow men everywhere. I have gone up ladders to men slating a roof with my cards, and, if the subject happened to be appropriate, as "The Man on the Roof," it generally tells. Men like to feel you take pains, and spare no trouble to reach them. Even if, for the moment, you are received with a grunt, it is not lost labour in the long run. We should be always on the look-out for opportunities.

* From a deeply interesting little book, Fishers of Men; or How to Win the Men, by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield, vicar of St. James-the Less, Bethnal Green. (2s. 6d. "Home Words" Office). Ministers and other workers for Christ will find many good counsels and practical hints in its pages.

"Thanksgiving."

We thank Thee, Lord, for harvest home,
Reaped from each golden field;
Our "daily bread" from Thee doth come,
Our hearts their praises yield.

But not alone for earthly food
Our chorus glad we sing;
But also for each higher good,
The years in courses bring.

For "every good and perfect gift"
That "cometh from above,"
We joyfully our voices lift
To own our Father's love.

For dangers warded from our head;
Protection hourly given;
For guiding Hand that wisely led
Our faltering steps towards heaven.

And when 'twas sorrow, pain, or loss
We from thy Hand received,
Still, in each heavy, bitter cross,
Was chastening love perceived.

Love, that spared not thine only Son
From bearing doom of sin:
Out of thine heart, thy dearest One
Was given our life to win.

O blessed Corn of Wheat, whose death
Multiplied life has given!
Thee would we praise while lips have breath,
Till "harvest home" in heaven.

A. C.

Christian Police Institute (City of London).—Mr. H. Leng, the hon. secretary, forwards a list of useful arrangements which have been made in connection with the Institute in Sussex Place, Leadenhall Street, E.C. The aims of the organization are of an evangelistic as well as a social character, and a number of the men have professed conversion. The president is Mr. John McCall.

Studies in Zechariah:

Goings Forth.

ZECHARIAH V.,VI. 1-8.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THERE is a clear connection between the three next visions, furnished by the words, Going forth. "The curse goes forth over the face of the whole land" (3); "The ephah goeth forth" (6); "The chariots go forth" (vi. 1-5). It is as though Zechariah were permitted to stand in the centre of things, where God is, and was able to see the successive issues of the Divine Providence in respect of the moral government of his people and the world.

I. The Vision of the Flying Roll. The Prophet beheld in vision a huge sheet of paper, or dressed skin, prepared for writing, slowly floating in mid-heaven. It seemed to be hovering, and prepared to pounce, as a bird of prey may often be seen on the point of doing over a ploughed field. Its considerable extent, thirty feet by fifteen, the dimensions of the temple porch, was covered on each side by the solemn curses of the law; on this, by those that condemn the thief, on that by those condemning the false swearer.

We have already learnt that God had returned to Jerusalem, prepared to become a wall of fire round about, and its glory in the midst; the temple should be rebuilt, and the priesthood reconstituted; but the people must be made to understand what a solemn thing it was to have God in such near proximity. If He was ready to defend them against their foes, He was also determined to purge out from among them those who transgressed his holy law.

It is clear that this young community was specially cursed by these twin sins. Men were fraudulent and mendacious. They got the better of their customers if they had the chance; and then, with unblushing effrontery, lied to conceal their frauds. These are always the sins of a mercantile community, and they are as prevalent in London and New York, in Bombay and Melbourne, as ever they were in the newly-restored Jerusalem. But God is always pledged to deal with them, in the interests of society itself, which must be undermined if they be allowed to prevail unchecked. Over the great commercial centres of the world —yes, and over the

GREAT EMPORIUMS OF TRADE

—that roll still hangs, and the curse of God threatens to fall.

The effect of the curse is told in graphic symbolism. It seemed after a time to settle down on certain houses. They may have been respectable houses, the houses of men that were held in reverent repute, houses which were often alight with the lamps of high festival; but by the settling down of that roll, the master of such and such a house was indicated as being either a thief or a liar. I will cause it to go forth, saith the Lord of Hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name.

That, however, was not the end, either of the vision or of those divine dealings which the vision describes. The interpreting angel goes on to say: It shall abide in the midst of his house, and shall consume it, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof. It was as though, from the moment that the curse settled down, the whole fabric of the house commenced to rot; and the owner might fairly adopt the words of Leviticus: "There seemeth to me to be, as it were, a plague in the house."

How terribly those words have been fulfilled in the case of people and families we have known! It has seemed as though there were a plague in the house. The fortune which had been accumulated with such toil has crumbled, the children turned out sources of heart-rending grief, the reputation of the father has become irretrievably tarnished. "There is a plague spread in the house; it is a fretting leprosy, it is unclean." No man can stand against that curse. It fronts him everywhere. It touches his most substantial effects, and they pulverize, as furniture eaten through by white ants. It is as though he were condemned to hear, like another Job, the voices of successive messengers, announcing that they only are left to tell the story of irremediable disaster. Timber and stones, however carved and chiselled, crumble to ash and dust! How awfully realistic! How terribly true!

II. The Vision of the Ephah. Again the prophet's eyes were directed by the angel that spoke with him towards mid-heaven, and he saw a yet more graphic symbol. An ephah was seen careering through the air. I said, What is it? And he said, This is the ephah that goeth forth. He said, moreover, This is their resemblance in all the land. As much as to say that the Jews were known throughout the world of that time as traders, who were constantly handling the Hebrew dry measure, containing about a bushel, or seven-and-a-half gallons.

Presently the cover was lifted off, and a woman was seen sitting in the midst of the ephah. And he said, This is Wickedness; and he cast her down into the midst of the ephah, and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof. Does not this clearly mean that the commercial life of these Jewish traders was deeply and that there was a kind of alliance between them and the impalpable spirit of Wickedness, as illustrated by this personification of evil?

SATURATED WITH WICKED PRACTICES,

How often when men slam to the doors of their safes, shut their ledgers, and lock their counting-houses, they seem to place the leaden weight on the top of the ephah containing wickedness! They wish to hide it from the eyes of their nearest and dearest. They would like to hide it from the face of God Himself.

It is at this juncture, however, that an entirely new turn is given to this vision. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there came forth two women, and the wind was in their wings; now they had wings like the wings of a stork, and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven. The stork has long and wide wings. It is also a migratory bird. It would have no difficulty in covering the distance between Jerusalem and Babylon. And, therefore, storks' wings are attributed to these two women. As two anointed ones stand by the Lord as his ministers, so these two women execute his purposes in removing wickedness, which answers to the mystery of iniquity, of which the Apostle speaks.

Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah? And he said unto me, To build her an house in the land of Shinar; and when it is prepared, she shall be set there in her own place. Babylon was far away, the seat of apostasy from God and demon-worship. It was meet that Wickedness should be borne thither. But how great the deliverance for the chosen land!

What comfort is here! Wickedness may be strongly entrenched; but she shall be removed, when once God arises on the behalf of his people. Do you sigh and cry against it? Do you desire that some terrible form of it, which has cursed your life too long, and alienated the Divine favour, should be eliminated? Be encouraged by this vision! Lift up your eyes, and see the swift stork-like wings, with the favouring breeze bearing them forward as they speed to perform God's behest. If only you are willing, God will certainly free and deliver you.

Thousands have experienced this deliverance from certain forms of besetting sin, which have dropped off, as the viper from Paul's hand, as they have received the more perfect indwelling of the Holy Ghost. Not long after his conversion, the saintly Fletcher passed into this experience, trod sin under his feet, and proclaimed that we must not be content till we have been delivered from the power of sin, through the indwelling of the Divine Spirit. And Wesley says of Halyburton: "This great servant of God sometimes fell back, from the glorious liberty he had received, into the spirit of fear, and sin, and bondage. But why? Because he did not abide in Christ; because he did not cleave to Him with all his heart; because he grieved the Holy Spirit by whom freedom from sin is rendered the common privilege of all." From which we infer that Wesley held and taught, that we are delivered from the power of sin and darkness, just in so far as we abide in Him who is the light of life. Abide in Him, and you, too, shall see wickedness borne out of the PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE OF YOUR LIFE.

III. The Vision of the Chariots. This is a vision of Protection and Deliverance. Four chariots are seen issuing from the mountains that were round about Jerusalem. In each case the colour of the horses represented the commission that their hurrying drivers bore to the different nations, which, before that time, had ravaged the Jewish people. Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me: What are these, my Lord? And the angel answered and said unto me: These are the four spirits of Heaven, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth.

Against the north country, where Babylon lay, two chariots went forth: whereof the black horses represented defeat and despair, while the white stood for the victorious successes of some conquering people, before whom Babylon would be laid low in the dust—a prediction which was probably fulfilled in the rise of the third great world-wide kingdom of Greece, under Alexander the Great.

The grizzled, or piebald, went forth toward the south country, and represent the mixed experiences—partly of disaster, and partly of prosperity—which would befall Egypt, on the southern frontier of the Holy Land. For the word bay, the margin suggests the possible alternative strong; and this is probably the right rendering. So this one chariot seems to have been allocated to the work of going to and fro in the earth, on a general mission of patrol and defence. If Satan goes to and fro, seeking whom he may injure, the chariots of God go to and fro, to bring succour and deliverance to the saints.

How comforting this vision was and is! It clearly teaches that, when sin is put away, as between God and his people, He constitutes Himself their gracious Keeper: no weapon that is turned against them prospers, and every tongue that rises in judgment against them is condemned. Woe be to their enemies! God's Spirit is, in strong metaphor, described as being quieted by their overthrow; whilst his chosen dwell always within the precincts of his Almighty Guardianship. "They shall dwell securely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, October 1. 1 Chron. v.

WHAT interesting glimpses this chapter affords into the inner life of Israel! For instance, the effect of Reuben's sin upon all following generations, reminding us of the necessity of living to God, if not for our sake, at least for the results that may accrue to vast multitudes. Then there comes out so strongly the fact that the birthright was Joseph's, and we think of him, who in so many respects was a type of our Lord, as resembling Him in this also. Christ is the heir of all things; and, in fellowship with Him, the birthright is ours. "Heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." What majesty also there is in the expression, that of Judah came the Prince; tallying, as it does, with the expression of John, the Lion of the tribe of Judah!

There is a glimpse, also, of the border warfare with the Bedouin tribes in the days of Saul (v. 10); and of the census of the days of Jotham and Jeroboam; from which we gather that the historical books of the Old Testament give us only the salient points of Israel's history, and that there was much vigorous life of which we know little.

An especially interesting incident is the record of the conflict between the trans-Jordanic tribes and the Hagarites. It would seem that, in the battle, the foe threatened to be too much for the hosts of Israel, and from out the midst of the battle there went up a strong unanimous cry to the God of their fathers, and He was entreated of them, because they put their trust in Him. There is nothing which God will not do for those that absolutely rely on Him as their very present help.

MONDAY, October 2. 1 Chron. vi.

In Christ there is the dual office of King and Priest; and throughout Scripture, and perhaps in the entire history of the people of God, there has been the same double ministry, royal and priestly. "He hath made us kings and priests unto God, even the Father." In every age there has been a class of kings, and a class of priests. For every Abraham, a Melchizedek; for every Moses, an Aaron; for every Zerubbabel, a Joshua; for every Hezekiah, an Isaiah; for every Peter, a John. Here, therefore, after the enumeration of the ruling tribes, we next meet with priestly names like Phinchas, Zadok, and Hilkiah, and realize that these stand for noble and saintly souls that were the salt of the national life.

It is interesting to see how large a portion in the sacred service was occupied by song. The service of song was a very distinct item in the religious economy of Israel. "They ministered with song." Do we sufficiently minister in our sacred song? Too often we sing because the tune or the rhythm pleases us, without realizing that when we sing with our hearts we make melody to the Lord, and that it is the savour of a sweet-smelling sacrifice to Him.

The chapter closes with a specification of the dwelling-places of the priests and Levites. Our God is not uncareful of the comfort of his children, and those who do his work may count on Him for the provision of home and necessaries. Believe in God as being infinitely more solicitous for your comfort than the tenderest love that ever filled human hearts.

TUESDAY, October 3. 1 Chron. vii.

This chapter, like many others, is full of the strife and struggle of the earlier stages of the nation's history. As we descend below the firm fabric and settled order of the world, we find in the rocks, twisted and contorted, and in the fossil skeletons of past generations of animals, evidence of the struggle for existence through which the fittest survived, and on which the present is built. Similarly, as we turn to these chapters, we find signs of the terrific conflict through which Israel passed. These were days in which the race was to the swift, and the battle to the strong; days when the weak and defenceless were crushed. In corroboration of these words, notice the stress laid upon valour: "Mighty men of valour" (2, 5, 7, 9, 11, 40); "Bands of the host for war" (4); "Able to go forth to war" (11).

Notice, too, the traces of pain; the noble sons whom the men of Gath slew; the mourning which could not be comforted; the son whose name told of the evil which had befallen his house. So it is, where there is the mighty valour, there is also the deep mourning. Amid the clash of armour, and the shouts of battle, there are the bitter lamentations and the inevitable grief. Out of the spirit of the people thus engendered, came a religious literature which has enriched the world. All human lives must have chapters like these, full of the shocks of battle and the rain of tears, if eventually they are to yield psalms and prophecies.

WEDNESDAY, October 4. 1 Chron. viii.

Again a chapter of names, seeming like a heap of stones. At least, however, each stone has a name to indicate the place it occupied in the lower courses of the national life of Israel. Course on course, that people rose from the lowest foundations to afford the platform on which afterwards was built the Church of God. Let not the upper storeys of the Church, built as an habitation of God through the Spirit, look down with contempt, or neglect, on these lower courses in the old foundations of Israel.

How wonderful it is to think that all these, whose names are here recited, are existing somewhere! That at this moment they are fuller of vivid life than in those old days, when they stormed across the brief period of earthly life. Also they will rise again, and they are destined to immeasurable possibilities of joy or sorrow, of light or darkness. How overwhelming the thought! What a marvellous conception we obtain of God, who has a minute and intimate knowledge of each soul, and awards to each, with unerring accuracy, their destiny of weal or woe.

One name strikes our attention, mingled with the rest, with nothing to indicate that it stands for the first king of Israel. "Kish begat Saul." In the sight of God, the adventitious titles and circumstances of our mortal life disappear. We pass into the great future not as kings, nobles, or priests, but as men. We are judged according to the deeds done in the body, with no advantage attaching to us; only with the deeper responsibility if we filled a considerable place in the history of mankind.

THURSDAY, October 5. 1 Chron. ix.

During the captivity, the genealogical tables were carefully kept, and after the return great stress was laid upon the ability of the Israelite to trace his pedigree. Even though you may be in captivity, and have lost the glad sense of the presence of God—in this, resembling the Jew divorced from his temple—never forget you have been born into the family of God, and are a child of God by faith.

This list of names is largely identical with that given in the books of Nehemiah and Ezra. But there are slight touches which are full of interest. It is a pleasant thing that certain are spoken of as "very able men for the service of the house of God;" that the porters and the priests are mentioned with equal care; that the keepers of the gates were granted honourable mention; that the Lord was specially "with" Phinehas, the son of Eleazar; that their trust was committed to these humble servitors by David and Samuel, and that for so many years, therefore, they had performed their lowly but necessary office; that provision was made for their lodging in the near proximity of the house of God, "because to them pertained the opening thereof, morning by morning." All these small touches indicate that attention to detail which is so characteristic of the greatness of God, and must characterize all successful work with which his name is identified.

The sub-division of work is noticeable. Some were charged with the vessels; some appointed over the furniture; some prepared the spices; some baked things in pans; some were singers employed in their work day and night, and these were free from other service. To everyone, according to his several ability, the Holy Spirit distributes office and opportunity. Let each find his place and fill it—

> Content to fill a little space
> If God be glorified.

FRIDAY, October 6. 1 Chron. x.

The Divine epitaph on Saul's tomb is given in this chapter. How little did the choice young man whom Samuel anointed, dream that he would come to such an end as this! Disgraced with defeat, he perished by his own hand upon the field of battle, and brought ignominy upon his family and people. All this because he allowed himself to disobey the commands of God, and withdrew portions of his life from the Divine government. That he kept back the choice of the spoils of Amalek, together with Agag; that he sacrificed with his own rash hand, instead of waiting till Samuel came; that he allowed jealousy to enter his soul towards David; that he allowed himself to be swept before the turbid torrent of hatred and revenge; and that he crowned a life of darkening disobedience by asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit—these were the crimes, which, like the archers of the Philistines, overtook and distressed him, and ultimately laid him low in the dust of dishonourable suicide.

It is remarkable that the sacred historian does not hesitate to say that the Lord slew him (v. 14). He ignores, for the moment, the agency of the Philistines, and his action in falling on his sword, and deliberately tells us that his death was the result of the Divine judgment and sentence. God's judgments take effect in this world as well as the next. Men are always receiving in their bodies according to the things that they do, whether of life or death.

Let any who attempt to dabble in spiritualism (13) take warning from these words. Palmistry, spirit-rapping, the appeal to demons, are as old as the history of Egypt or Babylon. Everywhere in Scripture the habit of inquiring about the future, in other directions than from God, is condemned, as inimical to faith, and loyalty, and perfect repose in his loving care.

SATURDAY, October 7. 1 Chron. xi.

A chapter of mighty men who gathered round David, God's ordained shepherd and prince! Perhaps a similar chapter is being written in the annals of eternity of the mighties who have gathered round Jesus Christ, also God's Shepherd and Prince! For Jashobeam, put Paul; for Eleazar, Peter; for Benaiah, John the divine; for Abishai, St. Augustine; and for the rest—"the mighty men of the armies"—put such names as Luther, Calvin, John Huss, and many more. As the Son of God goes forth to war, his following train is composed of men doughty in courage, weighty in speech, heroic in faith.

The touching incident of David's residence in the cave of Adullam, his longing for the water of the well of Bethlehem, the splendid dash of his three brave comrades to obtain it, and his noble refusal to drink that which had put their lives in jeopardy, are traits of chivalrous devotion and princely behaviour, which always strike deep chords in the hearts of those who love a Greater than David. Its counterpart, I venture to think, was in the act of the timid woman who, on the first Easter morning, braved the possible indignity which might be offered by the sentries at the grave, in order to bring sweet spices for the anointing of the Master's body. These two incidents answer each other from the pages of the Old and New Testament, and it is pleasant to feel that, in the noblest characteristics, women and men are equal.

Surely if David poured forth the water, which might have cost the life-blood of his mighties, it becomes us to refuse any indulgence, like that in alcohol, which not only may cause, but undoubtedly is causing, the death of multitudes. Let us pour out the contents of our cellars before God, and stand clear of any participation in the blood of souls.

Other Lands.

Jews in East Europe.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

IT is now about five weeks since I left England, accompanied by Mr. Henry Barnett. Our first halt was at Basle, where we remained six days, in order to attend the third Zionist Congress, at which several other missionary brethren from England and the Continent were also present. I hope (D.V.), on my return, to write more fully about this remarkable meeting of elected representative Jews from all parts of the world, and of the awakening of the Jewish nation after the long sleep of ages, of which the Zionist Congress is one of the more striking outward signs.

Meanwhile, Christian friends of Israel will be interested to learn that it has been our privilege to have faithful intercourse with many of the delegates and some of the leaders of this "Jewish Parliament;" and that we were greatly encouraged to find a measure of response on the part of some of them to our testimony about our Lord Jesus, as and only hope. We were also able to circulate among the delegates a good deal of suitable literature, setting forth the claims of Christ.

ISRAEL'S TRUE KING

After a passing mission visit to Zurich, we went to Carlsbad. This celebrated Bohemian watering-place is remarkable for the number of Jews from all nations and ranks, who gather there during the season for the "Kur." Out of the forty-five or fifty thousand visitors, about one-fifth are Jews, a large proportion being from Galicia and Russia; and, having plenty of leisure on their hands, it is a splendid opportunity for a true-hearted missionary. Here we remained a week, reasoning daily out of the Scriptures with many groups and individuals, and proving to them that Jesus is the Christ. Some also visited us in our rooms in the hotel, among them several who seemed to manifest a real spirit of inquiry.

After brief visits to Eger, Marienbad, and Vienna, Mr. Barnett returned home from Buda-Pesth, as he was needed to help in the work in London, whilst I, joined by Mr. Robert Feinsilber (a brother who now labours permanently in Hungary, in connection with our Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel), started on a brief tour southwards to Slavonia and Bosnia. Unlike Austria, there is now practically full religious liberty in Hungary, and no obstacle is raised by the authorities against Gospel work and the circulation of the Scriptures. The Jews in Hungary number over 800,000, and they are for the most part very intelligent and well educated. Politically and commercially, they are the power in the land; but their religious condition is most deplorable. Rabbinism has lost every vestige of hold on them, and there is nothing in around, to attract them. But, perhaps, nowhere else in the world are they so accessible to the Gospel. I can testify to this fact from experience, for I have been right through the country quite a number of times, and have been privileged to preach Christ to large numbers, both privately and in public meetings, in most of the principal towns and cities. Sometimes, on the very day of our arrival in a town, we have had two hundred and more Jews gathered in a café, or large hall in the hotel, listening eagerly to Gospel addresses, based on some Old or New Testament Scripture. If we had the strength, we could have preached in some of the towns in Hungary every hour, to different audiences,

THE DEAD APOSTATE CHRISTIANITY

ALL THE DAY LONG.

This time, since leaving Buda-Pesth, we have already visited Fünfkirchen, Siklos, Essek, Brod, and Bosnian Brod, while our brother, Mr. Feinsilber, has been preaching and distributing hundreds of New Testaments in about twenty other towns and cities, during the months of June, July, and August. It is our earnest desire that God's people may join us in prayer for this effort to scatter broadcast the seed of the Gospel among the diaspora in these regions, to the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Just at present, the Jews in these parts are greatly excited about the Dreyfus case and the Zionist movement, and these matters have supplied us with subjects from which to preach to them Christ, as Zion's true King, and as the Just One, who was hated without cause, and who was wrongly condemned by the representatives of the Jewish nation.

Brod, Slavonia, Sept. 11.

Famine in India.

COMMUNICATIONS to hand reveal a sad condition of things in India. Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institution, Agra, writes:

"'India is on the borderland of one of the most severe famines that has visited us since 1877.' So writes an expert who has for many years paid special attention to the meteorological conditions of famine.

"In many parts, the people are leaving the villages in thousands, the crops have dried up in the fields, there is no fodder for the cattle; even the water has left the wells. This is the state of matters all over Rajputana, Central India, Gujerat, Sindh, many parts of the N.W. Provinces, Punjab and the Bombay Presidency. In the Agra district, the rains came fully a month earlier than usual; but were so severe as to prevent the farmers ploughing their fields. At last a break came; the farmers, as soon as possible, began to plough and sow. The break has now continued for five or six weeks. The heat is intolerable. The seed, for the most part, has been roasted in the fields, and the portion of it that has sprung up has withered away. Nothing now can save the crops or produce fodder for the cattle.

"Millions of people in India, even under the most favourable circumstances, never know what it is to have a full meal, and go to bed every night hungry. For them famine has begun, and already starvation-point reached.

"Famine funds are being raised, and relief works commenced, and after all the mortality will be appalling.

"Your very substantial assistance and advocacy during last famine enabled us to relieve 103,144 famine-stricken creatures with food, clothing, and medicine. The dispensary which we improvised continued till May of this year, when we had to close it for want of funds. During last year we treated between 26,000 and 27,000 patients.

"We must again, through our Beggars' Church, assist those who are starving, and treat the sick. We do this in faith, believing that the Lord will put it into the hands of his people to assist us. Need I assure friends that every farthing that is sent to me will be judiciously and faithfully spent on those who actually need assistance? Christian friends and missionary societies should at once place themselves in communication with their missionaries, and thereby assist the Government of India in a crisis with which it confessedly is unable to cope. Post-office orders and cheques sent to the missionaries are paid in all parts of India as they would be in London."

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, of Aldington, near Hythe, Kent, has also written as follows:—"Letters received this morning from India contain information pre-eminently adapted to emphasize the request of one of my correspondents, 'Pray for India!'

"A letter from the office of the Bombay Guardian says:—'A fearful famine is on India. There is famine already in Gujerat and Rajputana; and in Berar and the Central Provinces famine prices are current. Rev. Albert Norton, who has come down to Bombay for a few days from Kedgaon, describes the distress as terrible around Poona. Pundita Ramabai is besieged by starving people, and, although her water supply is very low, she has commenced building in order to employ several hundreds of them. Rev. M. B. Fuller (superintendent of the large mission of the Christian and Missionary Alliance) has gone to Gujerat to make inquiries and inspect, in order to write to America about the famine.

"Miss Soonderbai H. Powar, whom not a few of your readers know personally through her visits to Britain a few years ago, writing from Poona, says that on account of the continued terrible ravages of the plague at that city, Pundita Ramabai has removed the more than one hundred girls from her "Sharada Sadan" Home there to her farm settlement or village at Kedgaon, about forty miles distant. There must therefore be over 400 rescued girl-widows and orphans in Ramabai's care at that place. Miss Powar was invited to accompany the girls from 'Sharada Sadan,' but nobly elected to remain at Poona to labour in the Gospel at the plague segregation camps.

"Your readers are aware that the support of the more than 300 girls rescued by Ramabai from the late famine is a faith work. And now she will have urgent and pathetic applications from large numbers of others.

"I send to India weekly, and shall be pleased to remit any sums that friends may feel led to give for Ramabai's work or other famine relief at this serious juncture. For the information of any who may prefer to send direct to Pundita Ramabai, I may mention that her full address is: Mukti, Kedgaon, Poona District, India."

Friends of Armenia.

AS far as possible, it has been the aim of the "Friends of Armenia" to encourage self-help and a spirit of independence amongst those for whom they work.

Therefore, though this Society has to depend on charity for the maintenance of the six hundred orphans now under its care, and has from time to time appealed for bread for the famine-stricken districts of Armenia, it has aided the Armenian women of Varna, Constantinople, Aintab, Marash, Urfa, Malatia, and Harpoot by giving them work rather than doles.

The beautiful embroideries made by these women are on view from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day, except Saturday, at Albany Buildings, 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.; and so successful have the women of the first three towns been, that they have earned enough to support themselves and their children, and some have even aided their poorer sisters.

But two great calamities have now befallen them. The community at Varna has been visited with a terrible flood, which has caused much loss of life, and has swept away the houses and effects of those who have been saved. At Salma Tomrouk, a devastating fire has burned down the houses of many of the members of the Mission. There is consequently much distress at both places.

Donations in aid of the above can be forwarded through Mr. Hector Munro Ferguson, hon. treasurer, "Friends of Armenia," 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

The Gospel in Peru.

DIRECT Gospel work is going forward in this stronghold of Romanism and Satan. The Word of God has been sold and circulated from house to house, so that every man may hear the Gospel sound, and have its call addressed to him. Preaching services are held twice a week in the "Salon Evangelico," with a fair attendance and reverent attention; meetings of a more private character are also carried on in homes that are open to us.

Without attempting to tabulate results, we realize that God is paving the way for greater things in Trujillo. It has been opened amid the determined opposition of priestcraft, and the cold indifference of a widespread deism. Two instances are worthy of note. While visiting the prison with tracts, the native evangelist was suddenly made a prisoner.

On another occasion he was brought before the criminal judge on a charge of propaganda, contrary to the religion and law of the republic, and of having widely circulated Bibles and Gospel literature.

We hope to make this a centre for a more extensive circulation of God's choicest gift to this or any other land. Already we find interested souls in many of the coast towns, and some of the more distant Sierra ones.

Trujillo, Peru. A. R. Stark.

(1241)

Prisons in America.—IV.

State Penitentiaries.

By Mr. T. M. WINTLE.

MANY of the States have large, well-built, modern penitentiaries, in which State prisoners are confined, with large tracts of land worked by the convicts. Corn, rice, cotton, vegetables, fruit, &c., are cultivated for the use of the institution, and for sale.

Care is taken to minimise the risk of fire; most of the cells are constructed of iron, and in some cases hardened steel is used, which defies the chisel and file. They are clean, warm, and well ventilated, with good sanitary arrangements; and special attention is given to the personal cleanliness of the prisoners, weekly baths and change of linen being insisted upon.

There are workrooms where those who are physically unfitted to do heavy laborious work outside are employed in making shoes, baskets, chairs, shirts, clothing, trunks, &c. It is found that convict labour is more valuable upon the land than any other kind of employment, while it is conducive to better health and to reformation of the prisoners.

In reply to the question as to how far the convict labour competed prejudicially against the free labour outside, we were told that the demand was so great that their output made no material difference to the labour market; consequently no one took any notice of it.

Special instructors are engaged in every department, and we were surprised to find how quickly the services of these men became valuable in the various departments. No expense is spared in laying out the plant; the latest machines are adopted to facilitate despatch and finish, which are essential there as in every other business, to make it a financial success.

While the rigid sameness of garb, and the ever-present "broad arrow" which characterize our English prisons, are not to be seen in the States prisons, they have a convict dress with a distinguishing mark upon the arm denoting the class to which the prisoner belongs. A red X upon the arm signifies that he is a first offender. A white X denotes two to five convictions. A blue X five to ten; while a yellow X brands him as incorrigible, and he may have been in a score times or more. I am sorry to say the "yellow birds" are by no means rare.

The usual punishment for insubordination and refractory conduct is solitary confinement, flogging being rarely resorted to. The way in which the wardens and minor officials speak to the prisoners, and give them instructions, called forth a respectful and ready obedience.

KIND, INTERESTING, YET FIRM,

At Raleigh, N.C., we found some women who had been in prison many years, and were comfortably situated in their cells, which had the appearance and size of an ordinary small living-room in our own country. Some of these rooms or cells were by no means cheerless, but were arranged with taste and care by the prisoners themselves. In one instance we found a man and his wife, on account of their age (over seventy) and other circumstances, allowed to occupy the same room at night.

At most of the penitentiaries, Sunday schools are a great feature; regular services are also conducted by the ministers of various denominations, and accredited evangelists visiting the district are often invited to take part. It is refreshing to read the following from a prison report. The superintendent of the North Carolina Penitentiary writes:—

> Religious services have been held with marked success at the Central Penitentiary each Sunday of each month, by ministers of four denominations of Raleigh. Four of the farms have had regular preaching throughout the year. At the other three farms it has been irregular. The services have been conducted by Christian gentlemen and ladies every Sunday without fail and without remuneration. It is a labour of love with them, and, rain or sunshine, they came and ministered to the spiritual necessities of the "spirits in prison." Some of these have laboured in this good work for twenty-one years.

(1-42)

The prisoners of good conduct are allowed to commingle freely, to use the Free Library, and to see their friends frequently. The dietary is good, and each prisoner is bountifully supplied. "We never allow them to go away from the table unsatisfied," said the officer; "we give them as much as they can eat."

It is to be regretted that the prison officials are not placed on the Civil Service list, so that their continuing in office should depend upon ability and attention to duty, and not to political patronage. Until this is done, I am convinced the prisons of America will never attain to that high state of proficiency desired by all prison reformers.

The latitude given to the warden (or governor) of State penitentaries works satisfactorily in the hands of a wise and humane man; but where the warden is of a different character, the same free hand would prove prejudicial to the interest of the prisoners.

"Industrial Effort in India."

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the article published in your issue of the 7th inst. under the above title, giving particulars of the training of lads in the Industrial School attached to the American Marathi Mission at Ahmednagar, conducted by Rev. James Smith, I venture to draw the attention of your readers to a matter of interest and importance which appears to have been lost sight of by the writers of the article in question. In December of last year the Industrial Missions Aid Society established a carpet factory at Ahmednagar in connection with the Industrial School there, the principal object in view being to give employment to the lads trained in the school and to native converts, and also to provide means, by the sale of the products of the factory, for the extension of industrial missionary work on similar lines in other parts of India.

The arrangement with Mr. Smith is that, as the lads in the school become proficient, they shall be drafted into the factory, and he has stated that we may expect about 100 hands a year to be transferred to us. Until the inauguration of the factory, Mr. Smith experienced the greatest difficulty in finding an outlet for his trained labour, and at a meeting of the American Marathi Mission, held in October last at Ahmednagar, a resolution was passed upon the subject of the proposed factory, from which the following is an extract:—

> We feel that such a factory will prove to be of immense value to our work in providing suitable employment for native Christians, of whom there are many hundreds in our Christian community who cannot at present obtain suitable employment; and consequently our efforts to establish self-supporting churches have been only partially successful. Any scheme which promises to furnish steady employment and regular wages would be welcomed; but your proposal is especially gratifying, since it will furnish immediate employment to scores of the pupils who pass out of our schools.

In order the more conveniently to carry out the undertaking, a small company was formed and registered under the title of "Indian Mission Industries, Limited." The necessary capital has been subscribed, the work is progressing; and, it is sincerely believed, will prove, under God's blessing, a powerful auxiliary to ordinary missionary work in India. The manufactures of this company will not be confined to carpets, but hammered and inlaid metal, and silversmith's work, carving, embroidery, and other Indian arts, for which here is a market in Europe and America, will be included in the scope of its operations. The factory is, of course, in its infancy; but already missionaries, connected with several societies, have sent us pressing invitations to open branches in different localities.

The first shipment of carpets will arrive in this country shortly, and I shall be glad to give further information concerning this work to any of your readers who may communicate with me.—I am, sir, yours obediently,

W. H. J. Hatch, Secretary,
Industrial Missions Aid Society.

10, Paternoster Row, E.C.

A Huguenot Memorial.

THE foundation-stone of the Huguenot Memorial Hall of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa was laid on Thursday afternoon, August 24, in Queen Victoria Street, Cape Town. The following statement of the history of the movement was placed under the stone, which was laid by the Right Hon. Sir J. H. de Villiers, Chief Justice of Cape Colony:—

"This building, which must serve as a hall for the meetings of the Synod, and with its attached apartments as committee rooms and church office, is erected pursuant to a resolution of the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa, in its session of October, 1886, to commemorate in a worthy manner: (a) the arrival at the Cape in the years 1688-89 of the Huguenots, who were expelled from their native land by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, because they obeyed God rather than man; (b) in acknowledgment of, and as a grateful tribute to, their steadfast faith, their true piety, and the purity and uprightness of their lives, and in memory of the wonderful delivery of our ancestors by our Father God; the corner-stone of this Memorial Hall is laid in the name of the Triune God, on this the 24th day of August (the anniversary of St. Bartholomew's Night), of the year of our Lord 1899, by the Right Hon. Sir J. H. de Villiers, K.C.M.G., Chief Justice of the Cape Colony.

"The scheme consists of a synod hall placed at the back of the site, with a spacious courtyard in front, flanked on each side with wings of offices. The lighting is provided on three sides by dignified windows of an ecclesiastical type, fitted with leaded cathedral glazing. Adjoining the hall are placed a large vestry, a moderators' room, with lavatories in close proximity, and two committee rooms, the whole suite being connected by the main staircase with the entrance-hall, which is approached through a projecting porch from the courtyard facing Queen Victoria Street. With regard to the exterior, the restricted means made it necessary to be content with solidity and simplicity; but careful regard to proportion, the choice of materials, and the adoption of a style of architecture in keeping with the traditions of the Huguenot forefathers, will, it is hoped, produce a quiet dignity, and stamp upon this memorial the purpose it has to serve.

The chief address of the occasion, apart from that of the Chief Justice, was delivered by Rev. Andrew Murray, who spoke in impassioned terms. He said there was no more precious inheritance to which a man or a nation could lay claim than that of a noble ancestry; and there was no ancestry so noble as that of the men who had proved that they feared God and sacrificed everything for their belief. The Huguenots when they came to this country did not form more than about one-sixth part of the population, but that did not express the limit of their influence. As a nationality they had disappeared, but they had left their mark most deeply in the whole population and the whole Church of South Africa.

Egyptian Irrigation System.—Official circles estimate the land which must remain uncultivated in consequence of the deficiency of the Nile flood at 150,000 acres. This extent is only about half that of 1888, and a sixth of that of 1877—the two previous lowest floods of the century—although the cultivated area has largely increased. The diminution is due to the development of the irrigation system under Anglo-Indian officials.

Italian Church Reform Association.—The work of reform in Italy is growing apace. A parish has been re-established in Rome itself quite recently, and already there are thirty-one regular communicants. The stipend of the new minister, and the rent of a hall in which to hold services, will necessitate an outlay of £14 a month; this, the committee trust, will be met by the kind exertions of a Christian lady, who has deep sympathy with the cause. The expenses of the other stations of the Reform Church amount to £100 a month. Rev. Henry Hickin is secretary of the I.C.R.A., and the offices are in the Church House, Westminster, S.W.

A Distinguished Missionary:

THE LATE REV. S. H. KELLOGG, D.D.

THE missionary community of the North-West Provinces of India recently mourned the loss of one of its most distinguished members. For many years Dr. S. H. Kellogg's name has been widely known in the ministerial and literary world, and his death, under tragic circumstances, caused sorrow in a very large circle.

SAMUEL H. KELLOGG was born in 1839 at Quogue, Sussex County, Long Island, U.S.A., his father being minister of the Presbyterian Church, Westhampton, New York State. The little Samuel was early instructed in the Word of God, so that it could have been said of him, as it was of Timothy, "From a child thou hast known the Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

In after years he loved to tell the story of his conversion, and the origin of his desire to enter the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ. When a small child he was ill, nigh unto death. Hope had been given up, and the family were watching to see the end. While they thus watched, a devout woman, a member of the congregation of which his father was pastor, gave herself to prayer for the life of the child. She declared that she had received an answer—that the child would live, and would preach the Gospel. To the astonishment of all, save the woman of faith, the lad recovered.

When the question of the young man's future was to be settled, the prayers of this woman were not forgotten by the Lord, and as a result the brilliant young student elected the Christian ministry as his life work. At the age of nineteen he entered Princeton University, which at that time was largely attended by the sons of Southern planters, who in most instances were more noted for their luxurious and reckless living than the positions they took in their classes, or the honours they received from their university.

The advent of the young man from Long Island—with his primitive dress and manners, shy, nervous, retiring disposition, and high-toned, religious character—at first excited ridicule. By-and-by, as he stood at the head of all his classes, and carried off the prizes, he not only commanded the respect, but even the admiration, of those who had been disposed to laugh at his peculiarities. From his earliest years he had been a diligent student of the Word of God, nor was this interrupted by the pressure of his college studies.

